2 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments
3 next in Enmund against Florida.

4 Mr. Liebman, you may proceed whenever you are 5 ready.

6 ORAL ARGUMENT OF JAMES S. LIEBMAN, ESQ.,

7 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER

8 MR. LIEBMAN: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it 9 please the Court, Petitioner, Earl Enmund, has been 10 sentenced by the state of Florida to be executed for the 11 crime of murder. Now, two factual determinations of the 12 Florida Supreme Court surrounding Mr. Enmund's actual 13 involvement in that crime are critical here, and I would 14 like to take a moment to summarize those findings.

15 First, the Florida Supreme Court determined
16 that Earl Enmund did not himself take life. Rather, it
17 determined that Sampson Armstrong, Mr. Enmund's 18 confederate in a robbery, killed both of the victims, 19 that is, Mr. Thomas Kersey and Mrs. Eunice Kersey, in an 20 exchange of gunfire that was initiated by Mrs. Kersey.
21 The Florida Supreme Court determined that during these 22 events and during the robbery, Petitioner was not on the 23 scene but was 200 yards away in the get-away car.

24 More importantly, the Florida Supreme Court
25 secondly expressly determined that the killings

1 committed by Sampson Armstrong were not intended or 2 contemplated as a part of the robbery scheme with which 3 Mr. Enmund had associated himself and had helped plan.
4 Rather, the Florida Supreme Court, in its own words,
5 determined that those killings by Sampson Armstrong 6 "were spontaneous and were precipitated by the armed 7 resistance of Mrs. Kersey," again, at a time when Earl 8 Enmund was 200 yards away, and was not at all able to 9 take any part in that spontaneous decision by Sampson
10 Armstrong to return Mrs. Kersey's fire.

11           QUESTION: Does the record show whether when 12 they entered -- embarked on this enterprise, Enmund was 13 aware that his friend had a gun?

14           MR. LIEBMAN: No, Your Honor. The evidence on 15 the gun is -- on the guns is extremely confused. In 16 fact, the prosecutor told the jury both in the opening 17 argument and in the closing argument that it was not 18 going to be able to tell them anything about the guns or 19 even how many guns there were. They didn't know that.
20 Now, all we know is that Sampson Armstrong had a gun and 21 Mrs. Kersey had a gun. Beyond that --

22           QUESTION: On the ballistics tests, how many 23 different guns were indicated?

24           MR. LIEBMAN: Two, at least two. There were 25 some bullets that they did not trace to either gun, but

1 they couldn't tell whether they were from those guns or 2 others. They just couldn't do a ballistics test.

3 QUESTION: And how many people involved in the 4 enterprise?

5 MR. LIEBMAN: Well, that is unclear also, but 6 there were at least Sampson Armstrong, Jeanette 7 Armstrong and Earl Enmund, and possibly Ida Jean Shaw,
8 and then there was Mr. and Mrs. Kersey at the scene.
9 One other fact that I should mention is that Sampson 10 Armstrong told J.B. Neil, his friend, who testified at 11 trial against Sampson, that both Sampson and Jeanette 12 Armstrong had guns.

13 QUESTION: Is there a reasonable inference 14 that there were three different firearms involved here?

15 MR. LIEBMAN: Well, there's a reasonable 16 inference that there were at least two. I think the 17 state's statement to the jury that it couldn't --

18 QUESTION: I thought you just said that there 19 were two that they could identify and one they couldn't 20 identify. That makes three.

21 MR. LIEBMAN: No. No, Your Honor. I misspoke
22 if I said that. There were two that they could 23 identify, and all of the other bullets could have come 24 from one of those two guns. They just couldn't 25 determine it, because those bullets were too injured to 1 allow conclusive ballistics determinations.

2 QUESTION: How many bullets were put in the 3 bodies?

4 MR. LIEBMAN: Mr. Kersey was shot twice. Mrs.
5 Kersey was shot six times. They found a total of nine 6 bullets, those eight plus an additional ninth bullet, 7 but they could only do successful ballistics tests on 8 five of the bullets.

9 Now, in order to affirm Petitioner's 10 conviction of first degree murder on those findings that 11 I just mentioned, the Florida Supreme Court found it 12 necessary and said that it found it necessary to rely on 13 two what it has called in the past constructive devices, 14 and to establish murder, the court first relied on 15 Florida's constructive malice doctrine. Under that 16 doctrine, a person who is engaged in a robbery who kills 17 is conclusively presumed, despite any other evidence, to 18 be -- to have intended that death, and thus to be a 19 murderer.

20 The court then applied Florida's accessorial 21 rule under which all of the robbery confederates who are 22 either actually or, as the Florida Supreme Court 23 determined was actually the case here, are only 24 constructively present at the time the killings took 25 place are also conclusively presumed to have an intent

1 to kill, and therefore to be murderers.

2           Now, I want to stress that under the Florida
3 rule, including, and this is stated in the Pope case 4 which is cited repeatedly by the Supreme Court in 5 affirming Petitioner's conviction, and also the Hampton 6 case, and both of those cases are cited on Page 13 of 7 our opening brief, the Florida courts have clearly held 8 that in a case in which the jury would find that there 9 is no foreseeability that the deaths would occur, that 10 there was no contemplation by the accomplices of any 11 possible death, even in that kind of a case, Florida's 12 felony murder rule and its accessorial rules apply.

13           Now, in this record, Mr. Enmund's principal 14 submission, which we have set out in Point 1 of our 15 opening brief, is that execution is an excessive and 16 disproportionate punishment, in violation of the Eighth
17 and Fourteenth Amendments, for one who did not himself 18 take life, attempt or assist in taking life, and for one 19 who did not intend that life be taken by another.

20           Now, at the outset I want to make very clear
21 that Petitioner's submission here does not in any way
22 challenge Florida's authority to devise rules governing 23 accessorial liability or its ability to define the crime 24 of felony murder or to punish those crimes severely, but 25 Petitioner's first submission does raise the single

1 question of the constitutionality of inflicting the one 2 punishment, the unique punishment of death on one who 3 has not taken part in a design himself to take life or 4 to have it taken by another.

5           And we believe that the answer to that 6 question, that death is a disproportionate punishment in 7 that situation, is mandated by this Court's prior 8 decision, the logic of its decision in Coker versus 9 Georgia. In Coker, the Court decided a question that 10 Gregg versus Georgia had left open, and that was whether 11 there are certain crimes short of deliberate homicide
12 committed by the defendant that the Eighth Amendment 13 prohibits the states from punishing by death, and 14 indeed, the Court determined in Coker that Ehrlich Coker 15 could not constitutionally be executed for the serious, 16 in fact, the often life-threatening crime of rape, even 17 where that crime in that particular case had been 18 carried out in part by the offender holding a knife to 19 the victim's throat during the rape.

20           Now, the crucial point I want to make here is 21 that in condemning Earl Enmund to death, the state of 22 Florida has proved nothing more on his part than a 23 degree of participation in the crime of robbery that is 24 identical to Ehrlich Coker's degree of participation in 25 the crime of rape. Insofar as anything the two men did

1 or intended or even foresaw, they are the same.

2           Now, here it is true that two deaths occurred, 3 but I want to stress, I think it is important for 4 purposes of Eighth Amendment decision-making here that 5 that was at the hands and at the decision of Sampson
6 Armstrong, and as the Florida Supreme Court expressly 7 determined, that was not by any design or act on Earl 8 Enmund's part, apart from being himself a part of the 9 robbery, and therefore the Florida Supreme Court, the 10 Florida courts all the way along, the instructions, in 11 order to link Mr. Enmund to those deaths, they could not 12 rely on anything he did or intended, and they did not 13 purport to. Rather, they linked him to those deaths 14 solely by virtue of the constructive malice and 15 constructive presence devices. Those are the only 16 links, and those are the links that the Florida Supreme 17 Court expressly relied on.

18           QUESTION: You say it would be irrational for 19 reasonable jurors to have concluded that everybody 20 involved in that automobile knew about the number of 21 guns that were present and who had them?

22           MR. LIEBMAN: Well, the first point, Your 23 Honor, is that on the instructions given here, the jury 24 was not asked to confront that point and made no finding 25 on it, and the --

1           QUESTION: My question didn't go to that.
2 Suppose -- Jurors often conclude things which are not 3 covered by instructions, and they are permitted to do
4 so. Would it be irrational or unreasonable for a juror 5 to conclude that everyone in that car knew that this was 6 an armed enterprise?

7           MR. LIEBMAN: I think, Your Honor, that on the 8 proof that we have in this case, that would be a 9 difficult inference for the jury to draw. I don't know
10 if I can say it would be an irrational inference, but it 11 would be extremely difficult, because the only time the 12 state actually connected Mr. Enmund to those guns was 13 two days later, when he participated in a plan with 14 Sampson Armstrong and Ida Jean Shaw to dispose of the 15 weapons.

16           Now, we know something about the calibers. We 17 know that there was a .22-caliber gun, and that that 18 belonged to Ida Jean Shaw. She disposed of that weapon 19 and said it was her gun. She also said that the 20 .38-caliber weapon that she disposed of was one that she 21 had seen in the hands of either Sampson Armstrong or 22 Jeanette Armstrong some time before these events
23 occurred. So, all of the evidence is at least 24 consistent, with the possibility that those guns were on 25 the persons only of the Armstrongs and Mrs. Kersey, and

1 that Petitioner didn't know, and of course the jury here
2 was instructed that if there are two possible inferences
3 that it can draw from the evidence, you know, equally 4 strong, then it must draw the inference in favor of the 5 defense, and I would suggest that that instruction here 6 would make it quite difficult for the jury to determine 7 that Earl Enmund knew something about the guns.

8 But, of course, in any event, the jury was not 9 asked here to make any determination about the guns.
10 The state said it couldn't really prove very much about 11 the guns, and it just didn't have to, because the felony 12 murder rule that it was acting under allowed it not to 13 have to prove that sort of thing.

14 And I want to stress that for purposes of 15 criminal liability and for purposes of severe
16 punishment, I have no doubt that these vicarious devices
17 and these conclusive presumptions that the Florida 18 Supreme Court relied upon are perfectly okay to 19 establish a nexus between what the offender actually did 20 and these killings, but here the punishment is death, 21 and in that qualitatively different situation, the 22 Eighth Amendment implies it requires that the courts 23 apply qualitatively different standards.

24 And in particular, as this Court stated so
25 recently in Eddings versus Oklahoma, what the Eighth

1 Amendment requires in death penalty cases is a
2 sensibility to the uniqueness of the individual 3 offender. What this Court repeatedly has called in 4 Woodson, Roberts, Lockett, a concern, a concern for the 5 individual culpability of that offender for his 6 particular offense, and for his particular character, 7 and what we suggest here is that that crucial Eighth 8 Amendment concern in death penalty cases for individual 9 culpability simply will not permit the gap between what 10 Earl Enmund actually did and intended here as a robbery
11 and the Kerseys' deaths at the hands of Sampson 12 Armstrong to be bridged by nothing more than what is 13 really a legal fiction.

14           In short, the Eighth Amendment requires that 15 actual individual culpability be the touchstone of how 16 we determine who lives and who dies.

17           QUESTION: Well, is it a legal fiction or is 18 it an irrebuttable presumption that a participant in a 19 felony which results in death has that consequence? You 20 call it a legal fiction.

21           MR. LIEBMAN: Well, let me explain why I call 22 it that, because I did carefully use those terms. The 23 Florida Supreme Court has stated that even in a case 24 where it is in fact provable and the defendant could 25 prove beyond a reasonable doubt that he did not intend

1 death, that he did not know that there was any 2 reasonable likelihood of death, that no death was 3 contemplated, even in that situation, the felony murder
4 presumption, conclusive presumption of malice applies, 5 and in that case, where the defendant could make that 6 proof, it has to be a fiction, because the jury could be 7 convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that there was no 8 intent, there was no malice, and yet they would be 9 forced to find malice.

10           QUESTION: Well, isn't it in fact something a 11 little different from a fiction, just a judgment by the 12 state involved that if you participate in a robbery, and 13 because a robbery is sufficiently likely to lead to a 14 fatal killing, that you are going to be held accountable 15 for the killing, too, without regard to your intent as 16 to kill?

17           MR. LIEBMAN: Well, Your Honor, that's why I
18 say that that type of reasoning is okay. There is no
19 constitutional wrong there so far as finding criminal 20 liability or even punishing the person with a severe 21 term of years, but where the problem comes in with that 22 is in the Eighth Amendment area, where the death penalty 23 is involved, because there individual culpability must 24 be crucial, and we can't just say that because in most 25 cases this would be true, we are going to presume that

1 it is true in all cases.

2           QUESTION: Yes, but I think the argument is 3 aided by stripping away whatever there is of a fiction,
4 and just looking at the, you know, what facts the state
5 has proved and what reasons are traditionally held out 6 for the felony murder doctrine.

7           MR. LIEBMAN: That's true, but the reasons 8 that are held out, what I am suggesting is that those 9 reasons in the Eighth Amendment area, where the death
10 penalty is imposed, is inconsistent with the requirement 11 of focusing on individual culpability in determining who 12 lives and who dies.

13           Now, to take your example, Ehrlich Coker went 14 into a rape. He held a knife to the victim's throat.
15 He committed a crime for which death was a foreseeable 16 result. There is no question on the facts of Coker that 17 death was a foreseeable result, and Georgia argued 18 because of that that that was a crime that serious harm 19 or death was so likely that they should be able to 20 punish it severely, as if death had occurred, and this 21 Court --

22           QUESTION: Mr. Liebman, in this case he is 23 guilty of murder, in your book.

24           MR. LIEBMAN: He is guilty of murder.

25           QUESTION: And he has to be sentenced to 1 something, right?

2 MR. LIEBMAN: That is correct, Your Honor.

3 QUESTION: You are not saying, turn him loose.

4 MR. LIEBMAN: No, and I want to make that 5 clear over and over again.

6 QUESTION: Well, that's what I -- I don't 7 think you have quite -- Exactly what is your position in 8 this case? What should this man have been sentenced to, 9 in your opinion?

10 MR. LIEBMAN: The punishment for felony murder 11 in Florida, where there is no death penalty, is life in 12 prison without possibility of parole for 25 years. Mr.
13 Enmund is at this point --

14 QUESTION: Wait a minute. You said life 15 imprisonment for 25 years?

16 MR. LIEBMAN: It is life in prison without 17 possibility of parole for 25 years.

18 QUESTION: I see. I see.

19 MR. LIEBMAN: After 25 years, the parole board 20 then can exercise its discretion. And for purposes of 21 that punishment or even a mandatory life sentence 22 without possibility of any parole --

23 QUESTION: Right.

24 MR. LIEBMAN: -- there would be no
25 constitutional problem with what has happened here. I

1 think that the Woodson case makes it quite clear that 2 while we have no problem with mandatory sentences, 3 mandatory severe sentences where the death penalty is 4 not involved; where the death penalty is involved, we 5 have a different issue, and what I am arguing here is 6 that where you have that different issue, and the 7 crucial part of that different issue is individual 8 culpability, when we are separating who lives and who 9 dies, we must look at the individual culpability of the 10 offender.

11           And when we look at the individual culpability 12 of Earl Enmund and Ehrlich Coker, it is 13 indistinguishable. The two culpabilities of the two men 14 are indistinguishable, and therefore on this individual 15 culpability measure the Eighth Amendment simply cannot 16 rationally be seen as tolerating Mr. Enmund's sentence 17 of death at the same time as it conclusively and for all 18 cases says that Mr. Coker cannot be punished by death.

19           QUESTION: Well, in Coker's case, nobody died, 20 and here someone did die as a result of the enterprise
21 with which Enmund was connected.

22           MR. LIEBMAN: Well, first of all, Your Honor, 23 you are assuming, I think, by that statement that there 24 was a but for connection between Mr. Enmund and the 25 death, and even that has not been proved as a matter of

1 Florida law. All you need to do is prove that he took 2 part in a robbery, and that a death occurred as part of 3 that robbery. But there is no proof here -- They left 4 Mr. Enmund out at the car. He knew the Kerseys, so they 5 left him out at the car, because he could be identified, 6 but there is no proof here that they wouldn't have left 7 him at home and gone ahead and done it if he didn't go 8 along.

9           So that even on that assumption you don't have 10 that proof here, but I would suggest that the death is 11 not -- it cannot be enough. Otherwise, if we had -- we 12 could have the death penalty for negligent vehicular 13 homicide, or for a person who jaywalks negligently, 14 steps out in front of a car, the car swerves to avoid 15 him, and there is a death. There is a causation. There 16 is a criminal violation by jaywalking, and there is a 17 death there, but I would suggest that the death penalty 18 simply would be -- would be too extreme a penalty for 19 that crime.

20           What this case -- this Court's cases have 21 looked at very clearly is not the disembodied injury, 22 but the injury caused by the design of the offender. It 23 looks to the connection between the offender's design, 24 his acts that he took in furtherance of that design, and 25 the harm that results, and what I am suggesting here is

1 that the connection between the design with which 2 Petitioner took place, that is, a design to commit a 3 robbery, the connection between that and the killings is 4 purely by virtue of these constructive malice devices.
5 The Florida Supreme Court had nothing else to go on, and 6 in that sense there is no difference between Ehrlich 7 Coker, who did everything that Earl Enmund did, but 8 there was no death resulting at the hands or by the 9 decision of somebody else, but in terms of individual 10 culpability, Ehrlich Coker did everything, thought 11 everything, foresaw everything that Earl Enmund did, and 12 if the Constitution -- if the Eighth Amendment with its 13 crucial focusing on individual culpability, says that 14 Mr. Coker falls below the line and cannot be 15 constitutionally --

16 QUESTION: Are you going to get around to 17 suggesting what culpability means?

18 MR. LIEBMAN: Well, Your Honor, I think that --

19 QUESTION: Or do you want to -- 20 MR. LIEBMAN: I would be glad to.

21 QUESTION: All right.

22 MR. LIEBMAN: In our submission, the 23 culpability that should be the determining factor is the 24 intent to take life, conscious purpose to take life as 25 you defined it in your concurring decision in Lockett.

1           QUESTION: Yes, but what if -- would it be 2 enough in your book if Enmund had said, well, I will 3 wait for you in the car, you've got guns, if necessary, 4 go ahead and use them?

5           MR. LIEBMAN: Your Honor, at common law, at 6 the common law --

7           QUESTION: I don't care about -- what is your 8 submission?

9           MR. LIEBMAN: We -- our submission is that in 10 that situation, the person has -- he has intended death, 11 if only in a conditional circumstance.

12          QUESTION: Right.

13          MR. LIEBMAN: But he has intended death, and 14 therefore he falls above the line, and this is 15 consistent with the common law rule.

16          QUESTION: But it would fall on the other side 17 of the line, I suppose, in your book if he just knew 18 they had guns.

19          MR. LIEBMAN: That is correct, Your Honor.

20          QUESTION: And didn't say what I said he said.

21          MR. LIEBMAN: That is correct. Or -- it can't 22 come down to him saying it.

23          QUESTION: No.

24          MR. LIEBMAN: It would be a jury question as 25 to whether --

1           QUESTION: A jury question, yes.

2           MR. LIEBMAN: -- he had actually thought that,
3 or had been --

4           QUESTION: And so it is circumstantial proof 5 of intent.

6           MR. LIEBMAN: Exactly, Your Honor, which is 7 precisely what every case on intent entails.

8           QUESTION: And you are saying that just the 9 fact that you participate in a robbery, there are so 10 many robberies that don't involve a threat to life that 11 you -- that is just not a sufficient basis for inferring 12 intent.

13          MR. LIEBMAN: That's exactly right, Your Honor.

14          QUESTION: Would you say that? Suppose in 15 this very case the jury had been instructed that to find 16 Enmund guilty you had to find that he intended to take 17 life, based on circumstantial evidence. Suppose the 18 jury had come back with a finding of guilty and imposing 19 the death penalty.

20          MR. LIEBMAN: Well, Your Honor --

21          QUESTION: Would that evidence be -- Would 22 that be a sufficient basis for -- right on this record?

23          MR. LIEBMAN: Well, on this record, I think it 24 would be an extremely close question, and the reason 25 that I say that, it is not only my reading of the

1 record, but as I read the Florida Supreme Court 2 decision, they looked into the question of intent, they 3 looked into the question on this record of the design 4 with which Mr. Enmund had taken part, because intent was 5 relevant at various points of their analysis.

6 QUESTION: Yes. Yes.

7 MR. LIEBMAN: And what they said was,
8 repeatedly, he involved himself in a design to rob, and 9 they used those terms several times, 49 through 50 of 10 the Appendix, and they determined that the deaths that 11 occurred occurred spontaneously at Sampson Armstrong's
12 decision. Now, I am not saying that as to Sampson 13 Armstrong that you couldn't say that there was an 14 intent, but they occurred spontaneously at a time when 15 Earl Enmund was no more part of the enterprise, and 16 therefore, because the intent to kill or whatever state
17 of mind there was arose at that time, when Earl Enmund
18 was no more on the scene and couldn't have participated 19 in it, for that reason, I think it would be a very 20 difficult proposition, to find intent, when I think the 21 Florida Supreme Court, looking at the record, has said 22 that there is no intent.

23 QUESTION: But in any event, you don't suggest 24 that a person has to pull the trigger himself or --

25 MR. LIEBMAN: Absolutely not, Your Honor.

1 There can be an inference drawn from the fact that he 2 pulled the trigger --

3 QUESTION: Oh, sure.

4 MR. LIEBMAN: -- that he intended, but there 5 could be an inference drawn from many other factors even 6 if he doesn't pull the trigger. I would just direct the 7 Court's attention to a Cardoza opinion for the New York 8 court of appeals, People versus Emialeto. It had to 9 look at precisely this question. There were several 10 people involved, and did they all intend death, and 11 Judge Cardoza for that court determined that they did, 12 looking to the circumstances of the crime. The 13 non-trigger men plus the trigger men were found to have 14 participated in a design to kill.

15 QUESTION: Pertaining to your point about 16 intent, assume in this case that Enmund was the only 17 member of this group who entered the residence. He was 18 armed, but he had no intention to shoot, so he 19 testified. A struggle ensued in which the gun went off, 20 his gun went off accidentally. What would that 21 situation --

22 MR. LIEBMAN: Well --

23 QUESTION: How would that be viewed in light 24 of your emphasis on intention? He would testify he had 25 no intention whatever to use the gun. It went off

1 accidentally.

2           MR. LIEBMAN: Well, Your Honor, in that 3 situation, it would be a jury question, and as you said
4 in Coker, the jury system is designed and operates 5 successfully to decide just that question. You give 6 them a standard and you give them the facts. But if the 7 jury determined, and I don't think juries are quick to 8 believe this kind of thing, but if the jury did 9 determine that it was pure accident, that there was no
10 intent, then the death penalty would be inappropriate 11 because the jury would have thereby decided that this 12 person was not at the intent level of culpability, but 13 fell way below it. It fell at a much lower point 14 because there was not an intent, and criminal law has 15 long recognized that the difference between intent and 16 non-intent is a big step. It is the widest divide that 17 we have in our mental states that we look at in criminal 18 law, and therefore, by finding that this person was 19 below that divide, I think that they would be finding a 20 very, very different level of culpability that if the 21 person had intent.

22           QUESTION: You would say that the fact that he 23 carried a gun was no different from the fact that Coker 24 carried a knife.

25           MR. LIEBMAN: That is correct, Your Honor.

1 The foreseeability of the harm, particularly because 2 Ehrlich Coker had not only carried the knife but wielded 3 it and used it in a way that was very dangerous.

4 QUESTION: He wielded it, but he didn't quite 5 use it.

6 MR. LIEBMAN: That's true, although he did 7 hold it to the victim's throat, and --

8 QUESTION: As a threat.

9 MR. LIEBMAN: -- created a very dangerous
10 situation. I think that I have laid out our principal 11 submission under Coker, and therefore I would like to 12 reserve the balance of my time.

13 QUESTION: Mr. Kaden.

14 ORAL ARGUMENT OF LAWRENCE A. KADEN, ESQ.,
15 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENT

16 MR. KADEN: Chief Justice Burger, may it 17 please the Court, the real issue in this case today is 18 whether a state legislature could rationally conclude 19 that a death sentence should be available for a 20 defendant convicted of first degree murder based on his 21 extensive participation in an armed robbery which he 22 planned, procured accomplices for, weapons, participated 23 in, and helped to cover up.

24 The Florida Supreme Court has answered this 25 question in the --

1           QUESTION: Did you say he procured the 2 weapons? Did you say he procured the weapons?

3           MR. KADEN: That's right, Your Honor. There's 4 a very reasonable inference which the jury evidently 5 accepted that the .22 pistol that Ida Jean Shaw kept in 6 her glove compartment was used, Earl Enmund had control
7 of that car also. Earl Enmund --

8           QUESTION: What is support for your statement 9 that he procured the weapons?

10          MR. KADEN: Ida Jean Shaw testified that she 11 kept a .22 gun and a pistol in her car. She also 12 testified at some place in the record, and the records 13 are voluminous -- I can't tell you what page -- that 14 Earl Enmund owned a .38 caliber pistol.

15          QUESTION: Then he also helped to -- undertook 16 to conceal the weapons after the crime, did he?

17          MR. KADEN: That's right, Your Honor. Earl 18 Enmund was arrested for possession of a concealed 19 weapon, for possession of a weapon by a convicted 20 felon. Earl Enmund, in an attempt to alibi his 21 involvement, went out and made a big record in the town
22 there, the local town, of buying a .38 caliber pistol 23 for defense two or three days after the murders. He was 24 trying to show that at the time he didn't have a pistol
25 at the time of the murders. I don't think the jury

1 believed that.

2           In any event, the Florida Supreme Court has 3 answered that question I presented in the affirmative, 4 and I think that based upon common sense and legal 5 precedent, this Court must do the same. The Court
6 should refuse to read an absolute intent requirement
7 into the Eighth Amendment of the United States
8 Constitution.

9           This issue has not precisely been decided by 10 this Court before, I realize that, or we wouldn't be 11 here. However, the Court has provided general 12 constitutional guidelines. Florida has followed these 13 guidelines. Florida's legislative determination
14 comports with all the constitutional requirements
15 previously set forth by this Court. The record before 16 the Court presents a good case where the state courts' 17 factual determinations must be accepted.

18           Now, in the Florida Supreme Court, Petitioner
19 argued this point, and I quote, "Absence of direct proof 20 that the defendant intended to cause the death of the 21 victim is highly relevant in determining the appropriate 22 penalty." Highly relevant. We don't contest that.
23 Now, however, Petitioner is claiming that absence of 24 proof of actual intent to kill should be an absolute 25 constitutional bar to the imposition of the death

1 penalty. He is asking too much from the Constitution.

2 Florida's position, as was reiterated in our 3 brief numerous times, is that the Court should refrain 4 from drawing a bright line in a case like this in an 5 area which has traditionally been left to the state
6 legislatures. Now, Petitioner counters with the fact
7 that, well, death is different. The legislature 8 shouldn't be allowed to control this.

9 Yes, death is different, but it's different 10 for the innocent victims as well as the defendant, and 11 that is the precise reason, the precise reason this case
12 is different from Coker v. Georgia. In Coker, the Court 13 has already drawn a bright line. Unless this Court can 14 be persuaded to recede from that line, that is where the 15 line should stay. If the victim dies, the death penalty 16 should be available. If the victim lives, then death is 17 out of the question.

18 QUESTION: Well, would you say that the death
19 penalty ought to be available under our cases in a case 20 of negligent homicide?

21 MR. KADEN: Of course not, Your Honor, but I 22 think that is a legislative determination, not a 23 judicial one.

24 QUESTION: So you would say if the Florida
25 legislature provides the death penalty for negligent

1 homicide, there would be nothing that any federal court 2 could do about it.

3           MR. KADEN: If it complied -- if their 4 legislative determination complied with all the factors 5 previously enunciated by this Court, with the 6 aggravating factors and the mitigating circumstances and 7 the weighing process. I doubt that could be done, but 8 the legislature does have the authority to do that.

9           QUESTION: So you say that death is both -- 10 the occurrence of the victim's death is both, in effect, 11 a necessary and a sufficient basis for imposing the 12 death penalty.

13           MR. KADEN: After Coker, Your Honor.

14           Now, the Florida legislature has constructed a 15 statutory framework for imposing death sentences which 16 complies with all this Court's previous opinions. In 17 Florida, death sentences are not automatic. This is 18 Proffitt. The statute requires that any evidence 19 proffered in mitigation must be considered by the 20 sentencing authorities. This was Lockett before Lockett 21 was decided.

22           Finally, the statute requires that the 23 sentencing decision be based upon the entire record. In 24 Petitioner's case, all three parts of Florida's 25 three-tiered system agreed that death was appropriate.

1 This is a factual determination. The judgment of the 2 jury, the trial court, and the Florida Supreme Court 3 should be respected by this Court. Florida has based 4 culpability in terms of foreseeability. A criminal 5 becomes fully responsible for his criminal conduct. A 6 criminal who creates situations from which violence can 7 occur must suffer the consequences once that violence 8 occurs, in this case death.

9           Someone like Earl Enmund, who originated the 10 idea for this robbery, procured the weapons and 11 accomplices, extensively participated in the crime, 12 helped to cover up the crime by directing that the 13 weapons be disposed of by directing from his jail cell
14 that other defendants in the case perjured themselves, 15 someone like Earl Enmund, who used the ill-gotten gains 16 from the murders to pay off his bad debts, someone like 17 Earl Enmund should be eligible for the maximum penalty, 18 but again, in Florida, just because a defendant is 19 eligible for a maximum penalty, it doesn't mean that he 20 is going to automatically get it.

21           QUESTION: Wouldn't liable to be a better word 22 than eligible for?

23           MR. KADEN: Yes, Your Honor.

24           QUESTION: Suppose in this case there had been 25 no guns involved, but two people went in the house, and

1 one of the victims pulled a gun, and one of the robbers
2 picked up an ashtray, a glass ashtray and killed them 3 with it?

4 MR. KADEN: The difference --

5 QUESTION: They are no different.

6 MR. KADEN: -- would be negligible.

7 QUESTION: Yes.

8 MR. KADEN: They are still engaging in 9 foreseeably dangerous conduct, depending on the facts 10 and circumstances in that hypothetical. The natural and 11 probable consequences of being prepared and willing to 12 use a weapon would be death, and that is what precisely 13 occurred here.

14 QUESTION: That would apply to the man who was 15 sitting out in the car?

16 MR. KADEN: That's right.

17 QUESTION: Of course, on the facts of this 18 case, as you just put them a moment ago, it wouldn't hurt
19 the state to have to prove intent. I would think you -- 20 the facts the way you reviewed them would indicate 21 that --

22 MR. KADEN: Well, Justice White, I have talked 23 to the prosecutor, and he would like to have been able 24 to have proved intent, but he couldn't do it because 25 there was no one left who was willing to talk. The two

1 victims were dead. If one of the victims had lived,
2 there is a very good chance that premeditated murder
3 could have been proven, but just because the defendants 4 are skilfull in killing their victims doesn't mean that 5 the state is left without the right to exact the maximum 6 penalty.

7 QUESTION: Excuse me. Did you say the 8 defendant killed them? Shot them? He shot them?

9 MR. KADEN: I didn't say Earl Enmund killed
10 anyone, Your Honor.

11 QUESTION: Oh, well, you said, the defendant.

12 MR. KADEN: Earl Enmund is guilty of first 13 degree murder based on his participation under Florida 14 law.

15 QUESTION: I thought so.

16 QUESTION: Would it be constitutional for a 17 state to provide that at any time firearms, loaded 18 firearms are used and death then results, intent is 19 presumed?

20 MR. KADEN: I think so, Your Honor. I don't 21 see any constitutional bar to that. That is basically 22 the felony murder rule, except you added the part about 23 the firearms. The felony murder rule is beyond 24 constitutional challenge. This Court has said that.
25 Also the fact that aiders and abettors can be held

1 equally responsible, that is also beyond constitutional 2 challenge.

3           QUESTION: The statutory requirement that the 4 gun be loaded would be even a stronger case than 5 ordinary felony homicide, would it not?

6           MR. KADEN: That's right, Your Honor.

7           QUESTION: Well, but then you are saying in 8 certain circumstances you don't require intent.

9           MR. KADEN: That's exactly right, Your Honor.
10 Death is never required in Florida's statutory 11 framework. The decision to impose death is a mixture of 12 considerations. The jury makes a recommendation based 13 on the facts of the crime and the facts pertaining to 14 the individual, the defendant, and he makes -- the jury
15 a recommendation to the trial court. The trial court 16 can accept or reject that recommendation, and that 17 decision by the trial court is then subject to appellate 18 review.

19           QUESTION: Well, are there under existing 20 Florida law without regard to what considerations there 21 may be under the Eighth Amendment, are there homicides 22 which do not require intent or even the constructive 23 intent that the Supreme Court of Florida found here, but 24 that nonetheless render one liable to the death sentence?

25           MR. KADEN: Do you mean like treason or

1 kidnapping?

2 QUESTION: No, I mean just your run of the 3 mine homicides.

4 MR. KADEN: I am not sure I understand your 5 question.

6 QUESTION: Well, what is the lowest level of 7 intent you can have for a homicide in Florida and still 8 be subjected to the death penalty under Florida statutes?

9 MR. KADEN: Under premeditated murder, you
10 have to prove intent to kill. Under felony murder, you 11 have to prove the participation, the actual 12 participation in the underlying felony, and the felonies 13 are not just any felonies, like forgery is not 14 included. It would be just dangerous, violent felonies, 15 like armed robbery, or sexual --

16 QUESTION: You don't need to prove intent 17 there at all.

18 MR. KADEN: That's right.

19 QUESTION: Except to --

20 MR. KADEN: Intent is presumed by the 21 participation, the willing participation in the 22 dangerous, foreseeably dangerous conduct.

23 QUESTION: You have to prove intent to rob, 24 though, don't you?

25 MR. KADEN: That's right. You have to prove

1 -- the jury has to find that they were participating in 2 the underlying felony.

3           Now, as I was saying, the death sentence in 4 Florida is not automatic. Florida has a statutory 5 mitigating circumstance which the jury must consider and 6 the trial court must consider. That circumstance, that 7 mitigating circumstance specifically directs their 8 attention to an accomplice's degree of involvement in 9 the felony, in the capital felony. If an accomplice is 10 truly a minor accomplice, like Earl Enmund claims, then 11 he is going to have the benefit of this mitigating 12 circumstance.

13           However, the jury rejected and the trial court
14 factually found that Earl Enmund was a major 15 accomplice. His involvement was major. The Florida 16 Supreme Court did not disturb that finding. That must 17 be accepted by this Court. Earl Enmund's participation 18 was --

19           QUESTION: Does that mean, counsel, that the 20 sentencing authority could not consider the degree of 21 his participation?

22           MR. KADEN: No, Your Honor.

23           QUESTION: Was that precluded? That appeared 24 to be one of the arguments made by the Petitioner.

25           MR. KADEN: I realize that. That argument is 1 not valid in this case.

2 QUESTION: Explain why and how.

3 MR. KADEN: I am saying that Florida directs 4 that this mitigating circumstance be considered. In 5 addition to that, the statute requires that the 6 individual nature of the defendant, the character of the 7 defendant and the nature and circumstances of the crime
8 must be considered, and this is taken from the whole 9 record, and in fact that's what the trial court did.
10 You can read the trial court's specific findings.

11 Now, Petitioner has attempted to cloud his 12 culpability in this case by making reference to the 13 spontaneity of the crime, the fortuitousness of the 14 crime. In other words, he has claimed that his conduct 15 was technically, technically no different from Coker's, 16 therefore he, like Coker, can't get a death sentence.

17 Unfortunately for Petitioner, but more 18 unfortunately for his victims, Earl Enmund's case is 19 fatally different. By his wilfull, reckless 20 participation in a foreseeably dangerous felony 21 involving deadly weapons, Petitioner took the risk that 22 death might result, and once that risk came to fruition 23 and once death did result, the rationale behind Coker is 24 no longer constitutionally controlling.

25 The best and the only solution is to make

1 intent merely one of the numerous factors which make up
2 the sentencing equation. Several of the members of this 3 Court have already recognized that. This is what 4 Lockett requires, and this is exactly what Florida's law
5 has done. Intent should be just a factor.

6           Now, Petitioner in his reply brief has said 7 that we have grudgingly admitted that intent can be 8 relevant. We would be trying to fool the Court if we 9 said intent was not relevant. But intent is not 10 controlling. Intent should not be controlling. There
11 is no requirement in the Eighth Amendment for intent 12 before a death sentence can be imposed.

13           Now, in Coker, the Court set forth a 14 two-pronged test. The first part of the test was 15 whether a particular punishment contributed to the 16 acceptable goals of punishment as recognized by 17 society. The first part that needs to be discussed is 18 deterrence.

19           Now, Petitioner has argued that one who does 20 not intend death can't be deterred. He can't be 21 deterred from what he didn't intend to commit. But 22 Petitioner has missed the point. The point is that 23 Florida's law is designed to prevent the commission of 24 the underlying felony, the foreseeably dangerous
25 underlying felony the natural and probable consequences

1 of which is death.

2           If there was no felony in this case, no 3 attempted robbery, or no robbery, there wouldn't have 4 been deaths. If the death penalty is made unavailable 5 in situations like this, shrewd, cunning criminals will 6 insulate themselves from the death penalty by procuring 7 less mentally gifted criminals to do their dirty work.
8 That would defy common sense. That would be going 9 against public policy of allowing the states to enforce 10 their criminal justice systems and protect their 11 citizens by criminal laws which need to be enforced.

12           A second situation that could occur would be 13 where a smart criminal procures a juvenile who, 14 depending on what happens in Eddings, might not be 15 eligible for the death penalty. Again, this would be 16 against public policy.

17           A second goal of punishment which a death 18 penalty in this type of situation achieves is moral 19 outrage, or retribution. Florida's law meets this goal, 20 too. Earl Enmund's moral guilt was presupposed by his 21 participation in this violent felony. He has been made 22 fully responsible for what he has done, the old "an eye 23 for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, and a life for a 24 life." This theory of retribution allows society to 25 strike back for Earl Enmund's deliberate act which upset

1 the moral order of society.

2           In fact, a felony murder is even more
3 reprehensible than the average, if you have an average
4 premeditated murder. That is because the victim of a
5 felony murder is randomly selected. There is no rhyme 6 or reason. It happens to be the poor student who is 7 working in a gas station at night, or the poor person 8 that happens to be on duty at a convenience store on the 9 late shift. There is no reason for them to die, but it 10 doesn't make any difference to the victim. They are 11 murdered whether they are felony murdered, 12 premeditatedly murdered, or whatever theory you want to 13 use.

14           Society is hurt the same way. The victim is 15 still dead, and society has the right to strike back on 16 the person who caused these deaths.

17           A final theory which Florida's law meets is 18 incapacitation. If a criminal who has killed once is 19 executed, he can't kill again. Now, you might say that 20 this doesn't come up very often, but just the week
21 before last the Florida Supreme Court affirmed a death 22 sentence for a prisoner who had been sent to prison for 23 murder, and he had a life sentence, and he murdered
24 again. If he had been executed that first time, no 25 second murder would have occurred.

1           The second part of the proportionality test 2 that was set forth in Coker is whether the punishment is 3 grossly --

4           QUESTION: Well, one thing, he can't be found
5 innocent any more than once, can he? Right? He can't 6 be found innocent --

7           MR. KADEN: He can't be retried again.

8           QUESTION: -- more than once, can he?

9           MR. KADEN: He can be retried once.

10          The second part of the proportionality test is 11 whether the punishment is grossly out of proportion to 12 the severity of the crime. Petitioner was convicted of 13 first degree murder, and he hasn't even begun to attempt 14 to challenge his conviction. Therefore, Coker's 15 proportionality test is satisfied. That is all the 16 Constitution requires. The Court shouldn't draw any 17 further line than what has already been done. Leave it 18 to the legislatures.

19          Now, while this is not controlling before the 20 Court, it certainly should be persuasive that 21 approximately half the states have legislatively 22 determined that death should be available if the 23 constitutional principles are satisfied in a situation 24 like this. This was recognized by Justice Blackmun and 25 Justice Rehnquist in the Lockett decision.

1           Also relevant, but I won't say controlling, is 2 what Congress is doing. I discuss this in my brief.
3 Petitioner disagrees. The Court is going to have to 4 read Senate bill 114 for itself, but I think -- I am 5 satisfied the Court will find that Congress has 6 favorably passed out of Committee a law which would 7 allow the death penalty to be imposed on the 8 non-homocidal crimes of espionage, treason, and 9 attempted assassination of the President. That --

10           QUESTION: Except for Mr. Spinkelnik, when was 11 the last time anybody was executed in Florida?

12           MR. KADEN: That is the last time, Your 13 Honor. There is an execution -- in fact, Sampson --

14           QUESTION: Except for that, when was the last 15 time?

16           MR. KADEN: I am not sure, Your Honor. I 17 believe it was 1965.

18           QUESTION: You go through all these motions, 19 and --

20           MR. KADEN: That's right, Your Honor. I --

21           QUESTION: -- it never happens.

22           MR. KADEN: Sampson Armstrong, the 23 co-defendant here, is scheduled to die next week. Right 24 now, at this minute, he is having a hearing in Bartow.
25 I don't know what the outcome of that is.

1 QUESTION: In where?

2 MR. KADEN: Bartow, Florida, in the state
3 court system there. Actually, I think it is Hardee 4 County, Florida, where the murders were committed.

5 The federal statute I just mentioned would 6 also allow the death penalty where an accomplice
7 intentionally participates in an act in which there is a 8 risk of death and the victim dies as a direct result of 9 that act. The direct result question would be a jury 10 question, but it would allow for a death sentence to be 11 imposed in the context like Earl Enmund's case. The 12 House is currently considering a similar bill. I don't 13 have a number. This bill was introduced after my brief 14 was filed.

15 Also persuasive, but not controlling, is the 16 model penal code. The model penal code, as outlined by 17 the brief filed by the Washington Legal Foundation in 18 this case, specifically includes accomplices to robbery
19 as persons who could be capitally punished if death 20 occurs. The intent and recklessness is presumed if the 21 murder is committed during a robbery.

22 As the Foundation pointed out, if the model 23 penal code had been in effect in Florida when these 24 murders occurred and when the trial occurred, Petitioner 25 could have been sentenced to death under that model

1 penal code.

2           Next, I would like to discuss Petitioner's
3 argument that the Florida Supreme Court has eliminated 4 the death sentence in cases like this. Petitioner has 5 cited, oh, eight or ten cases at the conclusion of his 6 brief, but what Petitioner fails to tell this Court is 7 that those cases all involved jury recommendations of 8 life sentences which the trial court overruled and the 9 Florida Supreme Court rejected. Petitioner's jury 10 recommended a death sentence.

11           Petitioner's second argument in his brief was 12 that this record cannot support his death sentence.
13 This argument should not be persuasive. The trial court
14 specifically found, and the Florida Supreme Court upheld 15 this finding, that Earl Enmund's involvement was major, 16 not minor, as Earl Enmund would have you believe. But 17 for Earl Enmund, these murders would not have occurred.
18 The jury, the trial court, and the Florida Supreme Court 19 all agreed that death was the appropriate sentence for 20 Petitioner. This decision was reached after they 21 considered the unique circumstances of Earl Enmund's 22 character and the individual circumstances of the crimes.

23           QUESTION: Mr. Kaden, may I interrupt you with 24 a question? The trial judge found, I believe, that the 25 defendant Enmund and the defendant Sampson Armstrong

1 each fired into the bodies of Mr. and Mrs. Kersey. Now, 2 the appellate court came up with a different holding.
3 How does that affect the sentencing process?

4 MR. KADEN: It doesn't affect it at all in 5 this case because there were two valid, unchallenged 6 aggravating circumstances, no mitigating circumstances.
7 When there -- Under Florida law, when there is one 8 aggravating circumstance, no mitigating circumstance, 9 death is presumed. If the Florida Supreme Court made 10 any mistakes at all in this case, it would be throwing 11 out that factual finding by the trial court.

12 The trial court was aware from the trial that 13 Jeanette Armstrong, who had gone up to the murder scene, 14 was seriously wounded. There is evidence in the record 15 that she blacked out. Because of the fact that the 16 victims' bodies had two different types of bullets found 17 in them, the trial court took the reasonable inference 18 that Earl Enmund had either left the car or never been 19 in the car and gone up and done the shooting.

20 QUESTION: Well, if the trial court made that 21 finding, and then also said that the defendant's 22 participation was major, was the finding that his 23 participation was major based on the belief that he had 24 fired the shot?

25 MR. KADEN: No, that was based on the entire

1 record.

2 QUESTION: And what do we do when the 3 appellate court throws it out?

4 MR. KADEN: That was based on the entire 5 record, which showed that he was the one who originated 6 the plan, he planned the thing, he was seen driving in 7 the car out there, seen driving back. He covered it up
8 by directing that Ida Jean Shaw dispose of the murder
9 weapons. His involvement was major. That factual
10 determination must be accepted by this Court.

11 What the Florida Supreme Court didn't say, and 12 it was not brought out by the state, although this is in 13 the record, Willie Lee testified that early on the 14 morning of the murders, he observed the vehicle which 15 was seen in front of the house, he observed it drive by 16 his place where he was standing waiting for a ride.
17 Inside the car, he testified that absolute -- excuse me,
18 he testified that Ida Jean Shaw was driving, Earl Enmund 19 was in the passenger seat, that there were two 20 unidentified blacks in the back of the car, a male and a 21 female, two young blacks.

22 He testified that he was still waiting for his 23 -- the same ride when the vehicle returned. This time, 24 Earl Enmund was driving at a reckless rate of speed, Ida 25 Jean Shaw was in the passenger seat, and one of the

1 blacks who had been in the back to begin with -- I
2 shouldn't say that. One of the people in the back seat
3 was slumped over. Okay.

4           You might ask what relevance does that have.
5 All right. Another witness testified that she saw a 6 black male in the car out in front of the victim's 7 residence. However, another witness testified that the 8 person in the car that he saw -- this is Robert Davis.
9 He testified on cross examination that the person he saw 10 had long hair. Earl Enmund is bald. I think the trial 11 court could take notice of that. That is not in the 12 record.

13           Therefore, the only reasonable inference which 14 the trial court can make was that Earl Enmund was not in 15 that car, since the person who was seen in the car had 16 long hair. That is in Robert Davis's testimony, and 17 that wasn't discussed by the Florida Supreme Court. I 18 don't know why.

19           Finally, Florida disagrees with Petitioner's 20 assertion that he presented evidence in mitigation in 21 this case. The record is clear that he did not.
22 Petitioner's attorney did make a brief statement in his 23 closing argument concerning Earl Enmund's involvement, 24 but in Florida as well as probably most of the other 25 states, what an attorney says is not evidence. Even

1 Petitioner's trial attorney recognized this when asked 2 by the trial court during the sentencing phase if he had 3 any evidence to present. He replied, and I quote, "We 4 have no evidence." That is Page 1,677 of the record.

5 I don't see how Petitioner can come into this 6 Court and argue now that the Florida Supreme Court or 7 the trial court refused to consider what he didn't 8 present. Despite his failure to present evidence in the 9 sentencing phase, it is clear from the Florida Supreme 10 Court's opinion and the trial court's findings of fact 11 that the entire record was considered. If there had 12 been any evidence in mitigation, it would have been 13 found. There was none in this case.

14 Florida's legislative and judicial conclusions 15 comport with all the principles previously enunciated by 16 this Court. In short, there is no constitutional 17 barrier to prevent the state of Florida from carrying 18 out the death sentence which was ordered six years ago 19 on this defendant for a crime which was committed nearly 20 seven years ago.

21 The state of Florida urges this Court, let the 22 Constitution be controlling rather than individual 23 notions of what is fair in a case like this. The Court 24 must continue to allow the various state legislatures to 25 make the laws and to allow these laws to be enforced.

1 Crime needs to be stopped. The states should be allowed 2 to enforce their criminal laws.

3 Based on this record and the facts of this 4 case, Earl Enmund's death sentence should be affirmed.
5 Thank you.

6 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Do you have anything
7 further, Mr. Liebman?

8 ORAL ARGUMENT OF JAMES S. LIEBMAN, ESQ.,
9 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER - REBUTTAL

10 MR. LIEBMAN: Yes, Mr. Chief Justice.

11 To begin with, I was rather startled that Mr.
12 Kaden argued or appeared to be arguing that Earl Enmund 13 was inside that house, and that the trial court made the 14 correct finding on that. In the Supreme Court of 15 Florida, the state of Florida took the following 16 position about the facts of Mr. Enmund's participation 17 in the case. I am reading from their brief on appeal at 18 Page 33:

19 "Appellant Enmund in this case, being 20 constructively present some 200 yards away and aiding in 21 the escape, was therefore a second degree principal, and 22 therefore guilty under Florida's felony murder rule."

23 They argued there and they took the position 24 that the facts were only enough to support exactly what 25 the Florida Supreme Court found, that he wasn't at the

1 house, that he was 200 yards away, and I just think that 2 if the Court reviews the record, it will see that the 3 Florida Supreme Court, whose findings are do respect, as 4 this Court held, for example, in Sumner v. Mada so 5 recently, that those findings are absolutely correct on 6 the record, and the state took that position in the 7 Florida Supreme Court.

8           Now, turning to Justice O'Connor's argument or 9 question during my opponent's argument, I would like to 10 refer the Court to Page 55 of the Joint Appendix, the 11 tan Appendix. On that page, the Florida Supreme Court
12 finds that two of the four aggravating circumstances 13 that the trial court had found were not present in the 14 case, and then it cites the Elledge case in the middle.
15 The Elledge case is the Florida rule that if there are 16 any aggravating circumstances that are rejected and 17 there is any mitigating evidence, any mitigating 18 circumstance at all, then you have to remand for 19 resentencing.

20           And what did the Florida Supreme Court say, 21 having wiped out two of the aggravating circumstances in 22 the case and then applying the Elledge rule? It said, 23 and I am quoting, and this is from the very last two 24 sentences on the page, "The finding" -- it's referring 25 to the trial court's finding -- "The finding that no

1 mitigating circumstances were present was not error.
2 Therefore, the sentence of death is appropriate, and we 3 approve it."

4           They found not that there was some mitigating 5 circumstances or whatever, they found that there were no 6 mitigating circumstances. They say it no less than 7 three times on that page.

8           Sandra Lockett helped plan the murder in the 9 Lockett case. She pointed out the store, the pawn shop 10 that was robbed. Sandra Lockett hid a gun from the 11 police while the police were searching a taxicab she was 12 in. Sandra Lockett hid two of her cohorts in the attic 13 when the police were searching her house. And yet this 14 Court held, and even in Justice Blackmun's more narrow 15 rule in the Lockett case, that the lack of involvement
16 in the homicide, and I am quoting Justice Blackmun's 17 opinion there, it's "involvement in the homicide was a 18 mitigating circumstance that if no other circumstance 19 was considered had to be considered."

20           And here, I think, in black and white, at 21 least three different occasions on Page 55, the court 22 has said that there were no mitigating circumstances, 23 that it did not consider those.

24           Moving to a question that Your Honor, Chief 25 Justice asked --

1 QUESTION: Doesn't Florida law say what a
2 mitigating circumstance is, or is it just undefined?

3 MR. LIEBMAN: Well, they do define in the 4 statute that there are eight mitigating circumstances, 5 but --

6 QUESTION: Well, none of them is participation
7 or a lack of it.

8 MR. LIEBMAN: That's right, but the way that --

9 QUESTION: Well, that's all the Supreme Court
10 is saying. There aren't any mitigating circumstances 11 within the meaning of the statute.

12 MR. LIEBMAN: No, as I -- Your Honor, as I
13 understand the Florida rule, it is not mitigating 14 circumstances within the statute, but mitigating 15 circumstances. But in any case, for the Court to turn 16 dire consequences on whether there are mitigating 17 circumstances but they are statutory or non-statutory, I 18 think, would also violate the principle in Lockett that 19 all of these mitigating circumstances have to be 20 considered, but I would also point out that what the 21 trial court found, and I believe that this is on Page 22 34, if I am not -- well, it's on Page 28. "The Court 23 can find no mitigating circumstnaces as it applies to 24 this Defendant." That is what the trial court said.
25 That is the finding that the Surpeme Court said was not

1 in error, and based on which it affirmed. \

2           If I could turn for just a moment to a
3 question that the Chief Justice asked about a statute
4 saying that guns would be enough, if guns were involved
5 and everybody knew about it, could that be enough. My 6 opponent also mentioned Senate bill 114 and the model
7 penal code. All of those examples, I want to point out, 8 involve a subjective state of mind with regard to the 9 homicide that was not proved here.

10           Now, we think the intent line is the best 11 line, but there is also another line that would be a 12 subjective state of culpability with regard to the 13 homicide, be it recklessness, serious -- some sort of 14 awareness of it, and that was not found in this case.
15 It would be enough under the model penal code. It would 16 be enough under Senate 114. But it was not found here.

17           CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Your time has expired
18 now, counsel.

19           MR. LIEBMAN: Thank you, Your Honor.

20           CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: The case is submitted.

21           (Whereupon, at 3:08 o'clock p.m., the case in 22 the above-entitled matter was submitted.)
