2 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments
3 next in Local 926, International Union of Operating 4 Engineers, AFL-CIO, against Jones.

5 Mr. Gold, you may proceed whenever you are 6 ready.

7 ORAL ARGUMENT OF LAURENCE GOLD, ESQ., 8 ON BEHALF OF THE APPELLANTS

9 MR. GOLD: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice, and 10 may it please the Court, the procedural history of this 11 case is set out at Pages 2 through 6 of our brief, the 12 blue brief, and I will very briefly summarize that 13 history.

14 This matter began when Mr. Jones filed a 15 charge with the Atlanta Regional Office of the National 16 Labor Relations Board against Local 926 of the Operating 17 Engineers. The language of the charge is set out at 18 Pages 2 and 3 of our brief. The allegation is that the 19 union violated Sections 8(b)(1)(A) and 8(b)(1)(B) of the 20 National Labor Relations Act as amended, the sections 21 prohibiting certain forms of restraint and coercion.

22 The regional director investigated that charge
23 and issued a letter opinion stating that he would not 24 file a complaint --

25 QUESTION: Mr. Gold, is it possible to tell

1 from that letter whether or not he took his action on 2 the basis of no evidence, or that it was the type of 3 thing that the board didn't go into?

4 MR. GOLD: It appears to us from the language
5 he used that he found the evidence insufficient to find 6 that the union had caused the discharge, that he found 7 the evidence insufficient to find that the union had 8 restrained or coerced the employer, that he found that 9 the union had participated in discussions with the 10 employer concerning who should be a supervisor on this 11 job, and all of these questions are of the very essence
12 of Section 8(b)(1), and what is designedly left 13 unregulated and is permitted by Section 8(b)(1) so that 14 it would be our view that he was not taking the 15 position, this is none of our business, but rather, was 16 taking the position that this was not the type of 17 activity which warranted the issuance of a complaint.

18 QUESTION: Was review available to Jones, of 19 course?

20 MR. GOLD: Yes, Your Honor. The next point I 21 was going to make is that the board, as this Court has 22 recognized, has adopted a very rigorous internal system
23 of determining when to exercise prosecutorial discretion
24 on behalf of charging parties, and that includes not 25 only an investigation and determination at the regional

1 level, but a review at the national level. The last 2 line of the regional director's decision here is that 3 Form NLRB 4938, Procedure for Filing an Appeal, is 4 attached. The appeal period expires at the close of 5 business on August 1, 1978, and no appeal was taken.

6 QUESTION: Does he have any other relief than 7 that?

8 MR. GOLD: The -- I think the short answer
9 under the decisions is no. The courts of appeals are 10 uniform that there is no jurisdiction in the courts to 11 review the general counsel's exercise of his authority 12 to institute complaints any more than there is to review 13 a United States Attorney's determination not to 14 prosecute an alleged crime.

15 Rather than going to the NLRB general counsel, 16 the -- Mr. Jones went to the state courts of Georgia.
17 He filed a lawsuit alleging that the union had violated
18 the Georgia law prohibiting tortious interference with 19 employment relations. The complaint which begins by 20 alleging that he had been a union member and had dropped 21 his union membership, and goes on to allege this 22 interference with employment relationships, is set out
23 at Pages 4 and 5 of our brief.

24 He also sued the employer, and in addition he 25 alleged a violation of the Georgia right to work law.

1 All parties moved to dismiss the complaint on the ground
2 that this is the type of matter within the exclusive 3 jurisdiction of the National Labor Relations Board under 4 the Garmon Rule articulated by this Court. The trial
5 court agreed. The Georgia appellate court took the 6 view, as those courts have taken in the past, that the 7 tort of interference with employment relations is not 8 pre-empted either for supervisors or for employees in 9 that state.

10 The union invoked both this Court's appellate 11 jurisdiction and the certiorari jurisdiction, and the 12 court in setting the case for plenary consideration 13 reserved the question of jurisdiction.

14 I unfortunately from my own standpoint have to 15 be very brief indeed on the question of appellate 16 jurisdiction. We have confessed in our papers that 17 there is no appellate jurisdiction. We reviewed this 18 matter after the court's order, and that is our view, 19 and we felt it our obligation to state it 20 straightforwardly.

21 We do believe that this case is properly here 22 on certiorari. It is our substantive position that the 23 Georgia court's rule is squarely contrary to the rule 24 stated by this Court in the Borden and Perko cases in 25 373 U.S. The argument made by respondents is that we

1 haven't shown a sufficient conflict between Georgia law
2 and this Court's law to warrant certiorari. We do not 3 understand how we could show a clearer conflict.

4 Perko, like this case, is a case in which a 5 supervisor alleged that a union interfered with his 6 employee -- employment relationship. The only 7 difference between that case and this case is that Mr.
8 Perko didn't even start down the road of exhausting 9 Labor Board procedures, but rather went directly to 10 court. Tort claimed in that case and the tort claimed 11 in this case are the same. The union's conduct in both 12 cases is the same, and this Court, as we fully developed 13 in our brief in Perko, held that the tort of 14 interference with employment relations in situations of 15 this kind is pre-emptive.

16 QUESTION: Mr. Gold, as between you and Ms.
17 Stillman, have you divided up the responsibility for 18 talking about the particular sections of the Act and 19 whether conduct was pre-empted?

20 MR. GOLD: Yes. I have four or five more 21 minutes. I was going to develop why under the scheme of 22 the Act as a whole this tort is pre-empted. Ms.
23 Stillman was going to develop what the Labor Board's --

24 QUESTION: Let me know when you are ready for 25 questions.

1 MR. GOLD: Any time, Your Honor.

2 QUESTION: Okay.

3 MR. GOLD: Ms. Stillman was going to develop 4 what the exact nature of the Labor Board's regulation,
5 scheme of regulation is in this area, because one prong
6 of our argument is that this is an area where there is a 7 substantial body of Labor Board regulation, and 8 therefore even if one assumes that we look only at the 9 arguably prohibited aspect of Garman, this is, as Perko 10 holds, an area where the particular system of 11 procedures, rules, and remedies stated in the Labor Act 12 pre-empts state law.

13 QUESTION: Well, I will ask you, and you tell 14 me if I should ask Mrs. Stillman rather than you.

15 Why does this conduct violate the 8(b)(1)(A), 16 making it unfair labor practice for a union to coerce 17 employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in 18 Section 7, when the individual was a supervisor?

19 MR. GOLD: Well, the 8(b)(1) has two parts.
20 The Labor Board takes the view that where, and this is 21 particularly true in the construction industry, you have 22 people who move back and forth between supervisory and 23 employee status, union restraint or coercion of an 24 employer based on the union or non-union status of a 25 supervisor violates the employee's rights, because for

1 the same kind of demonstration effect this Court relied 2 on in cases like American Broadcasting Company versus 3 Writers' Guild.

4 QUESTION: Are there two different lines for 5 that Board rule, one being if it can happen to him, it
6 can happen to me, that type of thing? Hasn't the Board
7 just retreated from that aspect in the Parker Robb 8 decision?

9 MR. GOLD: Not from that aspect so far as we 10 can tell, because they cited and reaffirmed Taladiga 11 Cotton, which this Court relied on in Perko, and which 12 is part and parcel --

13 QUESTION: But the reason they withdrew at 14 least a little in Parker Robb, isn't it the feeling that 15 they were really putting an end run around the exemption
16 of supervisors in the Act if they went further?

17 MR. GOLD: We can hardly say that we want the 18 Board to push further and further into this area, but 19 the discussion we are having certainly demonstrates that 20 this is arguably prohibited.

21 QUESTION: Yes, certainly arguably, but do you 22 think that your best case is on arguably, that if we 23 were to take it on ourselves to decide, is this in fact 24 prohibited, and we came to the conclusion, no, it is not 25 in fact prohibited, that you would then have to rely on

1 the arguably prohibited aspect?

2 MR. GOLD: Well, our view is, and this is the 3 one point I do want to stress before I allow Ms.
4 Stillman her time, that in the area of the extent to 5 which unions can have an impact on supervisors' 6 employment rights, the logic of the entire Act is, as 7 shown by the use of the words "restraint" and "coercion"
8 and by the whole theme of the 1947 debates on the status 9 of supervisors, is that employers should have very 10 substantial protections in being able to make whatever 11 judgments they want on how they treat supervisors.

12 As I am sure you are well aware, under the 13 Beasley case, the employer cannot be held under a state 14 right to work law for firing somebody for joining a 15 union or refusing to join a union if that person is a 16 supervisor, as just one example of the great freedom 17 that employers have.

18 Given the logic of that situation, we believe 19 that a union certainly can in the interests of its own 20 members ask an employer not to have a certain person as 21 a supervisor and not to have him do certain supervisory 22 tasks, and if that is true, certainly to the extent a 23 union is not engaging in restraint and coercion and is 24 limiting itself to such activity, the area is either 25 arguably protected or designedly left unregulated.

1 And thus, even if it were to be plainly and 2 unequivocally established and taken as established that 3 the union did not violate 8(b)(1), it would not preclude 4 the conclusion that a Georgia determination that the 5 union committed this tort works the greatest possible
6 interference with the federal scheme, namely, a state
7 interdiction of that which Congress allowed to happen,
8 and which in its very extensive -- which in Congress's 9 very extensive consideration of how to regulate 10 union-management relations with regard to supervisors, 11 it did not make an unfair labor practice.

12 QUESTION: Well, as you see it, then, there 13 are three bright squares in this area. One is the 14 actually prohibited. The other is the arguably 15 prohibited, and the other is the designedly left free.

16 MR. GOLD: Yes, and whenever a state tort 17 action focuses on precisely the same facts and 18 circumstances that the board would consider in 19 determining which of those boxes to put alleged conduct, 20 then the state action is pre-empted.

21 QUESTION: Well, of course, does that fully 22 explain our Sears decision? There the board would have 23 taken into consideration the same facts had they been 24 brought to its attention by another party.

25 MR. GOLD: In Sears, there was an added factor

1 which is not here, namely, the consideration that there
2 was no way to secure the -- a board determination or a
3 general counsel's determination. There was no unfair
4 labor practice which the individual could invoke. Here, 5 the critical inquiry, has the union restrained,
6 restrained or coerced, or has it not, is as open to this 7 supervisor as it is to any employee and any 8(a)(1) or 8 8(a)(3) or 8(b)(1) or 8(b)(2). The door is open. There 9 has never been a case that I know of, and there would be 10 nothing left of the doctrine, I would suggest, if in 11 that situation where the door to the general counsel is 12 open, it was nonetheless held that the state courts were 13 also an alternative forum.

14 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mrs. Stillman.

15 ORAL ARGUMENT OF ELINOR HADLEY STILLMAN, ESQ.,

16 ON BEHALF OF THE NLRB AS AMICUS CURIAE

17 MS. STILLMAN: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it 18 please the Court, it is the board's position that the 19 trial court judge in this case did exactly the right
20 thing in finding that the complaint, the state action 21 was pre-empted in dismissing the complaint, because, as 22 he said, I am being asked to take a second look at the 23 same matter that the board has looked at here, and in 24 fact has resolved in manners displeasing to the 25 plaintiff.

1 We have explained in our brief -- We addressed 2 our brief mainly to the complaint allegation, which was,
3 there is malicious interference with contract here
4 because the union coerced and intimidated the company
5 into firing him. That is what the complaint said, and 6 that seemed to be the theory in the motion to dismiss or 7 affirm.

8 They are now saying, well, we don't have to 9 show coercion and intimidation of the employer. We can 10 win in the Georgia court if we just show simple 11 interference, just knowingly procured breach of 12 contract, and that they say is not a matter for the 13 board or not a matter with which the board is 14 concerned.

15 QUESTION: Well, the superior court dismissed 16 the employer, didn't they --

17 MS. STILLMAN: Yes.

18 QUESTION: -- saying that under any theory,
19 you couldn't hold the employer liable.

20 MS. STILLMAN: He is totally free to do what 21 -- and that raises the interesting question, Justice 22 Rehnquist, of what happens if an employer wanting to 23 make a decision about a supervisor calls in the union
24 and asks for the union's advice. Is the employer
25 inducing the union to induce a breach of contract then

1 if he decides to follow the suggestions of the union
2 agent?

3 QUESTION: Well, I suppose other than whatever 4 prohibitions may be placed on it by conflicting federal 5 law, Georgia is free to fashion its tort law --

6 MS. STILLMAN: Yes, yes, yes.

7 QUESTION: -- and malicious interference --

8 MS. STILLMAN: But it does seem to us that 9 elements critical to the Georgia tort are also resolved
10 by the board in considering 8(b)(1)(A) and 8(b)(1)(B) 11 and in fact were resolved by the regional director in 12 this case, and I would like here -- first let me say our 13 brief addresses mainly 8(b)(1)(B), because it is quite 14 clear that when the regional director said, this union 15 did not coerce the company, that they should not be able 16 to go over to the state court then and say that they 17 coerced the company.

18 But the regional director also said, as Mr.
19 Gold pointed out, the union did not cause the 20 discharge.

21 QUESTION: Are you saying that -- so supposing 22 that the regional director were to make a finding, a 23 mistaken finding as it turned out, in an area which 24 wasn't even -- which wasn't designedly left free, wasn't 25 in fact prohibited, and wasn't arguably prohibited, but

1 he was just sticking his nose into things that the board 2 really wouldn't have authorized him to go ahead with,
3 and he made a finding on some facts that were never 4 appealed.

5 MS. STILLMAN: Well, that is not present here, 6 because the finding that he did make is relevant to this 7 case.

8 QUESTION: Yes.

9 MS. STILLMAN: I suppose if he was on a 10 complete frolic and detour --

11 QUESTION: So it isn't a type of res judicata 12 or collateral estoppel charge, is it?

13 MS. STILLMAN: Well, that's -- but that's 14 embodied to some extent in, I think, the policy reasons
15 here. I would like, Justice Rehnquist, to touch a little 16 more on what you were exploring with Mr. Gold concerning 17 the board's theory of violations of 8(b)(1)(A) in the 18 construction of this -- because that is very relevant to 19 this case, and we didn't emphasize this much in our 20 brief because we thought their theory was intimidation 21 and coercion of the employer.

22 The board has held -- now, I am not talking at 23 first with respect to a supervisory position. I am 24 talking now with respect to, let's say, an employee
25 job. The board has held that when a union has a hiring

1 hall, when the union has control over jobs out there,
2 and employees have to come through the hiring hall to 3 get jobs, it is, of course, perfectly proper for the 4 union, if it is running its hiring hall properly,
5 non-arbitrarily, to have that kind of control, but if a 6 business agent takes action with respect to somebody's 7 job opportunity on some arbitrary basis -- let's say 8 he's very hostile to the man, he says, you have been 9 speaking out in union meetings in a way that I don't 10 like, and you're not going to -- I'm going to put you 11 down at the bottom of the list, and you're not going to 12 be treated as fairly as other people -- well, the board
13 says this is an 8(b)(1)(A), because this is intimidating 14 that man in his right to be not a docile union member if 15 he doesn't want to. He has a Section 7 right not to 16 have to toe the line, not to have to curry the favor of 17 the business agent. And so that is an 8(b)(1)(A).

18 Now, what happens -- Now, of course,
19 supervisors ordinarily wouldn't have that right, because 20 they don't enjoy rights under Section 7. They are 21 excluded from the definition of employee. But what 22 happens in the construction industry is, you have 23 workers coming through these hiring halls, and they may 24 on one job get a referral out to a foreman's job, on the 25 next -- that job finishes. Typically these jobs don't

1 last forever. They may be short-term. He comes back to 2 the hall for another referral. The next time there may 3 be no foreman's job. He may take a job as an employee, 4 as a worker.

5 QUESTION: That wouldn't be true as to Mr.
6 Jones, at least in the facts here. He was moving from a 7 supervisory position to another supervisory position.

8 MS. STILLMAN: Your Honor, we are going on the 9 complaint here, and I don't know what those facts might 10 be. In fact, the deposition, if you want to get into 11 that, although I don't think that is a reviewable record
12 here, said that in the past he had taken employee jobs, 13 and there is no -- certainly no -- it can't be argued 14 that he wouldn't be dependent on the union in the future
15 for employee jobs.

16 What the board says about people in the 17 construction industry is, these men are dependent on the 18 union hiring hall to get jobs, and when the union agent 19 interferes -- interferes even by just asking the 20 employer, not necessarily coercing the employer, 21 demonstrates to the workman, I can interfere with your 22 job, he intimidates that workman in his status of, and 23 here I am using a phrase of Judge Roaney's in the Local 24 725 decision, which enforced the board's order in Local 25 725 Plumbers, Judge Roaney said, it interferes with the 1 status of that man as a once and future employee.

2 Now, that was arguably -- that violation was 3 presented arguably to the regional director when this 4 man came to the regional office, and what the regional 5 director said in his letter was not, I am dismissing the 6 8(b)(1)(A) charge because I find that you never were an 7 employee. He said the union didn't cause your 8 discharge.

9 That is relevant to the finding of an 10 8(b)(1)(A), and if the union didn't cause the discharge, 11 if the business agent didn't cause the discharge, there 12 can't be any coercion of the man. And that's what he 13 said here. And it seems anomalous to us that this 14 person should be then able, that the appellee should 15 then be able to go to the Georgia court and say, I want
16 you to find a malicious interference with contract 17 because the union did cause my discharge.

18 And it is a very tricky area. If there was 19 not an 8(b)(1)(A) here, if this is in the -- then we get 20 into the Teamsters against Morton -- Congress focused 21 upon the did not prescribe area, and you are confronted 22 then with the anomaly that the man, if he says the union 23 coerced the employer, he goes to the board and gets an 24 injunctive remedy, and if the union didn't do that, he 25 goes to the state court and gets punitive damages.

1 Now, that doesn't seem a very rational aspect
2 of any scheme Congress could have had in mind.

3 QUESTION: May I ask you one question, Ms.
4 Stillman? Supposing we had a case, and I recognize in 5 your view we don't, which did not involve the 6 construction industry or a person who was a past or 7 future employee, but a clear supervisor, and no argument
8 about it, and that therefore there was no Section 7
9 right involved. What would your view be in that case?

10 MS. STILLMAN: It's --

11 QUESTION: What would the board's view be?

12 MS. STILLMAN: I am reluctant to commit the 13 board, but I would say that this particular rationale I
14 have given you for the construction industry --

15 QUESTION: That wouldn't apply.

16 MS. STILLMAN: -- the board has not applied 17 that theory outside the construction industry, so far as 18 I know. They are talking here -- But I think they would 19 apply it anywhere where you had a situation where the 20 union -- where those fluctuations of status in the 21 union, the union's show of power in one area would tend 22 to intimidate him as an employee.

23 QUESTION: What I understand you to be saying 24 is, you would not contend for pre-emption if the theory
25 of the charge were an interference with the employer's

1 right to select his supervisors for his own bargaining
2 representatives.

3 MS. STILLMAN: Excuse me? I am not --

4 QUESTION: Your theory would not apply if the 5 theory of the -- of the charge before the labor board
6 had been based on a claim that there was an interference 7 with the employer's right to pick his own bargaining --

8 MS. STILLMAN: Yes, the 8(b)(1)(A) theory
9 would not apply.

10 QUESTION: Yes.

11 MS. STILLMAN: 8(b)(1)(B) would still be 12 active here, and the whole problem of whether there is a 13 Congressional scheme that is being unbalanced by what 14 the state court is doing. But, yes, this particular 15 8(b)(1)(A) theory that I have outlined to you --

16 QUESTION: Would not fit.

17 MS. STILLMAN: -- would not.

18 QUESTION: And if -- but you would still claim 19 there was -- say there was pre-emption in the 20 hypothetical that I posed, and I think Justice Rehnquist 21 has --

22 MS. STILLMAN: I think on these other -- I
23 think on these other grounds that we've discussed, yes, 24 there would be. As I think has been demonstrated here, 25 this is a very complicated area, and the line between

1 what Congress may have intended to permit and what the 2 board can reasonably in applying the scheme prohibit is 3 just very close, and to let the state court into this 4 with the punitive damage remedy just does not seem in 5 accord with this Court's pre-emption decisions.

6 QUESTION: Suppose the plaintiff were the vice 7 president of the company, and the union had gotten him
8 fired. Would there be pre-emption?

9 MS. STILLMAN: Vice president. That is not 10 this type of person. That is not the type of person 11 that had been involved in the board's construction
12 industry cases, and probably that person -- if the union
13 had no leverage over that person, and that person had no
14 dependence on the union, this 8(b)(1)(A), or no
15 possibility of dependence on the union, this 8(b)(1)(A)
16 theory I am outlining to you probably would not apply, 17 but 8(b)(1)(B) would certainly still apply, and as I 18 say, these other considerations would.

19 QUESTION: There couldn't be pre-emption in an 20 area where there was no jurisdiction at all, could 21 there? Would the board have any jurisdiction over the 22 vice president? Make it the president of the company, 23 to make it a little clearer.

24 MS. STILLMAN: Excuse me. Well, there
25 wouldn't be on the arguably prohibited, arguably

1 protected area, but this Court has said in Teamsters
2 against Morton and IAM against Wisconsin Employment
3 Relations Commission that sometimes you have a very 4 finely developed Congressional scheme which can be 5 disturbed even if it isn't arguably --

6 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Gore?

7 ORAL ARGUMENT OF ROBERT F. GORE, ESQ.,

8 ON BEHALF OF THE APPELLEE

9 MR. GORE: Mr. Chief Justice, may it please
10 the Court, I would like to address myself very briefly 11 to the jurisdictional issue. The real question is, is 12 this case important enough to warrant a review by this 13 Court on the merits. It is plaintiff's position that it 14 is not. It is our position that the Georgia court of 15 appeals, after carefully reviewing this Court's prior 16 pre-emption holdings, properly decided the case.

17 It held that this case fit within one of the 18 exceptions to the pre-emption doctrine. In fact, in the 19 exceptions laid down in the Garmon case itself, it held 20 that because he was a supervisor, the plaintiff was a 21 supervisor, it was only of peripheral concern to the 22 Act, and that the issue was deeply seated in local 23 feelings -- there is a citizen of Georgia who has been 24 deprived of his right to work -- and that there was 25 little likelihood of interference with the federal labor

1 laws because the federal agency had already had a look 2 at it, and it went on to hold that there were different 3 causes of action in the state and federal forums.

4 It did not create a new exception to the 5 pre-emption document. It found a limited fact situation
6 where a supervisor who has pursued his derivative
7 federal remedy and was unsuccessful could then file a 8 state court lawsuit. It doesn't open the floodgates to 9 a lot of state court actions, and the bottom line is 10 that the Georgia court of appeals properly applied the 11 law and reached the proper decision.

12 This case does not merit review.

13 QUESTION: I would suppose you would argue
14 that even if the Georgia court might be wrong, it
15 nevertheless only erroneously applied settled 16 principles.

17 MR. GORE: I believe that is correct.

18 QUESTION: And that we don't usually -- just 19 take cases to correct error.

20 MR. GORE: I believe that is correct, Justice
21 White. I think that the court of appeals decision is a 22 little broad in some areas where they pulled some 23 phrases out of various places that could have been 24 tightened up, but I don't think that is appropriate for 25 this Court.

1 I would -- Now, turning to the merits of the 2 case, it is not the plaintiff's position that this case
3 began with his unfair labor practice charges. It began 4 when the union interfered with his contract of 5 employment as a supervisor. Now, the union defendants 6 and the NLRB, they contend that the Perko case, which is 7 almost identical with this case, controls this case. We 8 agree.

9 We disagree, however, on what Perko stands
10 for. I think we would all agree that the supervisor 11 must initially take his claim to the federal agency, the 12 NLRB, not because he is protected by the federal Act, 13 because he is not protected by the federal Act, but he 14 must go to the federal agency to avoid any potential 15 conflict between the federal and state laws.

16 QUESTION: Well, that is sort of a strange 17 doctrine of exhaustion of remedies, that you have to 18 exhaust your federal remedies before you can go to the 19 state courts.

20 MR. GORE: Well, yes, Justice Rehnquist, it is 21 a strange doctrine, but it flows from the federal labor 22 policy that they don't want two forums, a federal and a 23 state forum, looking at the same facts where there are 24 potential conflicting decisions. Now, we don't believe 25 there is a potential here any more because the federal

1 agency dropped out. The federal interests dropped out.
2 But our position is --

3 QUESTION: Well, to say that the federal 4 agency dropped out and the federal interests dropped out
5 are really two different things. I mean, I would think 6 if you were obligated to go to the board in the first 7 place, that the board and the national labor policy have 8 some interest, if the board decides that the evidence 9 doesn't support the making of a charge, but if the 10 evidence had supported the making of a charge, we would 11 bring one, that they have some interest in having the 12 matter left alone by other entities.

13 MR. GORE: Well, the federal interest that is 14 involved here is the protection of certain persons under 15 the Act, namely, employees. They are protected by 16 Section 8(b)(1)(A). And employers. They are protected 17 by 8(b)(1)(B). Now, if there is no evidence or 18 insufficient evidence to show that these people who are 19 protected by the Act, if their rights have not been 20 violated, federal jurisdiction no longer exists.

21 QUESTION: Well, unions are protected by the 22 Act, too.

23 MR. GORE: Yes, sir, but not in -- we are 24 talking here of a union unfair labor practice, so I have 25 limited it to that --

1 QUESTION: Oh, I see. This context.

2 MR. GORE: Yes.

3 QUESTION: Well, do you think -- Suppose a
4 state had a labor law. Maybe it does. And suppose it 5 almost mirrors the federal Act. And once -- And the 6 board or the general counsel refuses to issue a 7 complaint. So the complaint is then filed with the 8 state board.

9 MR. GORE: If they are mirror Acts of each
10 other, he can't -- the supervisor in that instance --

11 QUESTION: Why not? Why not? The federal 12 interest has been satisfied.

13 MR. GORE: Well, does the state act protect 14 supervisors, I guess would be the real criterion. If 15 the state act goes further, then it would be --

16 QUESTION: Well, no, but then your -- I don't 17 want to get off on the supervisor ground, because that 18 isn't the ground the general counsel dealt with. He 19 said there is no evidence that the union has caused the 20 discharge, and then the -- then the employee or the 21 supervisor, whatever he is, files with the state board 22 and says that the general counsel didn't really know
23 what he was talking about. Let's really have a hearing 24 here and go at it. And the state board goes ahead.

25 MR. GORE: I think the state board --

1 QUESTION: Why not? Why not? The federal
2 interest has been exhausted, you say.

3 MR. GORE: Yes, sir, but the state law would 4 be precluded there by Section 14(a).

5 QUESTION: Why? Why?

6 MR. GORE: Because of Section 14(a) of the 7 Act.

8 QUESTION: Why? Why is that?

9 MR. GORE: 14(a) says that no national or 10 local law relating to collective bargaining will make 11 supervisors to be treated as employees.

12 QUESTION: Well, I know. That is a different 13 ground. Now you are moving to the supervisor ground.
14 Suppose he wasn't a supervisor at all, and the same
15 thing happened. He went to the board. The board said
16 no, no evidence. And then he goes to the state board, 17 and the state board says, there is plenty of evidence 18 here. He couldn't do that, could he?

19 MR. GORE: No, sir, but in Georgia, with the 20 same facts here, you've made him an employee now.

21 QUESTION: Yes.

22 MR. GORE: And the union has interfered here.
23 When the union --

24 QUESTION: Arguably they've interfered, but 25 the board has decided he didn't.

1 MR. GORE: But it would have never gotten to 2 the board because of the state right to work law. What 3 would happen, when management and the union got together 4 and agreed that they would do away with this job because 5 he was non-union, they reached an agreement, and that 6 was --

7 QUESTION: Well, yes, but the -- but the board 8 has rejected the charge, said the union had nothing to 9 do with getting him fired.

10 MR. GORE: But that's not the board's area 11 where it should be looking. It should be looking at 12 protected persons. The supervisor is not protected.

13 QUESTION: Well, all right. You go ahead.

14 MR. GORE: Well, it is the plaintiff's 15 position that the fundamental issue in this case is not 16 whether pre-emption took place, but whether an unfair
17 labor practice proceeding is a supervisor's exclusive 18 forum to seek relief from union interference. It is the 19 plaintiff's position that if the NLRB finds that the 20 union's actions did not violate the rights of persons 21 protected by the federal law, employees or employers,
22 then the supervisor is free to pursue his private cause 23 of action in state court.

24 This is true for two reasons. The first, 25 Congress, when it removed federal protections from

1 supervisors, did not intend to give the unions license
2 to violate supervisors' rights to employment contracts.
3 And secondly, the causes of action in the state and 4 federal forums would be different.

5 Now, when the Act was amended in 1947,
6 Congress added Section 14(a) in direct response to an 7 NLRB holding that supervisors were employees. 14(a) 8 takes supervisors out from under the protections of the 9 Act. The question, we believe, is, what did Congress 10 intend? Congress intended that employers were to have 11 the -- could require complete supervisor loyalty. They 12 were not required to retain a supervisor who had divided 13 loyalties.

14 However, neither the statutory language or the 15 legislative history of Section 14(a) support the 16 proposition that supervisors lost all their common law 17 rights. They lost certain rights vis-a-vis their 18 employer, but they did not lose all their rights against 19 other parties. It is respectfully submitted that 20 Congress did not intend to give unions or any other 21 party a license to interfere with a supervisor's 22 employment contract. Supervisors retain their common 23 law rights.

24 However, to accommodate federal labor law
25 policy, these common law rights are held in abeyance.

1 Now, the second reason that we believe the 2 unfair labor practice proceedings are not exclusive is 3 because there is different causes of action. Now, both 4 forums deal with the same facts. They both deal with 5 the same union conduct. But their focus is entirely
6 different. There are different elements of proof. Now, 7 the federal law protects employees and employers, and 8 the federal inquiry before the board was, did the union
9 conduct restrain or coerce employees.

10 The plaintiff had no evidence that the 11 employees had been coerced. In fact, there is no 12 evidence in the record that the employees even knew he 13 was there. And the plaintiff had no direct evidence 14 that the union conduct had restrained or coerced his 15 employers. In his statement to the board when 16 specifically asked whether he had any direct evidence, 17 he said he believed the union had coerced the employer,
18 but he did not have any direct evidence.

19 The employer, when queried by the board, said,
20 we were not coerced. Therefore, the federal inquiry, 21 whether employees had been coerced or employers had been 22 coerced, was no longer there. The NLRB no longer had 23 jurisdiction. There was no federal cause of action.
24 And the regional director properly dismissed the 25 plaintiff's charges.

1 Now, the fact is, the plaintiff was still 2 without a job, but that was irrelevant to the federal 3 inquiry. Now, the regional director did say the union 4 didn't cause it, but there was no hearing. His look at 5 the facts said the union didn't cause your discharge.
6 There had been no hearing on it, no discovery, anything 7 that the plaintiff could pursue. But that was 8 irrelevant to the regional director's decision. His 9 decision was that there is no evidence or insufficient 10 evidence to support the theory that the employer was 11 coerced.

12 QUESTION: Are you suggesting that had the 13 regional director investigated further, he would have 14 uncovered evidence?

15 MR. GORE: We have pursued it further in the 16 state court, and we haven't come up with any further 17 evidence, so the answer I don't believe is no -- I 18 believe is no.

19 QUESTION: Well, then, what did you do, just 20 file a complaint and figure that you might come up with 21 some evidence later, and you haven't come up with it?

22 MR. GORE: Well, in taking the depositions,
23 which are not in the record, of some of the management 24 officials, they vehemently denied that they were 25 coerced. Now, we --

1 QUESTION: You don't have to prove coercion,
2 do you?

3 MR. GORE: No, we don't have to prove coercion
4 in the state plan.

5 QUESTION: But it was necessary to prove that 6 in the federal --

7 MR. GORE: Yes, sir.

8 QUESTION: But you don't have to prove 9 coercion. You can still win without proving it.

10 MR. GORE: Exactly right, and that brings us
11 to Paragraph 6 in our complaint. We used the term 12 "coercion," but when we are back at the state trial
13 court, I don't believe we are going to be able to prove 14 coercion.

15 QUESTION: But Georgia malicious interference
16 doesn't require coercion.

17 MR. GORE: No, sir. It has four elements. It 18 has the contract of employment. We have to prove, which 19 I believe we can very easily, that the union defendants
20 knew of this contract. I think that is fairly obvious
21 from the regional director's letter. That the union 22 defendants intentionally interfered with the contract.
23 And that the employer terminated the contract, damaging 24 the plaintiff. That is what we have to prove there.

25 Now, we overpleaded it because we put in

1 coercion in the state cause of action, but whether 2 employees or employers were coerced is irrelevant to our 3 private cause of action.

4 Now, I would like very briefly to review the 5 Sears decision, because in one portion of that decision
6 there was a discussion about different causes of action
7 or the different inquiries.

8 QUESTION: But the -- I take it the submission 9 is that even if you could win under the state cause of 10 action by just proving causation --

11 MR. GORE: Yes, sir.

12 QUESTION: -- rather than coercion --

13 MR. GORE: Yes, sir.

14 QUESTION: -- that the federal law pre-empts
15 that because a union should be free to cause a discharge 16 by non-coercive means? Is that --

17 MR. GORE: No, sir, we do not believe that 18 this is protected activity. What we believe to be the 19 case is that this was a private vendetta by a union 20 official, and he used his union position to block the 21 employment rights of the plaintiff. There is nothing in 22 this record regarding the employee concerns that the 23 plaintiff was going to be a supervisor. The employees 24 didn't even know the plaintiff was going to be a
25 supervisor.

1 There is evidence, however, that the defendant
2 Archer, the union official, objected to the plaintiff's 3 employment because four years earlier, after he and the 4 plaintiff had had a dispute over a job, the plaintiff
5 abandoned the union and went to work for a non-union 6 contractor.

7 Now, the federal law does not protect private 8 vendettas or union blacklisting. Now, the defendant 9 union urges that employees have a protected right to 10 complain about who is a supervisor. In the abstract, 11 that may very well be true, but this is not the case
12 here. The employees didn't even know that the plaintiff
13 was going to be their supervisor. This is strictly a 14 private vendetta. It is not protected activity. And it
15 is a state tort, and properly belongs in the state 16 tort.

17 During the questioning there were some 18 questions regarding the plaintiff's failure to appeal 19 the dismissal of the unfair labor practice charge.
20 Perko requires that the plaintiff initially pursue his 21 relief under the National Labor Relations Act. The 22 plaintiff did. He presented his evidence to the 23 regional director. He had no evidence that the 24 employees had been coerced. He believed that the 25 employer had been coerced. He had no direct evidence.

1 The employer said, I was not coerced.

2 So, since there was no employee coercion, no
3 employer coercion, there was no federal jurisdiction.

4 QUESTION: Yes, but the general counsel did
5 say that there was no causation. Not only there was no 6 coercion, but no causation.

7 MR. GORE: There had been no hearing on that,
8 Justice White.

9 QUESTION: Well, there may not have been, but 10 that is what he said.

11 MR. GORE: But it -- I don't think that is 12 essential to --

13 QUESTION: Well, suppose he had issued a 14 complaint and the board had itself -- there had been a 15 hearing, and the board had decided that there was no 16 causation whatsoever.

17 MR. GORE: We are out of court.

18 QUESTION: Why?

19 MR. GORE: Because we have had our look at the 20 federal law. We have had a hearing on the merits. And 21 I think that --

22 QUESTION: Well, I know, but the federal -- 23 all they had to find in the federal proceeding was that 24 there was no coercion, and that is the --

25 MR. GORE: I think if we had a hearing on the

1 merits, and we took it up to the board, and took it to 2 the court of appeals --

3 QUESTION: Well, is that because of 4 pre-emption, or because of some notion of res judicata?

5 MR. GORE: I think it would be more of res
6 judicata. We have had our day in court.

7 QUESTION: Administrative res judicata?

8 MR. GORE: Well, we would have certainly 9 appealed it on up, but yes, sir. And it is our position 10 that the plaintiff, because the regional director was 11 correct in dismissing the complaint, was not required to 12 appeal on up to the board.

13 I would like to address just a moment to the 14 construction industry argument that is being urged by 15 the NLRB. This is not a construction industry case in 16 regards to the plaintiff. He was a supervisor. True, 17 he worked in the construction industry. He had been a 18 supervisor for almost three years with another employer.
19 Georgia Power went over and hired him away from another 20 employer to come in as a high level supervisor. The 21 discussions they had was, it was going to be an eight to 22 ten-year job. There was no written contract of 23 employment, but it was a long-term employment.

24 The collective bargaining agreement between 25 Georgia Power and the construction trades specifically

1 provides that they have the absolute right to hire who 2 they want as supervisors, and that supervisors don't 3 have to go through the hiring hall.

4 So, the discussion here, they are trying to 5 bring it over into a construction industry scenario when 6 it doesn't really belong there as to this plaintiff.
7 This is a long-term supervisor who was going to be there
8 for a long time but for the union's interference.

9 In summary, it is our position that the --

10 QUESTION: Well, then you really are getting 11 the evidence, aren't you?

12 MR. GORE: I think we are arguing the facts, 13 Mr. Chief Justice. In the record, it shows that they 14 talked in terms of an eight to ten-year employment 15 record, and we have the collective bargaining agreement
16 in the record down at the trial court, that the employer 17 has the absolute right to hire who it wants, and that 18 the supervisors are not to go through the hiring hall.
19 So, as to this supervisor, the plaintiff, I don't 20 believe it is a construction industry case.

21 True, the people who may work under him are 22 going to be going in and out of the hiring hall.

23 In summary, we believe the decision of the 24 Georgia court of appeals does not merit review by this 25 Court. They correctly applied this Court's prior

1 holdings, and they correctly decided the case. However,
2 should the Court decide to review the case on the 3 merits, I would like to draw attention to one sentence
4 in the Lockridge dissent.

5 "Where persons with otherwise justiciable 6 claims cannot obtain a hearing under the law, the law is 7 subject to close scrutiny to discover the circumstances 8 compelling such a result."

9 Now, when the Court closely scrutinizes this 10 law, it will find that Congress did not intend to strip
11 supervisors of their common law rights to seek redress
12 from -- for intentional torts, and that after a 13 supervisor is unsuccessful in obtaining relief under a 14 derivative federal cause of action, he can pursue his 15 own private cause of action in the state courts.

16 QUESTION: Mr. Gore, could I ask you this 17 before the break? Suppose a union goes to an employer 18 and says, I am not coercing you at all, but I just 19 request, do me a good favor and fire this joker, and the 20 employer says, fine, I am always willing to do a favor
21 for the union. The employee then -- Has the union 22 committed an unfair labor practice against the 23 employee?

24 MR. GORE: Was this a supervisor?

25 QUESTION: No.

1 MR. GORE: And this was an employee?
2 QUESTION: Yes.
3 MR. GORE: Yes, I believe it has.
4 QUESTION: Because he has coerced him, hasn't 5 he?
6 MR. GORE: He has -- He has requested that the 7 employer discriminate based on some irrelevant -- well, 8 not irrelevant --
9 QUESTION: So what is the -- what is the 10 unfair labor practice?
11 MR. GORE: That the union has approached the 12 employer and asked him to discriminate against an 13 employee.
14 QUESTION: And if it is found that the union
15 actually did that, there is an unfair labor practice.
16 MR. GORE: Yes, sir.
17 QUESTION: But 8(b)(1)(A), if I am reading my 18 bench memo right, says it is to coerce employees in the 19 exercise of their rights guaranteed in Section 7. Now, 20 the example Justice White gave, I would think it may be 21 coercion, but why is it coercing an employee in their 22 exercise of a right given by Section 7, if the union 23 just says, you know, the union steward just says, this 24 guy ran into my car the other day and I don't like him?
25 MR. GORE: That would not be an unfair labor

1 practice there. I was under possibly the mistaken
2 impression that you were talking about his union
3 affiliation and status.

4 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will resume there at 5 1:00 o'clock.

1 AFTERNOON SESSION

2 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Gold.

3 ORAL ARGUMENT OF LAURENCE GOLD, ESQ.,

4 ON BEHALF OF THE APPELLANTS - REBUTTAL

5 MR. GOLD: Mr. Chief Justice, it is our view
6 that the respondent's argument simply ignores the fact
7 that Congress in 1947 did not only give employers wide 8 areas of freedom with regard to the hire and fire of 9 supervisors, but that Congress also in Section 8(b)(1) 10 regulated union conduct to a substantial extent with 11 regard to what unions can and cannot do in interfering 12 with such employment relations.

13 QUESTION: What if an employee -- what if a 14 supervisor has an agreement like the respondent here
15 apparently was contemplating with the employer for a 16 term of years' employment and that sort of thing, and 17 the employer breaches it. Can the supervisor go into 18 the state court and sue the employer without being 19 defended against on the ground that Congress intended to 20 have employers -- give freedom of action to employers 21 against supervisors?

22 MR. GOLD: My understanding from this Court's 23 decision in Beasley is that the answer is that he cannot 24 go into state court against --

25 QUESTION: That is preposterous.

1 MR. GOLD: -- the employer.

2 QUESTION: Don't you think it's preposterous,
3 putting Beasley to one side?

4 MR. GOLD: We certainly didn't lobby to take 5 supervisors out from under the Act. Congress's view was 6 that employers should have faithful agents and shouldn't 7 be bound by any restrictions. That is why the state 8 right to work laws, even though 14(b) normally gives 9 them precedence, don't take precedent. Obviously, that 10 was the view of the Georgia courts here, because the 11 empty seat is the seat of the employer, and our basic 12 view is that when Congress came to regulating unions, it 13 said, unions may not restrain and coerce employers in 14 that freedom, but it used those limited words, and it 15 did it against the background of an overall system of 16 labor relations where unions can discuss employee 17 concerns with employers, and that it cannot be.

18 It would be in terms of absurdities or 19 paradoxes far greater if the union by exercising that 20 which Congress designedly left unregulated, namely, its 21 right to go in and say to the employer, it is not good 22 labor relations to have this man supervising these 23 employees, opens itself to a state tort action with 24 damages and punitive damages, whereas if it restrains
25 and coerces the employer, you go through the labor board

1 proceeding.

2 As the Court said in Garmon, Congress
3 regulated areas of activity or conduct. One of the 4 areas of activity or conduct was this interplay 5 concerning -- between employers and unions that 6 represent those employers, employees, the job tenure of 7 supervisors. Perko was right when it was decided. This 8 case is indistinguishable from Perko. And neither 9 Congress nor this Court has changed the rules.

10 QUESTION: Mr. Gold, was it necessary for the 11 general counsel to find that the union did not cause the 12 discharge as well as that the union did not coerce the 13 employer?

14 MR. GOLD: Only in one narrow sense. It was 15 probably necessary to make that finding in order not to 16 issue an 8(b)(1)(A) --

17 QUESTION: Exactly.

18 MR. GOLD: -- complaint, but it is irrelevant
19 in our view on the pre-emption question.

20 QUESTION: Coercion.

21 MR. GOLD: Well, on the pre-emption question 22 as well, because it is our view that whether, as in 23 Perko, the individual never goes to the labor board or 24 as in this case, he does go to the labor board, the fact
25 that the labor board determines not to go forward

1 doesn't open the union to a state court proceeding which 2 in all --

3 QUESTION: Is it an unfair labor practice for 4 the union to go around to the employer and convince him
5 non-coercively to discharge an employee, not a
6 supervisor?

7 MR. GOLD: An employee? The board law is that 8 it is an unfair labor practice if the union is acting 9 for irrational reasons.

10 QUESTION: I suppose the board takes the 11 position that a breach of the duty to represent fairly 12 is an unfair labor practice.

13 MR. GOLD: That is right.

14 QUESTION: Yes.

15 MR. GOLD: And the board carries that same 16 irrational reason line over into supervisors under 17 8(b)(1)(A).

18 QUESTION: Yes.

19 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.
20 The case is submitted.

21 (Whereupon, at 1:06 p.m., the case in the 22 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
