2                   CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will now hear 3 argument next in W. R. Grace Company against a Local of 4 the International Union.

5                   Mr. Nash, you may proceed when you are ready.

6                   ORAL ARGUMENT OF PETER G. NASH, ESQ.

7                   ON BEHALF OF THE APPELLANT

8                   MR. NASH: Mr. Chief Justice, may it please 9 the Court, this case arises here on a petition for 10 certiorari of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. It 11 involves two arbitration issues in the tension between 12 Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the 13 seniority layoff provisions of a collective bargaining
14 agreement.

15                  In 1973, the EEOC investigated the company's 16 plant in Mississippi and found that there was probable 17 cause to believe that the company had discriminated in 18 its hiring practices on the basis of sex. In 1974, the 19 company and the union which whom it had a collective 20 bargaining agreement, bargained a new collective 21 bargaining agreement. At the time, both the union and 22 the company knew of the EEOC's findings, knew that the 23 EEOC was seeking a conciliation agreement which might 24 disrupt the seniority layoff provisions of the 25 collective bargaining agreement, but nonetheless entered

1 into a new collective bargaining agreement, retaining -- 2 QUESTION: Mr. Nash, you said the union had 3 notice. Does that suggest or do you think that the 4 union was bound by what the company agreed to with the 5 EEOC?

6 MR. NASH: Not necessarily so, Your Honor, but 7 that becomes relevant later on when we get to the 8 argument about the court order that enjoined the company 9 and the union, and whether or not that's a valid defense 10 to a breach of contract action.

11 On December 11, 1974, the company and the EEOC 12 entered into a conciliation agreement which changed or 13 would change the layoff provisions of the collective 14 bargaining agreement by providing that if there is a 15 layoff in the plant, females must be retained in the 16 workforce in the same percentage at the end of the 17 layoff as they were at the beginning of the layoff. The 18 reason for that being to protect those recently hired 19 female employees from layoff.

20 On December 19, 1974, the company had a layoff 21 of some employees. A few more were laid off in the 22 early part of 1975. The union filed grievances 23 contending that those layoffs violated the collective 24 bargaining agreement because some more senior men were 25 laid off whereas junior seniority women were retained.

1           The company amended and then complained in the 2 then present law suit seeking to enjoin the union from 3 processing those grievances to arbitration, added the 4 Equal Employment Opportunity Commission as a defendant 5 and sought a declaratory judgment from the court as to 6 which should apply, the provisions of the EEOC 7 conciliation agreement or the provisions of the 8 collective bargaining agreement.

9           QUESTION: Was the intimation of the company's 10 position that both of them could not apply?

11          MR. NASH: That is correct.

12          QUESTION: Why did the company take that 13 position?

14          MR. NASH: Because --

15          QUESTION: The company can bind itself with 16 the EEOC, and I should think still continue to be bound 17 with the union.

18          MR. NASH: Possibly, sir, but there was a 19 tension, and I think an admitted tension between the 20 conciliation agreement and the collective bargaining
21 agreement.

22          QUESTION: I don't see where you get the 23 concept of tension. Employer A can make an agreement to 24 buy 1,000 bottles from a contractor, and then he can go 25 and make an agreement with another contractor to buy

1 10,000 bottles. He may not be able to use both 2 shipments of bottles, but he is bound to both of the 3 people that he has contracted with.

4 MR. NASH: That is correct, but I think we 5 have different facts in this case, Your Honor. First of 6 all, we are dealing with a collective bargaining 7 agreement and an EEOC conciliation agreement, neither of 8 which have historically by this Court been treated as 9 standard commercial contracts.

10 Secondly, we have in this case an EEOC
11 conciliation agreement which was sought by the Equal 12 Employment Opportunity in order for the employer to come 13 into compliance with the law.

14 QUESTION: Are you saying that the EEOC
15 agreement under these circumstances binds the union?

16 MR. NASH: If the union had notice, as it did,
17 of the EEOC conciliation process, and if the union --

18 QUESTION: You said a moment ago in answer to 19 my question that the mere fact that the union had notice 20 didn't result in binding the union.

21 MR. NASH: If the union had notice of the 22 process, of the EEOC conciliation process, and was 23 afforded an opportunity to participate in that process,
24 then, yes, I am saying that the conciliation agreement
25 between the company and the Equal Employment Opportunity

1 Commission may amend or change the collective bargaining
2 agreement, but I am not saying that the union was 3 without remedy in that case.

4 QUESTION: What is your authority for the 5 position you have just stated?

6 MR. NASH: The authority for that position is, 7 I think, multiple but primarily PEPSICO, Inc., versus 8 FTC, 472 F2d --

9 QUESTION: I mean a case from this Court.

10 MR. NASH: -- 179.

11 QUESTION: Another case from this Court.

12 MR. NASH: Furthermore, I think that is 13 consistent with what this Court held in Zipes versus 14 TWA.

15 QUESTION: So Zipes is your authority from 16 this Court?

17 MR. NASH: Yes. I think the one I am arguing
18 is consistent with that. There is additional authority
19 and that is the overriding premise underlying Title VII
20 of the Civil Rights Act, that being that the preferred 21 means of resolving Title VII liability is through the 22 conciliation process with EEOC.

23 QUESTION: If the employer conciliates with 24 the EEOC, he can repudiate any inconsistent agreements 25 he has made?

1           MR. NASH: Not to the extent that it
2 forecloses the union from having a remedy, Your Honor.
3 Indeed, the union does have a remedy in that case. The 4 remedy either is to participate in the conciliation
5 process and agree or, failing that, to bring an action 6 against the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission and 7 the employer seeking to stay any conciliation agreement 8 it believes is not necessary and not appropriate to 9 remedy Title VII violations.

10           That remedy, I think, is available to the 11 union and we are not contending that in such a law suit
12 that either the employer or the EEOC can say, no, no, 13 our agreement covers this and you, union, have no cause 14 of action. Indeed, they would have that cause of 15 action.

16           QUESTION: How would that cause of action be 17 decided? What standard of law would govern it?

18           MR. NASH: It would be similar to a proceeding
19 in a Title VII now where there is a consent decree, a 20 reasonableness proceeding or a fairness proceeding in 21 which it is determined whether or not the conciliation
22 agreement entered into is in fact reasonable and fair, 23 whether it meets the requirements of Title VII without 24 unduly impinging upon the rights of the majority 25 employees presently in the workforce.

1           As I say, the employer and the EEOC entered 2 into this conciliation agreement. The union, in fact, 3 brought grievances. The employer went into court and 4 sought a declaratory judgment from the court as to which 5 should apply, the conciliation agreement or the 6 collective bargaining agreement.

7           The court, in November 1976 -- 1975, came down
8 with a decision holding that the conciliation agreement 9 applies and ordering both the company and the union to 10 abide by the terms of the conciliation agreement and not 11 to abide by the terms of the collective bargaining
12 agreement.

13           Subsequently, in 1976 --

14           QUESTION: Was that an injunction?

15           MR. NASH: The court, I believe, interpreted 16 it as an injunction, Your Honor. The same judge heard 17 this case, which is now before this Court, and stated in 18 his opinion there that had the parties not complied with 19 that order, he would have found them in contempt, and 20 that certainly is the way in which at least the company 21 construed that order.

22           In 1976, as I say, there was a layoff and 23 there were more grievances filed. In January 1978, the 24 Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the injunction 25 order that had been issued -- or the order that had been

1 issued by the District Court back in 1975. The Fifth
2 Circuit did on the grounds, basically, of this Court's 3 Teamster decision holding that you can't disrupt 4 otherwise valid seniority provisions in the collective 5 bargaining agreement in order to remedy Title VII 6 violations.

7           Immediately after the Fifth Circuit's
8 decision, the company reinstated all of the senior men 9 who were laid off to junior women, and the cases then 10 went to arbitration pursuant to the statement of the 11 Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals ordering the parties to 12 arbitrate the company's breach of the seniority 13 provisions of the collective bargaining agreement.

14           The first arbitration involved a layoff which 15 had occurred in 1976, after the District Court's order.
16 Arbitrator Sabella in that case said that the company
17 didn't violate the collective bargaining agreement, it 18 had done exactly what the court had ordered it to do, 19 and as a consequence the company should not be liable 20 for back-pay for the employee involved in that case.

21           A second case was brought before Arbitrator
22 Barrett involving three --

23           QUESTION: Has any remedy been worked out for 24 Mr. Jowers at all?

25           MR. NASH: No.

1                   QUESTION: He is not working for Grace
2 anymore?

3                   MR. NASH: I don't know whether he is or not.
4 All of these employees were returned to work immediately
5 upon the Fifth Circuit's decision reversing the District
6 Court's case. There is nothing in the record. I am 7 assuming that if he is not working for Grace, it is for 8 some reason other than this case.

9                   All of the senior males were immediately 10 returned to work, and there is no contention here that 11 the company continued to "violate the collective 12 bargaining agreement" after the District Court's order 13 was reversed. All the men were in fact brought back.
14 But there has been no award of back-pay for Mr. Jowers.

15                  The second arbitrator, Mr. Barrett, was 16 confronted by the union's contention in that arbitration 17 that he did not have to follow the Sabella award because 18 the Sabella award was considering or considered 19 different factual circumstances.

20                  The union contended in that arbitration that 21 Sabella had dealt with a bumping. Indeed, Mr. Jowers, 22 rather than having been laid out of the workforce, had 23 merely been bumped from his job down to a lower job, and 24 then ultimately laid off. Whereas the three subsequent 25 cases that were now being argued before Mr. Barrett

1 involved actual layoffs of senior males from the 2 workforce.

3           The union contended that these involved 4 different situations, different fact situations, and 5 therefore arbitrator Barrett was not bound by the 6 earlier award of Mr. Sabella.

7           The arbitrator in that case, arbitrator
8 Barrett, found that in fact the cases involved exactly 9 the same issues. He found, however, that Mr. Sabella
10 had exceeded his jurisdiction and authority by not 11 referring to the collective bargaining agreement, but by 12 merely finding that it wasn't fair to hold the company 13 liable because it did what a court said it ought to do.
14 Mr. Barrett ordered back-pay for all of the employees 15 affected by that layoff during the pendency of the court 16 order.

17           I think it is important to note at this point 18 that the case was tried before arbitrator Barrett and 19 has been tried all the way through the courts as if all 20 of the layoffs here were involved with the court order 21 -- followed the court order rather than before the court
22 order.

23           Indeed, the company raised the distinction
24 between layoffs under the conciliation agreement 25 pre-court order and layoffs that occurred after the

1 court order in the District Court on the initial motions 2 for summary judgment, but noted at that time that the 3 parties had not arbitrated the case based on those 4 distinctions.

5 The union never picked up on the distinction,
6 nor did the District Court, nor did the Fifth Circuit.
7 As a consequence, the case we submit comes before you as 8 if all of these layoffs occurred following the court
9 order.

10 QUESTION: Can't you strip it down even 11 further, Mr. Nash. Isn't the basic issue here whether 12 arbitrator Barrett's award should be enforced under the 13 enterprise doctrine?

14 MR. NASH: No, I don't believe so, Your 15 Honor. The parties have conceded throughout this 16 litigation, up until the brief on the merits in this 17 Court, that if in fact the Sabella award is 18 "enforceable," then in fact the Barrett award must 19 fail. That is the agreement, and the understanding of 20 the parties, so I think you must look to the Sabella
21 award.

22 QUESTION: But that concession is really 23 partly one of fact and partly one of law, isn't it?
24 Certainly, if there is a concession as a fact, the 25 parties are bound by it. I don't think parties'

1 concessions of law bind this Court or any other court.

2 MR. NASH: I would respectfully disagree to a
3 certain extent. First of all, I do believe that it is a
4 concession of fact. Secondly, even if it is a 5 concession of law, I believe that it is too late to 6 change your legal concession after you have already 7 tried the case before the District Court, the Fifth 8 Circuit, in your op. cert memorandum to this court, and 9 none ultimately say, Your Honors, we have got a whole 10 different ballgame, we have got a whole different 11 argument.

12 Indeed, what we have here is the union -- The 13 union filed the first motion for summary judgment in 14 this case in the District Court. It contended in there
15 that the Barrett award cannot stand because the Sabella
16 arbitration award has to fall. It has to fall, number 17 one -- Barrett is not required to follow Sabella for two 18 reasons.

19 Number one, Sabella decided a different issue, 20 therefore, Barrett doesn't have to decide that issue.
21 Secondly, Sabella went beyond his jurisdiction and 22 authority, therefore, his award is void. The union 23 asked the District Court to determine whether or not, as 24 a matter of law under legal precedent, that award would 25 have been "enforceable," and contended that it was not.

1 As a consequence, the Barrett award did not -- Barrett
2 did not have to follow that award.

3 The union started the law suit not in any way
4 by saying that there was any deference due to Mr.
5 Barrett. But indeed started the whole argument and the 6 whole law suit on the basis that if the Sabella award
7 stands, Barrett must fall. If the Sabella award does 8 not stand, then Barrett must be approved and must be 9 enforced.

10 That is the way in which the litigation has 11 gone, all the way up until the filing of the briefs on 12 the merits in this Court. The whole issue has been was 13 the Sabella award "enforceable." In no instance --

14 QUESTION: Mr. Nash, there does seem to be 15 language in the brief that was filed by the union in the 16 Court of Appeals that, although not crystal clear, would 17 seem to be contrary to your position and would indicate 18 there was not a waiver of the issue on the 19 Barrett/Sabella award question. Certainly language in 20 their brief which I have examined would indicate that it 21 wasn't waived.

22 MR. NASH: I think an examination of that 23 language will not indicate that the union at any time
24 argued that any deference was due to Mr. Barrett's 25 award. Indeed, the reason for that language, if we are

1 talking about the same, is that the company had argued
2 in the District Court and again in the Fifth Circuit
3 that even Barrett couldn't determine as a procedural 4 matter whether or not the Sabella award was valid
5 initially because the union had never brought a law suit
6 to set aside the Sabella award in a timely manner.
7 Accordingly, everybody was foreclosed from contesting
8 whether or not the Sabella award was valid.

9 I believe the language you'll find in the 10 union's brief in the Fifth Circuit says, no, that is not 11 true. We are not foreclosed because we didn't bring a 12 law suit in time. Indeed, we could give this issue to 13 Barrett to make a determination, but, but that 14 determination is not binding upon the court.

15 Ultimately, the Barrett award or whatever
16 Barrett had to say would be determined in the courts
17 based upon whether or not the courts, using court
18 precedent, would have enforced the Sabella award.

19 Yes, I think the language might be susceptible 20 to the question you pose, except for the fact that that 21 was clearly in response to a totally different argument
22 not present in this Court.

23 At no time did the union ever argue that 24 Barrett's award was due any deference by the court. It 25 was a flat-out argument that the court must decide

1 whether the Sabella award is valid, and on that decision 2 rides or falls the decision on whether or not to enforce 3 the Barrett award.

4 I would like to, if the Court please, save the 5 remainder of my time for rebuttal.

6 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well.

7 Mr. Phillips.

8 ORAL ARGUMENT OF CARTER G. PHILLIPS, ESQ.,

9 ON BEHALF OF AMICUS CURIAE

10 MR. PHILLIPS: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
11 please the Court. Initially, I note that the government 12 will only address the third issue presented in the 13 petition for writ of certiorari because that is the only 14 issue in which the government has a particular 15 interest.

16 We do note that the resolution of the third 17 issue is itself contingent on the proper disposition of 18 the first two questions. If the Court decides either of 19 the first two issues in favor of the petitioner, then 20 there will be no reason to address the issue of special 21 concern to Equal Employment Opportunity Commission in 22 this case.

23 The Commission is the Federal agency vested
24 with the primary duty under Title VII to eliminate 25 discrimination in the workplace. In performing this

1 mission, Congress expressly obliged the Commission to 2 attempt in the first instance to conciliate employment 3 discrimination disputes in order to resolve them, if at 4 all possible, without having to resort to judicial 5 proceedings. Through this informal conciliation
6 process, the Commission every year resolves literally 7 hundreds of cases, in some years even thousands of 8 cases, without having to consume a single second of 9 judicial time.

10 Conciliation is thus properly regarded both by 11 Congress and the Commission as the most appropriate 12 means of resolving employment discrimination disputes.
13 Indeed, it is central to the Commission's ability to 14 perform its mission, given the large number of Title VII 15 cases that come before the Commission and the relatively 16 limited resources the Commission has to dispose of those 17 cases.

18 The Commission submits that it is central to 19 its ability to conciliate disputes that collective 20 bargaining agreements that conflict with arguable 21 requirements of Title VII must be set aside, and that 22 the conciliation agreement that is reached must be given 23 a place of preeminence. Thus, to the extent that an 24 arbitrator grants the union compensation for breach of a 25 collective bargaining agreement caused by the employer's

1 reliance on a reasonable conciliation agreement, that 2 award must be vacated on review by a Federal court.

3           In taking this position, the Commission
4 appreciates the importance to the national labor policy 5 both of collective bargaining agreements in general and 6 of arbitrations. But what is equally obvious is the 7 importance of the national policy under Title VII of 8 eliminating discrimination in the workplace and of 9 remedying completely the effects of discrimination.

10           Both policies govern employment
11 relationships. Obviously, they have overlapping 12 coverage. In some instances they conflict. In six 13 circumstances where the Title VII requirements and the 14 collective bargaining agreement conflict, this Court has 15 made clear that the requirements of Title VII must 16 prevail.

17           In the Emporium Capwell decision, the Court
18 expressly stated that when the agreement of the union 19 and the employer conflict with the law, even though that 20 law is found by means of the conciliation efforts of the 21 Commission, the agreement between the employer and the 22 union must be set aside.

23           Our submission is that that ruling or that 24 statement must apply just as much in the process of a 25 conciliation agreement based on a reasonable

1 determination of what the law requires at the time of 2 the conciliation as it would if this issue were finally 3 settled by this Court.

4           In our view, in following reasonable 5 conciliation agreements in disregard of the collective 6 bargaining agreements, the best balance is the relevant 7 interest at stake in these kinds of cases. The result 8 is proper primarily because it encourages settlements 9 with employers that otherwise might be deterred. In 10 addition, the process of following the conciliation 11 agreements serves as a significant prod to the union to 12 have it involved in the conciliation process. Third, 13 the expectations of the incumbent employees are 14 adequately --

15           QUESTION: Mr. Phillips, may I interrupt you 16 right there. You talk about the interest in getting the 17 union involved in the conciliation process. What if 18 they called up the union and said, "We'd like you to 19 attend the final meeting on the conciliation
20 agreement." If you asked them directly to get involved, 21 and the union representative came over and said, "Well, 22 that's fine, except I think our contract is lawful and 23 we want to defend it in the Court of Appeals. So we 24 refuse to agree to any change in it." Then, 25 notwithstanding that, they entered into the agreement

1 they did. Do you think you would have as strong a 2 case?

3 MR. PHILLIPS: Maybe not as strong a case,
4 although I don't think those facts differ -- I mean, I
5 don't think that we would set aside the conciliation 6 agreement simply because the union declines to 7 participate in the process.

8 QUESTION: Even though, as I understand it, 9 the conciliation agreement is founded on a mistake of 10 law.

11 MR. PHILLIPS: Yes.

12 QUESTION: It is founded on the assumption 13 that the seniority provisions were unlawful, which of 14 course turned out to be incorrect.

15 MR. PHILLIPS: It is true that this Court's 16 decision in Teamsters cast some doubt on the 17 conciliation agreement, although it is still an open 18 question whether the kind of relief granted in the 19 conciliation agreement might otherwise have been 20 permissible as a remedy for any kind of hiring 21 discrimination.

22 QUESTION: But the violation, as I understand 23 it, insofar as the sex discrimination charge is 24 concerned, strictly was on the basis that the seniority 25 provisions were unlawful, isn't that right?

1 MR. PHILLIPS: Yes, that is true, that is 2 true, although again there was a finding of reasonable 3 cause to believe there had been hiring discrimination, 4 and then whether or not in the circumstances of this 5 particular case, where you have immediate layoffs, it 6 might well have been regarded at that time as a basis 7 for modifying the layoff procedures, that is all.

8 QUESTION: Is it the EEOC policy in a 9 three-cornered situation like this just to ignore the 10 third party, the union, or to get them involved in the 11 situation?

12 MR. PHILLIPS: No, Your Honor, the EEOC's 13 compliance manual expressly provides that notice should 14 be given to the union at any time it appears that 15 provisions in the collective bargaining agreement may 16 conflict with proposed conciliation efforts. The union 17 is invited routinely to come in and participate.

18 QUESTION: But if there was a violation here, 19 the union would have been guilty of a violation as well 20 as the employer?

21 MR. PHILLIPS: I am sorry.

22 QUESTION: If the premise for the agreement, 23 namely, illegality, if that was correct, the union would 24 also have been guilty of a violation, would it not?

25 MR. PHILLIPS: Of Title VII?

1 QUESTION: Yes.

2 MR. PHILLIPS: Presumably, although there was 3 no charge against the union, so it would have been 4 difficult -- They would not have been within the 5 proceeding itself since they had not been charged with 6 violating Title VII, although it does seem that there is 7 a concert of action of sorts that leads to the result 8 that there are no women in the production units at the 9 Southbridge plant.

10 We suggest that the relevant interests of the 11 various parties at stake, in this case we submit, leads 12 to the conclusion that the conciliation agreement ought 13 to be followed. We have already discussed the union's 14 interest in this case, in having them participate in the 15 negotiation process.

16 I think it is also important to realize that 17 the incumbent employees' interests in this case are not 18 violated by virtue of following the conciliation
19 agreement in most instances because, as in this case, 20 the original award in this case followed at that point 21 the judicial decree, but presumably might very well have 22 followed the conciliation agreement itself as a 23 reasonable statement of what the law required.

24 This collective bargaining agreement contains 25 an illegality clause in it, and thus the reasonable

1 expectations of the employees must be that their 2 collective bargaining rights must give way if Federal 3 law otherwise requires. Accordingly, by following the 4 conciliation agreement no real violence is oftentimes done
5 to the arbitral process at all.

6           On the other hand, by following the arbitral 7 process, the employer is completely deprived of any 8 opportunity for some sort of a safe harbor that has been 9 called into question by the EEOC's action in asking them 10 to agree to a particular agreement and, in turn, it will 11 serve as, I think, a clear deterrent in most future 12 cases for any employer to agree to any form of 13 conciliation agreement that requires modification of the 14 collective bargaining agreement. That result, we 15 submit, is just unwarranted in this context.

16           The Federal policy of high settlement of Title 17 VII suits should be the controlling factor in this 18 case. Since the decision of the Fifth Circuit
19 disregards the conciliation agreement for all intents 20 and purposes, and uphold the second award strictly on 21 the basis of the collective bargaining agreement, we 22 submit that that decision must be reversed.

23           Are there any questions?

24           CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Gold.

25           ORAL ARGUMENT OF LAURENCE GOLD, ESQ.,

1                   ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENT

2                   MR. NASH: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
3 please the Court. As we understand this matter at this 4 juncture, there are four questions before the Court.

5                   The first we will label the arbitration clause 6 question. The second, what Mr. Nash has stated as the 7 concession question. Third concerns the District Court
8 order, and the last the EEOC conciliation agreement. I 9 intend, if that is permissible, to address those 10 question in that order.

11                  With regard to the substance of the question 12 concerning the arbitration award, this is a case by the 13 company to overturn a particular arbitration award, the 14 award rendered by arbitrator Barrett and called the 15 Barrett award.

16                  Arbitrator Barrett was faced with a threshold
17 issue in considering the grievances filed with him, 18 which is quite common, namely, what deference if any is 19 to be accorded to a prior arbitrator's award in dealing 20 with the same aspects of the contract.

21                  Arbitrator Barrett determined not to follow 22 the prior award, the so-called Sabella award, which had 23 never been taken to court and was a preexisting 24 determination concerning the meaning of the contract.
25 He did so after quite a painstaking and thorough

1 evaluation of the prior award. He did so by erecting 2 that is a far higher standard than arbitrators normally 3 follow in determining whether or not to follow a prior 4 award.

5           He determined not to follow the prior award.
6 He came to the conclusion that his obligation in 7 deciding what the express terms of the agreement meant 8 compelled him to look at the agreement to look at the 9 agreement itself and not to handle the matter as 10 arbitrator Sabella had done. His actions, as I say, 11 were in accord with the normal way arbitrators handle 12 this matter and, if anything, more favorable, far more 13 favorable to the company than is the norm.

14           In addition, the lower court law is uniform
15 that there is no requirement of law, no Section 301
16 requirement of arbitral stare decisis. The parties can 17 bargain about that as they bargain about other matters.

18           After arbitrator Barrett issued his award, the 19 company was dissatisfied with it, and as is its right, 20 went to court to overturn that award.

21           We believe that the proper question here, the 22 analytic question that ought to be faced is what 23 standard is the Barrett award insofar as Barrett refused
24 to follow the earlier Sabella award to be judged by. It 25 is our submission that the standard is the one stated in

1 this Court's Enterprise case. Did arbitrator Barrett, 2 in fulfilling his obligation, issue an award that draws 3 its essence from the collective bargaining agreement and 4 did he decide -- did he interpret the contract since the 5 arbitrator is charged with --

6 QUESTION: Mr. Gold, you say that it is 7 understood, but I don't know how. Arbitrator No. 2, 8 does he ignore No. 1, or does he read it in cases to 9 decide?

10 MR. GOLD: What arbitrator Barrett did here, 11 and what most arbitrators do, is to say that 12 presumptively the prior arbitration award is to be 13 followed, but there is a certain threshold past which an 14 arbitrator is not required to go. Different arbitrators 15 state that different ways. It may turn on the 16 particular language of the agreement.

17 Arbitrators are uniform in believing that at 18 least, absent extraordinary contract language, there is 19 no rigid rule of stare decisis. Indeed, I need not cite 20 the cases to this Court that say that even in the 21 judicial system, stare decisis is not an invariable and 22 overriding rule.

23 What arbitrator Barrett did was to give the 24 greatest weight and attention to the Sabella award, and 25 he said -- If I may, he said, "In my heart --

1               QUESTION: He did not ignore it.

2               MR. GOLD: He said, "In my heart I cannot 3 believe that this award is correct. I do not believe 4 that I would be fulfilling my commission if I followed
5 it. Therefore, I do not do so, and I decide this matter 6 on the agreement, on its language, and on the facts of 7 the case." His opinion is set out in the Joint 8 Appendix, and it is, I think you will agree, a very 9 thorough and reasoned effort to come to grips with the 10 issue.

11              The next question is, what does a court, faced 12 with the Barrett award, supposed to do.

13              QUESTION: Mr. Gold, before you get to the 14 court stage, is there any established doctrine under 301
15 and arbitrations as to what public law limitations there 16 may be on an arbitrator's award?

17              Supposing you have the Southern Steamship case 18 versus NLRB, but instead of before the NLRB, it is 19 before an arbitrator and the arbitrator orders a 20 shipping employer to reinstate mutineers. Would that be 21 judged by exactly the same standard, simply purely 22 contractual as any other award?

23              MR. GOLD: The answer to that varies at 24 different stages of the proceeding. Many arbitrators
25 follow the premise that the public law is the public

1 law, and the contract is the contract, and they are only 2 charged as private law --

3 QUESTION: Never the twain shall meet?

4 MR. GOLD: Right.

5 Private and law enforcement officials to 6 interpret the contract, that is what the parties bargain 7 for. They want an interpretation of the contract. The 8 law is perfectly well settled, however, that if an 9 arbitration award is contrary to public law, the courts 10 will set it aside. So that is why I say that it depends 11 at different stages.

12 We have noted in our brief, and there is 13 simply no room, I think, either in theory or in terms of 14 this Court's precedents, that an arbitration award that 15 is contrary to Title VII is no good. The question we 16 have here posed by the government is whether an 17 arbitration award that accords with Title VII somehow is 18 subordinate to the EEOC on what Title VII might and 19 ought to be. On that we most definitely part company 20 with the agency. But in terms of the question you 21 raised, there is discord and division at the arbitral 22 stage, but none at all at the judicial stage, or in this 23 Court's precedents.

24 As I started to say, we believe that the 25 proper approach in evaluating what arbitrator Barrett

1 did with regard to the Sabella award is stated in 2 Enterprise Wheel. Did the second arbitrator, the 3 arbitrator, whose award the Plaintiff seeks to satisfy, 4 draw the essence of his award from the contract?

5           If the answer to that question is, yes, we 6 believe the proceeding is at an end. We suggest that if 7 that rule is not the rule, Enterprise Wheel would be 8 severely cut back to the detriment of the arbitration
9 system and to the detriment of the contract system -- I 10 mean the judicial system, for it is a very rare
11 situation in which there has only been one arbitration 12 that can even be said to arguably touch on an issue of 13 contract interpretation.

14           If the courts, either in this proceeding or 15 generally, are called upon to say, in general, 16 interpreting the contract is for the arbitrator, but it 17 is for us on a de novo theory to determine whether the 18 arbitrator correctly interpreted the final and binding
19 clause which is no more or less a part of the agreement 20 than any other. I can guarantee you that all the cases 21 that used to come up to court on the theory that the 22 Enterprise standard had not been met, that the 23 arbitrator had failed to draw the essence of his award 24 from the contract, will now come to the courts on a new 25 theory to take advantage of the broader and more

1 generous scope of judicial review, namely, that the 2 award is inconsistent with the prior award, or that the 3 arbitrator misinterpreted his obligations under the 4 final and binding section of the contract.

5           We believe that that would be directly 6 contrary to Congress's intent in Sections 203(d) and 7 301, and to the sound administration of this system of 8 law.

9           Now we come to the supposed default of the 10 union which would preclude a consideration of the 11 argument I have just made, an argument, I would note, 12 that is nowhere answered on its merits in the reply 13 brief of the company, a very thorough and able reply 14 brief.

15           To go back to the starting point. This law
16 suit is not a law suit by the union. This is a law suit 17 by the company, brought by the company to set aside an 18 arbitration award. The company had a theory. The 19 company came into court and said: There is arbitration
20 award No. 1, the Sabella award, and arbitration No. 2, 21 the Barrett award. Unless arbitration award No. 1 is 22 not in the refined terms used here, not subject to being 23 overturned in court, then arbitration award No. 2 is no
24 good. That was the essence of the company's theory.

25           The union's brief, which the Court, of course,

1 asked us for a copy of and which all parties have, dealt 2 with that argument in two parts. Part No. 1, looking at 3 page 11 of the union's Court of Appeals brief is 4 headed: "Arbitrator Sabella's award is clearly void and 5 unenforceable, and entitled to no binding effect on 6 subsequent arbitrations between the parties as a result
7 of Arbitrator Sabella exceeding his contractual 8 authority."

9           The next argument is: "Arbitrator Barrett 10 acted within his jurisdictional authority in determining 11 the effect of Arbitrator Sabella's earlier award."

12           I would be less than candid, and also I don't 13 bear the burden of having had to deal with this case 14 under the time schedules and exigencies of lower court
15 deadlines, if I did not squarely admit that the link 16 between argument one and argument two is not made with 17 complete precision. I am afraid that in the Eye of God
18 I won't be able to link those with absolute precision 19 either.

20           QUESTION: Does footnote 21 at the bottom of 21 page 15 in your brief indicate counsel has been 22 penalized for his failings in that regard?

23           MR. GOLD: Counsel, to my understanding, has 24 gone on to greater and better things. He is now 25 representing companies.

1 (General laughter.)

2 MR. GOLD: Not as a reward in any way for his 3 misconduct in representing us.

4 The problem in terms of the link between 5 argument one and argument two is what standard should 6 arbitrator Barrett's award be judged by. We have 7 endeavored here in our brief and on argument to state 8 that standard with as much exactness as we can. That 9 was not done in the Court of Appeals.

10 It simply was not done, but we do not believe 11 that a Defendant by taking on the arguments made by a 12 Plaintiff and dealing with them in turn, and by failing 13 to spell out the precise standard -- the precise 14 interrelation between his answers to the different 15 portions of the Plaintiff's argument ought to be said to 16 have conceded anything.

17 We believe as well, in terms of the proper
18 approach to this Court, that those who are defending a 19 judgment have the right, and it may well be the duty, to 20 state the principles of law which best accord with the 21 statutory materials and this Court's precedents.

22 It is often true, and it is part of the system 23 we believe, that as a case moves through the successive 24 stages that due process provides for and that Congress 25 has provided for, arguments become sharper and cleaner.

1 It would be a terrible endictment of those who have the 2 opportunity to present cases at a higher level if they 3 didn't try to learn from what has gone before.

4 We don't believe that there was any concession 5 of fact here. We don't believe there was concession of 6 law here. But if we are wrong, and if the union failed 7 to sharpen up the issue by saying that the real question
8 here is: Should arbitrator Barrett's award be judged, 9 insofar as it deals with the final and binding clause, 10 be judged de novo, or should it be judged on an 11 Enterprise standard? We do not believe that that is a 12 concession which prevents this Court in developing the 13 law from developing it according to sound principle or 14 prevents us from arguing the matter in a way which is 15 sound and rational, and may help in that process.

16 In preparing for the argument after reading 17 the reply brief, we came across a case which I'd just 18 like to note, called Orloff versus Willoughby, 345 U.S.
19 83. It is an opinion from the Court by Justice Jackson 20 and let me just --

21 QUESTION: The parties have changed position
22 as nimbly as if they were dancing a quadrille.

23 MR. GOLD: Thank you, Mr. Justice Rehnquist.
24 But the Respondents after that dance were permitted to 25 argue the case on its merits, and the Respondents

1 prevailed there. We hope we will be given that 2 opportunity and we hope that we succeed as well as the 3 government did in that case. We think that what is said 4 there is the proper approach to appellate litigation.

5 QUESTION: The Teamsters are relying on the 6 right to dance a quadrille?

7 MR. GOLD: I apologize, sir.

8 QUESTION: I say, the Teamsters Union -- Is 9 this the Teamsters case? No, it is not the Teamsters.
10 I was saying, were the Teamsters wanting to dance the 11 quadrille?

12 MR. GOLD: It would be an interesting sight.
13 These are the Rubber Workers, and we hope that they do 14 as well.

15 QUESTION: I see.

16 MR. GOLD: The third of the questions that I
17 have listed concerns the effect of the District Court's 18 order on companies' contract liabilities.

19 The company argues that the proper rule is 20 that once the District Court entered its order, the 21 company could not be held liable for contract damages.
22 Like the first of the questions presented, we believe 23 that that was a contract question for arbitrator Barrett 24 to decide.

25 The question of when a court order is, for

1 want of a better term, the basis of a claim of 2 impossibility of performance which relieves one of 3 paying damages for a contract breach is not a de novo 4 one. The general law is that such an order provides an 5 impossibility defense only if the party claiming that 6 defense has not been at any fault in securing the 7 order.

8           The company plainly can't satisfy that 9 standard here. The original suit was brought by the 10 company. The company amended its original complaint to 11 allege that the conciliation agreement was superior to 12 the collective agreement. I skipped a step. The 13 company entered into the conciliation agreement after 14 the collective agreement. The company amended its 15 complaint to say that the conciliation agreement was 16 superior. The company aligned itself with the EEOC, 17 when the EEOC sought an order to prevent execution of 18 the collective agreement and to prevent the 19 arbitration. The company, like the union, sought no 20 stay of the District Court order that was eventually 21 entered.

22           Certainly, in terms of the equitable standard
23 used in general, the company cannot invoke that defense
24 as arbitrator Barrett concluded. Moreover, this 25 agreement has an express savings clause which provides

1 that the agreement is not enforceable if contrary to law
2 and, as matters have turned out, this agreement is not 3 contrary to law. The collective agreement is not 4 contrary to law.

5 That being true, and against the background 6 stated, again we believe that judged as it ought to be 7 judged under the Enterprise standard, what arbitrator
8 Barrett concluded, namely, that the company should not 9 be relieved of its contract liability is correct.

10 The company argues here that collective 11 agreements are not commercial agreements. We could not 12 agree more, but nothing comes of that in our view that 13 is any help to the company because in this Court's 14 cases, and most particularly the Carbon Fuel case in 444
15 U.S., the Court has made it plain that Congress's point 16 in enacting Section 301, and indeed the point overall of 17 the national labor policy, is to provide for stability 18 through free collective bargaining and to provide that 19 agreements once reached are to be followed.

20 So long as they are lawful, they are to be 21 followed without administrative intervention, without 22 executive intervention, and without judicial 23 intervention. We would think that the general contract 24 rule, which embodies a good deal of wisdom in itself, 25 applies with a vengeance in the situation of collective 1 bargaining agreements.

2 QUESTION: How do you respond to the S.G.'s 3 position that, surely, you should not be freed from 4 having the requirements of Title VII imposed?

5 MR. GOLD: That, Justice O'Connor, turns me to 6 the last of what I have labeled the four questions which 7 concerns the effect of the conciliation agreement.

8 First of all, as I attempted to state at an 9 earlier point in answering Justice Rehnquist's question, 10 we have no doubt that any collective agreement that is 11 contrary to Title VII simply cannot be enforced. If the 12 company, having taken the gamble it did against the 13 background of the law, had been proved right, this 14 agreement would not have been -- the collective 15 agreement would not have been subject to enforcement.
16 Arbitrator Barrett's award would have been subject to 17 having been overturned as contrary to Title VII.

18 QUESTION: That would be true even if there 19 had been no conciliation agreement.

20 MR. GOLD: Absolutely. But we believe that it 21 strains Title VII far past the breaking point to say 22 that the EEOC, which Congress did not give the power to 23 adjudicate claims or to enter orders -- I just was 24 looking for words of Alexander versus Gardner Denver -- 25 the Commission cannot adjudicate claims or impose

1 administrative sanctions.

2           It would be extraordinarily surprising and 3 wholly irrational to conclude that the EEOC can 4 nonetheless enter into a conciliation agreement with A 5 by which B's rights -- contract rights are destroyed, 6 and to say that that conciliation agreement, even though 7 it can't stand the test of being placed against the law
8 in a court, is superior to the collective bargaining
9 agreement.

10           We think that not only did Congress not grant 11 any such broad powers to the Commission, but as this 12 Court has noted and most recently in the California
13 Brewers case, again in 444 U.S., Title VII was drafted 14 against the background of the national labor policy. As 15 the Court said there, "It does not behoove the courts to 16 second guess the processes of collective bargaining."
17 Certainly this agency was not given the power to second 18 guess those processes. It was given the power to take 19 people into court if they could not arrange a 20 conciliation and to demonstrate that what they had was 21 wrong.

22           Only after that is done, only after the courts
23 have made the findings of fact necessary, is there room 24 for a binding court order which denies somebody a 25 contract right or a right derived from any other

1 source.

2 In concluding, I would like to address the 3 point that somehow that view will end the conciliation 4 system with regard to situations involving collective 5 bargaining agreements. There is no substance to that 6 because this is not a zero-sum game where only the 7 employer is at jeopardy.

8 If the union was presented with the 9 conciliation here, and it took the view that the 10 agreement, the collective bargaining agreement was 11 lawful and it wanted to stick with it --

12 QUESTION: Suppose, Mr. Gold, that instead of 13 joining in that conciliation agreement, the employer had 14 said, "I want to protect my flanks," and takes it to 15 court. Then they went into court. Let's take one 16 hypothesis. First, the employer put in their defense, 17 and then the decree was entered. What about that?

18 MR. GOLD: Well, in the situations of that 19 kind, Your Honor, what I understand the law to be is 20 that the courts have ample power in determining who has 21 -- who bears the liabilities stemming from an unlawful 22 collective agreement, to impose those liabilities on 23 whoever is at fault. If an employer either said, "We 24 want to change this contract," or said, "We want to 25 enter into a conciliation agreement," the union is put

1 at great jeopardy if it does not agree to do so.

2           So the imperatives for the union to enter into 3 the conciliation process in many cases are precisely the 4 same as the imperatives that drive anyone into 5 conciliation, a desire to bring one's situation into 6 conformity with law, a desire to avoid the cost of 7 litigation, costs which most unions are not in as good a 8 position as most companies to deal with, and a desire to 9 safeguard against potential liabilities.

10           QUESTION: Let me change that hypothetical
11 just a little. Instead of simply putting in no 12 evidence, the employer had stipulated that the 13 conciliation agreement could be the basis for a judgment 14 of the court, in other words, a stipulated judgment. So 15 that the only difference from this situation that we 16 have is that the conciliation agreement would have been 17 ratified.

18           MR. GOLD: I see, Your Honor. I apologize. I 19 missed the point of your first hypothetical and I 20 apologize.

21           As I understand the procedural situation in 22 cases of that kind, in any such case the union at the 23 least would be a Rule 19 Defendant and be entitled to 24 argue for and to defend the legality of the contract. I 25 was envisioning a situation in which both parties

1 recognized that they had an unlawful contract.

2           Clearly, what is the essence of our concern 3 about the last of the arguments the company makes is 4 that it is designed to either force the union to attack
5 a conciliation agreement to get into court, or to deny a 6 union, which believes that its collective bargaining 7 agreement is lawful which has the contract rights of 8 those who are covered by the agreement to defend, any 9 opportunity to defend them.

10           We don't believe that Title VII denies unions 11 that opportunity or takes away contract rights in that 12 way, and we would have the gravest due process doubts of 13 the validity of any statute which had the effect of 14 taking these contract rights away through an agreement 15 between the government and A.

16           CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Do you have anything
17 further, Mr. Nash?

18           MR. NASH: Yes, I do, Your Honor, just a 19 couple of things.

20           REBUTTAL ARGUMENT OF PETER G. NASH, ESQ.,

21           ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER

22           MR. NASH: The hypothetical you posed at the 23 end is basically what happened in this case. The 24 company indeed went into court here, but the union and 25 the EEOC joined -- filed cross-motions for summary

1 judgment, and it is they that litigated whether or not 2 the collective bargaining agreement was valid under 3 Title VII.

4 The court determined that, no, it was not 5 valid under Title VII, and an order issued ordering both 6 the employer and the union to comply with the 7 conciliation agreement, not with the collective 8 bargaining agreement. The substance of this thing is 9 that there was in fact a court order.

10 QUESTION: I thought I had made my 11 hypothetical slightly different from what occurred
12 here. I must have been mistaken.

13 MR. NASH: I misunderstood, then, too.

14 QUESTION: Is my hypothetical precisely what 15 was done here?

16 MR. NASH: I guess I am saying that it is 17 analogous.

18 QUESTION: In its effect, it is the same, is 19 that what you are saying?

20 MR. NASH: Correct. The only difference is 21 that this court order ultimately was reversed on appeal
22 by the Fifth Circuit.

23 The question then is, is the employer or the 24 union in this case, for they too were enjoined, to be 25 excused from breaching the collective bargaining

1 agreement in complying with the court order during the 2 time that the court order was in effect. We contend
3 that, indeed, they were. People have to abide by court 4 orders unless and until they are set aside.

5 In fact, in this case, had the employer gone 6 to the union and said, "We don't want to comply with 7 that court order. Would you agree with us?" The union 8 could not have agreed to go back to the collective 9 bargaining agreement because they were enjoined by the 10 order as much as was the employer.

11 QUESTION: Wasn't the injunction simply an 12 injunction against arbitration, and wasn't that 13 injunction obeyed by the parties?

14 MR. NASH: It was an injunction against that,
15 but, no, it went further, Your Honor. It said --

16 QUESTION: What more did the injunction say?

17 MR. NASH: It said that the parties are to 18 abide by the conciliation agreement, not by the 19 collective bargaining agreement.

20 QUESTION: That was part of the injunction?

21 MR. NASH: That is my understanding, yes.
22 That is my recollection.

23 Furthermore, I believe that the union cannot 24 argue that it was the "company's fault" that this order 25 issued. They state two bases for that. Number one,

1 that the company entered into the conciliation
2 agreement, but there is no indication in this case that 3 that in fact was what resulted in the court order.

4           There was a fully litigated case between the 5 EEOC and the union as to whether or not there had been a 6 violation of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act.
7 Ultimately, the court found, yes, the District Court,
8 and said that the remedy for that would be a 9 conciliation agreement, but there is no indication that 10 in fact the court would not have come up with some 11 remedy in any event in that litigation. It merely had 12 the conciliation agreement to turn to, a conciliation
13 agreement which, by the way, was relatively moderate 14 and, indeed, might have protected more senior men than 15 did the conciliation agreement.

16           QUESTION: Let me ask you a question about 17 your court order argument. Supposing that there was a 18 case in which A was order to pay B $100,000. C was a 19 party in the case and said: You really owe me the 20 money, not to B. C appeals and gets a reversal. In the 21 meantime the money has been paid to B. Are you arguing 22 that B can keep the money?

23           MR. NASH: I don't think so, but I don't see 24 the relationship.

25           QUESTION: I don't see how that case is

1 different from yours.

2 MR. NASH: Because in this case what the court
3 said was, "This agreement between you, Mr. Union, and 4 you, Mr. Employer is illegal."

5 QUESTION: In my case, it's based on a
6 contract, an argument about what a contract means.

7 MR. NASH: In this, the court said: "That is 8 illegal. I am telling you, don't abide by it, abide by 9 this instead." It told both parties to do that.

10 QUESTION: Right.

11 MR. NASH: I think that that is the 12 distinction between our cases.

13 QUESTION: Those are the arguments that were 14 made in my hypothetical, and as a result the judge said, 15 "Pay the money to B." Then C says, "No, the money is 16 mine." As I understand it, you say that B can keep the 17 money. I am afraid that I don't follow that.

18 QUESTION: Okay.

19 MR. NASH: Let me go one step further on the 20 fault argument and that is that in this case the union 21 further argues that the fault is that the employer 22 indeed discriminated against the females, and 23 accordingly the employer cannot get out from under its 24 collective bargaining agreement. Yet, the union argues 25 that any valid, finely enforceable court order saying

1 that there has been a violation of Title VII takes 2 precedence over collective bargaining agreement, but 3 there is no valid, finely enforceable Title VII order 4 that isn't based upon the company's discrimination.

5 As a consequence, the union argues too much 6 that, indeed, the company's prior discrimination cannot 7 be a basis for saying that the employer is relieved from 8 complying with the court order which changes that 9 seniority system.

10 Thank you.

11 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Okay, gentlemen, the 12 case submitted.

13 (Whereupon, at 2:02 p.m., the case was 14 submitted.)
