CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments next in Southern Pacific Transportation Company against Commercial Metals. You may proceed whenever you are ready now.

ORAL ARGUMENT OF JAMES H. PIPKIN, JR., ESQ.
ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER

MR. PIPKIN: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the Court:

I represent petitioner, Southern Pacific Transportation Company, a railroad common carrier involved in this action. In essence, the action is an effort by the carrier to recover from the shipper or consignor -- in this case, respondent Commercial Metals Company -- freight charges incurred in transporting three separate carload shipments of steel cobble, which is a form of scrap steel, from Detroit, Michigan to southern California back in 1974. The dollar amount involved in these movements is small; it is less than $14,000 total.

The legal issue presented is of great significance to the nation's railroads and motor carriers. It is whether a carrier's right to recover transportation charges from a consignor can be barred by an implied remedy based on a violation of the ICC's

1 credit regulations. Or putting it another way, it is 2 whether an equitable defense should be added to the 3 credit regulations as an enforcement mechanism.

4 The courts below found that the carrier
5 violated the ICC's credit regulations with respect to 6 all three shipments here involved, by delivering the 7 first shipment without checking the credit worthiness of 8 the consignee and by accepting checks which were later 9 returned for insufficient funds, and one of which was 10 for an amount less than that subsequently determined to 11 be due.

12 Though Southern Pacific contends that the 13 actions with respect to the second and third cars do not 14 violate the credit regulations, we concede a violation 15 with respect to the first. So the question is what 16 consequences arise from that violation. And the courts
17 below found that while Southern Pacific had made a prima 18 facie case of a right to recovery from the consignor, 19 the credit violation gave rise to an affirmative defense
20 which barred collection of the charges.

21 The argument I would like to make this morning
22 is basically twofold. It is first, that the lower 23 court's decision is inconsistent with the purposes of the 24 credit regulations as well as their language and history
25 and 50 years of case law; and second, that the decision,

1 if allowed to stand, will have serious adverse 2 consequences to the nation's transportation system.

3 QUESTION: Before you get into your argument,
4 may I ask you a question about the facts, Mr. Pipkin.
5 Does the record tell us whether the consignor was paid
6 for the goods?

7 MR. PIPKIN: I am not sure that it is in the 8 record, but it is conceded in respondent's brief on the 9 merits that he was paid.

10 QUESTION: Oh, it is. I missed it. Thank you.

11 MR. PIPKIN: One of our reasons for saying
12 that the court below erred is based on the contract
13 between the carrier and the consignor.

14 QUESTION: Mr. Pipkin, let me interrupt you a 15 little bit. What is the percentage of consignors that 16 sign that annotation?

17 MR. PIPKIN: There is no information that is 18 available that really would give an overall percentage
19 of that. I understand in the case of Southern Pacific 20 it is something like one-third.

21 QUESTION: I couldn't hear Justice Stevens's
22 question and I may be repeating, but what is the status 23 -- does the record show the status of the Southern 24 Pacific's suit against Carco?

25 MR. PIPKIN: The record doesn't show the

1 status. It shows that the summons and the complaint
2 were unable to be served, both by special processor who 3 were hired by the carrier, and subsequently by the 4 Marshall's office of the court. No service was ever 5 made, and in fact, the record shows that the carrier was 6 unable even to track down the consignee through the 7 Secretary of State's office of the state of California.
8 So all that the record really shows is that service was 9 unable to be obtained, and that the consignee 10 effectively vanished.

11 QUESTION: Were the goods ever paid for?

12 MR. PIPKIN: Yes, sir. That was the answer to 13 Mr. Justice Stevens' question.

14 The consignor is the party that requests the 15 transportation service and selects the consignee. And 16 the consignor fills out a bill of lading, which is the 17 basic contract between the consignor and the carrier.
18 Its terms are described by the Interstate Commerce
19 Commission, and unless the bill of lading explicitly 20 provides to the contrary, the consignor is presumed to 21 be primarily liable for the freight charges.

22 The consignor has the option, however, of 23 disclaiming liability for the charges by executing the 24 so-called "non-recourse clause" that appears on the face
25 of the bill of lading. If the consignor fails to sign

1 the non-recourse clause, it becomes primarily liable for 2 the freight charge, and the carrier knows that if he is 3 unable to collect from the consignee, he can then turn 4 to the consignor for payment.

5 QUESTION: What is the practical effect of the 6 non-recourse clause? What incentive does the consignor 7 have not to sign it?

8 MR. PIPKIN: Well, that involves the business 9 relationships essentially between the consignor and the 10 consignee. Any consignee would rather receive goods on 11 credit, and most goods do move on credit. Approximately 12 95% of the goods in interstate freight transportation 13 move on credit.

14 If the consignor signs the non-recourse clause 15 which says that he is not liable for payment, the 16 carrier is then more likely to deliver that shipment to 17 the consignee on a COD basis, unless he knows the 18 consignee well and has dealt with him in the past. The 19 consignee clearly would rather not have that situation
20 arise, and if he has two prospective sellers of goods, 21 one of which will not sign the non-recourse clause and 22 one which does, he would rather get the goods from the 23 consignor so it will arrive on a credit basis rather 24 than COD. But that is really a business judgment and it 25 involves, to some extent, almost whether it is deemed

1 insulting to the consignee to receive it on that basis.

2 But in any event, the continuing liability of 3 the consignor who does not sign the non-recourse clause 4 is clear from the language of the bill of lading and 5 clear under the case law for the last 60 years, and in 6 fact, as this Court has expressly recognized that in the 7 Illinois Steel case cited in our briefs.

8 The cases also indicate that under the 9 Interstate Commerce Act, the carrier has a duty to 10 collect the freight charge, and if he cannot collect it 11 from the consignee, he must try to collect it from the 12 consignor. Allowing a violation of the credit 13 regulations to be used as a bar against collection from 14 the consignor would be inconsistent with those cases and 15 the essential purposes that they endorse.

16 Apart from the contract, the principal reason 17 for our position basically is the statute and the 18 regulations are part of a comprehensive regulatory 19 scheme, and they are totally silent on any affirmative
20 defense arising from violation of the credit
21 regulations. And I would like to speak just for a 22 second about the history.

23 The credit regulations can be traced back to 24 1918 during the first World War when the Director 25 General of the railroads then issued something called

1 General Order Number 25, which essentially put 2 interstate freight transportation on a cash basis, with 3 a few exceptions.

4 The purposes are undisputed for taking that 5 action. They were to increase the working capital of 6 the carriers by reducing the amount of freight charges 7 that would be outstanding, owed by the consignees, and 8 to reduce discrimination. And when in 1920 the Congress
9 enacted what became Section 3(2) of the Interstate 10 Commerce Act, the issue here involved -- that is the 11 basis for the credit regulations.

12 The continued that same policy. Carriers were 13 told that they could not deliver freight until the 14 charges were paid, except under such rules and 15 regulations as the commission should prescribe. The 16 same purposes were true, though -- to protect the 17 carriers and their working capital, and to prevent 18 discrimination. And the regulations adopted by the 19 commission left a great deal of discretion to the 20 carriers. The main one is one that says that the 21 carrier can extend credit for a specific period upon 22 taking whatever precautions are deemed by it to be 23 adequate to assure payment.

24 Those regulations are still in effect and have 25 been for 61 years, they are enforced by the Interstate

1 Commerce Commission primarily through a $5000 civil 2 penalty, but also occasionally by cease and desist
3 orders or injunctive proceedings. And in this whole
4 regulatory scheme there is no hint that a credit 5 violation can be utilized as an affirmative defense, or 6 that Congress intended that to be an enforcement 7 mechanism. And that engrafting such a defense on the 8 regulatory scheme would in no way further the purposes
9 of that scheme, which were to protect the carrier's 10 working capital and to prevent discrimination.

11 In addition, the ICC has taken a very clear
12 position on this same issue that is before the Court.
13 It has expressly said in the CGF Grain case that we cite 14 in our briefs that a credit regulation -- credit
15 violation, excuse me -- has no effect on a consignor's 16 liability.

17 QUESTION: We don't have any views of the ICC
18 in this case, do we?

19 MR. PIPKIN: No, we don't, Your Honor. But we 20 do have that clear expression of their view on the 21 precise issue that is before the Court. And the 22 agency's interpretation, the agency that is responsible 23 for promulgating the regulations and enforcing them is, 24 we submit, entitled to great weight.

25 And lastly, the decisions shortly after the

1 credit regulations were issued uniformly rejected
2 arguments that violations of the credit regulations
3 barred recovery of the freight charges. And we cite 4 decisions particularly in 1924 and 1925 that raised
5 exactly the same issue where state supreme courts
6 rejected the same contention that is made.

7 The same thing had happened when the motor
8 carrier credit regulations were promulgated at a later
9 time than those that apply to the railroads. The courts
10 considering that uniformly rejected estoppel as a 11 defense. For 50 years after that railroad credit
12 regulation was issued, no court held that a violation 13 could bar recovery of freight charges.

14 QUESTION: I am sorry, Mr. Pipkin, would you
15 tell me again the name of that case, the ICC --

16 MR. PIPKIN: The ICC? It is called CGF Grain.

17 QUESTION: Have you cited it?

18 MR. PIPKIN: Yes, Your Honor, we have.

19 QUESTION: Don't bother, I will get it. Thank 20 you.

21 QUESTION: And they agree with you?

22 MR. PIPKIN: Yes, Your Honor. It is 351 ICC,
23 710. And it is referred to in both of our briefs.

24 QUESTION: And the ICC agrees with you?

25 MR. PIPKIN: Yes, Your Honor.

1 Now, we recognize that there are cases cited
2 by Commercial Metals in this case, virtually all of 3 which involve a situation where there is a consignee who 4 has had some misrepresentation made to him by a carrier, 5 and the result is that the consignee has relied on that 6 misrepresentation and taken some detrimental action; and 7 where the court has found that if payment were to be 8 required, the consignee would have effectively paid 9 twice. And the courts in those -- or, a number of the 10 courts addressing those cases have held that there can 11 be an estoppel in that situation.

12 What I would point out is that whatever the 13 merits of those decisions, those cases do not turn on a 14 violation of the credit regulations but rather on a 15 misrepresentation by the carrier in detrimental
16 reliance. And they involve a consignee, not a 17 consignor, and the kind of situation that is addressed
18 there cannot arise in the consignor context. And there 19 has been payment by someone at least in most cases of 20 the full charge, albeit to the wrong person.

21 In only one aberrational case, prior to this 22 one, has any court held that a consignor can take 23 advantage of a credit violation. All other cases have 24 been resolved by enforcing payment. And what we say is 25 that in the fact of that history where the credit

1 regulations have been interpreted consistently from the 2 time of their promulgation through the next 50 years, 3 this Court should not, in the 1980's, engraft a new 4 affirmative defense upon them.

5 The other reasons that we give for reaching 6 that conclusion have to do with the consequences of the 7 lower court's decision. If the decision is upheld, one 8 result, simple result, is the practical elimination of 9 the non-recourse clause which has been in the bill of 10 lading for 61 years and which obviously has been viewed 11 as having some purpose.

12 And I say that it will be practically 13 eliminated because the credit regulations require that 14 payment be made within five days. If the shipper
15 doesn't pay it within five days, technically a credit
16 violation will have occurred. And whenever the carrier 17 then turns to the consignor, the consignor will be able 18 to say well, you violated the credit regulations by not 19 forcing payment within that five-day period, so in 20 effect, it will make no difference whether the 21 non-recourse clause is signed or not.

22 Second and more importantly, more and more 23 consignors and consignees will claim that they do not 24 have to pay because of some credit violation. There are 25 several possible results to this, all of them we submit

1 bad. First, the carriers, as the amicus brief filed by 2 the ATA and the AER indicate, may be forced to curtail
3 extensions of credit. As I mentioned, 95% of freight
4 now moves on credit, and the amount of credit
5 outstanding on shipments in any year is something like 6 $25 billion.

7 If a carrier knows that the consignor will no
8 longer be liable for a charge if he is unable to collect
9 from the consignee, the carrier will insist on payment 10 COD in a much higher percentage of the cases. This has 11 a serious effect on the credit relationships; it also 12 will impair efficient rail operations because it will 13 result in cars having to sit there for a longer period
14 of time until cash can be obtained from the consignee.

15 And in addition, we suggest that the Court 16 should not overlook the increased litigation that 17 inevitably will occur in order to ascertain liability 18 for freight charges. The decision below will be read as 19 saying that every violation of the credit regulations 20 gives rise to an affirmative defense. That would be 21 highly unfair, and even Commercial Metals does not go 22 that far.

23 When the ICC has reviewed the operation of the 24 credit regulations from time to time, they have found 25 that many violations occur, many violations are

1 unavoidable, and that the majority of those violations
2 are actually caused by shippers rather than carriers.
3 And that is because of this situation where the ICC's 4 jurisdiction is over the carriers. The regulations are 5 worded that payment must be recieved within five days,
6 if it is properly extended in the first place. Well, 7 the carrier often doesn't have any control over whether 8 that payment can be enforced or not from the consignee.
9 So it clearly would be unfair to say that there is any 10 kind of an estoppel situation in all cases.

11 So what Commercial Metals has done in this 12 case is take the position that there is a fault standard 13 which should be read into this. They are basically 14 saying that there should be an estoppel only when the 15 violation is the carrier's fault.

16 But I suggest that that is part of a standard 17 that raises many hard issues. First of all, what is 18 meant by fault. Is negligence enough, or does the 19 carrier have to take some action intentionally in order 20 to violate the regulations or create some 21 discrimination? The regulations say, moreover, that 22 before extending credit, a carrier must take whatever 23 precautions it deems appropriate, so it leaves it 24 essentially up to the carrier what precautions to take.

25 Well, if fault becomes the test, will there be

1 some standard read into that. Will the carrier be 2 required to take some minimal precautions so that it is 3 no longer up to him entirely what he should do, and what 4 standards would be applied.

5 Failure to pay within five days. That is 6 something that would not appear to be the fault of the 7 carrier in most cases. But if a court has to determine 8 whether a failure to collect is a carrier's fault, can 9 it impose some standard on the carrier to do something 10 other than just sit there for those five days?

11 QUESTION: Mr. Pipkin, does the record in this 12 case disclose whether the carrier made any credit 13 inquiry of any nature in this instance?

14 MR. PIPKIN: The record indicates that the 15 carrier did not investigate the credit worthiness of the 16 consignee. We know nothing beyond that. We don't know 17 whether the agent who had the car tendered to him felt 18 that he knew enough about the company based on his 19 personal knowledge, or the fact that it had a plant 20 across the street or whatever, that he could make his 21 own determination, or what. We just know there was no 22 investigation of credit worthiness.

23 So in determining the trick question --

24 QUESTION: We should judge the case on the 25 basis that the company needn't -- you are suggesting

1 that there need be no investigation.

2 MR. PIPKIN: I am not suggesting that, Your 3 Honor. I am saying that that would violate the credit 4 regulations, by --

5 QUESTION: Yes, but you are suggesting that to 6 come out where you want to come out, there needn't be 7 any investigation.

8 MR. PIPKIN: I am suggesting that this Court 9 should adopt a blanket rule saying that in the case of 10 consignors who have the opportunity to protect 11 themselves by signing the non-recourse clause, there 12 should be no --

13 QUESTION: Well, you are suggesting that we 14 construe the statute that way.

15 MR. PIPKIN: Yes, Your Honor.

16 QUESTION: And you say that the regulation
17 construes it that way.

18 MR. PIPKIN: That is the way it has been up 19 until now.

20 QUESTION: And so it wouldn't make any 21 difference if the agent or the railroad deliberately 22 didn't make an investigation.

23 MR. PIPKIN: It is our position that there 24 should be a blanket rule, but let me say further on that 25 -- we concede that there is a violation in this case.

1 We don't concede that there is any connection between 2 that violation and the loss that occurred, which is 3 something we think the courts below slurred over very 4 quickly.

5 QUESTION: It wouldn't make any difference if 6 there was, would there?

7 MR. PIPKIN: In our view, it should not. But 8 on that first shipment, there was no credit check. But 9 the carrier in that case could have, as it did in the 10 case of the second and third shipments, required a 11 check. That would not have violated the credit 12 regulations, but the check would have bounced the same
13 way the other two did, and it would have -- the result 14 would have been the same. We would have been unable to 15 collect from the consignee and had to turn to the 16 consignor. So we don't think there is a causal 17 connection between those two events.

18 So in addition to determining the tricky 19 question of whether a violation has occurred, the 20 courts, if the rule advanced by Commercial Metals were 21 to prevail, would also have to grapple with this vague
22 fault standard, applying it in particular factual 23 situations and along the way, coming up with possibly 24 some kind of substantive standards. And since the 25 dispute would be between two private parties, there

1 would be no assistance from the agency that is charged 2 with enforcing and promulgating the regulations. And 3 also, since many of the actions would be in state courts
4 that might have their own different standards to apply 5 in equitable estoppel cases, the result clearly will be 6 not only increased litigation, but inconsistent results, 7 and the result would be to take an issue that for the 8 last 60 years has been characterized by certainty and 9 uniformity and transform it into one where confusion and 10 inconsistent results will probably prevail.

11 QUESTION: Mr. Pipkin, may I ask another
12 question, just looking at the CFG case that you rely 13 heavily on. That appears to be an under-charge case 14 rather than a non-payment case, isn't it? And would 15 that necessarily then have the same rule as one
16 involving -- whether a credit violation excuses payment 17 of the full charge. I am not saying that you are 18 necessarily wrong, but I am just not sure that I
19 understand why that case --

20 MR. PIPKIN: We don't deny that the statement
21 in that case is essentially a dictive, that it is a 22 statement of the agency's position which is broad and 23 covers this situation.

24 QUESTION: But then the agency goes on to say 25 it is a question to be determined by the courts and not

1 by the commission in the collection situation.

2 MR. PIPKIN: Oh, that is true. They are 3 saying that when that dispute arises it will be the 4 court that decides it. But in the face of a lack of 5 support, as a legal matter, for the proposition advanced 6 by Commercial Metals and in view of the adverse 7 practical consequences that will occur, I think the 8 Court has to ask what is there to commend an affirmative 9 defense in a situation like this.

10 I would suggest that there are no policy
11 reasons relating to the credit regulations or the credit 12 statute that would be advanced by allowing this defense; 13 in fact, it is contrary to those purposes, and there is 14 no policy justification in terms of the effective 15 operation of the transportation system. And further, 16 there is no need because the consignor already has the 17 ability to protect himself, but wants this Court to 18 create an additional remedy for him. We don't believe 19 that that is necessary or justified.

20 Thank you. I would like to save the rest of 21 my time for rebuttal.

22 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Sudbury?

23 ORAL ARGUMENT OF DAVID M. SUDBURY, ESQ.

24 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENT

25 MR. SUDBURY: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it

1 please the Court:

2 The Southern Pacific, having admittedly
3 engaged in illegal, negligent and inequitable conduct 4 today comes before this Court seeking to transfer the 5 very fruit of that action to an innocent consignor. The 6 Interstate Commerce Commission Act, specifically,
7 Section 3.2 entitled Payment of Freight as a
8 Prerequisite to Delivery, prohibits a railroad from 9 delivering any freight shipped by it until all charges
10 have been paid, except under express circumstances 11 promulgated by the rules and regulations of the 12 Interstate Commerce Commission.

13 The applicable regulations which counsel has 14 conceded have been violated, at least with regard to the 15 first shipment are located in 49 CFR 1320.1, and they 16 provide that a railroad may extend, only for a very 17 limited number of days, credit under certain 18 circumstances, provided that it takes precautions to 19 ensure timely payment of charges.

20 QUESTION: Mr. Sudbury, can I interrupt with a 21 question on this. How did their discount hurt your 22 client?

23 MR. SADBURY: Justice Stevens, the failure of 24 the railroad, in this case, to take any precaution with 25 regard to any credit check whatsoever of the consignee

1 -- admittely, the consignee was not a credit patron of 2 the railroad, had never applied for credit and had never 3 been given credit. The decision to extend credit to the 4 consignee was a pure act of voluntarism on the part of 5 the railroad.

6 QUESTION: But supposing they had checked it 7 out and said we find you are a bad credit risk; we are 8 not going to deliver the goods. And they called your 9 client up and said what do you want us to do? What 10 would you have said?

11 MR. SUDBURY: At that point in time, Your 12 Honor, our worst expectations would have been to have 13 had possession -- or at least, to have control of the 14 material that was in a yard in California, had not been 15 released to the consignee. Once it went to the 16 consignee, the party that had written hot checks here 17 and didn't pay the --

18 QUESTION: But you would have been liable for 19 the freight charges.

20 MR. SUDBURY: Under Section 7, that is right, 21 Your Honor, we would --

22 QUESTION: And you would have had the goods 23 back, but instead of the goods you have got payment for 24 the goods. So how does it -- I don't understand how you 25 are that badly hurt.

1 MR. SUDBURY: The shipment --

2 QUESTION: If you weren't paid for the goods,
3 I would understand. But you were paid.

4 MR. SUDBURY: The sale was made fob Detroit.
5 What we received was the fob purchase price, free
6 onboard the rail carrier in Detroit. We were not paid
7 in this case for the freight charges to California.
8 That is why the bill of lading was, as the railroad has 9 admitted, freight collect.

10 QUESTION: I understand that, but I still 11 don't quite understand how you are hurt because had you 12 been advised of the situation, you could have gotten the 13 goods back, but you still would have had to pay the 14 freight. I don't know how much these goods are worth, I 15 don't have any idea, but I wonder if you would have been 16 -- if you were put to the elections of either taking 17 money for the goods or saying keep the goods and ship
18 them back, what you would have done.

19 MR. SUDBURY: Well, the goods were 20 approximately $46,000. The freight charges obviously 21 are $14,000. I think that is in the record in the 22 deposition of Mr. Hillman.

23 The point is, though, that the control of the 24 goods, once they were let out of the railroad's hand
25 without any credit precautions whatsoever, they gave us

1 no choice. We never got to that stage. The railroad
2 never contacted us. It was strictly in the railroad's
3 dominion to determine whether they were going to release
4 the goods, and when they did so, in fact, they didn't 5 contact us for two years and seven months later to tell 6 us that it had not been paid for. By that time, the 7 record shows, the railroad's attempts to even locate the 8 consignee were impossible. Had they contacted us, we 9 were in touch with the consignee, we could have perhaps 10 applied some pressure to make sure the goods were paid 11 for.

12 And I think even more specifically, to answer 13 your question, I want to call the Court's attention to 14 the facts involved in the dates of these shipments. The 15 first shipment left Detroit on April 11, 1974. That 16 shipment arrived and was released, admittedly without 17 any credit check, to the consignee on April 25, 1974.
18 We didn't even ship the last two cars, the rail cars, 19 they didn't leave Detroit until May 2nd, sometime after 20 the consignee had the first car already in his 21 possession.

22 Specifically to answer your question, we 23 certainly would not have shipped the second two if we 24 knew there was any problem with the first.

25 QUESTION: And does the record tell us when

1 you were paid?

2 MR. SUDBURY: By the consignee?

3 QUESTION: Yes.

4 MR. SUDBURY: The payment for the goods was 5 made prior to shipment.

6 QUESTION: Counsel, the stipulation of facts
7 really don't refer to what an acceptable credit inquiry 8 by the carrier would have disclosed. And it just would 9 seem to me that the record might have indicated whether 10 the information, if disclosed, would have been 11 acceptable by industry standards. There just isn't 12 anything here, is there?

13 MR. SUDBURY: There is nothing, Your Honor, 14 because, of course, there was no credit inquiry made.
15 The stipulation says that Carco had never even applied 16 for credit.

17 QUESTION: And the stipulation does not appear 18 to cover the further inquiry of what it would have 19 disclosed had an inquiry been made.

20 MR. SUDBURY: It does not. The facts are that 21 the consignee never paid for the first shipment, and the 22 fact is that the rail -- the freight charge was some two 23 weeks past due when the second cars arrived, and the 24 fact is that the railroad released the second two cars;
25 one by an extension of further credit when they took a

1 check for less than the full amount of the freight 2 charge, and both those checks were shortly returned by 3 the consignee's bank marked insufficient funds. From 4 there, the railroad was not able to find the consignee.

5 QUESTION: What evidence do you have, counsel,
6 that the legislative body, the Congress, was concerned 7 about protection of the consignee, the shipper, in 8 enacting Section 3.2. The evidence that we have 9 examined would indicate that the concern of Congress was 10 with the protection of the carriers, not the shipper.

11 MR. SUDBURY: The purpose of the Act, as set 12 forth in the preamble, is to promote the orderly and 13 efficient transportation policy throughout the United 14 States. Specifically, it refers to encouraging sound 15 economic conditions in transportation throughout the 16 United States.

17 Certainly, --

18 QUESTION: That is just the preamble to the 19 Transportation Act of 1920, isn't it, which had a lot of 20 provisions in it.

21 MR. SUDBURY: That is correct. The railroad's 22 position that the shipper, or that the consignor in this 23 case, is not protected by any legislative history simply 24 defies the realities of the transportation shipment.
25 The fact is that the railroad released these goods,

1 extended the credit on its own volition. They 2 improperly and in violation of not only the regulations
3 but the law -- the law says in Section 3.2 that no 4 carrier by railroad and no express company subject to 5 the provisions of this chapter shall deliver or 6 relinquish possession at destination of any freight 7 transported by it until all tariff charges have been 8 paid, except under such conditions as the Interstate 9 Commerce Commission may from time to time prescribe.

10 QUESTION: That is true, but do you have 11 anything in the legislative history that indicates that 12 that provision was enacted for the benefit of the 13 shipper?

14 MR. SUDBURY: Under the railroad's argument,
15 Justice O'Connor, the legislative history was directed 16 solely toward increasing the cash flow of the railroad.
17 Certainly, the extension of credit on their part here 18 was an act which they voluntarily undertook that hurt or 19 certainly handicapped that cash flow in this case.

20 QUESTION: Mr. Sudbury, I take it that in 21 light of this discussion you have just been having with 22 Justice O'Connor, that you agree that this case is to be 23 decided in light of the Act and the regulations; this is 24 not a common law suit.

25 MR. SUDBURY: No, to the contrary, Your

1 Honor. The Act specifically states that -- in its 2 savings clause -- that it was not designed or intended 3 to eliminate any remedies that were available at the 4 common law. Specifically, -- in fact, an argument which 5 I will get to in just a minute is that in addition to a 6 violation of the regulations, this was a violation of 7 the express contract between the parties.

8 QUESTION: Even inspite of the failure to sign 9 the non-recourse clause?

10 MR. SUDBURY: That is correct, Your Honor.
11 The non-recourse clause is a means by which a consignor 12 can relieve itself absolutely of any liability, as a 13 matter of contract. The failure to sign it does not 14 ipso facto mean that the consignor should not have 15 available to it certain equitable defenses, as the Fifth 16 Circuit recognized in this case. That is really the 17 thrust of the railroad's position.

18 Our position is that the option to sign the 19 non-recourse part of Section 7 is just that; it is a 20 contract option. It doesn't preclude any other remedies 21 available at common law to a party to the contract.

22 The simple fact in this case is that had the 23 Southern Pacific observed these relatively simple but 24 mandatory rules, this loss would not have occurred. I
25 referred specifically to Section 3.2 of the Act

1 previously. Specifically, the Commission, in 2 promulgating regulations under that Act, has said that 3 the carrier, upon taking precautions deemed by it to be 4 sufficient to assure payment of the tariff charges
5 within the credit period specified in this part, may 6 relinquish possession of the freight. The fact is in 7 this case, admittedly, they took absolutely no 8 precautions.

9 By regulation, therefore, the commission has 10 made two requirements for the granting of credit, and 11 these are pertinent to the issues under consideration.
12 First, the railroad must take precautions at least to 13 some degree to assure itself of timely payment of the 14 charges.

15 QUESTION: Excuse me, Mr. Sudbury, is the 16 non-recourse clause or the opportunity to sign one, is 17 that a matter of voluntary agreement or is that somehow
18 required by law?kj

19 MR. SUDBURY: No, it is a matter of voluntary 20 agreement, Your Honor.

21 QUESTION: So some of them -- bills of lading
22 do not include it, then, I take it.

23 MR. SUDBURY: My understanding is that at 24 least with rail carriers, all bills of lading have that 25 option on it. Whether it is signed or executed or not

1 is a matter of contract --

2 QUESTION: Yes, but to have it on it, what, is 3 just a matter of railroad practice or custom or 4 something?

5 MR. SUDBURY: I believe the form of the bill
6 of lading has it on it in practically every instance I 7 have ever seen, yes.

8 QUESTION: But you don't say it has in it
9 because some law requires it.

10 MR. SUDBURY: The commission has promulgated a 11 form of bill of lading for rail carriers; it has not 12 done so, my understanding, is for motor carriers. The 13 rail carriers do have --

14 QUESTION: And the form promulgated by ICC
15 includes -- ?

16 MR. SUDBURY: Includes this clause which may 17 be executed, yes.

18 QUESTION: Well, I just wonder could either a 19 rail carrier or a consignor insist on its deletion
20 before the transaction of shipment is completed?

21 MR. SUDBURY: Well, the non-recourse part of 22 Section 7 does not come into play unless it is 23 specifically --

24 QUESTION: Signed.

25 MR. SUDBURY: -- affirmatively signed by the

1 consignor. In this case, it would not signed, 2 admittedly. The reasons for it are unknown. But the 3 point is that in not signing it, that was not a 4 violation of any regulation, a violation of any 5 statute. That was a matter of contract option, either 6 through foresight or for whatever the reason, it was not 7 signed. And we have admitted that. And as the Fifth 8 Circuit, that makes us primarily liable, together with 9 the consignee who has accepted the goods, for the 10 freight charges.

11 However, that does not absolutely mean that we 12 don't have the right to raise whatever defenses that we 13 are entitled to as a matter of law.

14 QUESTION: Do you think a consignee could 15 depend on the same grounds that you are depending on?

16 MR. SUDBURY: Well, our -- you mean had it not 17 paid the charges and been sued?

18 QUESTION: Yes.

19 MR. SUDBURY: Absolutely not. Our standard, 20 as it has been referred to, our test that it would seem 21 logical to apply is that you must have equity on your 22 side. Certainly a consignee who received the goods who 23 had not paid the charges is not going to be heard to 24 complain that it is not required to pay because the 25 railroad never investigated its credit worthiness.

1 QUESTION: So it is not enough just to have a
2 bare violation of the statute and regulation.

3 MR. SUDBURY: That is correct, Your Honor, and 4 we have never suggested that. In fact, as the railroad 5 has pointed out, the large majority of the violations of 6 the regulations are required where the consignee
7 receives freight and does not make payment within a 8 certain period of time.

9 QUESTION: Of course, in one sense, your 10 client, the consignor, selected the consignee, and your 11 argument imposes this pre-selected consignee on the 12 carrier, doesn't it?

13 MR. SUDBURY: We selected to do business with 14 this person on an fob Detroit basis, that is correct, 15 Your Honor. We did not instruct the railroad -- in 16 fact, to the contrary, under the law and regulations, we 17 expected that they would either collect the charges at 18 the time of delivery or shortly thereafter, certainly 19 within a matter of days. Again, we were not even 20 notified of this loss for over 31 months.

21 As I pointed out, the railroad mailed its bill 22 for the first carload on April 25, 1974. This was for 23 the carload that was released without any credit check 24 or payment whatsoever.

25 QUESTION: Let me go back a bit, Mr. Sudbury.

1 Suppose the railroad had said to the consignee, cash on 2 the line or no delivery. Then they would have to -- I 3 don't know whether this would have involved a lot of 4 demurrage, but at any rate, they would have had to, in 5 effect, impound the entire shipment, wouldn't they, 6 until paid?

7 MR. SUDBURY: That is correct, Your Honor.

8 QUESTION: Now, who then would be liable?

9 MR. SUDBURY: For the demurrage?

10 QUESTION: For the demurrage and the freight
11 charges.

12 MR. SUDBURY: The courts have held that lawful 13 charges include not only the freight charges but also 14 the demurrage, and not signing Section 7, had the 15 consignee just refused the shipment for some reason, 16 gone out of business before it got there, we would have 17 been liable, the consignor would have been liable for 18 the freight, as well as the demurrage charges.

19 That is a risk or an expectation that we were 20 willing to assume under the circumstances. What we were 21 not willing to assume was the total lack of any credit 22 check on the part of the railroad, and then the 23 unbridled extension of credit on their part, coupled 24 with their action in not coming back against the party 25 to whom they now claim and the Fifth Circuit held has

1 principal liability for two and a half years after the 2 fact.

3 QUESTION: In what respects are you worse off
4 as a result of the delivery?

5 MR. SUDBURY: We have no -- obviously no
6 ability to go back against the consignee, at least based 7 on the record that the railroad has in trying to locate 8 him. We have had no more success. The counsel for the 9 railroad suggested that an agent may have released this 10 because he was down the street. Well, he is down the 11 street from the railroad in Alhambra, California and not 12 at our office in Detroit, Michigan.

13 QUESTION: Well, you are worse off by the 14 amount of the freight, aren't you?

15 MR. SUDBURY: We were not paid the freight in 16 the first place.

17 QUESTION: I know, but what you are objecting 18 to is that there is a claim for freight charges against 19 you.

20 MR. SUDBURY: That is correct.

21 QUESTION: And you had -- they already had 22 their money. And if the railroad had investigated and 23 not delivered the goods, you would have had the goods, 24 too.

25 MR. SUDBURY: That is correct.

1 QUESTION: And if you would have had to pay
2 the freight charges that the consignee should have paid, 3 you could have taken it out of their money.

4 MR. SUDBURY: That is correct.

5 QUESTION: You couldn't keep all their money
6 and the goods, too, I wouldn't think. You would only 7 have to give back the money that -- the balance after 8 you collected the freight charges.

9 MR. SUDBURY: We were paid for the goods fob
10 Detroit, --

11 QUESTION: So you had the money already.

12 MR. SUDBURY: That is correct, Your Honor.

13 QUESTION: And if you could have gotten the 14 goods back, too, you could easily have paid the freight
15 charges.

16 MR. SUDBURY: Certainly.

17 As I was saying, the railroad mailed its bill 18 for the first carloads on April 25, 1974. Giving the 19 railroad the benefit of the most liberal interpretation 20 of the regulations dealing with when it was due, the 21 first bill was already two weeks' past due when the 22 second cars arrived and were released by the railroad.
23 Obviously, the last two cars were released when the bill 24 was blatantly delinquent.

25 The counsel for the railroad has pointed out

1 that the railroad accepted two checks for the last two 2 cars, one of which is inexplicably in an amount 3 approximately $900 short of the proper amount. Their 4 brief refers to some transposition of numbers, but 5 still, that amounted to an extension of credit on the 6 part of the railroad.

7 They have also asked how accepting a check for 8 the last two, or two checks for the last two cars, 9 somehow is related to the first car. Well, the facts is 10 at that point, they had a credit history with Carco whom 11 they had never dealt with before. They had an account 12 past due for some two weeks which had not been paid.
13 They had nothing in their credit file from a customer 14 who had never even admittedly applied for credit. They 15 took two checks that subsequently were returned to the 16 bank for insufficient funds.

17 The Fifth Circuit opinion states that Southern 18 Pacific was in direct violation of the Act by extending 19 credit without any precaution whatsoever and for a 20 period of time in excess of the period required in the 21 regulations.

22 The question was asked earlier about whether 23 we contend this is a violation of the common law. We 24 do. In addition to the violation of the Act, the 25 railroad's conduct breached the contract between the

1 parties. As the railroad has admitted and the case law
2 is clear, the bill of lading is a common law contract.
3 This contract expressly provides that the service of a 4 carrier is to be performed in accordance with the 5 conditions listed on the back of the contract terms and 6 conditions, on the back of that document, which is 7 unfortunately poorly reproduced in the Joint Appendix, 8 Section 7. It is at pages 37 and 41, although 9 eligible. I would refer you to page 1(a) of the 10 appendix to the brief of the National Industrial Traffic
11 League which has the entire document.

12 It reads that the owner of the consignee shall 13 pay the freight and average, if any, and all other 14 lawful charges accruing on said property. But except in 15 those instances where it may lawfully be authorized to 16 do so, no carrier by railroad shall deliver or 17 relinquish possession at destination of the property
18 covered by this bill of lading until all tariff rates 19 and charges on it have been paid.

20 What we are saying is that this is an express 21 contract between the parties that was violated.

22 QUESTION: The Fifth Circuit didn't pass on 23 that contention, did it?

24 MR. SUDBURY: They did not get to -- or 25 address that point. In that regard, Southern Pacific

1 mistakenly portrays the Interstate Commerce Commission's 2 view of its role in determining the liability of 3 consignors and consignees under bills of lading.
4 Specifically, at footnote 1, page 2 of the Southern 5 Pacific's reply brief on the merits, it implies that the 6 Interstate Commerce Commission has expanded its 7 jurisdiction to include interpretation of the liability
8 of parties to a bill of lading contract.

9 In fact, the Interstate Commerce Commission in 10 the CGF Grain case, as was mentioned earlier, 11 specifically has reiterated what it classifies as its 12 longstanding position that the question of a contract is 13 to be resolved -- or the question of liability under a 14 contract -- is to be resolved by the courts. The 15 Commission said that the question of complainant's 16 liability does not turn on whether any provision of the 17 Act has been violated, but rather is governed by the 18 bill of lading contract between the parties, and it must 19 be decided by interpreting that contract.

20 For this reason, it is a question to be 21 determined by the courts and not this Commission. This 22 conclusion is in accordance with numerous past cases in 23 which the Commission has declined to decide questions of 24 liability as between a consignor and a consignee.

25 In reply to the -- this position, the railroad

1 has once again in its reply brief looked to a purported
2 historical analysis to attempt to portray the first 3 sentence of Section 7 as actually two clauses somehow 4 combined in history into a single sentence. The fact is 5 that those two clauses do relate to the consignee. When 6 the bill of lading is executed, the consignee is not 7 even a party to the contract; the law is he only becomes 8 a party to it when he accepts the goods upon delivery.

9 Such a convoluted analysis as called for or 10 requested by the railroad is not required. The contract 11 obligation is clear, and that obligation was breached, 12 in addition to the violation of the Act.

13 The Fifth Circuit held that the Southern 14 Pacific, although establishing a prima facie case of 15 primary liability on the part of Commercial Metals, 16 nevertheless permitted Commercial Metals to raise an 17 equitable defense based on the facts.

18 QUESTION: Well, it sounds to me like you are 19 saying well, the railroad's conduct didn't release us
20 from our liability, it just damaged us. But the court 21 of appeals held that this failure just released the 22 consignor from liability, didn't it?

23 MR. SUDBURY: Right, that it was an equitable 24 defense which could be raised in the suit for the 25 charges.

1 QUESTION: Whether or not it did you any 2 damage, right?

3 MR. SUDBURY: The opinion of the Fifth Circuit
4 did not directly address the question of whether or not 5 we were damaged. The trial court's opinion clearly did;
6 it referred to the gross negligence of the railroad
7 which resulted in the loss.

8 QUESTION: Well, the breach is admitted, the 9 breach is admitted, but you insist that ipso facto, as 10 soon as there is a breach, you are released.

11 MR. SUDBURY: The railroad --

12 QUESTION: That is what the holding was.

13 MR. SUDBURY: Your Honor, the railroad came 14 back against us when they, apparently two and a half 15 years later, discovered that they were not going to be 16 able to find the consignee. The damage --

17 QUESTION: Well, that may be so. Maybe they 18 breached the contract, but that is a different argument 19 than you are released from liability just by the breach.

20 MR. SUDBURY: Well, our position is --

21 QUESTION: Is it a different argument? And it 22 is one that the court of appeals didn't reach.

23 MR. SUDBURY: It gave rise to our right to 24 assert a defense to the claim which the trial court and 25 the Fifth Circuit recognized.

1 QUESTION: Well, it may have given you a right
2 to say you have been hurt and you should have a
3 counterclaim. But that is different, isn't it?

4 MR. SUDBURY: A counterclaim against the 5 carrier?

6 QUESTION: Yes.

7 MR. SUDBURY: That was not what the court so
8 held. We have not presumed --

9 QUESTION: I know the court didn't hold that,
10 but it seems to me that is what you -- that is a 11 different argument than saying that you are released.

12 MR. SUDBURY: Well, I think the Fifth Circuit 13 held that the remedies available as equity give rise to 14 equitable defenses which would recognize --

15 QUESTION: I know what it held, but that is 16 just saying that the railroad's conduct just released
17 you.

18 QUESTION: I think the court, the Fifth
19 Circuit, has followed other courts which have recognized 20 these equitable defenses, Your Honor, specifically in 21 the Admiral case, the case decided in the Seventh 22 Circuit. The court there went on to say that under the 23 facts in that circumstance that the plaintiff, the 24 carrier, had created the risk of loss by its credit 25 practices. It said it contributed to the gravity of the

1 loss by allowing, in this case, the consignee's 2 unsatisfied debts to accumulate beyond a lawful and 3 reasonable time for credit. Under these circumstances, 4 we find no difficulty in holding the plaintiff estopped
5 to collect payment of the freight charges from the 6 defendant.

7 QUESTION: Mr. Sudbury, as you correctly
8 pointed out, that is, of course, a consignee case where 9 the consignee would have, in effect, paid double if it 10 was held liable.

11 Are there any cases like this one where the 12 consignor has been excused from his liability? There
13 are a whole line of them, I know, on the double-payment 14 situation.

15 MR. SADBURY: The Atcon case referred to by 16 counsel for the railroad is a case exactly on point, 17 although that case doesn't even -- the facts in that 18 case don't reveal whether or not there was an initial 19 violation of the law and regulations based on the 20 unbridled extension of credit to the consignee in that 21 case. All it says is that the carrier's failure to come 22 back against the consignor within the time period set
23 forth in the regulations is a violation of the credit 24 restrictions, and therefore, a defense can be raised.

25 QUESTION: Which case was that, again?

1 MR. SUDBURY: The Atcon versus Brown -- Brown
2 Transportation v. Atcon, cited.

3 The court in Admiral stated that Congress did 4 not intend to fashion a sword to insure collection in 5 all instance and to shield or insulate the carrier from 6 the legal consequences of its otherwise negligent or 7 inequitable conduct. That is exactly what the railroad 8 seeks here.

9 The court continued that these same
10 considerations lead us to reject plaintiff's claim that 11 the principles of equitable estoppel have no application 12 in any action for the collection of freight charges. In 13 considering the carrier's plea for equitable relief in 14 the Admiral case, the court said that it would not blind 15 itself to the plaintiff's unlawful conduct in violating 16 the credit regulations as enacted by the Commission.

17 In that case, the defendant could not be 18 charged as a matter of law with knowledge of the 19 preface. In our case, we certainly could not be charged 20 with the knowledge of extension of credit to a consignee
21 of which we had no knowledge for some two and one-half 22 years.

23 Permitting recovery in this case would serve 24 only to reward the carrier for its unlawful as well as 25 inequitable conduct. We decline to turn the Motor

1 Carrier Act's equivalent of Section 3.2 inside out to 2 achieve that result.

3 Equitable estoppel or equitable defenses have 4 been recognize in other cases the Mason & Dixon Lines
5 and Crossville Rubber Company, the Atcon case,
6 specifically referred to previously, Allied Van Lines,
7 Aero Mayflower, all cases cited in the briefs.

8 Referring to a previous decision of this Court 9 in a case in which equitable estoppel defense was 10 allowed, the Eighth Circuit in 1972 in the Southern 11 Pacific Transportation Company v. Campbell Soup case 12 specifically stated that we think it is equally plain,
13 however, that this Court in the Fink decision, 1919
14 case, did not intend to impose a species of absolute 15 viability upon consignees by ruling out the defense 16 estoppel under all circumstances.

17 We think the critical question in this case is 18 whether judicial recognition of an estoppel defense will 19 contravene the anti-discriminatory purpose of the Act.
20 The Fifth Circuit specifically found that that 21 anti-discriminatory purpose was not contravened. We 22 received -- Commercial Metals received no windfall. We 23 were not paid for any freight that we are holding and 24 refusing to pay someone. Forcing us to pay the carrier 25 in this case would not benefit anyone except the

1 carrier, and in fact, it would be obviously to our 2 detriment.

3 The trial court and the Fifth Circuit's 4 opinion do not result in discrimination against any 5 competitor of the shipper, nor did it discriminate 6 against any locale or geographic region. As found in 7 the court below, the party guilty of granting the 8 preference in this case was the Southern Pacific. To 9 turn that illegal preference against CMC is illogical 10 and not required by law.

11 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will resume there at 12 1:00 o'clock, counsel. You have seven minutes for 13 rebuttal.

14 (Whereupon, at 12:00 p.m., the oral argument 15 in the above-entitled matter was recessed for lunch, to 16 reconvene at 1:00 p.m. the same day.)
