

ORIGINAL

OFFICIAL TRANSCRIPT
PROCEEDINGS BEFORE

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

DKT/CASE NO. 81-1463
TITLE UNITED STATES,
v. Petitioner
KELVIN HASTING ET AL.
PLACE Washington, D. C.
DATE December 7, 1982
PAGES 1 thru 48

ALDERSON REPORTING

(202) 628-9300
440 FIRST STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20001

1 IN THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

2 - - - - - x

3 UNITED STATES, :

4 Petitioner :

5 v. : No. 81-1463

6 KELVIN HASTING ET AL

7 - - - - - x

8 Washington, D.C.

9 Tuesday, December 7, 1982

10 The above-entitled matter came on for oral 11 argument before the Supreme Court of the United States 12 at 10:04 o'clock a.m.

13 APPEARANCES:

14 JOHN F. DePUE, ESQ., Criminal Division, U.S. Department of Justice, Washington, D.C.; on behalf of the 15 Petitioner

16 PAUL V. ESPOSITO, ESQ., Chicago, Illinois; on behalf of the Respondent

17

18

19

20

21

22

23

24

25

1
2
3
4
5
6
7
8
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19 20
21
22
23
24
25

C O N T E N T S

ORAL ARGUMENT OF

PAGE

JOHN F. DePUE, ESQ.,

on behalf of Petitioner

3

PAUL V. ESPOSITO, ESQ.,

on behalf of Respondent

25

JOHN F. DePUE, ESQ.,

on behalf of Petitioner -- Rebuttal

44

* * *

1 P R O C E E D I N G S

2 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments
3 first this morning in the United States against Hasting.

4 ORAL ARGUMENT OF JOHN F. DePUE, Esq.

5 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER

6 MR. DePUE: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
7 please the Court.

8 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. DePue.

9 MR. DePUE: This case presents the question
10 whether a federal appellate court may summarily reverse
11 a conviction because of the prosecutor's improper 12 comment on the defendant's failure to present evidence, 13 without first making an assessment for prejudice under 14 the constitutional harmless error standard.

15 Briefly summarized, the government's evidence
16 showed that during the early morning of October 11th, 17 1979, three teenaged girls and a male companion were 18 driving in the vicinity of East St. Louis, Illinois, 19 when their car was forced off the road by five men 20 driving a turquoise Cadillac.

21 After both cars had come to a halt, the girls 22 were pulled from their car. One of them was raped. The 23 men then forced them into the Cadillac, drove them
24 across the interstate boundary into St. Louis, Missouri, 25 where they repeated their sexual assaults at three

1 different locations.

2 Following the girls' release, one of them led 3 the police to the apartment where she had been taken by 4 her abductors. There, the officers arrested respondent
5 Stewart and found items of clothing belonging to the 6 victims. They also located the turquoise Cadillac, 7 learned that it was registered to respondent Williams, 8 and found Williams' latent prints on the car from which 9 the girls had been taken.

10 These developments also resulted in the 11 apprehension of the remaining respondents, each of whom 12 was identified by at least one of the victims during a 13 lineup the following morning. At their ensuing trial
14 for rape and a Mann Act violation, each of the victims 15 again identified each respondent as a participant in the 16 abductions.

17 The defense did not put on the defendants 18 themselves as witnesses. Instead, their defense was 19 calculated to discredit the girls, their credibility and 20 the accuracy of their identifications by reference to 21 the girls' activities just before and just after the 22 abductions took place. For example, they elicited 23 testimony from the girls during cross examination that 24 they had been out drinking, in violation of 25 parentally-imposed curfews and that they'd gotten lost

1 on the way home from a tavern. And that just after the 2 abductions, their initial identifications and 3 descriptions of respondents were not very accurate and 4 were confused.

5 QUESTION: Well, that's a fairly standard
6 tactic, isn't it? How does that bear on the issue here?

7 MR. DePUE: It bears, Justice Rehnquist, on 8 the argument that we will see that the prosecutor 9 presented subsequently, because we maintain it was a 10 direct reference to what the defendants were actually 11 doing.

12 In addition, respondents presented witnesses 13 of their own who testified that just before and just 14 after the alleged abductions, the physical appearances 15 of respondents were not at all correspondent with those 16 as described by the victims.

17 The prosecutor in his summation first 18 discussed the posture of the government's case. He then 19 turned to respondents' case and he made the following 20 statement, which appears at page 21 of the Joint 21 Appendix. And I'm going to quote it verbatim from the 22 record because of its centrality to these proceedings.

23 He said, "Let's look at the evidence the 24 defendant put on here for you so that we can put that in 25 perspective. I'm going to tell you what the defendant

1 did not do. Defendants on cross examination and --"
2 When respondents objected on the ground that 3 they didn't have to testify at all, the prosecutor 4 continued, "That's right, they don't. They don't have 5 to. But if they do put on a case, the government can 6 comment on it. The defendants at no time ever 7 challenged any of the rapes, whether or not that 8 occurred, any of the sodomies. They didn't challenge
9 the kidnapping, the fact that the girls were in East St.
10 Louis and were taken across to St. Louis. They never 11 challenged the transportation of the victims from East 12 St. Louis, Illinois to St. Louis, Missouri, and they 13 never challenged the location or whereabouts of the 14 defendants at all relevant times. They want you to 15 focus your attention on all the events that were before 16 all of the crucial events of that evening. They want to 17 pull your focus away from the beginning of the incident 18 in East St. Louis after they were bumped, and then the 19 proceeding events. They want to focus to the events 20 prior to that."

21 Following this, the defense moved for a 22 mistrial on Fifth Amendment grounds. The trial judge 23 denied the motion, commenting that to his view, this was 24 simply a commentary of the posture of the cases and 25 didn't implicate Fifth Amendment issues at all. The

1 Seventh Circuit, however, disagreed, characterizing the 2 remarks as a pointed allusion to respondents' failure to 3 take the stand, and held that they constituted a clear
4 violation of this Court's decision in Griffin versus 5 California.

6 Although the court acknowledged that the 7 crimes were heinous and that the evidence of guilt was 8 clear, it refused to assess for prejudice under the 9 constitutional harmless error standard. Instead, after 10 alluding to the fact that prosecutors in the Seventh 11 Circuit had continuously disregarded admonitions not to 12 make arguments that implicated Fifth Amendment rights, 13 they stated that to their view, application of the 14 constitutional harmless error standard would 15 impermissibly compromise the defendants' Fifth Amendment
16 rights.

17 It's the government's position that this 18 reasoning is in direct violation of this Court's 19 decision in Chapman versus California, violates the 20 federal harmless error statute and contravenes broader 21 rules regarding the formulation of remedies in criminal 22 cases.

23 QUESTION: Mr. DePue, are you in a position to 24 state why the government didn't raise the question here
25 of whether or not this comment was, in fact, a violation

1 of Griffin? If you're not, feel free to say you're not.

2 MR. DePUE: Justice Pehnquist, we didn't seek 3 to address -- we didn't feel we needed to address that 4 in our brief, although we do not concede that it was, in 5 fact, a violation of Griffin. We didn't feel that that 6 was a cert worthy issue, and therefore, we didn't raise 7 it.

8 QUESTION: Well, we have to assume that it was 9 a Griffin type error for purposes of resolving this case.

10 MR. DePUE: Yes, Justice O'Connor, you
11 certainly do.

12 Now, --

13 QUESTION: Well, we don't have to.

14 MR. DePUE: No, Your Honor.

15 (Laughter.)

16 QUESTION: The way you phrased the question
17 presented, you assume it is. You say whether the 18 closing argument that constitutes improper comment upon 19 the defendant's failure to testify justifies reversal.
20 So you are assuming --

21 MR. DePUE: Yes, Justice Stevens, we assume 22 that it is. We, however, do not concede that it is.

23 QUESTION: Well, are there other ways than 24 testifying that they could have challenged this? In 25 other words, by establishing that they were in New York

1 City attending the World's Fair at the time?

2 MR. DePUE: Oh, certainly, Chief Justice
3 Burger. And as a matter of fact, they presented 4 witnesses of their own who said that they saw these 5 people shortly after midnight and approximately at 6:00 6 o'clock in the morning. And in addition to this, one of 7 respondents' mothers, respondent Stevens' mother 8 actually saw Stevens and the girls and testified that to 9 her observation, everything that was going on was 10 consensual. So in fact, these were challenged to a 11 certain extent, and there were people who could have 12 testified to the contrary.

13 Now, of course, in Chapman versus California, 14 a state prosecutor, relying on a provision of the state 15 constitution, directly and repeatedly commented on the 16 defendant's failure to testify and the inferences of 17 guilt that could be extracted from that. The trial 18 judge followed suit in his instructions to the jury.

19 Following that trial, however, this Court in 20 Griffin versus California held that the provision of the 21 California Constitution upon which he had relied was 22 unconstitutional.

23 When Chapman's own case came before this 24 Court, Chapman held, argued that all errors of a 25 constitutional magnitude, and Griffin errors in

1 particular, should be deemed reversal per se, and thus 2 not subject to review under the harmless error 3 standard.

4

5

6

7

8

9

10

11

12

13

14

15

16

17

18

19

20

21

22

23

24

25

1 This Court, however, squarely rejected that 2 proposition.

3 QUESTION: Mr. DePue, if this Court had 4 accepted the argument in Chapman against California, I 5 assume they pretty much would have emptied the 6 California jails, wouldn't they, because that had been 7 the standard practice in California before Griffin was 8 decided.

9 MR. DE PUE: Yes, Justice Stevens.

10 QUESTION: Yes.

11 MR. DE PUE: Now, when the case came before 12 this Court, the Court rejected that argument, and held 13 that Griffin violations, just like any other 14 non-constitutional violations, could be deemed harmless
15 and thus not a basis for reversal. It reversed
16 Chapman's conviction, but only after first satisfying 17 itself that given the less than overwhelming posture of 18 the evidence, it could not be satisfied beyond a 19 reasonable doubt that the prosecutor's pointed and 20 repeated allusions to the defendant's failure to testify 21 was not harmless.

22 In the wake of Chapman, and prior to the 23 decision of the court below, this Court and the courts 24 of appeals have virtually without exception held that 25 the constitutional harmless error standard applies to

1 violations of Griffin. They have therefore reversed 2 convictions only when after canvassing the evidence in 3 its totality, looking at the argument in its proper 4 context, they couldn't be satisfied that it didn't 5 contribute to the conviction.

6 This approach, we maintain, is not only 7 mandated by the Chapman decision itself, but by broader 8 principles of revenue recently articulated by this 9 Court. In United States versus Morrison, the Third
10 Circuit dismissed an indictment because a government 11 agent had made improper remarks to the defense counsel 12 about the competency of her own lawyer, to the defendant
13 about the competency of her own lawyer. This Court, 14 however, reversed, finding that dismissal was 15 unwarranted absent any evidence that the alleged Sixth 16 Amendment violation could have prejudiced the defendant 17 and the proceedings in any way.

18 In doing so, the Court admonished the courts 19 of appeals that after identifying a constitutional 20 error, the proper approach was to assess the damage, and 21 to tailor a remedy that was commensurate to the injury 22 received as a result of that violation, and then a 23 broader approach would impermissibly infringe upon other 24 legitimate interests. In the context of a Chapman 25 violation -- of a Griffin violation, this means that

1 once the court has determined that the violation
2 occurred, it has got to look at the amount of prejudice 3 that resulted in determining whether other events at 4 trial offset it. It cannot summarily reverse.

5 Of course, harmless error principles are not 6 simply a matter of judicial self-restraint. The federal 7 harmless error statute and Rule 52(a) of the federal 8 rules of criminal procedure both expressly prohibit a 9 court of appeals from reversing a conviction on the 10 basis of errors or defects that do not substantially 11 affect the nature of the proceedings.

12 Respondent argues, however, that the harmless
13 error statute and Rule 52(a) are inapplicable to this 14 case because the error involved is of a constitutional 15 magnitude. This Court has, however, squarely rejected
16 this reasoning in Chapman itself. There, the Court 17 accepted the policy embodied by the federal harmless 18 error statute which was to require an assessment of 19 prejudice in all cases without regard to whether the 20 error was of a constitutional or non-constitutional 21 magnitude.

22 Respondent's principal contention, however, is 23 that the Court in the exercise of its supervisory power
24 was free to disregard the Chapman standard and fashion a 25 remedy of its own as a prophylactic measure because of

1 the alleged repeated violations of the Griffin standard 2 within the circuit.

3 In the first place, nothing in the decision of 4 that court even suggests that it was in fact relying on 5 its supervisory power. The court's language that it 6 felt the application of a harmless error standard would 7 impermissibly compromise the defendant's Fifth Amendment
8 rights suggests that it simply didn't believe that the 9 harmless error standard was sufficient, a sufficient 10 mechanism to protect the defendants against Fifth 11 Amendment violations.

12 But be that as it may, there are three reasons 13 why the Seventh Circuit could not adopt a reversal per 14 se rule in the exercise of its supervisory power. In 15 the first place, as Justice Frankfurter stated in 16 Sherman versus United States long ago, the supervisory 17 power entails the formulation of standards for the 18 administration of criminal justice when Congress has not 19 specifically legislated to that end.

20 Where, however, Congress in the exercise of 21 its constitutional power to regulate the courts has 22 expressly articulated a standard that is applicable to 23 the issue, here, the federal harmless error statute and 24 Rule 52(a) of the federal rules of criminal procedure, 25 the courts of appeals are not free to disregard that

1 standard and fashion a remedy of their own in the 2 exercise of their supervisory power.

3 QUESTION: What about this Court?

4 MR. DE PUE: Pardon, Justice --

5 QUESTION: What about this Court?

6 MR. DE PUE: This Court can't do so either,
7 Justice Brennan, because the federal harmless --

8 QUESTION: Any decision of this Court that has 9 said that?

10 MR. DE PUE: No, Your Honor, but the federal 11 harmless error statute says that.

12 QUESTION: How do you reconcile that with the 13 Bruno case, which indicated that Section 2111 was 14 concerned basically with etiquette of trials and 15 formalities?

16 MR. DE PUE: Yes, Justice O'Connor. I have 17 two responses to that. First, and most importantly, the 18 version of the federal harmless error statute upon which 19 Justice Frankfurter relied in Bruno was amended in 20 1948. The language upon which Justice Frankfurter 21 relied was deleted. That is the word "technical," the 22 phrase "technical errors."

23 As the Ninth Circuit said in Broulette, and as 24 I believe is one of the principal canons of 25 construction, that where a court deletes critical

1 language, the presumption is, it intends to change the 2 standard. Second, in Chapman versus California, of 3 course, this Court expressly held that the federal 4 harmless error statute applies to errors of a 5 constitutional magnitude. Therefore, Bruno has no --

6 QUESTION: I wonder if that is correct, Mr.
7 DePue. Was the federal harmless error statute at issue 8 in the California trial that gave rise to the appeal in 9 Chapman against California?

10 MR. DE PUE: No, Your Honor, it wasn't. That 11 was a state case.

12 QUESTION: So it wasn't -- the federal 13 harmless error statute was not involved at all in that 14 case?

15 MR. DE PUE: No, it wasn't, Justice --

16 QUESTION: And it's a different standard that 17 the court applied than the harmless -- the statutory 18 harmless error standard. You don't suggest that the 19 Griffin standard is the same standard that was described 20 in Justice Rutledge's opinion in Kotteakos, do you?

21 MR. DE PUE: No, I certainly don't, Justice
22 Stevens.

23 QUESTION: Which was an interpretation of the 24 federal statute.

25 MR. DE PUE: This Court has made it quite

1 clear that the degree of certitude between the 2 constitutional harmless error standard and the standard 3 for non-constitutional errors is different.

4 QUESTION: The statute says that you've got to 5 be sure that the error does not affect the substantial 6 rights of the parties. Now, do you suggest that 7 commenting on the failure of the witness to get on the 8 witness stand, failure of the defendant to get on the 9 witness stand does not affect a substantial right?

10 MR. DE PUE: I suggest, Justice Stevens, that 11 there may be some instances, indeed many instances, 12 where indirect allusions to the defendant's failure to 13 take the stand may be deemed harmless, yes.

14 QUESTION: They may be deemed harmless, but 15 within the meaning of the statute, would you say that a 16 comment on the defendant's failure to take the witness 17 stand does not affect his constitutional right not to 18 testify?

19 MR. DE PUE: No, it wouldn't.

20 QUESTION: Then the statute simply does not 21 apply.

22 MR. DE PUE: Well, I believe, Justice Stevens, 23 as I said before, that it depends upon the context of 24 the -- that it depends on the context of the situation.
25 That you simply -- you simply cannot say that --

1 QUESTION: You are saying, in some situations
2 the comment on the failure to testify affects the right, 3 constitutional right; in others it does not affect the 4 right?

5 MR. DE PUE: It always affects the 6 constitutional right.

7 QUESTION: All right, but then it may well be 8 harmless, but that doesn't mean the statute doesn't 9 apply.

10 MR. DE PUE: Of course, the statute -- the 11 statute applies, but the statute simply says, you've 12 still got to assess the presence. The standard is 13 simply different.

14 Second, even where --

15 QUESTION: Is it your view that, for example, 16 if television covers an event in which a crime, a murder 17 takes place, that the evidence then corroborated by 18 other eye witnesses is so conclusive that no comment by 19 the prosecutor would constitute reversible error?

20 MR. DE PUE: There may be some cases of that 21 nature, yes, Mr. Chief Justice. We don't think this is 22 one of them, but there certainly may, yes.

23 QUESTION: In other words, the error, 24 conceding that there is an error, would be harmless in 25 view of the overwhelming nature of the evidence. Is 1 that your view?

2 MR. DE PUE: Yes, Mr. Chief Justice, harmless
3 beyond a reasonable doubt under the constitutional 4 harmless error statute of Fahy versus Connecticut.

5 Now, even --

6 QUESTION: Under your view, if the defendant
7 didn't have a lawyer, and the evidence was just as clear 8 as you hypothesize, could that error ever be harmless?

9 MR. DE PUE: Absolutely not, because that 10 would pervade the entire nature of the proceedings.
11 That sort of thing is not subject to any kind of an 12 accurate assessment, but this, we believe, is, because 13 the Court can look at that -- look at that remark, look 14 at how pervasive and how direct it is, look at the 15 evidence, look at the judge's instruction, and all sorts 16 of other things, and determine whether there was 17 adequate damage control done to deem that it was 18 harmless beyond a reasonable doubt.

19 Now, even where it is otherwise permissible to 20 employ the supervisory power for didactic or 21 prophylactic purposes over agents of the executive 22 branch, this Court has made it clear that such authority 23 should be exercised sparingly, and only in the face of 24 intentional transgressions of legal norms. In this 25 regard, we believe that this particular case is a most

1 inappropriate vehicle for exercising such authority.
2 Any didactic benefits that arguably might result from a 3 reversal here will surely be outweighed by the cost to 4 the victims who must again relive their harrowing ordeal 5 at respondent's hands.

6 But be that as it may, the universally
7 accepted test for determining whether a Griffin 8 violation has occurred embraces both intentional and 9 unintended reference to the defendant's failure to 10 testify. Remarks, although not intended as comments, 11 are later subject to a construction, a reasonable 12 construction that the jury could reasonably infer that 13 they are related to the defendant's failure to testify.

14 It is a rare case indeed that a prosecutor in 15 the wake of Griffin and Chapman sets out comment on the 16 defendant's failure to testify. Most reversals for 17 Chapman and Griffin violations occur where an appellate 18 court with the benefit of hindsight and after looking at 19 the totality of the evidence, the posture of the defense 20 case, the defense theory, the totality of the 21 prosecutor's remarks, concludes that the prosecutor 22 overstepped an indistinct line between perfectly 23 permissible commentary upon the posture of the defense
24 case and impermissible reference to the defendant's 25 personal failure to rebut damaging evidence.

1 It is not surprising, given the highly 2 subjective nature of this assessment, that appellate 3 courts will frequently reach different conclusions on 4 very similar factual situations and arguments. I 5 believe that this case is a perfectly good example of 6 that. The court of appeals found a clear Griffin
7 violation here. The lynchpin of respondent's argument 8 is that this was intentional misconduct by the 9 prosecutor, yet the trial judge, who was able to listen 10 to this evidence, who saw it come in, to listened to the 11 argument, found that there wasn't a Griffin violation at 12 all, that what the prosecutor was doing was simply 13 commenting upon the strengths and the weaknesses of the 14 case.

15 Indeed, while it is true that the prosecutor 16 did use the word "defendant," no objective person could 17 have viewed his argument as a commentary upon the 18 defendant's personal failure to testify. Rather, it is 19 perfectly obvious from the context of the prosecutor's 20 remarks here that they were intended as a commentary
21 upon what the defendant's lawyers were doing. He used 22 the word "defendant" just as I am using the word 23 "respondents" today.

24 QUESTION: You haven't made a distinction, or 25 if you have I have missed it, between a case where the

1 defendant testifies and one in which he does not take 2 the stand at all. Is that a significant difference?

3 MR. DE PUE: I don't think that you would have 4 this type of violation where the defendant testified, 5 Mr. Chief Justice. This type of argument arises in the 6 context where you have a non-testifying defendant, the 7 defense puts on a case, and the prosecutor during his 8 closing argument says, points out to the weaknesses in 9 the defense case, which is, of course, one of the 10 mainstays of proper argument.

11 The question arises when he does that,
12 pointing out to the weaknesses of the defense case, 13 whether he transgresses what I call a very indistinct 14 line between talking about weaknesses and talking about 15 the defendants themselves, and this is precisely why I
16 maintain that most of these so-called Griffin violations 17 are totally unintentional, because most arise in the 18 context of talking about the posture of the evidence, 19 and this is precisely what the prosecutor was doing in 20 this particular case. He was talking about the scope of 21 cross examination, that respondents during cross 22 examination peripherally examined the victims, talked 23 about their misconduct before, talked about the lack of 24 certitude of their identifications afterward, but left 25 totally unscathed their rendition of the critical

1 events.

2 QUESTION: Mr. DePue, do you know when 28 USC 3 2111, the present harmless error statute, was amended to 4 have its present form?

5 MR. DE PUE: Yes, Your Honor, 1948, I believe.

6 QUESTION: Was that the time of the 7 codification?

8 MR. DE PUE: Yes, Mr. Justice Rehnquist. The 9 precursor to that was rescinded in 1947, and that 10 precursor had the word "technical" in it. The key 11 language which --

12 QUESTION: That was the one that the Court
13 construed in Bruno.

14 MR. DE PUE: Yes, Justice Rehnquist. Then it
15 was amended in 1948. The word "technical" was deleted.

16 Finally, in United States versus Payner, this 17 Court just 18 months ago held that courts of appeals 18 cannot exercise a supervisory power in a manner that is 19 inconsistent with the controlling decisions of this 20 Court. Payner, of course, also involved an intentional 21 transgression by a government agent, and by contrast 22 with this case.

23 The decision of the court below is, however, 24 directly contrary to the controlling decision of this 25 Court in Chapman versus California. It therefore cannot 1 stand.

2 Thank you.

3 QUESTION: May I ask one other question? Is 4 it -- it is not the government's position that this 5 Court should make the determination as to whether there
6 is harmless error, but rather we should direct the court 7 of appeals to?

8 MR. DE PUE: We maintain, Justice Stevens, 9 that you certainly could make that decision, because the 10 evidence is so clear. However, we acknowledge that this 11 case will have to be remanded for the assessment of 12 other errors. The court of appeals left undecided a 13 number of errors in an unpublished decision that it 14 issued contemporaneously with this one. So, the case is 15 going to have to be remanded, and we would certainly not 16 have any strenuous objections if the Court were to 17 remand this issue as well.

18 QUESTION: And your view is that -- what you 19 are asking us to say is that they may not make a 20 harmless error determination -- I mean, they must make a 21 harmless error determination; they may never exercise 22 supervisory power on a question like this, even if -- 23 even if they -- even if we thought they had here, and I 24 understand your position is, they didn't.

25 MR. DE PUE: Precisely, Justice Stevens.

1 QUESTION: And this because of the harmless
2 error statute.

3 MR. DE PUE: This because -- for three 4 reasons. First --

5 QUESTION: But primarily --

6 MR. DE PUE: The first is the harmless error 7 statute.

8 QUESTION: The harmless error statute you
9 argue forecloses the exercise by the courts of appeals 10 of supervisory power.

11 MR. DE PUE: Yes, Justice Brennan, and my 12 authorities for that again is one case cited in our 13 brief, which is United States versus Palermo, and 14 another case that recently came to my attention that was 15 not cited in our brief but of which I have apprised
16 respondents, United States versus National City Lines, 17 which is cited at 334 US 573, and the pertinent language
18 is at Page 589.

19 Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice.

20 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well.

21 Mr. Esposito?

22 ORAL ARGUMENT OF PAUL V. ESPOSITO, ESQ.,

23 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENTS

24 MR. ESPOSITO: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
25 please the Court, this case involves the remedial powers

1 of the federal courts of appeals. Like Chapman, it
2 involves comments on the failure to testify, and like 3 Chapman, for purposes of review, the error was conceded, 4 but there are significant differences.

5 In Chapman, at the time the comment was made,
6 the courts had not yet found that that type of comment,
7 at least in the state court setting, was constitutional
8 error. However, in this case, long before the comment 9 had been made, the courts of appeals had found that this 10 type of comment was in fact constitutional error.

11 QUESTION: In your view, is there any 12 circumstance in which comment, direct comment by the 13 prosecutor on the failure to testify, on the defendant's 14 failure to testify could be harmless error?

15 MR. ESPOSITO: Yes. Yes. We are not trying 16 to -- we are not here today, Your Honor, asking this 17 Court to overrule Chapman in any regard. We find -- we 18 feel that this case presents a significant -- this case
19 is significantly different from Chapman. Chapman
20 involved the question, of course, of whether a Fifth 21 Amendment comment could ever be harmless error, and the 22 Court said it did.

23 This case questions -- this case questions the 24 power of the federal courts of appeals, whether they 25 have the power to refrain from applying Chapman in an

1 appropriate case in order to deter misconduct which 2 stands in violation of repeated decisions by the courts
3 of appeals. I think it is very important to recognize 4 that last point. The federal court of appeals in the 5 Seventh Circuit has repeatedly dealt with this problem, 6 the exact problem, indirect comments that a defendant 7 didn't contradict or deny or refute evidence, and it has 8 repeatedly held the same thing.

9 QUESTION: Well, is this discussion not to 10 follow Chapman, is pursuant to what, supervisory power?

11 MR. ESPOSITO: Respondents contend that it 12 would be pursuant --

13 QUESTION: That isn't what the court of 14 appeals said. I can't tell from its opinion anything 15 about supervisory --

16 MR. ESPOSITO: They did not discuss 17 supervisory power, Your Honor. Respondents would 18 contend that that power -- the existence of that power 19 would support their judgment, and therefore it may be a 20 ground for affirmance of the decision, even though the 21 court didn't discuss it.

22 What happened here, Your Honor --

23 QUESTION: Well, I might -- I guess you have 24 to address the government's position, then, that the 25 harmless error statute forecloses the court of appeals

1 from doing what it did here.

2 MR. ESPOSITO: That's exactly correct, Your 3 Honor, and we believe that it does not foreclose it.
4 First of all, in Bruno, the court indicated that the 5 harmless error statute was not intended to apply to 6 commands of Congress and respondents contend that it 7 very logically and easily flows that it would not 8 respond to -- would not apply to constitutional 9 violations either.

10 Let me make a point about the legislative 11 history, since the Court directed some questions to it.
12 The statute was repealed in 1947, I believe. It was 13 repealed because of the enactment of the Federal Rules 14 of Civil Procedure. The following year, in '48, it was 15 realized that the Federal Rules did not apply to the 16 courts of appeals in the Supreme Court, so it was in 17 fact re-enacted.

18 QUESTION: Well, the Federal Rules of Civil 19 Procedure were promulgated, as I recall, in 1934. Why 20 did Congress not get around to repealing this thing that 21 they felt was inconsistent with it until 1947?

22 MR. ESPOSITO: I am not sure of that, Your 23 Honor. I know when it was repealed. I am not quite 24 clear why it --

25 QUESTION: Was it in conflict with their Rules

1 of Criminal Procedure or --

2 MR. ESPOSITO: There was a -- federal -- civil 3 and criminal procedure, Your Honor. I should be saying 4 the criminal rules here. So it was re-enacted, and 5 re-enacted to bring back the provision, albeit with the 6 language change, but it was re-enacted to bring back the 7 provision of 391, which was basically discussed in the 8 Bruno case, back into the federal law. So, there really 9 is, from respondent's view, and what we see of the 10 legislative history, no change in the legislative 11 intent.

12 QUESTION: Well, don't you think the dropping 13 of the word "technical" after Justice Frankfurter's
14 opinion in Bruno had referred to it as kind of a matter
15 of etiquette and that sort of thing, meant that Congress 16 intended a little more bite to the thing than it had 17 before?

18 MR. ESPOSITO: Your Honor, we believe that if 19 the Court -- excuse me, if the Congress had intended to 20 change it, there would have been much more discussion.

21 QUESTION: Why need there be any discussion if 22 Congress chooses to enact something which in fact 23 changes it?

24 MR. ESPOSITO: Because the commands of this 25 Court or the reading of this Court was so -- was so very

1 clear. In the language of the legislative report -- in 2 the bill that was enacted, in the bill in which it was 3 re-enacted, all that bill was doing was to make 4 typographical change, delete sections that should have 5 been deleted before, add sections that shouldn't have 6 been deleted. It was mainly a -- how do I say it? -- a 7 bill just to make the minor changes. There wasn't any 8 substantive law change that was intended by the bill.

9 QUESTION: But how can you be so sure of that 10 when in fact the words come out differently than were in 11 the previous thing, and when it in fact had been 12 repealed for a year? I mean, it is not as if you are 13 just codifying something that has always been in 14 effect.

15 MR. ESPOSITO: Well, the closest I can find, 16 Your Honor, is the House report on the bill, which just 17 very briefly talked about it, and again, I would contend
18 that that indicates that Congress was not intending a 19 substantive change that may change the prior readings, 20 prior readings of the court, and there is some language, 21 very briefly, by Senator O'Connor, the Senator from 22 Maryland, I believe, who also indicated that this bill 23 doesn't really mean to -- wasn't meant to make a great 24 substantive impact in the law.

25 So, we contend that there is still -- there is

1 still -- the statute is inapplicable, and furthermore, 2 nothing in the legislative history, in fact, nothing in 3 Chapman itself would seem to indicate that the harmless
4 error rule itself was meant to take away the supervisory 5 powers of the court to deter repeated misconduct. That 6 is a point I think that has to be brought out in this 7 case. The Second Circuit has addressed this problem in 8 the past. They have told the prosecutors that these 9 types of comments are wrong. They have threatened 10 summary reversals, and in fact, to make their point 11 perfectly clear, they even went so far as to circulate
12 an unpublished opinion to all the United States
13 attorneys within the circuit with instructions to either 14 give a copy of that opinion to the assistant attorneys 15 or to issue an explanatory memorandum.

16 I think one of the reasons why the opinion is 17 so short is because the court was just so terribly 18 frustrated with what was going on. It had said enough, 19 when you look back at the decisions in --

20 QUESTION: But you have to go look back at 21 them, don't you?

22 MR. ESPOSITO: Yes, you do, Your Honor.

23 QUESTION: Your suggestion that this is why 24 they did it they certainly didn't reveal in what they 25 wrote in this case.

1 MR. ESPOSITO: That's correct. I think -- as 2 I say, I think they just felt enough was enough, and 3 they just decided to put the foot down right here and 4 now, and it was this case that they did.

5 QUESTION: Mr. Esposito, you speak of this 6 series of Seventh Circuit cases. How do the facts of 7 those cases compare with this one? Do you have any 8 idea?

9 MR. ESPOSITO: Closely, Your Honor, in that -- 10 in the type of comment that was involved. In the 11 comments -- in the cases that are referred to in our 12 brief, the comments were either that the defendant had 13 not denied evidence, had not refuted evidence, had not 14 contradicted evidence. In this case, the contention was 15 that the defendants had not challenged evidence, a 16 different word, but the same intent.

17 QUESTION: What about the underlying facts of 18 the charges and the like?

19 MR. ESPOSITO: Different cases. Some involved
20 robberies. I think there was a mail forgery, one case.
21 The basic facts, the substantive crimes were different, 22 but the language was the same, and the standard was the 23 same. There was --

24 QUESTION: Why did they pick this case
25 particularly when they had let a dozen or so go by?

1 MR. ESPOSITO: Because they were tired of 2 giving warnings, Your Honor, and they felt, we believe,
3 from the history of this problem, that warnings were no 4 longer going to do the job. It was becoming 5 increasingly clear to the court of appeals that if they 6 had again applied Chapman, it wouldn't do any good.
7 What they were trying to do is eliminate the problem.
8 After speaking to the problem a number of times, after 9 warning prosecutors, the problem wasn't being 10 eliminated, and that is what those --

11 QUESTION: So these defendants as contrasted 12 with the others in perhaps less offensive crimes were 13 particularly fortunate.

14 MR. ESPOSITO: As opposed to the others, their 15 conviction is reversed. Yes, Your Honor. I think the 16 Court was trying to clear up a problem that won't -- or 17 hopefully will not reoccur in the future. They -- in a 18 sense, they do get a benefit, but so does the system, 19 and I think that is what the -- that's what the court 20 was interested in, protecting -- protecting the system 21 of justice so that these types of comments would not 22 occur in the future.

23 QUESTION: Mr. Esposito, if you are correct
24 that the court does continue to have some supervisory 25 power to set aside convictions despite the provisions of

1 Section 2111, should not the court be required to at 2 least articulate the fact that it is exercising the 3 supervisory power, and to set forth the factors that 4 informed its decision, and to consider the public 5 interest in maintaining a conviction in a crime of this 6 nature? Aren't those things all appropriate for the 7 court to have to consider and to articulate?

8 MR. ESPOSITO: Your Honor, it may very well
9 have been appropriate for the court to state the basis
10 on which it was acting for the benefits of this Court 11 and for people who have to read the decisions.

12 QUESTION: In fact, if I might ask this 13 question, isn't it particularly anomalous for the court 14 of appeals to set an example, which it seemed to have 15 been doing, in an order which is an unpublished order 16 which the parties are forbidden to cite in other
17 proceedings?

18 MR. ESPOSITO: I think --

19 QUESTION: This is not a published opinion, as 20 I understand it.

21 MR. ESPOSITO: There are two parts to this 22 opinion, Your Honor. The first part, the part that is 23 up for review today, is a published opinion.

24 QUESTION: Oh, it is.

25 MR. ESPOSITO: Yes.

1 QUESTION: Oh, I misunderstood. I thought --

2 MR. ESPOSITO: The second -- the second part 3 is an unpublished order.

4 QUESTION: I misunderstood.

5 MR. ESPOSITO: The unpublished sections are 6 not before the Court.

7 QUESTION: So this part they did publish, the 8 part we are --

9 MR. ESPOSITO: This part is published, Your 10 Honor.

11 QUESTION: Has the -- excuse me. Has the 12 court of appeals ever undertaken to exercise any form of 13 supervisory power by disciplinary action against a 14 lawyer who breaks some of the groundrules?

15 MR. ESPOSITO: Your Honor, in the last 16 decision, United States versus Rodriguez, the decision
17 that immediately preceded this case, the Seventh Circuit 18 said that this matter may be something that should be 19 brought to the attention of the Attorney General
20 himself, the matter of his repeated comments. The court 21 did not bring this matter, as far as I determined from 22 the decision, the court did not bring the matter up to 23 the Attorney General, and I can only conclude that they 24 had reassessed the matter and said that it would be best 25 to handle this through a reversal.

1 I think there is one -- well, there are two 2 problems possibly in terms of discipline. One is is a 3 possible separation of powers problem. What type of -- 4 In terms of the types of discipline that the court may 5 be able to invoke against a prosecutor.

6 QUESTION: Well, does not the district court 7 have plenary jurisdiction on admitting lawyers to 8 practice in the district court and in turn in the court 9 of appeals?

10 MR. ESPOSITO: They do, Your Honor.

11 QUESTION: In your view, would the court of 12 appeals exceed its supervisory powers or its powers 13 generally if they issued an order to show cause why a 14 lawyer who violated rules in their view should be 15 disciplined, or the order to show cause would be to show 16 cause why he should not be disciplined?

17 MR. ESPOSITO: Disciplined by the district
18 court, Your Honor? Or by the court of appeals?

19 QUESTION: Either, or both.

20 MR. ESPOSITO: Either.

21 QUESTION: Well, I gather the district court 22 wouldn't have been disciplining him, because they 23 thought it wasn't even a violation of the Fifth 24 Amendment.

25 MR. ESPOSITO: They thought the comment was

1 proper in the first place.

2 QUESTION: What I am speaking of is the 3 supervisory power of the court of appeals over the 4 district court.

5 MR. ESPOSITO: The court may have been able to 6 issue an order, a rule to show cause, as you suggest.
7 The problem --

8 QUESTION: Well, I don't want to divert you.
9 I just wondered whether --

10 MR. ESPOSITO: No, I think --

11 QUESTION: -- if the court had ever undertaken 12 to exercise such a power.

13 MR. ESPOSITO: I have never -- I have never 14 seen the power exercised, but I would like to address 15 your point, Your Honor. The problem that respondents 16 see from the mere approach of discipline is that while 17 it very well may deter this prosecutor, and in fact it 18 may deter other prosecutors, it doesn't really get the 19 point home to the prosecutorial system as to what this 20 problem is. It doesn't necessarily get them to change 21 their practices, to change the educational practices, 22 the training practices of prosecutors before they get to 23 the trial.

24 QUESTION: Well, what business is that of the 25 court of appeals? The court of appeals isn't in the 1 business of educating prosecutors. It is in the 2 business of reviewing on an appellate basis decisions of 3 the district courts, isn't it?

4 MR. ESPOSITO: Your Honor, I would suggest 5 that part of the business is the education of 6 prosecutors, and that is part of the basis for the 7 harmless error rule itself. Certainly the harmless
8 error rule is designed in the first instance to affirm a 9 conviction, to affirm the result when the result did not 10 prejudice the defendant, but the rule goes farther. It 11 tells a prosecutor, it tells the government itself that 12 conduct that was committed at trial was wrong, it was 13 improper, and hopefully through the force of that 14 decision itself it coerces a prosecutor not to repeat 15 those comments in the future. That is where the 16 education comes in, through the proper use of the rule.

17 I think what is happening in the Seventh 18 Circuit, and I believe what the Seventh Circuit is 19 despairing of through a reading of all these opinions is 20 the fact that in a sense that harmless error, the 21 rationale is being broken. Rather than using the 22 harmless error rule to affirm the result, it is being 23 used to justify the conduct. People are forgetting that 24 there is error and just --

25 QUESTION: Well, but so long as it is harmless

1 error, why should the court of appeals worry about it?

2 MR. ESPOSITO: Because it is still, Your 3 Honor, a violation of constitutional rights, and it 4 still has an effect on the system itself.

5 QUESTION: Well, what effect does it have on 6 the system if it is harmless error?

7 MR. ESPOSITO: It affects the system in the 8 way a prosecutor -- a trial is conducted. Our system 9 requires certain norms of conduct within it.

10 QUESTION: Yes, and the norms of conduct are 11 set up, and then reversals are not to occur if there is 12 only harmless deviation from them, and by hypothesis, 13 what we are talking about is a harmless deviation from 14 them. Why should that concern anybody?

15 MR. ESPOSITO: Just because, Your Honor, of 16 the basic manner in which the prosecution is being 17 gathered, in which the system is being gathered. I
18 guess you can say the same thing, Your Honor, of a 19 coerced confession or any other type of constitutional 20 problem.

21 QUESTION: It is bigger than both of us?

22 MR. ESPOSITO: It may be.

23 QUESTION: Was this widespread throughout the 24 Seventh Circuit?

25 MR. ESPOSITO: The Seventh Circuit has dealt

1 with this particular issue in eight cases, and they have 2 come throughout different districts in the circuit.
3 Yes, Your Honor.

4 QUESTION: But not in other circuits?

5 MR. ESPOSITO: The court wasn't -- the problem
6 has appeared in other circuits. As a matter of fact, in 7 the First Circuit, eleven years ago, the First Circuit 8 adopted a rule under its supervisory powers to provide 9 for reversals for comments on the -- indirect comments 10 like this comment on the failure to testify where 11 certain preconditions aren't established. The court of 12 appeals had threatened to employ that rule in the 13 Seventh Circuit, but didn't go so far as to do it.

14 I would like to address the question of 15 standards that can be applied. I don't believe that 16 this is something that has to be an unlimited review.
17 It is something that the Seventh Circuit can use to 18 reach a result whenever it wants.

19 Supervisory powers, of course, are to be 20 reluctantly exercised. I think that is clear from this 21 Court's case law. But it is a discretionary power, too, 22 and where -- and in determining whether to exercise the 23 discretion in cases of this type, in the case of this 24 type is repeated misconduct which the prosecutor's 25 failure to conform to decisions, the court should look

1 first of all to the type of error involved, dealing with 2 constitutional error, command of Congress. It should 3 look to whether they have addressed, that particular 4 court has addressed the problem in the past, whether it
5 has set forth a clear legal principle, whether it is a 6 principle that can be applied broadly to many types of 7 cases such as this type of case, and whether that 8 principle has been disseminated in sufficient time to 9 give prosecutors the practical means of incorporating 10 the principle into the methods of prosecution.

11 Any of these factors are met, and they are 12 certainly met in this case, the number of times that the 13 court has -- has to deal with the problem in a sense 14 becomes an aggravating factor, making the exercise even 15 more appropriate. If the court didn't abuse its 16 discretion in this regard, the decision should be 17 affirmed.

18 QUESTION: Mr. Esposito, I gather your answer 19 to the government's argument is that exercise of 20 supervisory power is not foreclosed by the harmless 21 error statute. Why? Because the statute, you argue, is 22 inapplicable to this situation.

23 MR. ESPOSITO: I argue first of all, Your 24 Honor, that the statute is inapplicable. Secondly --

25 QUESTION: Why is it inapplicable?

1 MR. ESPOSITO: The statute, because it wasn't,
2 as I read the case law, Bruno, and extend the case law,
3 Your Honor, it wasn't designed to apply -- the case 4 cited wasn't designed to apply to violations of 5 statutes. In fact, in Bruno, the statute involved was 6 the present day 304.81, commenting on the failure to 7 testify. It seems to me it very logically follows that 8 if it doesn't apply to the statutes it wasn't meant to 9 apply to the constitutional violation.

10 Even assuming, Your Honor, assuming arguendo 11 that the statute could be applied, may be applicable, we 12 contend that the harmless error statute was not intended 13 to deprive the court of their traditional supervisory 14 powers, powers that are recognized in McNabb, powers
15 that are recognized in Donnelly versus DeChristoforo, 16 for instance, to deter prosecutorial misconduct. Those 17 powers, we believe, are still there, and absent 18 something much clearer that would indicate that the 19 Congress meant to take away that power, that supervisory 20 power is there.

21 In sum, Your Honor, we believe that above all, 22 the supervisory powers are the powers of flexibility.
23 They enable the courts to determine whether a rigid 24 application to a particular legal principle is really 25 going to frustrate rather than promote the interests of

1 justice, and when it does, it allows the courts to bend 2 slightly the system to really meet and to effectuate in 3 a good sense the overall administration of justice. We 4 believe that is what the court did here. They weren't 5 trying to overrule Chapman. They did not create a per 6 se rule in the Seventh Circuit. They were just trying 7 to say, in this case, we will put our foot down here.

8 QUESTION: Well, now, I gather from your 9 colloquy with Justice O'Connor, since there is nothing 10 in this opinion to tell us this was reached on the basis 11 of supervisory power, we can't conclude that it was 12 without going back to all those cases, the eight of them
13 that you have cited in your brief.

14 MR. ESPOSITO: Your Honor, I don't -- I think 15 that is correct, Your Honor. I think in going back to 16 those cases, you will not see the words "supervisory 17 power" invoked except to the extent that the court 18 discusses Flannery, which, in that case the First 19 Circuit invoked their supervisory powers. So that is 20 correct. If the Court wants specific findings as to the 21 power basis, it may very well have to remand the case or 22 at least read the decision. When the Court reaches its 23 decision, you can --

24 QUESTION: And tell the court of appeals if in 25 fact U.S. did this on supervisory power, tell us so, and 1 your reasons for doing it.

2 MR. ESPOSITO: That may be appropriate, if the 3 court does not feel that a decision just on the -- does 4 not feel that it cannot just act on the basis of 5 supervisory powers. It is something that would be used 6 to affirm the judgment of the court.

7 If there are no further questions, I would ask 8 the Court to affirm.

9 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well.

10 Mr. DePue?

11 ORAL ARGUMENT OF JOHN F. DE PUE, ESQ.,

12 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER - REBUTTAL

13 MR. DE PUE: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice.

14 I just have --

15 QUESTION: Before you go on, let me inquire on 16 this point. In your view, if a prosecutor who was 17 admitted to the court of appeals to practice before the 18 court of appeals had committed a gross, not a marginal 19 or the kind that you say here is incidental, but a gross 20 violation of the matter of commenting on the failure of 21 the defendant to testify, could the court of appeals 22 discipline that lawyer? Or suspend him?

23 MR. DE PUE: I think it is questionable. I
24 think -- If he was a member of the court of appeals bar, 25 it certainly could.

1 QUESTION: Yes, I assume that. I am not 2 speaking of the district court. The district court has 3 exclusive jurisdiction there. But you agree that they 4 could suspend him from practice for some period of time 5 as one kind of discipline.

6 MR. DE PUE: Yes, Mr. Chief Justice.

7 QUESTION: But your point would be that the 8 conduct here doesn't rise to any such level.

9 MR. DE PUE: Precisely. Precisely. And the 10 two alternatives that we pointed out in our brief was, 11 the district court itself could have disciplined the 12 individual, and finally, the Department of Justice could 13 have and would have disciplined an individual who 14 intentionally violated Chapman.

15 The point I would like to --

16 QUESTION: Can you name me any case that it 17 happened?

18 MR. DE PUE: Yes, Justice Marshall. I believe 19 I can. I don't particularly want to use the 20 individual's name, but as we pointed out in our brief, 21 within the last eight months a prosecutor --

22 QUESTION: Did you have any before eight 23 months?

24 MR. DE PUE: We have never had an incident
25 like this reported. No, Justice Marshall. Where this

1 particular type of violation was reported to the Office
2 of Professional Responsibility. But as I have said, 3 within the last eight months, we had a prosecutor who 4 was reported for making improper comments before a grand 5 jury, and he ended up resigning.

6 QUESTION: I am talking about before the 7 court, where the court disciplined the U.S. Attorney.

8 MR. DE PUE: No.

9 QUESTION: Any court.

10 MR. DE PUE: I know of no examples.

11 I would like to dispel the notion that has 12 been created by respondents and by the court below that 13 this is a pervasive and recurring problem in the Seventh 14 Circuit. To support this proposition, in both the 15 decision in this case and the preceding Podriguez
16 decision, they cited a total of eight cases, I believe, 17 that occurred over some 20 years. In only one of these 18 cases was there an actual comment on the defendant's 19 failure to testify which the Seventh Circuit found was 20 inadvertent.

21 In two of the cases, they found that there was 22 no violation of Griffin. In the remaining cases, they 23 found that remarks like "undisputed" or "uncontested"
24 transgressed this indistinct line that I have discussed
25 previously, and therefore constituted what I would term

1 technical violations of Griffin. You simply cannot use 2 a supervisory power as a prophylaxis, assuming it was 3 otherwise amenable, as a prophylaxis for prohibiting 4 unintended misconduct. This was the essence of Judge
5 Larson's dissent in Rodriguez. Inadvertent remarks 6 aren't subject to a didactic lesson.

7 In response to Justice Stevens' question 8 concerning whether the phrase "substantial rights" would 9 preclude application of the Constitutional harmless
10 error standard in this case, or in any other case
11 involving Constitutional errors, no, the substantial 12 relates not to the nature of the right but to the nature 13 of the injury. If substantial right were construed to 14 implicate the nature of the right involved, no
15 Constitutional error could ever be deemed harmless, 16 because they are all substantial.

17 QUESTION: Well, that doesn't follow at all.
18 It would mean no Constitutional error would be covered 19 by the harmless error statute. It could still be deemed 20 harmless under Chapman against California under the 21 reasoning of that opinion, which did not rely on the 22 harmless error statute.

23 MR. DE PUE: No, it didn't rely on the 24 harmless error statute, but it certainly said, let the 25 statute and the principles embodied in that statute

1 apply to errors of a Constitutional magnitude, which are 2 invariably substantial rights.

3 QUESTION: It did not say -- I just reread it
4 -- that the principles of that statute applied. It said
5 there is a Constitutional harmless error statute which 6 they formulated in that case.

7 MR. DE PUE: And this Court has repeatedly 8 applied, of course, the Constitutional harmless error
9 doctrine to errors of a Constitutional magnitude.

10 Justice Brennan asked me before whether the 11 court has ever held that it can override a statute under 12 its supervisory power. In both Palermo and in National 13 City Lines, the court said precisely that, that it could 14 not.

15 Thank you.

16 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well. Thank you,
17 gentlemen. The case is submitted.

18 (Whereupon, at 10:51 o'clock a.m., the case in 19 the above-entitled matter was submitted.)

20

21

22

23

24

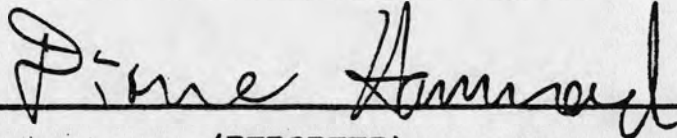

25

CERTIFICATION

Alderson Reporting Company, Inc., hereby certifies that the attached pages represent an accurate transcription of electronic sound recording of the oral argument before the Supreme Court of the United States in the Matter of:
UNITED STATES, Petitioner v. KELVIN HASTING ET AL #81-1463

and that these attached pages constitute the original transcript of the proceedings for the records of the court.

BY

A handwritten signature in cursive script, appearing to read "P. H. Anderson", written over a horizontal line.

(REPORTER)

RECEIVED
SUPREME COURT, U.S.
MARSHALS OFFICE

1982 DEC 14 AM 10 28