P R O C E E D I N G S

CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments first this morning in United States Postal Service against Aikens.

Mr. Wallace, you may proceed whenever you are ready.

ORAL ARGUMENT OF LAWRENCE G. WALLACE, ESQ.,
ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER

MR. WALLACE: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the Court, this employment discrimination case involves a claim of disparate treatment which is under this Court's decisions of claim of intentional racial discrimination, under Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

The case is before the Court for a second time. In June, 1981, on a petition for certiorari filed by Solicitor General McCree, the Court with two Justices dissenting vacated and remanded the case for further consideration in light of Texas Department of Community Affairs against Burdine, and the case is now here on certiorari from the court of appeals decision on that remand.

Our concern, and the question presented in both of the petitions, focuses exclusively on the legal standard adopted by the court of appeals for

1 establishing a prima facie case of employment 2 discrimination in situations where the employer is 3 selecting an individual from a group of qualified 4 individuals which is racially or sexually or 5 heterogeneous. The particular case arises in the 6 context of promotions.

7 For present purposes, the facts may be simply 8 stated. With respect to the promotions and details at 9 issue, after an administrative investigation and hearing 10 and appeal from that hearing were all resolved against 11 him, the Respondent filed suit under Title VII in the 12 district court. The Postal Service did not deny that 13 the Respondent, along with other individuals under 14 consideration, had the qualifications necessary to be 15 eligible for the promotions and details, and there was 16 no dispute that Respondent is a black person, and that 17 the Postal Service selected white employees for the 18 particular promotions and details at issue instead of 19 Respondent.

20 The district court found that from 1952 to 21 1966, Respondent had advanced steadily through a 22 succession of supervisory positions in the D.C. Post 23 Office, and by March of 1973, he was the fifth highest 24 ranking official in that Post Office. It also found no 25 evidence of specific acts of discrimination against him,

1 and no other direct evidence that he was treated any 2 differently because of his race from the way other 3 employees were treated.

4 And the district court found no credible 5 evidence that he was as qualified or more qualified than 6 other individuals who were detailed or promoted during 7 the period in question. It also found that there had 8 been a considerable increase in the number of black 9 employees occupying high level positions in the District 10 of Columbia Post Office during the pertinent period, and 11 that during that period, other blacks as well as whites 12 were promoted or detailed to positions above the 13 Respondent's position, and that by the time of the 14 district court's opinion, almost all the high level 15 positions in that post office were held by blacks.

16 Now, none of these findings was held to be 17 clearly erroneous, and for present purposes, even though 18 it's possible that other inferences could have been 19 drawn from the underlying facts, which are rehearsed at 20 some length in Respondent's brief, the underlying 21 evidence, for present purposes, those findings are the 22 premise of the case, because they are the premise on 23 which the court of appeals rendered its decision, and 24 those facts found by the district court do not in our 25 view add up to a prima facie case of discrimination.

1 The reason for this can be simply stated. If 2 unexplained, those findings do not show that it is more 3 likely than not that the employer's selection was based 4 on an impermissible consideration, such as race, to 5 paraphrase this Court's opinion in the Fernco case, or 6 if unexplained, these facts do not show circumstances 7 giving rise to an inference of unlawful discrimination, 8 to paraphrase what this Court said in the Burdine case.

9 In other words, when this Court had spoken 10 generically about what constitutes a prima facie case of 11 discrimination under Title VII, the standard is really 12 no different from what it is in establishing any other 13 prima facie case, a showing that if the showing is 14 unrefuted in any way, that it is more likely than not 15 that the case has been proven.

16 QUESTION: Mr. Wallace, when you say prima
17 facie case, what exactly do you mean? Do you mean 18 enough to get by a motion for a directed verdict if the 19 case is tried?

20 MR. WALLACE: That is the way most of these 21 cases arise, on a Rule 41(b) motion at the conclusion of 22 the plaintiff's evidence, and that is what we mean here, 23 what we are referring to here, and by and large what the 24 Court has been referring to in its opinions in this 25 field.

1 QUESTION: And it is not inconsistent with 2 that to say that if the employer puts on no evidence, or 3 does nothing, there must be judgment for the plaintiff?

4 MR. WALLACE: It's not inconsistent at all.

5 QUESTION: But isn't that what is required,
6 under the existing rule under Title VII, that if the 7 employer does nothing, judgment must be entered for 8 the --

9 MR. WALLACE: That is what this Court said in 10 Burdine.

11 QUESTION: Well, then it is something more
12 than a motion to get by a directed verdict.

13 QUESTION: I don't think it is.

14 MR. WALLACE: Well, it is not really a 15 directed verdict in these cases. Title VII cases are 16 tried to the Court. It is a Rule 41(b) motion, and 17 since the standard of proof is the preponderance of the 18 evidence, if the district court at the conclusion of the 19 plaintiff's evidence concludes that that evidence shows 20 that it is more likely than not that discrimination was 21 a factor and the -- and therefore denies the 41(b)
22 motion, and the defendant rests, that's the same thing 23 as saying that he has met his burden of showing by a 24 preponderance of the evidence.

25 QUESTION: The district court can also rule on

1 a 41(b) motion at the end of the plaintiff's case that 2 assuming that I were to believe the plaintiff's 3 witnesses, there is enough to get by a motion -- there 4 is enough to enter judgment for the plaintiff if the 5 defendant puts on no case, but he might nonetheless, if 6 the defendant chose to put on no case, after having 7 denied a motion at the close of the plaintiff's case, I
8 should think still enter a judgment for the defendant 9 when it came to his duty to weigh the credibility of the 10 witnesses.

11 MR. WALLACE: Well, it's conceivable, Mr.
12 Justice, although he would be more likely to be 13 reserving judgment on whether the plaintiff has made out 14 a sufficient case to withstand the Rule 41(b) motion.
15 He can't really be depending on the defendant's evidence 16 to complete the plaintiff's showing.

17 QUESTION: Well, as a matter of prudence, a 18 trial judge might simply decide, might he not, that he 19 would like the whole record there so that if there is an 20 appeal it will be disposed of in one stroke?

21 MR. WALLACE: He may very well, and that's 22 essentially what happened in this case. There was a 23 full trial in this case, although at the end of it the 24 district court ruled, as the court of appeals read its 25 ruling, that the plaintiff had failed to establish a

1 prima facie case. In any event --

2 QUESTION: Would not the obligation of the 3 reviewing court be to decide -- go on beyond that and 4 decide whether, assuming arguendo that a prima facie 5 case had been made out, that the preponderance of the 6 evidence didn't support the plaintiff?

7 MR. WALLACE: Well, we read the district
8 court's opinion in this case as passing on that question 9 as well, because the district court did hear all the 10 evidence, but the court of appeals disagreed with us.
11 We filed a petition for rehearing the first time the 12 case was in the court of appeals, making that point, and 13 that petition for rehearing was denied.

14 We have not contested that issue further 15 before this Court, either on the first petition or on 16 the second petition. We have accepted the court of 17 appeals' ruling that in effect the district court 18 granted the Rule 41(b) motion after hearing all of the 19 evidence.

20 QUESTION: But in no other branch of the law 21 where there's been a trial, where the plaintiff puts on 22 evidence, the defendant puts on evidence, the judge 23 enters findings of fact and conclusions of law, would 24 something on appeal be talked about as failure to make 25 out a prima facie case.

1 Do you think our decisions make the Title VII
2 litigation unique for some reason?

3 MR. WALLACE: I do not, Mr. Justice. As I 4 said, we thought initially that the court of appeals was 5 in error in the way it read the district court's 6 judgment in the case, but the district court's 7 conclusions were not a model of clarity. In one 8 conclusion, the district court did say that the 9 plaintiff had failed to make a prima facie case, 10 although the district court had earlier denied the 41(b)
11 motion.

12 As we read what happened, the court of appeals
13 in effect said that the district court belatedly granted
14 the Rule 41(b) motion in this case, and treated the case 15 as if the district court had not made findings about 16 whether the prima facie case had been rebutted by the 17 defendant, even though the evidence may well have been 18 heard here in its entirety.

19 We don't really regard the procedural rules
20 for Title VII cases as different from those in any other 21 field of law. The confusion has stemmed, we think, from 22 a misuse by the court of appeals in this circuit and by 23 some other lower courts of the more particularized 24 analytical framework that this Court applied in the 25 McDonnell Douglas against Green case, that fit the facts

1 of that particular case in analyzing whether a prima 2 facie case had been made out on the facts that were 3 before the Court there.

4 We don't regard that framework as inconsistent 5 with the later, more generic descriptions of what 6 constitutes a prima facie case that I adverted to 7 earlier in my argument, but rather as a useful 8 analytical guide to the particular facts that were 9 before the Court in McDonnell Douglas against Green, and 10 that analysis is set forth on Page 6 of our brief.

11 And it fit that case very well, because it 12 showed not only that the plaintiff was a minority 13 applicant who applied and was qualified for the job, and 14 despite his qualifications was rejected, but 15 importantly, there's a fourth element, that after his 16 rejection, the employer, contrary to his apparent 17 economic self-interest, continued to carry the vacancy 18 that he was trying to fulfill and continued to look for 19 applications from persons of the plaintiff's
20 qualifications.

21 Now, what the court below has failed to 22 recognize is that in a different factual circumstance 23 where that fourth element is neutralized by the 24 employer's mere selection of one qualified applicant
25 over another, these four elements in themselves no

1 longer add up to a prima facie case that makes it more --
2 QUESTION: So you think in McDonnell if there
3 had been two applicants, one black and one white, both 4 qualified, that the -- just because the white was chosen 5 would not make out a prima facie case?

6 MR. WALLACE: That is exactly our point, Mr.
7 Justice, that there has to be a showing of something 8 more than these four elements if the fourth element is 9 neutralized, because the fourth element was a necessary 10 part of what added up to the prima facie case as those 11 facts were analyzed, because it was an element of an 12 employer acting contrary to his apparent economic 13 self-interest, and therefore put a burden of production
14 on him. The burden of persuasion never shifts, but a 15 burden of production on him to come forward or else
16 judgment would be re-entered against him to explain why 17 he acted contrary to his apparent economic 18 self-interest.

19 QUESTION: Mr. Wallace, is it the government's 20 position that the plaintiff in this case would have met 21 the burden that you say he should have met had he 22 established that he was as qualified or more qualified 23 than the person selected?

24 MR. WALLACE: Well, in order to come up with 25 something comparable to the fourth element here, to show

1 that the employer was acting contrary to his apparent 2 economic self-interest, one would have to say that that 3 would be shown by his selecting someone less qualified 4 than the plaintiff. If he is merely selecting someone 5 equally qualified, the fourth element remains 6 neutralized in our view. This Court said in Burdine 7 that so long as impermissible considerations are not the 8 governing factor, an employer has discretion to choose 9 among equally qualified persons.

10 QUESTION: Well, isn't the ultimate question
11 the question of discriminatory intent?

12 MR. WALLACE: That is the ultimate question.

13 QUESTION: And what set of facts will justify 14 an inference of -- 15 MR. WALLACE: Precisely so.

16 QUESTION: And in McDonnell it did, and you
17 say here it does not.

18 MR. WALLACE: That is our point, that -- the 19 fact that four elements were specified in McDonnell that 20 added up to a prima facie showing has misled the court 21 below into thinking that those are the only four 22 elements one needs to analyze in a case of this sort, 23 and even though the fourth element becomes neutralized
24 by applying it to a different set of facts, the formula 25 has been woodenly carried over to this different set of 1 facts.

2 QUESTION: Mr. Wallace, does the government
3 place any reliance on the fact that this case was a 4 promotional decision rather than an original entry 5 decision?

6 MR. WALLACE: We don't really think that makes 7 a difference from a situation where a new hire is made 8 by selecting from among a group of qualified 9 applicants.

10 QUESTION: Well, isn't there some difference
11 at any rate? If you think of the ordinary McDonnell 12 Douglas type hiring, you have presumably an 13 indeterminate number of vacancies and minimum 14 qualifications, and the inference is from business 15 practice that the first people who come along and meet 16 those minimum qualifications are going to be hired, but 17 with a promotional decision, you frequently have only 18 one vacancy, and a finite number of applicants within 19 the organization.

20 MR. WALLACE: So long as there is a situation
21 where the vacancy is carried in the initial hiring 22 situation for any period of time where it would have 23 been presumably economically advantageous to the 24 employer to hire someone, then a prima facie case has 25 been shown in our view, but if you have a situation

1 where it is known that a vacancy will be upcoming in a 2 period of weeks or months, and applications are being 3 collected and scrutinized, and then a selection is made 4 to replace the individual who is retiring or leaving by 5 selecting from among the applicants, that doesn't show 6 that the employer acted in some way contrary to his 7 economic interests, and unless there is something more 8 of a showing, we don't see that a prima facie case of 9 discrimination has been shown by the mere fact that 10 another qualified applicant was selected rather than the 11 plaintiff. That is our point.

12 QUESTION: Mr. Wallace, as I read Judge
13 Wilkie's dissenting opinion, he was suggesting still a 14 different test, and I wondered if you wanted to comment 15 on his approach.

16 MR. WALLACE: Well, we think that, you know,
17 there is much food for thought in what Judge Wilkie
18 wrote, but he as well as the other members of the court 19 of appeals focused exclusively in this case on whether 20 there had been a sufficient showing of the second 21 element of the four elements in the McDonnell Douglas 22 analysis, a showing that the plaintiff in this case was 23 qualified for the job.

24 There had been some dispute about that during 25 the trial, because he had refused to accept assignments

1 to certain positions that were said to have been 2 positions that would have made him better qualified to 3 be considered for the promotions that he was interested 4 in. And ultimately, the court of appeals focused on 5 whether the employer had adequately specified that that 6 kind of experience was a desirable qualification, even 7 though not necessarily an indispensable qualification 8 for the position at issue.

9 But no one on the court of appeals recognized 10 that the real shortcoming was not that he wasn't 11 qualified, at least minimally, for consideration for 12 these jobs, but that he didn't show it added up to a 13 showing that it was more likely than not that the 14 selection resulted from discrimination because the 15 fourth element had been neutralized in the McDonnell 16 Douglas analysis.

17 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Wallace, it seems to me
18 that if this case -- if there were proof in this case 19 that the applicant for the position was more qualified, 20 that would necessarily determine the fourth element, I 21 would think.

22 MR. WALLACE: That is one way of showing that 23 the employer --

24 QUESTION: And as you said before, it would 25 not if he was just equally qualified, or less

1 qualified.

2 MR. WALLACE: That is correct, but --

3 QUESTION: So isn't the absence -- This record
4 doesn't show, or there are no findings on the relative
5 qualifications.

6 MR. WALLACE: Well, there is a finding that 7 there is no credible evidence that he showed that he was 8 as qualified or more qualified than the applicant -- 9 than the successful applicants. There is a finding to 10 that effect. The underlying evidence would have 11 permitted the drawing of a different inference, but that 12 is the inference that the district court drew, and the 13 court of appeals --

14 QUESTION: The court of appeals didn't 15 overturn that.

16 MR. WALLACE: -- didn't overturn it. And that 17 is the premise on which the case is in this Court.

18 QUESTION: Mr. Wallace, you say the court of 19 appeals didn't overturn it, but they do say -- the first 20 of the two errors that they say the lower court made was 21 that the majority on the first appeal rejected the 22 district court's -- it calls it a legal conclusion, I 23 guess, but that the appellant's claim failed because he 24 did not prove that he was as qualified or more qualified 25 than the individuals who were promoted, and then earlier

1 they had said that they had concluded he was more
2 qualified, or as qualified or more qualified, and Judge 3 Wilkie said they shouldn't have done that, that they 4 were finding facts which they should, but weren't they 5 implicitly saying that the finding was clearly 6 erroneous?

7 MR. WALLACE: Well, one could --

8 QUESTION: It's a little hard to understand,
9 because they also talk about it as a summary judgment, I 10 know.

11 MR. WALLACE: Yes. One could possibly read it 12 that way. The way we have read it is that they were 13 holding that it was legally irrelevant whether he was as 14 qualified or more qualified. So long as he was 15 qualified for the job and the job went to a non-minority 16 applicant, the standards of the McDonnell Douglas 17 analysis had been met, and that it wasn't a proper legal 18 basis for the district court to have done what it did.
19 It never said that anything that the district court 20 found was clearly erroneous.

21 QUESTION: It didn't use those words.

22 What about the second branch of the court of 23 the court of appeals holding? They say also there was 24 error in Conclusion of Law Number 7, in which the 25 district judge said that there must be proof of 1 discriminatory motive. Do you disagree with their 2 treatment of the motive issue, either at the district 3 court level or the court of appeals level? What is your 4 view of that issue?

5 MR. WALLACE: Well, ultimately, there must be 6 a finding in a disparate treatment case of 7 discriminatory motive. That doesn't mean that there 8 need be direct proof of discriminatory motive. We have 9 suggested in our brief, in the discussion of various 10 ways to establish a prima facie case, that direct 11 evidence, anecdotal evidence, evidence of discriminatory 12 treatment of the individual in other ways could be 13 introduced as a way of making a prima facie case.

14 But in light of the rest of the district 15 court's findings, there was nothing improper about the 16 district court noting as well that there was no direct 17 evidence of discriminatory motive. The district court 18 was looking to see whether there was anything that added 19 up to a prima facie showing.

20 QUESTION: But the district court did more 21 than that. The district court said, critical to this 22 showing is proof of discriminatory motive on the part of 23 the --

24 MR. WALLACE: Well, that is not correct.

25 QUESTION: Do you think that is a correct

1 statement of that law?

2 MR. WALLACE: That is not a correct statement
3 of the law.

4 QUESTION: Well, then, what is the proper 5 disposition of the appeal? Should it not go back to the 6 district court?

7 MR. WALLACE: It --

8 QUESTION: That is one element of his holding 9 that the court of appeals said was erroneous.

10 MR. WALLACE: Well, perhaps -- perhaps upon 11 re-evaluation by the court of appeals, they would want a 12 further finding made by the district court, although the 13 rest of the district court's findings do not add up to a 14 prima facie case regardless of whether the district 15 court made a legal error in its discussion of the lack 16 of evidence of discriminatory motive.

17 So long as the court of appeals does not set 18 aside any of these findings, factual findings, as 19 clearly erroneous, it seems to us the judgment that must 20 be entered is clear. Perhaps the court of appeals --

21 QUESTION: Except if the district judge 22 thought it was necessary to have direct evidence of 23 motive, it would seem to me that might permeate the rest 24 of the -- well, your view is that we could just 25 disregard that finding.

1 MR. WALLACE: And the rest of the findings
2 still do not add up to a prima facie case, and there is 3 nothing left for the district court to resolve in his 4 findings that could add up to a prima facie case, so that 5 I don't see that that is critical to the district 6 court's disposition.

7 QUESTION: Because there was evidence in the 8 record -- it is not necessarily recited in his findings 9 -- of a pattern of filling a vacancy -- there were 10 something like 20 or 25 vacancies that were regularly 11 filled by a white person who had less education, less 12 seniority, and less paper qualifications than the 13 plaintiff, and I suppose it would be conceivable that 14 one could draw an inference of discrimination from that 15 circumstantial evidence, and yet the district court 16 might have erred by thinking he had to have direct 17 evidence of improper motive.

18 MR. WALLACE: Well, that is conceivable,
19 although he did specifically find that there was no 20 credible evidence that the plaintiff was as qualified or 21 more qualified than the persons actually selected. That 22 finding is quite precise.

23 QUESTION: And you say that ends the case.
24 You say that ends the case.

25 MR. WALLACE: Well, in the absence of some

1 other finding that would have shown that the selection
2 more likely than not was the result of discrimination, 3 and there is no other such finding, and the error that 4 Justice Stevens is talking about, if corrected, it still 5 would not amount to a finding that could add up to a 6 prima facie showing.

7 I would like to reserve the balance of my 8 time, please.

9 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well.

10 Mr. Greenberg.

11 ORAL ARGUMENT OF JACK GREENBERG, ESQ.,

12 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENT

13 MR. GREENBERG: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it 14 please the Court, the real question before this Court is 15 whether on this record the plaintiff has made a prima 16 facie case, and we submit that he clearly did so in four 17 different ways, and that the judgment should clearly be 18 affirmed.

19 Indeed, I would suggest the record is so clear 20 that it is -- and so unlike the assertion of facts in 21 the question presented, that it would be appropriate to 22 dismiss the writ of certiorari as having been 23 improvidently granted.

24 And I would like to recite now the four 25 different ways in which the plaintiff made his prima

1 facie case. The four positions for which the plaintiff 2 applied and concerning which he claimed he had been 3 discriminatorily denied promotion were temporary 4 appointments or details which were not posted. People 5 didn't apply for them. Appointments were made at the 6 initiative and the discretion of the supervisors.

7 All these four appointments were within the 8 control or subject to the influence of the postmaster, 9 Carlton Beall or "Belle." I am not certain how to 10 pronounce it. And I beg the Court's indulgence, because 11 I am going to use a term which I use advisedly, but it 12 is based upon uncontradicted testimony. Beall was a 13 racist, and there is really no two ways about that. I 14 will just quote some of the testimony.

15 Three witnesses testified concerning Beall, 16 two black and one white. Beall said, is supposed to 17 have said, is testified to have said of blacks, "All 18 they want to do is lay around and breed like yard dogs 19 and collect relief checks." It was said of him by this 20 witness that, "He was operating on an 1865 concept. He 21 would only want black janitors. He very reluctantly 22 gave any ground as far as I could see. I dealt with him
23 quite frequently, and while we didn't always agree, I 24 think he had a contempt for black people. I still think 25 he has."

1 Another witness testified of Beall that he 2 said of black people, "You know, they don't have to sit 3 in the back of the bus any more," and that he testified 4 concerning black people as "that crowd." Furthermore, 5 it was testified that he frequently made sarcastic
6 comments about this particular plaintiff, testifying -- 7 I mean stating that this particular plaintiff, who had a 8 great deal of education, that is, a master's degree and 9 three years towards a Ph.D., making remarks about his 10 education.

11 Now, Beall was a witness for the government.
12 If anyone could deny such testimony made about him, he 13 certainly would. Beall testified and did not deny a 14 word of the testimony of these three witnesses, and I
15 submit that focusing solely on the issue that is before 16 this Court as to whether one made a prima facie case, 17 that a prima facie case is made when it is demonstrated 18 that the person in whose sole control the promotions 19 were, and who never promoted a black person, but 20 promoted 29 or 30 whites, made remarks of that sort, and 21 was that kind of a person.

22 The second way in which a prima facie case was 23 made was that there was an immense statistical disparity 24 between the representation of blacks in the work force 25 and whites in the work force and blacks and whites in

1 supervisory positions. Whites were 14 percent of the 2 work force in the post office during the period in 3 question. They occupied almost 50 percent of the 4 supervisory positions. The likelihood of this occurring 5 by chance I made an effort of calculating. It is 6 something like one in a quintillion.

7 This, too, we submit, constitutes a prima
8 facie case. In a total range of cases involving jury 9 discrimination, employment discrimination, voting 10 discrimination, this Court has looked at statistics, and 11 has concluded from statistics far less persuasive than 12 these, far less overwhelming than these --

13 QUESTION: Mr. Greenberg, are those statistics 14 really that dramatic, if you look at the period when the 15 statute was passed, and assume you started with a 16 disparity at least that bad and maybe even worse which 17 would have been produced by conduct that may have been 18 something we don't approve of, but was lawful at the 19 time it took place? Do your statistics demonstrate 20 the --

21 MR. GREENBERG: I don't think that's an 22 adequate explanation, but the question is, have we made 23 a prima facie case, and if there is indeed such an 24 explanation, they are free to come across and make it, 25 but --

1 QUESTION: But the question is whether those 2 statistics are meaningful unless you know what the 3 statistics were at the date the Act was passed, and does 4 the record show that?

5 MR. GREENBERG: The statistics were, as of, I
6 think, 1974, and the Act was passed in 1964, made 7 applicable to the Post Office in 1972.

8 QUESTION: So in the two-year period, you have 9 to say that in the two-year period, there was a course 10 of conduct that demonstrates that during those two years 11 there was discrimination.

12 MR. GREENBERG: Well, it may be, but I think 13 the issue before this Court is, given such overwhelming 14 statistics, is some explanation called for, and that is 15 the issue on a prima facie case.

16 QUESTION: Well, if you had the same
17 statistics a week after the Act was passed, would that 18 make a prima facie case?

19 MR. GREENBERG: If the same -- a week after 20 the Act was passed --

21 QUESTION: Yes.

22 MR. GREENBERG: -- would that make a prima
23 facie case? Well, perhaps not, but this is two years 24 after --

25 QUESTION: But you think it clearly does two

1 years afterwards?

2 MR. GREENBERG: This is two years after the 3 Act was passed, and indeed, there may be a perfectly 4 plausible explanation for it. I seriously doubt that 5 there is, but I think it is up to the government to make 6 it, and the issue is, was there a prima facie case.

7 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Greenberg, is it often 8 that in a disparate treatment case, the prima facie case 9 is made out on statistics?

10 MR. GREENBERG: Sometimes. I don't know how 11 often, but sometimes.

12 QUESTION: Have you got some cases on that?
13 Perhaps in practice --

14 MR. GREENBERG: In Teamsters, there is -- 15 there is a long footnote which discusses the use of 16 prima facie case -- of statistics making a prima facie
17 case in employment discrimination cases. I think if I 18 am correct it refers to disparate treatment cases, but I 19 wouldn't swear to that.

20 QUESTION: Does this record show what the 21 breakdown was in management level personnel at the time
22 the Act was passed?

23 MR. GREENBERG: I don't know. It shows it as 24 of the time of the filing of the complaint.

25 QUESTION: Would you think that that was of 1 some importance as to -- to make a comparison?

2 MR. GREENBERG: It probably was worse at the 3 time of the -- at the time that Act was passed than it 4 was at the time of the filing of the complaint.

5 QUESTION: But then what do they do about 6 that? Do they dismiss all the management level people 7 to make way for new people?

8 MR. GREENBERG: Oh, I don't think anyone has 9 suggested that. The question is, what do you do with an 10 applicant who applies for a job at the time after the 11 Act was passed that makes a prima facie case.

12 QUESTION: But doesn't that factor affect the 13 weight of the statistics that you are suggesting?

14 MR. GREENBERG: Well, this plaintiff was 15 applying for an opening. There was a vacancy.

16 QUESTION: The statistics don't bear on the 17 immediate question of the opening, do they?

18 MR. GREENBERG: No, they don't bear on that 19 point. But there were openings continuously occurring.
20 There were many openings occurring in the post office.
21 There apparently was a great deal of mobility there.
22 Once the Act has been passed, then the Act of course 23 applies to those openings. I don't think anyone has 24 ever suggested --

25 QUESTION: When were the openings? At what

1 stage in this whole panorama were the openings where he 2 declined to accept a promotion?

3 MR. GREENBERG: I can't give you the exact
4 date. Certainly it was after the Act was passed.

5 QUESTION: Yes, I assumed that, but you don't 6 know where in that sequence?

7 MR. GREENBERG: I would have to check on the 8 date of those three positions. I might say as to those 9 positions that whites who were promoted above them also 10 had not occupied those positions, and some of them had 11 declined comparable positions.

12 QUESTION: Mr. Greenberg, do you agree with 13 the statement of the court of appeals, "The prima facie 14 case in a suit alleging individual discrimination does 15 not require a showing of discriminatory motive?"

16 MR. GREENBERG: In the sense of demonstrating 17 the mental --

18 QUESTION: Whatever sense the court of appeals 19 used it.

20 MR. GREENBERG: Well, I agree with it in the 21 sense that it does not require the demonstration of a 22 mental operation, but it can be demonstrated out of 23 factual circumstances giving rise to an inference of 24 that, yes.

25 QUESTION: Are you giving rise to an inference

1 that the individual was intentionally discriminated 2 against?

3 MR. GREENBERG: Yes, giving rise to that 4 inference, yes.

5 QUESTION: That the reason he was denied the 6 promotion was that the employer was discriminating on 7 the basis of race?

8 MR. GREENBERG: Yes, you ultimately have to 9 show that in the disparate treatment case, but you don't 10 have to show that someone was thinking, you know,
11 syllogistically thought that I am not going to appoint 12 this person because he is black, and demonstrate that 13 that is what went on in his head.

14 QUESTION: Why not?

15 MR. GREENBERG: Because that can be derived 16 from external circumstances. I guess it amounts to the 17 same thing, really.

18 QUESTION: Doesn't the ultimate inference have 19 to be that from this circumstantial evidence, we will 20 conclude, or there is evidence to support --

21 MR. GREENBERG: Yes.

22 QUESTION: -- the inference that that is 23 exactly what he was thinking about.

24 MR. GREENBERG: Yes, that's right.

25 QUESTION: You don't need any direct evidence

1 of --

2 MR. GREENBERG: That's correct. Yes. You
3 don't need direct evidence.

4 QUESTION: So you disagree with this statement
5 of the court.

6 MR. GREENBERG: If it means what we have just 7 discussed it means, yes, I disagree with it.

8 QUESTION: Okay.

9 QUESTION: Mr. Greenberg, supposing that the 10 plaintiff has put on its case in a Title VII action, and 11 there is a Rule 41 motion to dismiss at the close of the 12 plaintiff's case. Is it permissible for the judge to 13 say at that time there is evidence here from which 14 certainly a reasonable person could infer actual 15 discriminatory intent on the part of the defendant, but 16 I can weigh the evidence at this point and in that 17 capacity I just don't choose to draw that inference. I 18 think it is equally reasonable to draw an inference 19 there was no discriminatory intent. So the motion to 20 dismiss is granted.

21 Is there anything wrong with the trial
22 judge --

23 MR. GREENBERG: If the judge doesn't believe 24 the plaintiff's witnesses?

25 QUESTION: Well, he doesn't choose to draw the

1 inference from the -- of a state of mind from facts
2 which could support that inference but really don't 3 compell it.

4 MR. GREENBERG: I think as a matter of law
5 under McDonnell Douglas, Burdine, and Sweeney and the 6 other cases, he is compelled to draw that inference if 7 he believed -- unless he disbelieves the witnesses.

8 QUESTION: Well, you think that if a witness 9 simply testifies to facts which could support an 10 inference, that the inference becomes mandatory?

11 MR. GREENBERG: I think that's what McDonnell
12 Douglas says. I think McDonnell Douglas -- McDonnell 13 Douglas is a rule, as I understand it, and it was 14 reiterated in Burdine, and if I recall correctly, in 15 Footnote 7, that if the evidence called for in the 16 McDonnell Douglas case is presented, it then creates a 17 presumption that there has been discrimination, which 18 presumption is rebuttable, but if not rebutted, then the 19 judgment must be granted for the plaintiff.

20 QUESTION: Well, then, you see Title VII
21 litigation as being kind of unique, I take it, and not --

22 MR. GREENBERG: No. No.

23 QUESTION: -- the ordinary burden between the 24 parties.

25 MR. GREENBERG: Presumptions -- I think

1 presumptions arise and are deferred to in all branches
2 of the law. Res ipsa loquitur is a presumption. In 3 antitrust cases, there are presumptions. In -- rights 4 cases, there are presumptions.

5 QUESTION: But what other traditional rules of 6 evidence would simply be a permissible inference in 7 other branches of litigation? Is a presumption in Title
8 VII litigation that carries one beyond a negative 9 finding by the district judge?

10 MR. GREENBERG: Well, if the negative finding 11 is based upon the fact that he disbelieves the 12 witnesses, then the testimony is not worth anything, but 13 if there is testimony which he believes and a 14 demonstration of facts which he asserts to have 15 occurred, then there is a presumption. If the elevator 16 falls down the shaftway, that doesn't really prove that 17 the elevator company was negligent. The law, however, 18 says that he is unless he can prove that he wasn't.

19 QUESTION: Well, suppose in a hypothetical 20 case there had been three whites appointed to vacancies 21 and no blacks, and there is testimony from the 22 supervisor that this is how he went about filling those 23 posts, and both of those situations are before the 24 district judge on a Rule 41(b) motion. He says to 25 himself, this filling the three slots with whites rather

1 than blacks when they are equally qualified certainly 2 would support inference of discrimination, but I am 3 satisfied that the supervisor is telling the truth, and 4 to me that negates the inference of discrimination, so I
5 am going to grant the Rule 41(b) motion.

6 MR. GREENBERG: Well, I would want to know
7 what it was that satisfied him.

8 QUESTION: Well, that he gave an explanation
9 as to why each of the whites were promoted in preference 10 to blacks that satisfied the trial judge that it was not 11 a discriminatory animus.

12 MR. GREENBERG: Well, now you are posing a 13 case in which the trial judge was satisfied to the 14 contrary, but if a black applied for a job or a woman 15 applied for a job and was rejected, and the job was then 16 filled by a member of a non-protected group, the rule in 17 McDonnell Douglas, as reiterated in Burdine, which is -- 18 let me come to Burdine just for a moment.

19 Burdine is precisely this case. Burdine was 20 the case in which a black woman applied for a job.
21 People whom she trained had been promoted above her, and 22 this Court and -- this Court held that she had made a 23 prima facie case. On a weighing of all of the evidence, 24 it was found that she had not carried her burden and she 25 lost, but as to the issue of whether or

1 not she made a prima facie case, that is precisely the 2 issue in this case as to whether or not Aikens made a 3 prima facie case.

4 QUESTION: Well, then, isn't there something 5 perhaps inconsistent between McDonnell Douglas and 6 Burdine and perhaps Fernco on the one hand and the 7 principle that in a bench trial on a motion -- Rule 8 41(b) motion the trial judge can weigh the evidence?

9 MR. GREENBERG: Well, no. Let me just go into 10 the details of this case and explain to you how there is 11 nothing inconsistent. In this particular case, we 12 submit that plaintiff made a prima facie case. The 13 supervisory positions were in the control of a racist, 14 and it is a term I don't hesitate to use, because it is 15 uncontradicted on the record.

16 The statistical disparity was enormous. This 17 plaintiff, and I hadn't come to this yet, was not only 18 qualified, as it has been asserted. He was 19 extraordinarily well qualified. All his supervisory 20 ratings were extremely high. He had been recommended 21 for the job of postmaster. He had been recommended for 22 other high positions.

23 And then we have the critical mass of all of 24 these factors taken together. These shouldn't be seen 25 in isolation. When they are seen together, that makes a

1 prima facie case, we submit. Okay. The judge then 2 wants to hear what it is that the government's witnesses 3 have to say to indicate that there was no racial 4 discrimination in the selection of whites over the 5 plaintiff in the government's case.

6 The government put on three or four 7 witnesses. They all testified about a position which is 8 not in issue here, that of postmaster. It had been an 9 issue, but it is no longer an issue, because of statute 10 of limitations problems. The only other witness to 11 testify as to anything regarding the positions in issue 12 was Carlton Beall, the person of whom I read all that 13 testimony. He said, "Blacks lay around like yard dogs 14 in the sun."

15 I think if the judge had gone through the 16 McDonnell Douglas sequence of saying, is there a prima
17 facie case, has it been rebutted, he might have said, I 18 don't believe Beall. I might believe something else, 19 but I can't believe Beall, and he might have ruled for 20 the plaintiff. So the importance of the prima facie 21 case is very great.

22 QUESTION: When did Beall go out of office in 23 this sequence?

24 MR. GREENBERG: Seventy-three, I think. But 25 he didn't go -- he went -- he was no longer postmaster

1 in '73. He was then promoted to district -- district 2 manager, and still was involved in the appointing 3 process.

4 QUESTION: I would be interested in your other 5 two ways of proving your --

6 MR. GREENBERG: The prima facie?

7 QUESTION: You went through two of them,
8 didn't you?

9 MR. GREENBERG: Well, I went through -- I went 10 through Beall. I went through the statistics.

11 QUESTION: Right.

12 MR. GREENBERG: Then, this plaintiff was not 13 someone who was merely qualified or only qualified. He 14 was someone as to whom the record made it quite clear 15 that -- he was a superior employee. He had been highly 16 rated by the promotion advisory board. He was among 17 those rated to be postmaster. His ratings called him 18 very efficient. He was called "an outstanding 19 supervisor." There was no derogatory information about 20 him. That is hardly the case of your minimally 21 qualified applicant.

22 QUESTION: You have a problem then with the 23 district court findings as well as with the court of 24 appeals. None of these three -- well, certainly your 25 first two bases for making a prima facie case is not the 1 way the court of appeals approached the case.

2 MR. GREENBERG: That's right, but that was one
3 reason I --

4 QUESTION: And this one is not either.

5 MR. GREENBERG: -- this case is not properly
6 here. Yes.

7 QUESTION: This one is not either. We can't 8 decide all these facts up here, can we?

9 MR. GREENBERG: These were uncontradicted.

10 QUESTION: But there's a contrary finding, 11 isn't there? That is Finding 17. What do you do with 12 that?

13 MR. GREENBERG: Finding 17 -- Finding 17 I 14 think rests upon a fundamental misconception of what the 15 McDonnell Douglas rule requires. The McDonnell Douglas 16 rule requires -- Finding 17 calls for -- refers to a 17 comparison between the plaintiff and the other 18 applicants.

19 QUESTION: But your third ground, I think 20 is --

21 MR. GREENBERG: I wasn't attempting to compare 22 them, though I could do so.

23 QUESTION: Is your third ground that it is a 24 prima facie case even if each of the other competitors
25 for the same position was also extraordinarily well

1 qualified and perhaps even better qualified than the 2 plaintiff?

3 MR. GREENBERG: No, I don't think it gets into 4 that. I think that when you are -- and the government 5 and the dissenting opinion below made much of the fact 6 that this was a supervisory position. I think there is 7 some force to the fact that if you are dealing with a 8 supervisory position, if someone has the bare bones, 9 minimal, nominal qualifications, one might say, well, 10 you know, it is a different kind of thing. We really 11 have to take a look at a person and see his various 12 dimensions.

13 But this is a case of someone who far exceeds 14 that, and I think in a way of stating the qualifications 15 for a supervisory job, maybe you have to state them a 16 little differently. Here they were stated beyond any 17 possibility of dispute.

18 QUESTION: Well, that is strange, then, that 19 both the district court and the court of appeals said 20 there was a lack of evidence as to relative
21 qualifications.

22 MR. GREENBERG: Well, I don't know what they 23 meant by relative qualifications. If by relative they 24 meant relative as to the other people applying for the 25 job, I think that is an incorrect and a destructive

1 interpretation of McDonnell Douglas. If by relative you
2 mean relative to the nominal qualifications for the job, 3 I think -- I have no quarrel with that, and I think that 4 is --

5 QUESTION: Mr. Greenberg, it sounds to me in 6 your argument as though you don't really disagree with 7 the government's proposed test. You simply disagree 8 with the application or findings of fact that were made 9 in this particular case.

10 MR. GREENBERG: Well, I have spoken about 11 nothing but uncontradicted evidence so far, so I don't 12 think there's any problem with findings of fact. There 13 were no findings of fact about Beall, and there were no 14 findings of fact about statistics, and there is no
15 conflict about that. But I do disagree --

16 QUESTION: So accepting the government's test,
17 you say --

18 MR. GREENBERG: I disagree with the 19 government's test. I think the test of McDonnell 20 Douglas is extremely important to maintain in this case, 21 if this Court goes on to decide it, and precisely 22 because of the kinds of facts which have been developed 23 in this case. The case is very unusual. Nowadays one 24 is not going to find evidence of a racist supervisor.
25 People don't say the kinds of things that Beall said

1 openly, at least, any more.

2 So far as the statistics are concerned, these 3 statistics are overpowering. A more typical case would 4 involve statistics that have to be developed by expert 5 witnesses, and it would be quite expensive and 6 time-consuming to develop.

7 QUESTION: Mr. Greenberg, I don't think you
8 have told us your fourth basis for saying there is a 9 clear prima facie case.

10 MR. GREENBERG: The fourth basis is the 11 critical mass of the first three bases. It may or may 12 not be considered a fourth basis. But I think these 13 can't be considered in isolation. We have a case in 14 which all these things existed.

15 QUESTION: You don't rely, if I understand you 16 correctly, you don't rely on the history of being -- 17 openings for which your client was qualified that were 18 filled repeatedly, I think 20 or 25 times, by white
19 applicants.

20 MR. GREENBERG: I do rely upon that.

21 QUESTION: That is not one of your four 22 theories.

23 MR. GREENBERG: Well, it was perhaps implicit 24 in the whole thing. The government was saying that 25 notwithstanding that, he didn't make a prima facie case,

1 and I was trying to show that all these factors added up 2 to a prima facie case of all those denials being 3 discriminatory.

4 QUESTION: I see.

5 MR. GREENBERG: But one really and probably 6 almost never will find a person going around and opening 7 saying the things that Postmaster Beall said. The 8 statistics will rarely, if ever, be this overpowering.
9 And so if we accept the fact, as the Congress has in 10 1964, and then in 1972, when it made the Act applicable 11 to the federal government, and then in 1978, when it 12 passed the Civil Service Reform Act, that racial 13 discrimination remains an important problem in the 14 United States, is something which this country is 15 resolved to attack and eradicate, the McDonnell Douglas 16 test makes it possible for someone to bring an action 17 and cast the burden of coming forward with evidence upon 18 the party in possession of the evidence, which is the 19 government.

20 That is where we are talking about subjective 21 decision-making here, particularly for supervisory 22 positions. The government has the knowledge of or the 23 employer of why it subjectively made these certain 24 decisions. It has been argued by the government and by 25 amici that this will and has given rise to a flood of 1 litigation. There is no evidence of that. There is no

2 statistics. There are no citations.

3 Common sense argues against it. Your typical 4 middle class or even less economically advantaged
5 plaintiff is not going to be able to bring an employment 6 discrimination action in the federal courts which is 7 going to be expensive and time-consuming. Indeed, this 8 particular plaintiff, until this stage of the 9 litigation, was able to bring the action because his son 10 represented him.

11 A civil rights organization is not going to be 12 able to bring actions of this sort unless there is some 13 reasonable prospect of prevailing and obtaining a 14 counsel fee so that it can finance itself to go on to 15 represent people in other actions. And so, only a 16 plaintiff who sincerely believes his case is meritorious 17 and counsel or an organization that are willing to 18 support him in such a case in the same belief are going 19 to be bringing cases, and that is going to screen out 20 the unmeritorious cases, and unfortunately some 21 meritorious ones as well.

22 QUESTION: Mr. Greenberg, I take it that the 23 court of appeals didn't believe the plaintiff in such a 24 case as this should have to prove that he was as or more 25 qualified than the other persons, but that it was open

1 to the employer to offer evidence on remand about 2 relative qualifications.

3 MR. GREENBERG: Correct.

4 QUESTION: Would you disagree that -- would 5 you agree or disagree that if the employer shows that 6 the person he appointed was more qualified, and the 7 judge believed that, that the prima facie case has been 8 rebutted?

9 MR. GREENBERG: Yes, except that the plaintiff
10 then could show that was a pretext.

11 QUESTION: Exactly. Exactly.

12 MR. GREENBERG: Yes.

13 QUESTION: But absent that, it would be 14 rebutted.

15 MR. GREENBERG: Yes.

16 QUESTION: But the plaintiff does not have to 17 make that showing.

18 MR. GREENBERG: That's right, but that 19 information particularly as to subjective selection --

20 QUESTION: Yes.

21 MR. GREENBERG: -- is within the control of 22 the government or the employer.

23 QUESTION: And what would you say if the 24 employer -- if the district judge said on remand, I just 25 can't tell the difference between these two people?

1 They are both equally well qualified. Their paper
2 record is the same. What is a judge supposed to do 3 then? Has the employer failed to meet the --

4 MR. GREENBERG: Then the employer would have 5 met, unless it could be shown that was pretextual.

6 QUESTION: But he would have met it if he 7 showed that --

8 MR. GREENBERG: Yes, if the judge were 9 convinced that it was equal, then you would show that it 10 was -- unless the plaintiff would show that it was 11 pretextual.

12 QUESTION: Yes.

13 QUESTION: What would your view be if the 14 judge said in so many words, these people are equally 15 qualified? If I were doing it, I think I would pick the 16 one who was later rejected.

17 MR. GREENBERG: Well, if that's all there was 18 in the case, and you didn't have also these other things 19 that we have in this case, that would be the end of it 20 unless you could show it was pretextual.

21 QUESTION: The judge can't substitute his 22 choice for the administrator's choice.

23 MR. GREENBERG: No, I don't think -- In 24 conclusion, we submit that the issue here is prima facie
25 case. The plaintiff established it in many different

1 ways. If the Court decides to decide this case, there
2 is only one way it can decide it, and that is in favor 3 of the plaintiff, and we would hope that it does so in 4 such a way which leaves the rule of McDonnell Douglas 5 viable as a means of combating employment
6 discrimination, which remains far too pervasive today.

7 Thank you.

8 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Wallace.

9 ORAL ARGUMENT OF LAWRENCE G. WALLACE, ESQ.,

10 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER - REBUTTAL

11 MR. WALLACE: We do not say that there is no
12 possible way of reading this record to give rise to a 13 prima facie case of discrimination, or that there is no 14 possibility that the court of appeals could have 15 overturned the district court's factual findings as 16 clearly erroneous. We think that is a job for the court 17 of appeals, not this Court.

18 What we are concerned about is the standard 19 that the court of appeals has applied in this and in 20 other cases, and that is now generally applicable to 21 cases with much simpler underlying facts for the 22 establishment of a prima facie case, and that we believe 23 is erroneous.

24 We see no inconsistency with this Court's 25 holding in Burdine. In Footnote 6 of the Burdine

1 opinion, it is pointed out that the prima facie case was 2 made there because the plaintiff showed that she was a 3 qualified woman who sought an available position, but 4 the position was left open for several months before she 5 finally was rejected in favor of a male who had been 6 under her supervision.

7 QUESTION: So you think the plaintiff as part 8 of his prima facie case is going to have to prove that 9 he was more qualified than --

10 MR. WALLACE: Well, that's one way of showing 11 it.

12 QUESTION: That's one way.

13 MR. WALLACE: That's one way of showing that 14 the employer acted contrary to his economic 15 self-interest, or a showing can be made through 16 statistics or through direct evidence of discrimination, 17 or through the carrying of a --

18 QUESTION: How would statistics show that he 19 acted contrary to his economic self-interest?

20 MR. WALLACE: No, well, that is only -- acting 21 contrary to economic self-interest is only one way of 22 showing a prima facie case. A statistical showing is an 23 alternative method.

24 QUESTION: Well, that isn't so frequent in 25 disparate treatment cases, is it?

1 MR. WALLACE: The statistical showing?

2 QUESTION: To make a prima facie case by 3 statistics.

4 MR. WALLACE: It is not frequent. There was 5 some effort made to do it here, as well as an effort
6 made to show superior qualifications. The only 7 presumption that has been applied differently in Title 8 VII cases has been a presumption requiring judgment if 9 the defendant has not come forward with any 10 non-discriminatory explanation after the prima facie 11 case has been made.

12 In practice, this question seldom arises
13 because the plaintiff usually knows what the defendant's 14 explanation is before the plaintiff ever puts on his own 15 case, and his rebuttal of that explanation is usually 16 put on as part of the plaintiff's case.

17 The discrete phases that are postulated in 18 McDonnell Douglas are not the way these cases by and 19 large are being tried. The plaintiff discovers through 20 discovery or the administrative record what the reasons 21 are, and then you have your normal rules applying.

22 QUESTION: So you may call a defendant's 23 president or personnel manager or foreman or --

24 MR. WALLACE: In an effort --

25 QUESTION: -- and so all the evidence comes

1 out on --

2 MR. WALLACE: And then the Rule 41(b) motion
3 is made, and the question is whether the trier of fact 4 thinks it more likely than not that discrimination was 5 the motivating factor.

6 QUESTION: Mr. Wallace, may I ask you one 7 other question on your theory? The district judge at 8 the end of his conclusions of law stated that the 9 plaintiff had failed to prove that he was -- let's see 10 if I can find the exact -- that he was "as qualified or 11 more qualified than the individuals who were promoted or 12 detailed." That was a reason why there was no prima 13 facie case. I don't understand you to be arguing that 14 in every case the plaintiff must prove either equal or 15 superior qualifications.

16 MR. WALLACE: That is correct.

17 QUESTION: There are other ways which he could 18 prove it even under your view. Is that right?

19 MR. WALLACE: That is correct.

1 MR. WALLACE: That is correct, and that was 2 true in McDonnell-Douglas itself. He just showed that 3 he was minimally qualified, but that the employer 4 carried the vacancy rather than hired him, and that was 5 a prima facie case. We have no quarrel with 6 McDonnell-Douglas and supported it at the time.

7 QUESTION: So you do not ask for a rule that 8 says the plaintiff must always meet this particular 9 standard that this District Court seemed to apply.

10 MR. WALLACE: Precisely so, Mr. Justice.

11 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.

12 The case is submitted.

13 (Whereupon, at 10:55 a.m., the case in the 14 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
