P R O C E E D I N G S

CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Adler, you may now proceed whenever you're ready in Falls City Industries against Vanco Beverage.

ORAL ARGUMENT OF HOWARD ADLER, JR., ESQ.,
ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER

MR. ADLER: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the Court:

We are asking the Court to reverse a judgment of the Court of Appeals that upheld a district court judgment finding that Falls City had violated the Robinson-Patman Act in its sales of beer to the respondent Vanco, which was a distributor of Falls City and other beers in Evansville, Indiana.

It is our position, and the United States in the Federal Trade Commission agreed, that the lower courts applied a legally erroneous interpretation of Section 2(b) of the Robinson-Patman Act in rejecting Falls City's good faith meeting competition defense.

We also contend that the lower courts misapprehended this Court's Morton Salt decision and applied an overly lenient test of competitive injury under Section 2(a) of the act.

I expect, unless there are questions, to rest on our brief on the Section 2(a) competitive injury

1 point, and in the time I have in oral argument to 2 address the meeting competition issue.

3 QUESTION: Well, I do have a question about 4 that, counsel. Do you agree there's one market in this 5 case, or do you think there are two?

6 MR. ADLER: I think there -- I think the court 7 erred in finding a single market, but I think at the 8 posture of the case in this Court there was a failure to 9 prove competitive injury, even assuming a single market.

10 QUESTION: Well, do you think the question 11 whether there is one or two markets is relevant to the 12 competitive injury issue?

13 MR. ADLER: Oh, I think it's a very important 14 issue, and if -- if there were not a single market -- 15 that is, if the wholesalers in the two markets were not 16 in competition with each other -- these would not be 17 actionable, discriminatory sales under Section 2(a).
18 But even to some degree they are in competition with 19 each other, there are still many other matters that the 20 plaintiff would have to prove regarding causal 21 connection between the price differential and the kind 22 of injury to competition and the kind of business injury 23 that is actionable.

24 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Adler, I guess both the 25 district court found one market and the Court of Appeals

1 affirmed. Is that a -- whether or not there's one or 2 two markets, is that a question of fact or law?

3 MR. ADLER: I think that is somewhat of a 4 mixed question. Our problem with the 2(a) case is that 5 the court, both courts, and particularly most explicitly 6 the Court of Appeals, articulated a standard of injury 7 based on a misapprehension of Morton Salt under which 8 injury was virtually presumed. And so it didn't make 9 the kind of careful analysis of market factors.

10 QUESTION: But if there were two markets here
11 there wouldn't be any Robinson --

12 MR. ADLER: There would be no Robinson-Patman..

13 QUESTION: No. Then that would be the end of 14 the case, wouldn't it?

15 MR. ADLER: And that would certainly be -- 16 that would be one way the case could have ended and 17 should have ended.

18 QUESTION: Well, if that's so, I don't 19 understand why you don't argue the question of whether 20 there are one or two markets. If it's a question of 21 law, and we may, notwithstanding the current finding --

22 MR. ADLER: Well, I think there are many 23 factual components in that, and I think in our posture --

24 QUESTION: Well, you're not willing to argue 25 that there are two markets.

1 MR. ADLER: I'm not asking this Court to delve 2 into the record to second-guess that determination by 3 the lower courts.

4 QUESTION: You didn't address it in your 5 petition either, did you?

6 MR. ADLER: Only as part of the whole complex 7 of factors that the court failed adequately to consider 8 because of its simplistic view of what's required on 9 proof of injury under 2(a). Had the lower courts done 10 as this Court said in Standard Oil and made a real 11 appraisal of competitive facts, we would have prevailed 12 on the market issue; we would have prevailed on all 13 kinds of causation issue. And on 2(a) I think 14 realistically the courts, lower courts, Seventh Circuit, 15 should be instructed that they cannot presume injury and 16 that they should make a searching analysis of the fact 17 to see whether the requisite injury is shown.

18 The courts -- the Morton Salt, we have no 19 objection to it per se, but we think it is -- has been 20 misapplied. The standards are too lenient. The courts 21 find injury, find single markets, find effects on 22 competition without the requisite analysis of the 23 competitive facts, and that is made in our brief.

24 I would like to address the meeting
25 competition issue which presupposes that there was a

1 prima facie case of injury. We don't think that there
2 was, but assuming for the purpose of argument that there 3 was a prima facie case of injury, we believe that the 4 lower courts erred -- and this is strictly a matter of 5 law -- in the legal standard, in the things that they 6 thought were required in order to establish a good faith 7 meeting competition defense.

8 The Robinson-Patman --

9 QUESTION: May I just ask one other case?

10 Then your submission is that we should assume for 11 purposes of analyzing the good faith defense that the 12 law required as a prima facie matter your client to 13 charge the same price in Kentucky and Indiana.

14 MR. ADLER: No, sir. No, sir.

15 QUESTION: Well, then, how will we get to the 16 2(b) defense?

17 Don't you assume a violation first and then 18 say we can defend against --

19 MR. ADLER: I assume a violation -- I assume 20 -- for purposes of arguing the good faith meeting
21 competition --

22 QUESTION: Correct. That's what I mean.

23 MR. ADLER: I assume a violation, which the 24 Court said in Standard Oil. Even assuming a prima facie
25 violation, this Court --

1 QUESTION: Which means that you assume you
2 were under a duty to charge the same price in Kentucky
3 and Indiana.

4 QUESTION: Except for the --

5 MR. ADLER: For purposes of the -- for the 6 purpose of the 2(b) --

7 QUESTION: Correct.

8 MR. ADLER: -- Argument.

9 QUESTION: Except for -- unless you can defend 10 that under 2(b).

11 MR. ADLER: Yes. The sole question on 2(b) is 12 whether the different price, even though assuming for 13 analytical purposes that it created a prima facie 14 violation --

15 QUESTION: Right. You said you don't argue 16 that today. You're going to assume that.

17 MR. ADLER: I'm going to assume that for 18 purposes of the Section 2(b) argument.

19 QUESTION: Right. Which, in turn, is all I'm 20 suggesting. You are therefore assuming for the purpose 21 of the argument you're about to make --

22 MR. ADLER: Yes, sir.

23 QUESTION: -- That you are under a duty, a 24 statutory duty, to charge the same price in Kentucky and 25 Indiana.

1 MR. ADLER: Yes. Unless we are in good faith

2 --

3 QUESTION: Right.

4 MR. ADLER: -- Meeting lower prices of 5 competition.

6 This whole matter arose because of an 7 industrywide practice of not only Falls City but all 8 brewers of charging different prices to their 9 distributors in different states. Falls City followed 10 that practice. Vanco's other suppliers followed that 11 practice. All brewers did. And there's no dispute on 12 this. The court expressly found that other brewers had 13 different prices for their distributors in the Kentucky 14 portion of the relevant market that were lower than the 15 prices they had in Indiana.

16 Faced with that industrywide situation, the 17 question is what practical alternatives did Falls City
18 have. The district court said it should have eliminated 19 the competition -- the discrimination by either raising 20 the price or lowering the price; that is, raising its 21 price -- excuse me -- lowering the price in Indiana to 22 the Kentucky level or else raising the Kentucky price so 23 that it would be equal to the Indiana price.

24 This was not -- these are not really workable
25 alternatives. This was not anything that any other

1 brewer did. It would have meant because Indiana law
2 requires all wholesalers to be charged the same price
3 that Falls City would have had to undercut, underprice
4 below its competitors throughout the state of Indiana,
5 not just to Vanco. And Falls City president testified 6 that would be economically disadvantageous, and there is 7 no obligation to price -- in a free market system to 8 price below your competition.

9 The alternative of pricing in Kentucky at the 10 higher Indiana level would, of course, have put Falls 11 City above its competition, and this is precisely what 12 we believe Section 2(b) is intended to avoid -- the 13 problem of a competitor being forced to price above the 14 competition, above the price level of its competition.

15 Judge Schweigert in his dissent found a much 16 better answer: charge -- for Falls City -- charge the 17 Indiana price, which was a free market normal price, 18 charge the lower price in Kentucky because that was 19 necessary to beat the competition there; and he said 20 that's the essence of a good faith meeting of 21 competition defense.

22 I think that's in line with what this Court 23 has repeatedly said with regard to Section 2(b), that 24 it's a pragmatic -- that good faith is a pragmatic and 25 flexible concept and so forth. And the pragmatic and

1 sensible approach here was for Falls City to do what it
2 did, follow the Indiana price, follow the Kentucky 3 price, be competitive in both areas with the brands that 4 it followed which were the nonpremium, popular-priced
5 type of brands, which indeed it followed through market 6 information and the like, as was abundantly testified to 7 during the trial.

8 Vanco now contends that the good faith meeting
9 of competition question was, I quote, "a pure question 10 of fact." But in the Court of Appeals it argued to the 11 court extensively, about five pages of its brief, under 12 the heading that the proffered defense was contrary to 13 settled law.

14 And it argued to the court two propositions:
15 Section 2(b) does not apply unless there is 16 customer-by-customer pricing; that the use of a price 17 system is not meeting competition as contemplated by 18 2(b).

19 It also argued that the meeting of competition 20 defense depends upon a lowering of prices; that you are 21 not meeting competition if you are unable to raise 22 prices because of competition; there must be an actual 23 price decrease.

24 We submit that there's no difference in the 25 law or in logic or in economics or anything else between

1 lowering a price to meet competition and being unable to 2 raise a price, as Falls City was unable to raise its 3 Kentucky price because had it raised it would not have 4 been competitive.

5 The Court of Appeals accepted Vanco's legal 6 argument. Its rejection of the 2(b) defense proffered 7 by Falls City rested on two pivotal and we believe 8 clearly erroneous legal propositions. One is that 9 Section 2(b) does not justify price differences that 10 result merely from the adoption of a competitor's 11 discriminatory pricing structure; that the act places 12 emphasis on individual situations and doesn't apply to 13 the adoption of an overall pricing structure.

14 Secondly -- the second proposition that the 15 court articulated was that the -- 2(b) didn't apply 16 because the discriminatory pricing resulted not from -- 17 from price increases in Indiana, not from price 18 decreases; and that there was nothing in the record to 19 show that Falls City had a price structure and then 20 reduced its prices -- this is the court's word -- 21 reduced its prices where necessary to defend against 22 competition.

23 So that contrary to what Vanco has said, the 24 rejection of the 2(b) defense rested clearly on two 25 legal propositions, both of which are erroneous, both of

1 which depart from past interpretations of 2(b) by this 2 Court, both of which are antithetical to the notion that 3 you should accommodate the Robinson-Patman Act with 4 other goals of antitrust, the procompetitive goals. And 5 it resulted in an interpretation that prevented Falls
6 City and would prevent others from being competitive, 7 i.e., maintaining its lower competitive price in 8 Kentucky.

9 QUESTION: Mr. Adler, did the court not also 10 find as a matter of fact that your client raised its 11 prices in Indiana not for competitive reasons but for 12 other reasons, and what do we do with a factual finding 13 like that?

14 MR. ADLER: The only factual finding that 15 could be made is that of course Falls City raised its 16 prices in Indiana when competition permitted. The 17 testimony on this -- and there's no two ways about it, 18 and there's no finding to the contrary -- was that Falls 19 City was a price follower. It was a small, struggling 20 brewer. It was driven out of business. It went out of 21 business in 1978 as have, as you know, many other 22 brewers. And it was a price follower, a price taker.
23 And that is clear in the record. And when competition 24 went up in Indiana, it went up with the -- when 25 competition permitted. Competition didn't permit it to 1 go up in Kentucky, and it stayed down. And that's how 2 the difference arose.

3 And one can look at it and say okay, the 4 differential arose because of raising prices in 5 Indiana. The differential arose because it was faced 6 with different competitive circumstances in the two 7 areas -- lower prices in Kentucky, higher prices in 8 Indiana. It was a price taker and price follower in 9 both circumstances.

10 Vanco here now is making a big attack on the 11 good faith and the reasonableness of Falls City's 12 pricing practices. It makes, as we showed in our reply 13 brief, a rather minimal attempt to defend the legal 14 theories which it successfully persuaded the Court of 15 Appeals to adopt, and it seeks now to, for example, cast 16 a taint of illegality on Falls City's pricing saying 17 that it was engaged in parallel pricing, collusive 18 pricing, noncompetitive pricing and the like.

19 But the court expressly found that there was 20 no agreement on price fixing; it rejected the claim of 21 price fixing. And those allegations I think are 22 totally, totally without legal significance. Falls City 23 on this record was following free market, lawful, 24 legitimate competitive prices in all of its markets.

25 There are other points made by the respondent

1 regarding Falls City's pricing. They say, for example, 2 that it didn't show anything about the competitive
3 analysis that led it to adopt lower prices in Kentucky.
4 But the record is unequivocal that Falls City got 5 pricing information through its sales and from 6 distributors and others; that it made every reasonable 7 effort that a business in this position would make to 8 keep abreast of competitive conditions, and using that 9 information it set these prices.

10 I would like to reserve the balance of my time 11 for rebuttal.

12 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Shapiro.

13 QUESTION: Mr. Shapiro, before you start, 14 would you mind, do you think it's open to the Court to 15 address the question whether there are one or two 16 markets?

17 MR. ADLER: I think it's open the Court, but 18 it isn't the question presented in the petition, and it
19 hasn't been briefed by the parties, although this Court 20 certainly could entertain that issue if it were disposed 21 to do so.

22 ORAL ARGUMENT OF STEPHEN M. SHAPIRO, ESQ.,

23 AS AMICUS CURIAE

24 MR. SHAPIRO: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
25 please the Court:

1 The Department of Justice and the Federal 2 Trade Commission agree with Petitioner that the Seventh
3 Circuit used the wrong legal standard when it rejected 4 the meeting competition defense raised in this case. We 5 therefore submit that the decision of the Court of 6 Appeals is in error and should be reversed.

7 Both the Seventh Circuit and the District
8 Court believe that the meeting competition defense was 9 unavailable because the price difference here resulted 10 from uneven price increases rather than some 11 identifiable price decrease. The courts below thought 12 it necessary to find some lowering of prices in the 13 state of Kentucky before the defense could be sustained.

14 This holding finds no support in the literal 15 language of the statute. Section 2(b) only requires the 16 seller to show that his lower price was made in good 17 faith to meet competition, not that he lowered his price 18 compared to some pre-existing standard.

19 In our view, the Court of Appeals' departure 20 from the statute's literal requirements threatens to 21 undermine an important statutory purpose. During 22 periods of general inflation price competition often may 23 take the form of moderate price increases rather than 24 outright price cuts. In this situation the lower price 25 of the seller, even though it is the end product of a

1 moderate price increase, may well be a form of 2 competitive self-defense of the very kind which Congress 3 meant to protect.

4 In addition, if the law really did require
5 what the Court of Appeals said, then sellers like Falls 6 City would be enforced to engage in costly and 7 artificial conduct such as hiking all of their prices to 8 a particular level for a period of time and then cutting 9 selectively certain prices thereafter. This would serve 10 no useful purpose and would only aggravate the problem 11 of inflation in our economy.

12 The district court also was of the view that 13 the meeting competition defense requires proof that 14 prices were adjusted on a customer-by-customer basis, 15 and in affirming the district court, the Court of 16 Appeals used language indicating that it was of this 17 same view.

18 This also was a mistaken interpretation of the 19 statute. Section 2(b) permits a price difference if the 20 seller shows that his lower price to a purchaser or to a 21 group of purchasers was made in good faith to meet the 22 price of a rival. The test, as this Court frequently 23 has held, is flexible and pragmatic, not technical or 24 doctrinaire. The seller need only show a reasonable and 25 good faith effort to meet the forces of competition.

1 The statute doesn't attempt to dictate what method the 2 seller must use in different market situations.

3 Nothing in the statute or its legislative 4 history says that a seller cannot adopt an areawide 5 price when that's reasonably necessary to meet actual 6 competition. As the facts of this case show, the 7 seller's rival may have a single price of its own 8 throughout the entire region, or a group of sellers of 9 slightly different products may have a range of prices.
10 In either event, a single price which is reasonably 11 adjusted to meet actual competition prevailing in the 12 area is a permissible response.

13 Customer-by-customer pricing often would be a 14 complete waste of time when a larger rival charges a 15 single price throughout the area and could impose 16 substantial burdens on small sellers attempting to 17 survive in a competitive market environment.

18 Now, contrary to the view of the Court of 19 Appeals, nothing in this Court's decision in the Staley
20 case requires a rejection of Falls City's meeting 21 competition defense here. Staley rested on the 22 conclusion that the sellers there lacked good faith
23 because they copied an artificial basing point system 24 which imposed substantial phantom or unearned freight 25 charges on particular purchasers.

1 The court concluded that the basing point
2 system was inherently unlawful under the Robinson-Patman
3 Act, and therefore its adoption could not be 4 characterized as good faith action.

5 In addition, the FTC explained in its opinion 6 in the Staley case that the basing point system was the 7 product of collusion, and that also undercut any claim 8 of good faith action.

9 Now, in this case, by contrast --

10 QUESTION: Mr. Shapiro, may I interrupt a 11 minute? What do you -- in the Government's view what 12 did the defendant have to prove to establish the good 13 faith meeting defense about the -- what did it have to 14 prove is going on in Kentucky to justify the defense?

15 MR. SHAPIRO: As this Court held in Staley, it 16 isn't necessary to prove precisely what the prices 17 were. It is necessary to prove a good faith and 18 reasonable effort to approximate what reasonable and 19 believable prices were.

20 QUESTION: In your view is the defense made 21 out if the price of Falls City in Kentucky was lower 22 than any of its competitors?

23 MR. SHAPIRO: If -- if -- no, it could not 24 deliberately undercut prices in Kentucky, but it --

25 QUESTION: It must prove there were prices in

1 Kentucky that were at least as low as its prices.

2 MR. SHAPIRO: And it did just that. The 3 record in this case shows that it did that. It made a 4 reasonable effort to monitor those prices.

5 QUESTION: Does it have to prove anything 6 about the quality of the products being sold by the 7 competition? If there were normally premium beers and 8 standard price beers would that be relevant?

9 MR. SHAPIRO: It -- if -- there was evidence
10 to the effect that this was a regional beer that didn't 11 command the same premium price that Budweiser and other 12 beers commanded, which would permit a little bit of an 13 undercutting under our analysis. But here there wasn't 14 even that element of undercutting.

15 QUESTION: But under your -- but under your 16 analysis it then would have been permissible even if 17 they'd undercut by no more than the reasonable margin 18 between the premium and the --

19 MR. SHAPIRO: That's correct, Your Honor, and 20 that point is made in the '55 Attorney General's study 21 on the antitrust laws which we subscribe to.

22 QUESTION: Well, do I understand, Mr. Shapiro, 23 that all really they had to do to prove the meeting 24 competition defense was that in good faith they met the 25 lower Kentucky price, period?

1 MR. SHAPIRO: That is it, period.

2 QUESTION: That's all they had to do.

3 MR. SHAPIRO: And these additional standards
4 that are talked about in the lower court opinions are 5 completely without statutory basis.

6 QUESTION: And area pricing and all that 7 becomes quite irrelevant, doesn't it?

8 MR. SHAPIRO: And long as there was a good 9 faith effort to meet prices charged their customers in 10 the state of Kentucky, that is it.

11 QUESTION: Would that be true if Falls City 12 was -- if this particular plaintiff was the only 13 customer in Indiana?

14 MR. SHAPIRO: And --

15 QUESTION: They charged the low price in 16 Kentucky, had one Indiana customer in the same market 17 and they charged him an extra 30 percent.

18 MR. SHAPIRO: Well, if Vanco was --

19 QUESTION: Because they can get away with it.
20 Because he's willing to pay it.

21 MR. SHAPIRO: If Vanco was the only customer 22 in the state of --

23 QUESTION: In Indiana.

24 MR. SHAPIRO: -- Indiana and there were lower 25 prices prevailing --

1 QUESTION: In Kentucky.

2 MR. SHAPIRO: -- In Kentucky, the differential
3 would be permissible, yes.

4 QUESTION: Even though he's the only customer.

5 MR. SHAPIRO: That's correct.

6 QUESTION: Well, in part that's because the 7 Indiana statute compels him, is it not?

8 MR. SHAPIRO: Indiana does indeed compel a 9 single --

10 QUESTION: Yes.

11 MR. SHAPIRO: -- Throughout the state.

12 QUESTION: Well, it wouldn't compel a price
13 higher than they charged in Kentucky, though.

14 MR. SHAPIRO: No, that's correct.

15 Vanco argues, nonetheless, in this case that 16 Falls City acted with bad faith because it matched what 17 it calls artificially high prices in the state of 18 Indiana. With deference, we submits that this amounts 19 to name-calling without any legal substance. Vanco 20 failed to prove that the prices were unlawful under the 21 Sherman Act or under the Robinson-Patman Act, and merely 22 characterizing them as high or artificial doesn't make 23 them unlawful.

24 In the absence of collusion each seller is 25 permitted to charge its profit-maximizing price. This

1 is the very essence of a free enterprise competitive 2 system.

3 QUESTION: But isn't it demonstrable that the 4 higher price is above the free market price because 5 competition has set the Kentucky price, and it's all one 6 market.

7 MR. SHAPIRO: That is -- that is a possibility.

8 QUESTION: We must assume that the Indiana
9 price is above the price that a free market would set, 10 if you assume it's all one market.

11 MR. SHAPIRO: Well, but there are state law --

12 QUESTION: Because your submission is the 13 Kentucky price is set by competitive forces.

14 MR. SHAPIRO: Yes, but there are state law
15 barriers between the states that prevent arbitrage back 16 and forth.

17 QUESTION: But you said there was no state law
18 barrier to lowering the Indiana price.

19 MR. SHAPIRO: The Indiana price could be 20 lowered, but there were state laws that prevented sales 21 back and forth from the states that could result in 22 competition producing different price levels.

23 QUESTION: Unless you take the position
24 Justice Brennan suggested that there are two markets 25 here, how is that relevant?

1 MR. SHAPIRO: Well, what it does is explain 2 that different pricing structures could occur in the 3 states without the presence of collusion. That's the 4 significance of the state law.

5 QUESTION: There can be different pricing
6 structures in the same market?

7 MR. SHAPIRO: In -- well, they -- it is the 8 same market pursuant to the findings of the district 9 court, but it's undeniable that there are legal 10 restrictions that to some extent at least carve 11 differences between these two markets.

12 QUESTION: What is the Government's position
13 on whether there were one market or two, whether there 14 was one market or two?

15 MR. SHAPIRO: We haven't taken a position on 16 that because the court --

17 QUESTION: You don't think that's relevant and 18 you don't think you have to decide that to make an 19 intelligent analysis of the competitive defense?

20 MR. SHAPIRO: We think that it's sufficient
21 under Section 2(b) for the defendant to show that there 22 was a price prevailing in each state that was different, 23 that its competitors were charging that price, and that 24 it reasonably attempted to match that price, and that 25 that is all that Section 2(b) requires.

1 QUESTION: But do you not agree that if the 2 price in Kentucky is set by competitive forces and if 3 the price in Indiana is in the same market, necessarily 4 the price in Indiana is above the market price?

5 MR. SHAPIRO: We don't concede that because 6 there is the undeniable fact of a difference between the 7 two markets. Even though you can characterize them as 8 one market, as the district court did, there are vastly 9 different legal frameworks that the two states operate
10 under. And you may well characterize that as a 11 bifurcation of the markets, which we certainly wouldn't 12 quarrel with, but these are realities of the two markets
13 that we think can't be discounted and that definitely do
14 explain the different price levels that Your Honor 15 mentioned.

16 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Your time has expired, 17 Mr. Shapiro. Thank you.

18 Mr. Cusack.

19 ORAL ARGUMENT OF JOHN T. CUSACK, ESQ.,

20 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENT

21 MR. CUSACK: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice, and 22 may it please the Court:

23 This case presents two questions for the 24 Court. The first is was the district court and the 25 Seventh Circuit in affirming the district court clearly

1 erroneous in making two factual findings which are key 2 to this case.

3 The first question is whether Falls City
4 sustained its burden -- and its burden of showing that 5 its persistent and substantial, from 10 to 29 percent, 6 price discrimination throughout the entire period
7 resulted from its good faith attempt to meet competition.

8 The second question presented by this case is 9 whether Vanco established competitive injury when it 10 showed it lost volume and profits, even in light of the 11 fact that it absorbed substantial price increases by 12 Falls City, and it lost these profits and lost these 13 sales due to Falls City's persistent and substantial 14 price discrimination.

15 In regard to the meeting competition question,
16 one, Falls City never competed on the basis of price.
17 And this was found by the district court and affirmed by 18 the Court of Appeals. Judge Holder said that Falls City
19 "was not meeting competition. Its action was to get a 20 higher price in Indiana than in Kentucky." The Seventh 21 Circuit said that Section 2(b) "is designed to allow a 22 seller to defend against genuine price competition." 23 And that the district court found that Falls City in 24 setting its Indiana price was simply taking advantage of 25 its competitor's policies of charging higher prices in

1 Indiana than in Kentucky and other states.

2 And I've got to say it to this Court, the 3 testimony of Mr. Tate was that in the thirteen states
4 where they sold beer, the price was higher in Indiana
5 than anywhere else, and he guessed that all brewers
6 charged a higher price in Indiana than somewhere else.
7 And I am appalled that the amicus could take the side of 8 Falls City under these circumstances.

9 The Court of Appeals also said that the 10 findings of the district court are not clearly erroneous 11 and "There is nothing in the record to show that Falls
12 City first adopted a nondiscriminatory pricing structure 13 and then reduced its prices when necessary to defend 14 against competition."

15 Falls City admitted at trial and also in the 16 deposition of Mr. Tate which took place a year before 17 when he was asked by Judge Holder the following
18 question, and the focus was on the higher Indiana 19 price. The Court: "Well, the price is FOB at your 20 dock. Why is the Indiana price higher than Kentucky 21 under the policy of your company?" Mr. Tate: "Well, 22 because we followed the leaders, the pricing of the 23 leaders of the beers in Indiana as far as their dock 24 prices were concerned."

25 Falls City throughout the period never

1 decreased its prices in Indiana, but throughout raised
2 its prices continuously in both Indiana and Kentucky.
3 And, in fact, on six separate occasions by letters dated 4 the same dates and for price increases effective the 5 same exact dates they sent out price increase letters to 6 both customers in Indiana and Kentucky. How is that an 7 evidence of good faith?

8 As an example: price increase letter dated 9 January 20, 1977, effective January 1, 1977. The 10 letters are identical except one letter says Kentucky, 11 the other says Indiana, and the prices are higher. For 12 example, 24 16-ounce cans, the price in Kentucky is 13 $4.45; the price in Indiana is $5.00 -- a 55-cent
14 difference. They raised the Indiana price 15 cents;
15 they raised the Kentucky price a dime. The differential 16 is now 60 cents. How can this possibly be any evidence 17 of good faith meeting competition when you continuously 18 throughout the period raise, raise, raise in both 19 markets, but you preserve the differential?

20 QUESTION: Mr. Cusack, you used the term "both 21 markets."

22 MR. CUSACK: Both states, Your Honor.

23 QUESTION: Did you mean that?

24 MR. CUSACK: I'm sorry. That's a slip. I
25 worked on the Pabst case where we had states as a

1 separate market for purposes of brewery mergers.

2 It's clear that Henderson -- just a very fast 3 -- it's clear the market is the same; that the 4 Henderson-Evansville market -- it's -- it's a
5 geographically isolated area where people in Kentucky
6 work in Indiana and people in Indiana work in Kentucky.

7 QUESTION: Well, does your client compete with 8 -- with whom does your client compete?

9 MR. CUSACK: Our client competes, Your Honor, 10 with beer distributors in the relevant geographic 11 market, which is the Henderson -- the 12 Evansville-Henderson SMSA, and including to some extent 13 --

14 QUESTION: Does your client sell to any single 15 customer that the distributors in Henderson sell to?

16 MR. CUSACK: No, Your Honor, it does not. Our 17 client sells to retailers in Indiana who have an Indiana 18 basic permit. It is the consumers, however, who buy 19 beer in both markets.

20 QUESTION: But aren't they doing so illegally 21 when they do that?

22 MR. CUSACK: Yes, Your Honor. And I submit 23 that when people buy beer in Virginia and live in the 24 District of Columbia, or vice-versa, and in Maryland, 25 they do the same thing. All states, as I understand it,

1 have a requirement that you're not supposed to take beer
2 across a state line, and it is ignored completely.

3 QUESTION: But the entire competition that 4 you're concerned with here is unlawful competition, 5 isn't it?

6 MR. CUSACK: Your Honor, I submit it's not 7 unlawful if it's not enforced.

8 QUESTION: Well, all right. But if the laws 9 were enforced to the letter, there would be no
10 competition --

11 MR. CUSACK: Your Honor, if the law was 12 enforced to the letter, I submit the bridges over the 13 Potomac would be very crowded with policemen.

14 QUESTION: Well --

15 MR. CUSACK: The reality of it, Your Honor, is 16 that it's a market. Whiting, Indiana, Your Honor, and 17 Chicago, that's a market. You've got liquor stores on 18 Whiting, Indiana on -- on what is it, Indianapolis
19 Boulevard, and people from Indiana are going there all 20 the time. It's never been enforced.

21 The thing in Evansville, yes, at one time in 22 1974 the retailers in Evansville got the state excise 23 police to put some policemen on the bridge to stop 24 cars. It created such a terrible furor that they 25 stopped.

1 The point is that the area is so obviously an 2 isolated, unified geographic market. And I submit --

3 QUESTION: You'd better be careful about 4 Virginia and the District of Columbia. They do pick you 5 up.

6 (Laughter.)

7 I mean don't assume it's just like out there.

8 MR. CUSACK: Yes. And, Your Honor, they did 9 for a short time pick people up going into Kentucky, but 10 they stopped. And that's the evidence in the case, that 11 they stopped doing this; and that it was common 12 knowledge. Articles in the Evansville newspapers or ads 13 in the Evansville newspapers, cheapest beer in the 14 tri-state area. It's a continuous crossover.

15 The one bit of evidence we didn't put in our 16 brief which I think is interesting, Mr. Powell of the 17 House of Beverages, which is the big liquor store in 18 Kentucky along the strip where so many people from 19 Indiana went, he complained -- his deposition, 20 incidentally, was taken by Mr. Adler -- he complained at 21 the time he was losing tremendous liquor sales to lower 22 Indiana prices.

23 And I'd like to point out to the Court that 24 the Indiana law, the one-price law, applies to sales of 25 liquor as well as beer. Why is it that liquor was

1 cheaper in Indiana than in Kentucky while beer was so
2 much more? It was an artificially set price. West
3 Virginia is a one-price state. West Virginia was priced
4 cheaper by Falls City than Indiana. Why is Indiana 5 discriminated against?

6 It's clear, it seems to me, the price system 7 in this case I submit is simply this: the system by 8 which Falls City and its brewer competitors, with the 9 noticeable exception of Drury's, continuously charged a 10 higher price in Indiana than they did in other states.

11 The evidence shows that Falls City was not 12 meeting competition in good faith, was never interested 13 in competing on the basis of price, nor ever competed on 14 the basis of price, and never set up a nondiscriminatory 15 pricing structure as commanded by the statute.

16 And when Falls City received any pressure in 17 regard to its high and discriminatory prices in Indiana 18 such as in 1973 with the attempt by the principal of 19 Vanco to get the Indiana legislature to pass a law that 20 brewers would not charge higher prices to Indiana 21 distributors than it did to distributors in adjoining 22 states, or the threat of the pendency of this lawsuit 23 and the institution of this lawsuit, Falls City turned 24 to its major brewers, competitors, members of the United 25 States Brewers Association, for help in order to

1 perpetuate this persistent and substantial price
2 discrimination. How is that possibly in good faith?

3 Contrary to the repeated testimony from Mr.
4 Tate, and he told Judge Holder that, "I have never ever 5 known a small brewery our size to step out and lead the 6 parade" -- in reference to prices -- and he told Mr.
7 Adler, "We sort of followed along what Pabst and Stroh 8 did in most cases."

9 And it's not refuted by Falls City in its 10 reply brief. Falls City led off at least one price 11 increase in Indiana, the July 1974 price increase, on 12 which day Falls City also increased prices in Kentucky.
13 And, incidentally, Falls City never really showed who 14 the leading brewers were in Kentucky, but a document
15 submitted by Mr. Tate in evidence shows that from 1962
16 to 1969 Falls City was the leading brewer in Kentucky.
17 And this cry that they're so small and put upon I think 18 should be evaluated in that light.

19 QUESTION: Well, I took that to mean small in 20 relation to the giants, not to the locals.

21 MR. CUSACK: But large, Your Honor, in 22 relation to the market; large in relation to where they 23 were selling beer; large in relation to Kentucky,
24 southern Indiana, parts of Ohio, Tennessee, West 25 Virginia. It was a regional brewer which had

1 substantial sales in those states. As I say, number one 2 in Indiana -- excuse me -- in Kentucky until 1969 where 3 it dropped from '70 -- in '71 to second place, and 4 that's as far as the statistics go.

5 Your Honor, the Court -- and may it please the 6 Court, the Court in Staley said -- and it's true as it 7 was then -- and, incidentally, the thrust of our 8 argument in the Seventh Circuit was the Staley case, 9 which we think is the finest decision by the Court in 10 regard to good faith meeting competition -- that you 11 cannot meet competition by following the higher prices 12 of your competitors.

13 In Staley the Court said -- this Court said 14 the statutory test is whether respondents by their 15 basing point system adopted a lower price in good faith 16 to meet an equally low price of a competitor. This test 17 presupposes that the person charged with violating the 18 act would by his normal nondiscriminatory pricing
19 methods have reached a price so high he would reduce it 20 in order to meet the competitor's equally low price.
21 Instead they, Staley, maintained their own prices at a 22 level of the competitor's high price based upon the 23 competitor's high cost of delivery by including phantom 24 freight in their own delivered prices.

25 Vanco is a better case than Staley. There are

1 no cost savings in southern Indiana over -- in Indiana
2 over the twelve other states where Falls City sold beer, 3 as Mr. Tate stated that his costs were identical in all 4 states. He also said in regard to that that the 5 identity of his competitors in both states were 6 practically identical.

7 A footnote in Staley states that the chairman 8 of the House conferees on the Robinson-Patman Act had 9 presented a conference report emphasized with 10 illustrations that the 2(b) procedural provision cannot 11 be construed as a carte blanche exemption -- exception 12 to violate the bill so long as a competitor can be shown 13 to have violated it first, nor so long as that 14 competition cannot be met without the use of oppressive 15 discriminations in violation of the obvious intent of 16 the bill.

17 In Staley the Court also stated the 18 Commission's conclusions in regard to the meeting
19 competition defense "It seems inescapable that Staley's 20 discriminations such as those between purchasers in 21 Chicago and Decatur were established not to meet equally 22 low Chicago prices of competitors there, but in order to 23 establish elsewhere the artificially high prices whose 24 discriminatory effect permeates respondent's entire 25 pricing system."

1 Lastly, the Court said, "We cannot say that a 2 seller acts in good faith when it chooses to adopt such 3 a clearly discriminatory pricing system, at least where 4 it never attempted to set up a nondiscriminatory system."

5 Falls City, as in the case of Staley, 6 maintained their own prices at the level of their 7 competitors' high prices, did not -- and did not meet 8 the test that the person charged with violating the act
9 would by his normal, nondiscriminatory pricing methods 10 have reached a price so high that he'd reduce it in 11 order to meet the competitor's equally low price.

12 QUESTION: Mr. Cusack?

13 MR. CUSACK: Yes, sir.

14 QUESTION: Don't you think the Court in Staley
15 gave some weight to the fact that Staley had throughout 16 its entire pricing structure the element of phantom 17 freight built in, so there was kind of a unitary price 18 structure?

19 MR. CUSACK: Yes, Your Honor, but the 20 interesting thing about it is they admitted -- the Court
21 in Staley also said that some of the phantom freight -- 22 there was some phantom freight and there was some valid 23 freight, and they've got that chart in there where some 24 of the prices were perfectly fair.

25 QUESTION: But it was almost a coincidence

1 that they were fair in Staley.

2 MR. CUSACK: Well, I think that's probably 3 right. It depended upon where the customers were 4 located primarily, and the difference between the Kansas
5 City plant and the Chicago plant.

6 But, you know, in Staley you had at least some 7 freight absorption because the sucrose was sold and 8 delivered to the customer. Here you have no such a 9 situation, Your Honor, because it's all FOB the plant, 10 which is, incidentally, my understanding of what happens 11 throughout the brewing industry based on my experience.
12 All beer is sold FOB the brewery.

13 I'd like to point out that the Solicitor
14 General's representative has mentioned the 1955 Attorney 15 General's report on the antitrust laws. It's the 16 Attorney General's National Committee to Study the 17 Antitrust Laws. That report states at page 184, "We 18 recommend that the term 'good faith' be utilized solely 19 to test the seller's adherence to the basic objectives
20 of the meeting competition proviso, facilitating price
21 reductions in genuine response to competitive market 22 pressures in order to equalize an opportunity. In 23 practice this will disqualify the seller to whom meeting 24 of competition is only an incidental by-product of a 25 scheme to monopolize or other objective inimicable to 1 overall antitrust policy."

2 And I submit that it is inimicable to overall 3 antitrust policy for all brewers to charge higher prices 4 in Indiana merely because their competitors do so. And 5 to stand around in a circle and to point with each other 6 is a perversion of the legislative intent, and contrary 7 to what Congressman Ottoback talked about; and that's 8 really what they're talking about. They have relied on 9 the Ingliss case out of the Ninth Circuit, and I am very 10 happy that they have relied on that. I represented 11 American Bakeries Company in that case. After a 12 five-week jury trial our client was held not liable.

13 The distinction between Ingliss and the 14 distinction between Vanco is simply this: in Ingliss 15 there was intense competition, and the prices went 16 down. Not so in Vanco. The Court of Appeals opinion in 17 Ingliss, the district court opinion in Ingliss stresses
18 the competition. Judge Williams' October 2, 1978
19 memorandum and order setting aside the jury's verdict, 20 and again in the judgment NOV as to ITT Continental, the 21 one defendant that was convicted by the jury, stated 22 that "The evidence presented at trial painted only a 23 picture of a highly competitive market. Evidence at 24 trial emphasized the highly competitive nature of the 25 northern California market. In all cases Continental

1 responded to some activity of lower prices offered by 2 its competitors. Although this court recognizes that 3 the question of good faith is appropriately left for the 4 jury, it cannot let stand what it views as a totally 5 erroneous result."

6 QUESTION: Mr. Cusack, do you believe the -- 7 do you believe the brewers were violating the 8 Robinson-Patman Act by selling at different prices in 9 the two states?

10 MR. CUSACK: Yes, Your Honor, I do.

11 QUESTION: So that the -- so the people who 12 were charged higher prices in Indiana should have been 13 able to sue the -- any brewer or -- right?

14 MR. CUSACK: Yes, Your Honor.

15 QUESTION: And their lower price in Kentucky
16 was illegal. That's your -- everybody --

17 MR. CUSACK: Well, it --

18 QUESTION: Everybody's lower price in Kentucky
19 was illegal.

20 MR. CUSACK: No, Your Honor. I would say it
21 was the higher price. The artificially high Indiana 22 price was the illegal price, the discriminatory price, 23 Your Honor. I don't -- there's no evidence where their 24 other prices were. We --

25 QUESTION: Well, one or the other price was 1 illegal.

2 MR. CUSACK: Yes, Your Honor. I say the 3 higher price was the -- the price that Falls City 4 focused on was the higher Indiana price. That was the 5 illegal price.

6 QUESTION: Well, do you think the --

7 MR. CUSACK: That was the discriminatory
8 price, Your Honor.

9 QUESTION: Does the lower price that a 10 competitor is meeting, is that supposed to be a legal 11 price or not?

12 MR. CUSACK: Well, it's supposed to be --

13 QUESTION: Does the price that you're meeting 14 have to be a lawful price?

15 MR. CUSACK: Yes, Your Honor, according to the 16 rules of the Court. Well, it's a good faith test. It 17 can be an unlawful price, but if you think it is a 18 lawful price, it's a subjective test, as Judge Williams 19 said in California. If you think it's a lawful price, 20 you can meet it.

21 QUESTION: Well, I suppose the -- I suppose 22 the brewers who -- whom -- who you say were violating 23 the Robinson-Patman Act by charging different prices in 24 two states could cure their -- could cure what was wrong
25 by raising the price in Kentucky.

1 MR. CUSACK: Your Honor, I don't think that's 2 what they would do, because Mr. Tate said they charged a 3 higher price in Indiana than any state. I submit that 4 Indiana was the aberration.

5 QUESTION: I just say they could have raised
6 their price in Kentucky and avoided violating the act.

7 MR. CUSACK: That's one way they could have 8 done it, Your Honor. But that is not what we submit 9 because we think that's anticompetitive, and that 10 doesn't help consumers either. What we submit is the 11 higher Indiana price was the wrong price, the 12 aberration, and that the system here, Your Honor, for 13 some reason they charged -- the agreement or system or 14 the tacit economic collusion that's involved here at 15 least is the system where they charged the higher price 16 in Indiana and a lower price in Kentucky and surrounding 17 states.

18 In all of this -- the testimony in regard to 19 the prices going up on the same day in both states, the 20 fact that their own testimony focused on the higher 21 price, the fact that the assistance that they sought and 22 received from the United States Brewers Association to 23 defend this lawsuit, to defeat the attempt by the 24 Indiana legislature to make a bill that they -- to pass 25 a law that they could not charge a higher price in -- to

1 Indiana distributors as they did to distributors in 2 surrounding states, we submit that this all goes to the 3 good faith element.

1 I don't know whether the Kentucky price was 2 artificial. There is no evidence that they are either 3 making a lot of money in Kentucky or losing a lot of 4 money in Kentucky. We do know, however, that they are 5 making from 10 to 30 percent more money in Indiana than 6 they are in Kentucky, Your Honor.

7 In the Engliss case, to summarize, the prices 8 from 1967 to 1973, which is an area, a time of 9 inflationary pressurs, the prices were as high as 22,
10 24, 25 cents a loaf of bread, and it went down to 17.2 11 cents a loaf. There was price competition. There was 12 intense competition. In the Engliss case, we won 13 because we were able to convince the jury that when our 14 client, American Bakeries Company, dropped its price 15 areawide, it was because of competitive necessity. If 16 we had not done it, we would have lost substantial 17 customers, and we proved that to the satisfaction of the 18 jury. That's the distinction.

19 There is nothing -- I don't have any argument 20 with reducing the price areawide, but what I submit is 21 that the area in this case is the Henderson, Evansville 22 relevant product market, relevant geographic market.

23 Incidentally, I would like to point out that 24 the Dean Note case in 1968 so held in regard to the sale
25 of milk that Evansville, Henderson was a relevant

1 geographic market, a retail market. Fall City's 2 counsel, Arnold Porter, Washington counsel at the time,
3 surely must have been aware of this. This isn't 4 something that they just blundered into by mistake.

5 QUESTION: Yes, but there is no similar 6 statute governing the sale of milk across the river.

7 MR. CUSACK: That's right. There is no
8 prohibition.

9 QUESTION: Yes.

10 MR. CUSACK: Although there may be some health 11 regulations which I am not aware of.

12 In regard to the second question before the 13 Court, whether Vanco established competitive injury when 14 it showed it lost volume and lost profits, the following 15 is crucial, and the Morton Salt case is a red herring.
16 The Court did not infer competitive injury. The Court 17 found competitive injury based on substantial evidence.
18 Vanco absorbed substantial price increases by Falls
19 City, as was specifically found by the district court.
20 Vanco's customers, the Evansville retailers, lost 21 substantial business from their regular customers by 22 their purchasing beer in Kentucky. The district court 23 and the court of appeals both found that there was 24 competitive injury.

25 I must go back, as I have -- we have repeated

1 in our briefs, the best evidence of the relevant 2 geographic market as well as the competitive injury as 3 Falls City's own documents, documents by Mr. Schneider, 4 who they never bothered to call at trial to rebut it,
5 never bothered to call at trial, and he worked for Falls
6 City at the time. August 16th, 1974, Mr. Schneider
7 reported that "This week, I worked the Henderson, 8 Kentucky, market with our distributor, Mr. Ron Utley. I 9 am very pleased to report that the market for the first 10 seven months this year is up. I realize that some of 11 this increase is due to the higher prices in the 12 Evansville market."

13 February 15, '74, Mr. Schneider reported, 14 "Sales in the Henderson market are up the last months.
15 Some of this increase is due to the price increase in 16 the Evansville area."

17 August 23, '74, reported in Vanco's -- Vanco's 18 sales stated, "Sales for the month of July are off over 19 9,000 cases from last year's sales. Part of this 20 decrease is due to the lower prices in the Kentucky
21 markets."

22 It is replete that it was a unified market in 23 Falls City, so admitted, and the important thing to look 24 at is not the decline of the sales of Falls City's 25 customers in central Indiana. The important thing to

1 look at is the decline of the sales of Vanco relative to 2 the decline of the sales of Mr. Utley of Dawson Springs, 3 the Henderson distributor, the favored distributor.
4 That is absolutely crucial, and the fact is and the 5 evidence is that from 1971 to 1977, the favored 6 purchasers, that is, Utley's sales, the distributor of 7 Henderson, went down only 18 percent, while Vanco's went 8 down 63 percent.

9 From 1971 to 1975, the favored purchasers'
10 sales actually increased 22 percent, while Vanco's sales
11 decreased 48 percent. These are startling statistics 12 for distributors located less than ten miles apart.
13 Actually they are five miles apart.

14 Vanco respectfully submits that this case was 15 given a full and fair trial, and the district court 16 found on its facts that Falls City had violated the 17 Robinson-Patman Act, that Vanco was injured in its 18 business and property as a result of Falls City's 19 violation of the Robinson-Patman Act, and that Falls 20 City was not meeting competition in good faith.

21 We ask the Court how a defendant can be 22 meeting competition when it reduced prices, when on six 23 separate occasions it raises its prices on the same day
24 in Indiana and Kentucky, when it continuously increased 25 prices, when they never even attempted to comply with

1 the requirements of the statute, and its price increase 2 was the result of its filing in the higher prices of 3 competitors, and in fact leading off price increases.

4 How can you be meeting competition under those facts?

5 Lastly, I direct the attention of the Court to 6 the Stigler report, who is the author of the Chicago 7 School of Economics, so he certainly is a very 8 distinguished gentleman.

9 QUESTION: He can't be all bad.

10 (General laughter.)

11 MR. CUSACK: He is a great man, Your Honor.

12 The Stigler report was the report of the Task Force on 13 Productivity and Competition in 1969, which was 14 instituted by President Nixon, and it states, "Collusion 15 that can be incontrovertibly inferred from behavior, 16 such as persistent, substantial price discrimination in 17 the economists's sense, should not bring immunity from 18 the Sherman Act."

19 In this case, persistent and substantial price 20 discrimination and Falls City's continual increase of 21 prices and interest in maximizing its prices in Indiana 22 should not, I respectfully submit, bring immunity to 23 violation of the Robinson-Patman Act.

24 Thank you very kindly.

25 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well.

1 Mr. Adler, you have about four minutes
2 remaining.

3 ORAL ARGUMENT OF HOWARD ADLER, JR., ESQ.,
4 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER

5 MR. ADLER: Thank you, Your Honor.

6 It is clear from what we have heard that there
7 is no doubt that that Falls City was following prices,
8 different prices that prevailed in Indiana and Kentucky, 9 as did everyone else. There is no dispute from his 10 argument or from the record about that. The thrust of 11 the argument is that there was something wrong with the 12 price in Indiana, that it was tainted, collusive, 13 parallel, a lot of adjectives, but there was no 14 adjudication that those prices were illegal. There was 15 no adjudication that there was any illegal price
16 discrimination between Henderson and Evansville. Vanco 17 bought from Anheuser Busch. It bought from others who 18 followed the same practice. It didn't -- no other 19 distributor has sued or challenged, let alone have an 20 adjudication of illegal price discrimination or illegal 21 collusion.

22 They charged illegal collusion. They lost 23 it. They didn't appeal it. The judge found there was 24 no evidence of any agreement, so all of this rhetoric
25 about artificial prices in Indiana being an aberration

1 has no legal foundation. He may believe that to be 2 true, but it has no legal distinction. As in the second 3 Standard Oil Case, 400 355, 400 U.S. 355, where this 4 Court emphasized the fact that there had been no
5 adjudication of illegality, I think that is vital here.

6 We have got a small, dying brewer trying to 7 keep alive, trying to follow prices. We can't call 8 prices artificial or aberrational and have that have 9 legal significance and turn on whether a company which 10 is trying, and the record is abundantly clear, trying to 11 be competitive, trying to survive, trying to match 12 prices of its leading competitors in other markets.

13 There is no inconsistency at all with having a 14 unified market. Remember, that only referred to 15 Henderson and Evansville. The Indiana price was 16 determined by competitive conditions in Indiana as a 17 whole, and the law required that the Evansville price be 18 the same as charged throughout Indiana, and there is no 19 real mystery as to why the prices were higher in 20 Indiana. It wasn't collusion or anything else. It was 21 different competitive conditions, and if one looks at 22 the wholesale price evidence that there is in the 23 record, one will see that the wholesale prices of Vanco 24 were higher than the wholesale prices that the 25 distributor across the river was going to get, and that

1 was reflected in the brewery prices.

2 Indeed, there was a wholesale price increase 3 in late 1973 in Evansville, no corresponding increase in 4 Kentucky. There was an FOB increase to Indiana, but not 5 to Kentucky. There were different competitive
6 circumstances. One had the law in Indiana that 7 everybody had to charge the same FOB brewery price to 8 all wholesalers. We had a higher wholesale price
9 structure, as the record shows. That the brewers 10 perceived and raised their prices.

11 But in any event, whatever the explanation is, 12 and I think that's it, there was no illegality in the 13 Indiana price or any illegality in the Kentucky price.
14 Falls City was following both, and the fact that it
15 didn't reduce a price in order to meet competition 16 should be and is legally significant for all the reasons 17 that the government has said.

18 On the subject of the competitive injury, just 19 one brief point. Reference is made to August, 1974, and 20 the lower prices that prevailed in Henderson, the higher 21 prices in Evansville. The record is replete with 22 evidence that it was the wholesale price increase in 23 Evansville at a time when there was no wholesale price 24 in Kentucky that caused that episode to occur. The 25 documents refer to price difference, not the FOB price

1 difference, which was constant throughout that 1974
2 period.

3 My time is up. Thank you very much.

4 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.

5 The case is submitted.

6 (Whereupon, at 1:59 o'clock p.m., the case in 7 the above-entitled matter was submitted.)
