ORAL ARGUMENT OF	PAGE
LARRY E. FORRESTER, ESQ., on behalf of the Petitioner.	3
SAMUEL A. ALITO, JR. ESQ., on behalf of the National Labor Relations Board as amicus curiae.	22
CECIL DAVENPORT, ESQ., on behalf of Respondents	32

1 inception of the strike was an unfair labor practice and 2 that it violated Belknap's duty to bargain with the 3 union.

4           In July of that year, before a hearing on 5 these unfair labor practice matters before the Labor
6 Board occurred, the regional director for the Labor
7 Board in Cincinnati directed the parties to the labor 8 dispute to attend a meeting at the regional's office in 9 Cincinnati and encouraged the parties to resume
10 negotiations to resolve the labor dispute. As a result 11 of this meeting, concessions were made by both parties 12 concerning the terms of their collective bargaining 13 agreement. There were compromises made by the union and 14 by the employer.

15           The ultimate issue between the parties that 16 separated them was the status of the strikers vis a vis
17 the status of the strike replacements. It was Belknap's 18 position that the strike replacements would be 19 retained. The union, of course, contended that the 20 strikers should be returned to work. The parties were 21 unable to make an agreement on this issue.

22           The regional director for the Labor Board 23 suggested a compromise whereby Belknap would agree to 24 recall 35 striking employees per month, even though this 25 may require that the replacement employees be laid off.

1 On the basis of this compromise, the parties reached a 2 strike settlement agreement and settled the strike.
3 Part and parcel of this settlement was the withdrawal of 4 unfair labor practice charges by Belknap and by the 5 Teamsters Union. Also, related state court litigation 6 concerning strike violence during the course of the 7 strike was dismissed. All pending litigation was 8 dismissed in conjunction with the strike settlement 9 agreement.

10           After this settlement agreement was 11 consummated, the replacements, represented by 12 Respondents herein, sued in state court, contending that 13 their layoff occasioned by the terms of the strike
14 settlement agreement constituted breaches of state law 15 concerning misrepresentation with regard to offering 16 them permanent employment in the first place, and also 17 breaches of contract with regard to terminating their 18 employment after they had been offered permanent 19 employment.

20           The trial court dismissed these state claims 21 upon the grounds that they were preempted by the 22 National Labor Relations Act. The Court of Appeals of 23 Kentucky reversed, contending that the subject matter 24 concerned a matter of compelling state interest and was 25 of only peripheral concern to the National Labor

1 Relations Board.

2           The Supreme Court of Kentucky ultimately 3 denied discretionary review, and it raises the issue for 4 this Court whether or not the state court claims are 5 preempted under the National Labor Relations Act.

6           QUESTION: Mr. Forrester, may I ask, do you
7 know of any cases in which an action for failure 8 properly to represent has been brought against a union 9 by strike replacements?

10           MR. FORRESTER: I know of no such case,
11 Justice Brennan.

12           QUESTION: Neither Board nor state court or 13 federal court?

14           MR. FORRESTER: I know of no such case.

15           QUESTION: Yes.

16           QUESTION: At that point the union -- did it 17 owe any duties to anybody in the bargaining unit at that 18 point?

19           MR. FORRESTER: The union owed the duty of 20 fair representation to all members of the bargaining
21 unit. Strike replacements are of course members --

22           QUESTION: But wasn't this in connection with 23 negotiating a new agreement?

24           MR. FORRESTER: Yes. Regardless of the 25 existence of a collective bargaining agreement, the 1 union owes duties to everybody in the bargaining unit.

2 QUESTION: Well, even people who are hired as
3 replacements?

4 MR. FORRESTER: Replacements have to be 5 considered members of a bargaining unit if they are -- 6 they stand in the stead of the strikers. The union 7 represents everyone in the bargaining unit.

8 QUESTION: And yet, Mr. Forrester, how is this 9 striking union ever going to meet that duty? If it 10 exercises or discharges it in favor of the strike 11 replacements, then isn't it denying fair representation 12 to the strikers?

13 MR. FORRESTER: Well, there is certainly a 14 conflict among the strikers and the replacement 15 workers. But the --

16 QUESTION: Well, that's why I wonder. I've 17 just never heard of a suit by strike replacements.

18 QUESTION: Well, this is -- was there a suit
19 against the union?

20 MR. FORRESTER: There was no suit against the 21 union by the strike replacements.

22 QUESTION: Not here, though. Not here. I 23 mean, this suit is against --

24 MR. FORRESTER: This suit is against Belknap.

25 QUESTION: Yes, against the company.

1 MR. FORRESTER: That's correct.

2 QUESTION: Well, when these people were hired 3 was there any kind of a contract that would preclude 4 their being discharged, with or without cause?

5 MR. FORRESTER: There was no such contract.
6 Belknap had to characterize their replacement status as 7 permanent in order to comply with the requirements of 8 federal law.

9 QUESTION: Well, they did make the promise --

10 MR. FORRESTER: They did make the promise.

11 QUESTION: -- you're going to be a permanent 12 employee.

13 QUESTION: And they reiterated it.

14 MR. FORRESTER: They did reiterate it.

15 QUESTION: And they also alleged fraud.

16 MR. FORRESTER: They did allege fraud, but 17 that was not the basis upon which the Court of Appeals 18 determined that they could sue in state court. The 19 Court of Appeals said, by merely saying that you 20 promised them permanent replacement status and then 21 entering in a strike settlement agreement permitting 22 them to be discharged --

23 QUESTION: You've broken your contract.

24 MR. FORRESTER: -- they've stated a cause of 25 action.

1 Under federal law, however, if we do not 2 characterize their status as permanent, then we may not 3 assert their employment status against any striker who 4 desires to return at any time, and for that reason we 5 are --

6 QUESTION: Well, but you don't -- that doesn't 7 -- that's just a privilege. That isn't an obligation 8 which you have to --

9 MR. FORRESTER: Well, it's a substantial 10 economic weapon.

11 QUESTION: Well, it may be, but you're not 12 obliged to, in hiring replacements, to say they're going 13 to be permanent.

14 MR. FORRESTER: Well, we are privileged to do
15 so under Mackay Radio.

16 QUESTION: All right, you're privileged, but 17 you're not obligated to.

18 MR. FORRESTER: And if we do not so 19 characterize it, we do not have that economic weapon.

20 QUESTION: Supposing, Mr. Forrester, that an 21 employer in the midst of what he knows is an unfair 22 labor practice strike wants to get replacement workers, 23 and suppose he gives each of the replacement workers
24 two-year contracts. That's what he tells them, anyway, 25 although he may know in the back of his mind that he may

1 have to reinstate the strikers by some sort of a 2 compromise settlement such as worked out here.

3 Does the enforcement in state court by the 4 replacement workers of that two-year contract -- how 5 does that, arguably or otherwise, interfere with the 6 National Labor Relations Act?

7 MR. FORRESTER: Well, I suggest that a state 8 court's inquiry into the subjective motivation of an 9 employer in those circumstances substantially interferes 10 with the line of preemption cases that permit employers 11 and labor unions to resort to economic weapons whenever 12 there's a labor dispute.

13 QUESTION: Well, it doesn't permit employers 14 to resort to fraud or breach of contract, though, in 15 dealing with a group of employees.

16 MR. FORRESTER: I agree that it does not 17 permit that, Justice Rehnquist. But -- nor are states 18 permitted to inquire about employer motivations or union 19 motivations in exercising their economic weapons without 20 the risk of damaging the worth of these economic weapons 21 in a labor dispute.

22 QUESTION: You say, then, that a replacement 23 worker who is hired by the employer, the employer in his 24 own mind knows, I am probably going to have to let this 25 guy go in about three months but I really need him, so

1 I'm going to tell him he can have the job for two years
2 because he's got a job now and he wouldn't leave it if I
3 told him it was just for three months, you're saying 4 that that employee has no cause of action, tort or 5 contract, when he is discharged after three months, in 6 state court?

7 MR. FORRESTER: Promises of that sort may 8 conceivably be unfair labor practices, inasmuch as the 9 employer continues to have the duty to bargain with the 10 representative concerning --

11 QUESTION: Yes, but my question was, can this 12 employee sue in state court for fraud or for breach of 13 contract?

14 MR. FORRESTER: It is our position that he 15 cannot.

16 QUESTION: How does that interfere with the 17 National Labor Relations Act?

18 MR. FORRESTER: Because whenever a state court
19 is permitted to inquire into the subjective motivations
20 of an employer for offering permanent replacement 21 status, then the damage to that economic weapon is 22 done.

23 QUESTION: What is subjective about a contract 24 of employment of two years?

25 MR. FORRESTER: It's the intention of the 1 employer with regard to that contract. Justice

2 Rehnquist was suggesting that --

3 QUESTION: Under the hypothesis that Justice
4 Rehnquist gave you, I thought he was just talking about 5 a flat-out contract for two years.

6 MR. FORRESTER: I thought Justice Rehnquist
7 was suggesting that the employer knew that it was an 8 unfair labor practice strike and he could not reasonably 9 offer that employment contract.

10 QUESTION: That might come into play, but he's 11 made them a -- there's nothing subjective or ambiguous 12 about an employment contract for two years, is there?

13 MR. FORRESTER: There is not, Mr. Chief 14 Justice.

15 QUESTION: Then why can't that be enforced in 16 state courts?

17 MR. FORRESTER: Because any such contract
18 which would be in derogation of a collective bargaining 19 agreement is not enforceable. It's the collective 20 bargaining agreement that prevails over any individual 21 contract.

22 QUESTION: How is that in derogation of the 23 collective bargaining agreement?

24 MR. FORRESTER: Well, the employer -- let's 25 assume the employer enters a contract for two years as

1 you suggest, and subsequently negotiates the terms and 2 conditions for that unit. Then the promise of a 3 two-year contract goes by the wayside.

4 QUESTION: Could I ask you, suppose there 5 hadn't been a settlement, but the employer held out and 6 the strike -- he just broke the strike by hiring these 7 replacements, all of whom he promised permanent jobs to, 8 and so the strike was over. And then he started firing 9 these people he had promised as permanent replacements.

10 MR. FORRESTER: Well, in the context of this 11 case the Board would have pursued the unfair labor 12 practice.

13 QUESTION: No, but let's just assume no unfair 14 labor practice. Nobody'd even filed one. It was just 15 an economic strike and the employer won. He hired 16 permanent replacements and then he decided that, now 17 that he's hired them all, he'd like to take back some of 18 the old workers because they were better. So he just 19 fires the -- do you think he could do that?

20 MR. FORRESTER: There may be a cause of 21 action, depending on state law.

22 QUESTION: What do you mean, may be? It's 23 either yes or no. If it's preempted one way, it's 24 preempted the other, it seems to me. What you're really 25 saying is that giving them a remedy for breach of

1 contract burdens the employer's right to hire 2 replacements. If he knows he's going to have to pay for 3 his promise, he won't be so free to make them, and that 4 burdens his right to hire replacements. That has to be 5 your argument, and it's also the Board's argument, I 6 take it.

7 MR. FORRESTER: The argument is that he will 8 be effectively deprived of the economic weapon of 9 offering permanent employment status to strike
10 replacements.

11 QUESTION: You mean lying about it. Yes, he's 12 going to be deprived of the right to break his 13 contract.

14 MR. FORRESTER: I suggest that the likelihood 15 of an employer --

16 QUESTION: That is an interesting piece of a 17 protected activity.

18 MR. FORRESTER: I suggest that the likelihood 19 of an employer being in a position to cynically predict 20 down the road what is going to happen in a labor dispute 21 is not great.

22 QUESTION: It isn't cynically, but all he 23 would have to do to protect himself, and he may not be 24 able to hire replacements, but he would have to say:
25 Look, this is certainly my promise to you: I'll keep

1 you if I can, but if it turns out that I've got an 2 unfair labor practice charge made out against me I'm 3 going to have to can you.

4 That maybe is a big burden, but I'm not sure 5 how much it is. Apparently the Board thinks it's a big 6 burden, and so do you.

7 MR. FORRESTER: I do, and the problem arises
8 either in that context or another: Once an employer
9 determines to hire permanent replacements, he continues 10 to have the obligation to bargain with the union about 11 the terms and conditions of employment for members of 12 the bargaining unit. An employer would be substantially 13 disinclined to make that --

14 QUESTION: Well, he doesn't if he wins the 15 strike and he's hired replacements who aren't a member 16 of the union.

17 MR. FORRESTER: If the strike is over and no 18 bargaining obligation continues, he is relieved of that 19 risk and that responsibility and the mandate under the 20 Federal Labor Act.

21 QUESTION: It's your position that in order to 22 really deal with the union and fight his battle during 23 the strike, all bets are off so far as other areas of 24 the law are concerned, really. The employer is free to 25 defraud people or to breach contracts with third parties

1 so far as the beginning of the strike is concerned, in 2 order that he can concentrate his maximum effort with 3 the least possible financial burden on the union, or on 4 the employer?

5 MR. FORRESTER: Obviously, there is some sort 6 of egregious conduct that should be subject to state 7 law.

8 QUESTION: Well, how about fraud?

9 MR. FORRESTER: In the context of this case, I 10 do not believe that was an element.

11 QUESTION: Well, what about just straight 12 contract? Sure, the employer is free to use economic 13 weapons, but why shouldn't you say he is free to use 14 those economic weapons that are within the law? And 15 certainly promising somebody, somebody a two-year job, 16 knowing that you're going to can him if you make a 17 settlement, why shouldn't he have to pay for breaking 18 his contract?

19 MR. FORRESTER: Well, in this case there were 20 no two-year contracts.

21 QUESTION: Well, it was even worse. There was 22 the promise of permanent employment.

23 MR. FORRESTER: As is required in order for an 24 employer to preserve that economic weapon.

25 QUESTION: Not required. It's just your

1 privilege.

2 QUESTION: Has there been any judicial 3 determination with respect to whether there was or was 4 not a contract here?

5 MR. FORRESTER: There has not been.

6 QUESTION: The case hasn't been tried yet on 7 the state claim?

8 MR. FORRESTER: It has not been tried yet.

9 QUESTION: Yes, but as the case comes to us, 10 the case is presented to us, there was a promise of 11 permanent employment.

12 MR. FORRESTER: There was a promise of -- 13 QUESTION: And reiterated.

14 MR. FORRESTER: And reiterated.

15 QUESTION: You concede that?

16 MR. FORRESTER: I do concede that, Justice
17 White.

18 If the employer had not done so, then he would 19 not have been able to assert the rights of the permanent 20 replacements against the striking employees.

21 QUESTION: We all understand that. But the 22 law didn't require him to make that promise.

23 MR. FORRESTER: No. It permitted him to do 24 so.

25 QUESTION: We have to proceed on the

1 assumption that there is a probability or a possibility 2 that a contract will be established in the proceedings 3 in the future.

4 MR. FORRESTER: If there is a contract in the 5 proceedings in the future, it is of course in contrast 6 with a collective bargaining agreement that covers the 7 same terms and conditions of employment.

8 QUESTION: Well, anything to prevent a person 9 from making inconsistent contracts with two different 10 people at the same time?

11 MR. FORRESTER: No, Mr. Chief Justice, there 12 is nothing to prohibit it.

13 QUESTION: If he breaches one of them, then 14 he's going to be liable on that one.

15 MR. FORRESTER: But a collective bargaining
16 agreement always prevails over any individual employment 17 understandings between an employee and his employer.

18 QUESTION: You don't say that this is 19 preempted because there's any -- that the employer was 20 doing something that was expressly prohibited or 21 permitted, protected by the Act in the normal sense of 22 the word? You're just saying this is an area in which 23 Congress said the state law should stay out of because 24 you ought to let these two people fight it out in the 25 trenches just by any weapons they want, as Justice

1 Rehnquist said? That's your position, isn't it?

2 MR. FORRESTER: Not entirely, Justice White.

3 QUESTION: What is the unfair labor practice

4 --

5 MR. FORRESTER: If as a matter of law, as the 6 Labor Board contended, that the strike was converted to 7 an unfair labor practice strike with the offer of the 8 wage increase on the 1st of February, then the mere 9 offering of permanent employment to replacement strikers 10 according to the Labor Board is an unfair labor 11 practice.

12 QUESTION: Had the unfair labor practice 13 proceeding continued to attend, you're -- and you'd been 14 found guilty of an unfair labor practice, you may have 15 been subject to an order of the Board to reinstate the 16 strikers?

17 MR. FORRESTER: The Regional Director so 18 advised Belknap in their conference where the issues 19 were settled.

20 QUESTION: Even after you had made the 21 promises of permanent employment to the replacements?

22 MR. FORRESTER: That's correct.

23 QUESTION: Let's assume that's -- let's assume 24 that's so. That still leaves the question of the people 25 that the employer promised to hire permanently; and what

1 has the Board got to do with that? Zero.

2 MR. FORRESTER: Well, it's unlikely that the 3 Board has unfair labor practice jurisdiction to 4 entertain claims of --

5 QUESTION: They couldn't possibly give a 6 remedy --

7 MR. FORRESTER: Unless --

8 QUESTION: -- to the permanent employees, 9 could they, to the permanent replacements? There's just 10 no remedy they could give them.

11 MR. FORRESTER: They certainly would not be 12 entitled to remedies that would be a satisfactory state 13 court claim.

14 QUESTION: Well, that really doesn't -- you're 15 not suggesting that there's any -- that the employer was 16 even arguably committing an unfair labor practice with 17 respect to the permanent employees that he said he was 18 hiring, or the permanent replacements?

19 MR. FORRESTER: If in fact and in law it were 20 an unfair labor practice at the time these offers were 21 made, then the Board's position is that it's an unfair 22 labor practice to offer permanent employment status to 23 replacements.

24 QUESTION: Well, it may be, it may be. But 25 it's not -- say one of the permanent replacements,

1 so-called permanent replacements, came in and filed a
2 charge with the Regional Director or the General Counsel
3 that, this employer is committing an unfair labor
4 practice against me. He'd be laughed out of the room, 5 wouldn't he? Not laughed; he'd just say, sorry, take 6 this down to the state court and file your suit down 7 there.

8 MR. FORRESTER: I'm not sure the Labor Board 9 would say that, but it's unlikely a replacement would 10 file such a charge.

11 QUESTION: Exactly, yes.

12 QUESTION: Mr. Forrester, may I ask you a 13 question. There's an issue, isn't there, as to whether 14 it was an unfair labor practice strike or an economic 15 strike at the time of the hiring of the permanent 16 replacements?

17 MR. FORRESTER: The issue had been raised. I
18 don't know at the time that the bulk of the replacements 19 were hired that the charge had been filed on the 20 unilateral increase.

21 QUESTION: I'm just wondering if the character
22 of the strike would have any impact on your preemption 23 argument, because one kind of strike might give rise to 24 an arguable violation and another kind of strike might 25 not. And if that's true and if we don't yet know until

1 the trial is had what kind of a strike it is, is it 2 perfectly clear we have a final judgment?

3 MR. FORRESTER: Well, it is clear that the 4 federal issue is decided.

5 QUESTION: You don't think the federal issue 6 could be affected by any of the proceedings that take 7 place hereafter?

8 MR. FORRESTER: The only issue that would be 9 subject to exploration with regard to these claims is 10 any question of fraud underlying an employer's 11 motivation in offering permanent employment. I suggest 12 that once the state court is permitted to make that 13 inquiry in the context of a labor dispute, then the harm 14 is done, because any state in the -- any court in this 15 union whenever permanent replacements are hired may 16 inquire as to what the employer intended and there is no 17 longer any federal privilege as we understand it now to 18 hire permanent replacements without risk of being sued 19 in state court for fraud.

20 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Your time has expired.

21 MR. FORRESTER: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice.

22 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Alito.

23 ORAL ARGUMENT OF SAMUEL A. ALITO, JR.,

24 ON BEHALF OF THE NATIONAL LABOR

25 RELATIONS BOARD, AS AMICUS CURIAE

1           MR. ALITO: Mr. Chief Justice and may it
2 please the court:

3           The National Labor Relations Board agrees that 4 Respondents' state claims are preempted by federal law.
5 We reach this conclusion primarily because those claims 6 would frustrate the policy of federal labor law by 7 interfering to an impermissible degree with one of the 8 chief economic weapons granted to employers in labor 9 disputes, that is, the right to hire permanent strike
10 replacements --

11           QUESTION: The right to be dishonest in the 12 process or what?

13           MR. ALITO: No, Your Honor, I don't think this 14 case involves any dishonesty on the part --

15           QUESTION: The right to promise -- the right 16 to make a contractual promise that he knows he may not 17 be able to keep?

18           MR. ALITO: An employer certainly does not 19 have that right under federal law, but it may be that, 20 and we contend that it is, it is the case --

21           QUESTION: You say that he may be able to make 22 this promise, which the federal law may prevent him from 23 keeping, and yet he is not liable for his promise to 24 somebody else, which is probably or perhaps has enticed 25 somebody to leave another job?

1 MR. ALITO: Well, Your Honor, we maintain that 2 suits like the present one are preempted. But I think 3 it's misleading to suggest that employers can engage in 4 fraudulent conduct towards strike replacements.

5 QUESTION: Well, I don't -- let's don't talk
6 about fraud, then. Just talk about contractual 7 promises. You say they are free to make a promise that 8 the federal law may keep -- prevent them from keeping.
9 Of course, the federal law doesn't prevent them from 10 keeping it. They can just pay up for their promise.
11 They just stand like anybody else in life does; if he 12 breaks his contract he pays damages. He can reinstate 13 the workers like the federal law requires him to do.

14 Why should he not make somebody whole that he 15 has damaged?

16 MR. ALITO: Well, Your Honor, let me make 17 several points in response to that. First, it is not -- 18 it is not a false promise for an employer in this 19 context to state to a strike replacement that he is 20 going to be given the position of a so-called permanent 21 replacement. That is --

22 QUESTION: Well, let's say it wasn't false.
23 It was certainly erroneous, was it not?

24 MR. ALITO: I don't believe it was erroneous, 25 Your Honor. It is a term of art in federal labor law.

1 QUESTION: Oh, so you're saying anybody who 2 has had that promise shouldn't win his case because he 3 hasn't been promised anything?

4 MR. ALITO: Well, that might be the case.
5 What we are -- that might also be the case.

6 QUESTION: Well, that's what you've just 7 argued.

8 MR. ALITO: Well, what I'm saying is that in 9 this case there was no -- there was no fraud on the 10 strike replacements.

11 QUESTION: Mr. Alito, are you familiar with 12 the opinion of the Kentucky Court of Appeals in this 13 case?

14 MR. ALITO: Yes, I am.

15 QUESTION: Well, in the second paragraph, 16 which you will find, I believe, on page 1 of the 17 appendices to the petition, after the beginning of the 18 paragraph cites the names of the parties, it says, "The 19 action alleged fraud, misrepresentation and breach of 20 contract."

21 Was the Kentucky Court of Appeals wrong in 22 describing the action that had been filed in the 23 Kentucky trial court?

24 MR. ALITO: Absolutely not, Your Honor. But 25 if you look at the complaint and you see what the basis

1 for the fraud claim was and the basis for the 2 contractual claim, you will see that the basis for the 3 fraud claim, and as far as we can determine the sole 4 basis for the fraud claim, is the advertisement that 5 Belknap placed in the newspaper. That is reproduced as 6 an appendix to the brief we submitted at the petition 7 stage.

8 QUESTION: Well, does Kentucky have the same 9 sort of rules of procedure that the federal courts do, 10 do you know?

11 MR. ALITO: I don't know, Your Honor.

12 QUESTION: If it does, certainly any number of 13 amounts of evidence or theories could be adduced in 14 support of a pleading of fraud. You don't have to -- 15 you're not limited to a particular advertisement. Why 16 shouldn't the state courts have the right to find out 17 what the case is about?

18 Apparently you concede that many kinds of 19 fraud would be actionable in state court, don't you?

20 MR. ALITO: Well, I don't want to belabor the 21 characterization of the facts of the case. I simply 22 wanted to point out that it is a bit misleading to 23 suggest that this case, which we believe is typical, is 24 an instance in which an employer is even alleged to have 25 engaged in what is really fraudulent conduct.

1 QUESTION: Well, then you do say that the 2 Kentucky Court of Appeals was wrong when it described 3 this action as alleging fraud, misrepresentation and 4 breach of contract.

5 MR. ALITO: I don't disagree with their 6 characterization of what was alleged. I think it is 7 apparent, however, from the face of the complaint that 8 what is really at issue is the right to offer "permanent 9 placements to strike replacements." And that is 10 precisely what this Court said an employer could do in 11 an economic strike.

12 QUESTION: Certainly he could do that. Of 13 course he can do that.

14 QUESTION: That doesn't mean he's not liable 15 if he breaches --

16 QUESTION: What remedy do the Respondents have 17 under federal law if they have no remedy in state 18 court?

19 MR. ALITO: Your Honor, there is one possible 20 remedy. It was touched on this morning. It's the 21 filing of a claim against the union for breach of the 22 duty of fair representation. I don't want to --

23 QUESTION: You don't seriously argue that the 24 union has a duty to represent the replacements, do you, 25 Mr. Alito?

1           MR. ALITO: We contend that they have a duty
2 to represent them in certain respects.

3           But the point that I really want to make in 4 response to that question is that the filing of unfair 5 labor practice charges by a union in any instance in 6 which an employer promises more than federal law 7 permits, and therefore more than he will be able to 8 deliver, will probably prompt the union to file unfair 9 labor practice charges and that will serve to police 10 these offers by employers to permanent strike
11 replacements.

12           QUESTION: Well, your position must be that no 13 suit in the state courts in these circumstances may be 14 maintained, whether it's for fraud, misrepresentation, 15 breach of contract or anything else.

16           MR. ALITO: That is our position, Your Honor.
17 It's been suggested that the employer has a duty to 18 provide some sort of explanation to the strike
19 replacements as to what their status is, to tell them 20 something more than that they are being employed as 21 so-called permanent strike replacements. And from our 22 point of view that would be unworkable and really 23 intolerable, if an employer were required to supply a 24 prospective strike replacement with an accurate, 25 comprehensive, understandable synopsis of the rights of

1 strike replacements and strikers and employers in 2 economic strikes and unfair labor practice strikes.

3           The risk of misstatement, the risk that a 4 state court would find that there had been misstatement, 5 would be so great that the employers' use of this 6 permitted economic weapon of hiring permanent strike 7 replacements would be grievously impaired. And it is 8 for that reason that we maintain that employers are 9 permitted to offer strike replacements permanent 10 employment, as this Court has held.

11           QUESTION: What's your answer to my question I
12 asked your colleague: If it's not an unfair labor 13 practice strike, there's no charges filed like that, the 14 strike is over, the employer has won it. He has 15 promised permanent employment to replacements and then 16 he cans them.

17           MR. ALITO: I see that as a different 18 question, Your Honor --

19           QUESTION: Why?

20           MR. ALITO: -- because it does not interfere 21 --

22           QUESTION: Why?

23           MR. ALITO: Because the strike is over, for 24 that very reason.

25           QUESTION: Well, I know. But knowing that he

1 can't fire them will dampen his ability to offer
2 permanent replacement status to people during a strike.

3 MR. ALITO: Well, Justice White, in answer to 4 that question and another question that was asked when 5 Mr. Forrester was speaking, we certainly don't maintain 6 that employers are given carte blanche and are 7 absolutely free from the constraints of state law to 8 promise anything to anybody in the name of maintaining 9 an economic weapon during a labor dispute. And I think 10 that is analogous to a fraudulent promise to a third 11 party.

12 QUESTION: So suppose there are unfair labor 13 practice charges filed by the union, who claim that he 14 committed unfair labor practice and that he's offering 15 permanent replacements to people that he has no business 16 offering them to. And they litigate that and it's found 17 that the employer's committed nothing, no unfair labor 18 practice at all. He was quite permitted to offer these 19 permanent replacements. And then he fires them.

20 MR. ALITO: Your Honor, I think my answer to 21 that question is that that is a different case, because 22 when the strike is over there is not the same degree of 23 interference with a permitted economic weapon.

24 QUESTION: Well, the strike is over now. The 25 strike is over now by a settlement, and he fires the

1 replacements.

2 MR. ALITO: Well, future strikes --

3 QUESTION: It's all over.

4 MR. ALITO: Future strikes are not over, and 5 if it is known that state actions like this one are 6 permitted there will be an intolerable degree of 7 interference with an employer's economic weapon.

8 QUESTION: Let me test your position with a 9 slight hypothetical change here. Suppose, since many 10 people are reluctant to break a picket line, the 11 employer had announced in that announcement that's in 12 your appendix here a $500 premium, special payment, will 13 be made for all replacements. And then when they get 14 there they negotiate and agree that the $500 payment 15 will be deferred, but they all go to work just as they 16 did here.

17 And then the employer doesn't pay the $500, 18 independent of whether he's fired them or not. Could 19 they sue for that $500 in state court?

20 MR. ALITO: I believe that would be preempted 21 on the same theory. I think that certainly involves 22 conduct that is arguably prohibited by Section 8 and 23 would be preempted under the Garmon rule.

24 QUESTION: You don't know of any other cases 25 like this, where you just say it's just one of those

1 areas a state court should stay out of, it isn't 2 specifically arguably prohibited or protected?

3 MR. ALITO: Machinists is certainly comparable 4 to this in many respects. That was the case where 5 Congress' intent not to permit state regulation was 6 inferred from the fact that burdening a particular 7 economic weapon would frustrate the policies of the 8 Act. And that we contend is what would happen here.

9 Thank you.

10 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Davenport.

11 ORAL ARGUMENT OF CECIL DAVENPORT, ESQ.,

12 ON BEHALF OF RESPONDENTS

13 MR. DAVENPORT: Mr. Chief Justice, may it
14 please the Court:

15 Let me answer a couple of inquiries if I may.
16 The rules of procedure in the State of Kentucky are 17 paraphrased in 1954 from the Federal Rules and with very 18 few exceptions are the same. And this was a motion for 19 summary judgment, which is the same as it is under the 20 Federal Rules, or the interpretation is the same in 21 Kentucky. And this was therefore an appeal from that 22 summary judgment of the Jefferson Circuit Court.

23 This case was first removed to U.S. district 24 court, then remanded back to state court, then upon a 25 motion for summary judgment, before very little proof

1 was taken -- only one deposition had been taken -- to 2 test the pleadings and test the law, the motion for a 3 summary judgment was made. It was sustained in the 4 Jefferson Circuit Court and thereupon it was appealed to 5 our Court of Appeals.

6 Our Court of Appeals reversed the Jefferson 7 Circuit Court and held in the opinion that has been 8 referred to that it was only a peripheral concern to the 9 national scene and the national Act.

10 I believe the thing that bothered me 11 concerning this case, and it's bothered me for some 12 couple of years since we have been going through this 13 process, and I think that was finally answered here 14 today, and I feel more at ease. In our bowing down to 15 the holy grail of National Labor Relations Board 16 preemption and unusual policy of handling labor law, we 17 have lost sight of the very most important thing, and 18 that is the 400 replacements.

19 What happens to them? Do they fall through 20 the crack in philosophical theories of the best way for 21 the best and largest good to handle the overall peace?

22 QUESTION: Mr. Davenport, could I ask you,
23 suppose the federal labor law said that in a strike, 24 during a strike until it's -- at least up until a 25 certain point in a strike, an employer may hire

1 replacements, but he may not hire anybody on a permanent 2 basis. Just suppose the federal law said that.

3 Then the employer nevertheless, in hiring
4 replacements, promises a permanent job. Now, you 5 wouldn't say that that contract would be enforceable if 6 it's just -- if it's an illegal contract, would you?

7 MR. DAVENPORT: No, because it would have been 8 preempted by the federal Act.

9 QUESTION: Well, it was just made an illegal
10 contract.

11 MR. DAVENPORT: That is correct.

12 QUESTION: Well, as I understand the 13 submission on the other side here, that when an unfair 14 labor practice charge is pending such as was pending in 15 this case, it really was an unfair practice, namely, 16 contrary to federal law to promise a permanent job, in 17 which event if that -- assume that it turned out that 18 way, that, true, there was an unfair practice and the 19 employer should not run around hiring permanent
20 replacements.

21 Now, it's tough on the 400 replacements, but 22 nevertheless they made an illegal contract with the 23 employer.

24 MR. DAVENPORT: Justice White, I could be 25 wrong, but the statement was made earlier by my

1 colleague that this was a violation. I submit that it
2 is a violation to give a raise, but it is not -- and I
3 cannot recall any case that ever spoke of making 4 promises to replacement employees being a violation and 5 an unfair labor practice.

6 QUESTION: As a matter of fact, the argument 7 is that the right that's being protected here is the 8 right to promise permanent --

9 MR. DAVENPORT: That is correct. And again, 10 I'd like to reiterate, it is an unfair labor practice to 11 give a blanket raise because that is inducement to the 12 outside to come in and an unfair economic weapon, if you 13 will. But I know of no case that ever spoke of the 14 types of promises that can be made to replacement 15 employees being an unfair labor practice.

16 QUESTION: How do you distinguish in terms of 17 inducement the promise to give permanent employment and 18 an offer to give an increased wage to the replacement
19 people? What's the difference?

20 MR. DAVENPORT: Well, apparently under the 21 overall policy and regulations laid down by the Board, 22 the offer of a wage is an unfair inducement to entice 23 off the picket line those back in. But the hiring of 24 replacement employees per se would not likewise be an 25 inducement. I mean, it might be a threat to them, but

1 it is certainly not an inducement.

2           What we have here is attempting to broaden the 3 scope and the jurisdiction of the National Labor
4 Relations Board under the guise of the broad terms 5 "arguably protected" or under the broad terms of the 6 necessity to give economic weapons and create a detente, 7 so to speak, a philosophical theory of governing the 8 labor peace.

9           Now, this has been going on for a long time.
10 But it is inconceivable to us that in this process, if 11 the theory of the NLRB were taken and if it were 12 sanctioned by this Court, it is inconceivable that there 13 could be 400 people in these United States that would 14 not be treated in the same substantial fashion as the 15 rest of the population.

16           How are these people, for instance, to know 17 that they must govern themselves in dealing with an 18 employer in an entirely different situation if he has a 19 strike going than they would be correspondingly required 20 to deal with that same employer when there is no strike 21 in evidence?

22           QUESTION: Well, it might be stretching it a 23 little bit when it embraces all the policies of the 24 Labor Board or any regulatory agency, but are they not 25 obliged to know the law?

1           MR. DAVENPORT: Yes, they are. And I submit 2 that it is their prerogative to assume that the law
3 would be applied in the same fashion to that employer 4 with regard to telling the truth and not telling the 5 truth during a strike time as it would be applied to 6 that same employer were it to be outside of that strike
7 time. That's all we're saying.

8           QUESTION: But that doesn't answer the 9 question if the law is as the Labor Board contends now.

10          MR. DAVENPORT: Well, it is not as they 11 contend, Mr. Chief Justice. And I presume that if this 12 Court had laid down such a decision that an employer had 13 the right to give out false information in order to 14 induce hordes of people to come to work for him as 15 replacements, then it would be incumbent upon the 16 parties under that posture to know what that law was, 17 yes, sir. I would conceivably hope that in my day that 18 never comes about.

19          QUESTION: So you say that even if a -- even 20 if an illegal contract isn't enforceable by the 21 promisee, if the other side has also committed a tort 22 against him he can sue him for a tort, which -- this 23 suit in here was a suit for fraud as well, wasn't it?

24          MR. DAVENPORT: That is correct, Justice
25 White. This is a suit in tort, labeled and hopefully

1 will be proved when the day comes of fraud in the 2 inducement and breach of contract. What the National 3 Labor Relations Board is attempting and the employer is 4 attempting to do is to conclude and say that tort, the 5 determination of tort by the several states involved -- 6 involving action during a time that a strike takes place 7 has been preempted and taken from them for 8 adjudication. That's what they're attempting to broaden 9 the scope of the Act to include.

10 QUESTION: Would your position on that, your 11 position as distinguished from the Board, mean that an 12 action for tort might be maintained but an action for 13 contract could not? Could it not be reasonable that 14 recovery or a suit for contract alone might be 15 preempted, but a suit for tort for fraud would not be?

16 MR. DAVENPORT: I think not, Mr. Chief
17 Justice, because the position of the Board is that 18 arguably because this arose out of a time when a labor
19 dispute was going on, then under the concept of Garmon 20 and under the Act and the amendments that is preempted, 21 simply because it arose.

22 And may I point out where that is in error.
23 We've relied greatly upon Linn versus United Plant Guard
24 Workers of America, and let me quote from that, page 663
25 of that opinion: "Nor should the fact that defamation"

1 -- this was a tort; this was a defamation action between 2 a manager of a plant on the employer after the strike 3 was over against the union for libel and slander with 4 regard to leaflets, et cetera, and this Court says:

5 "Nor should the fact that defamation arises
6 during a labor dispute give the Board exclusive 7 jurisdiction to remedy its consequences."

8 So just because -- and that's what they're 9 really saying, that tort actions, which the states have 10 had original jurisdiction since the inception of the 11 Constitution, has been diminished, or jurisdiction over 12 those torts and/or contracts, has been diminished to the 13 extent that it has been preempted by the provisions of 14 the Act.

15 And all we are saying is that this could never 16 arguably be of any problem to the Board in extending its 17 jurisdiction to mediate the peace of a labor industry as 18 long as you require the employer simply to tell the 19 truth and be honest about it. It doesn't afford any 20 harm to the overall administration of the Act. And 21 torts have been brought.

22 I think we have to, if I may, analyze the 23 cases that have been decided by this Court previously.
24 The principal case is that of Linn versus United Plant 25 Guard Workers of America, and this was a case in which

1 the manager of the employer's plant after a strike 2 brought suit for defamation of character, libel and 3 slander against the union for the dissemination of 4 leaflets and scandalous material in those leaflets
5 concerning him during a strike.

6 And the Court held that that tort could be 7 litigated by state court under two or three different 8 theories, number one being it was such a complete 9 concern to the respective states that it was not 10 arguably within the purview or would not disturb the 11 overall policy of the labor movement by allowing the 12 states, which had a greater concern than did the labor 13 movement with regard to that particular type of action.

14 Now, let's consider -- and there are only two 15 -- there are only really four cases on which torts have 16 been allowed. Two of those, they were allowed; two of 17 those, they would have been allowed except the facts
18 were not appropriate, the Linn being the principal 19 case.

20 Now, let's consider what the similarities are 21 between the Linn case and this case. There were torts 22 committed in both cases. There was misrepresentation in 23 both cases. The injury -- there was injury in both 24 cases, except in our case it's a lot greater. It's 400 25 to one greater. There are 400 people here who were just 1 summarily discharged.

2           There were many of these workers who took, in 3 pursuance to that advertisement, jobs at lesser pay
4 because the current jobs they had were seasonal. There 5 were people who left secure jobs to go because of the 6 advantages advertised and guaranteed by that 7 advertisement. And they have been work -- some of them 8 have been out of work ever since.

9           The same -- in the Linn case and in our case,
10 in both cases the action was -- the Defendant's action 11 was not protected in either one of these cases by any 12 constitutional provision, and in both of these cases the 13 National Labor Relations Board, which so desperately 14 wants jurisdiction of these particular items, can 15 neither give any remedy or offer any relief to the 16 parties that they ostensibly say they intend to 17 protect.

18           Now, there were some dissimilar factors 19 between the Linn case and our case. One, in that, in 20 the Linn case, the NLRB does take recognition of libel
21 and slander, at least to a limited degree, because it 22 will consider those items in election cases and set 23 aside elections if there has been misrepresentation with 24 regard to libel and slander. Never has the NLRB in any 25 case awarded any damages, awarded any form of relief in

1 any way, shape or form in a tort action -- never.

2           There is another dissimilar factor. In the 3 Linn case the action took place between two parties to a 4 labor dispute. There was a manager of an employer's 5 plant suing the union. In our case it is third parties 6 who had no part in the labor dispute whatsoever except 7 to go to work. So that dissimilarity is much in our 8 favor.

9           If I could comment about two other problems 10 which have arisen. One, most important, there have been 11 some remarks made both in the briefs and today 12 concerning "permanent" being a work of art. I know of 13 no decision and I have never seen a comment that says 14 that "permanent" is a work of art or is any different 15 than that which I learned in school and from Random
16 House Dictionary of the English Language. It says 17 "intended to exist or function for a long, indefinite 18 period without regard to unforeseeable conditions," and 19 gives two examples, "permanent construction" and 20 "permanent employee."

21           QUESTION: Well, in this context does anyone 22 need to have any broader definition than that these 23 replacement people would be just as permanent as the 24 persons they replaced?

25           MR. DAVENPORT: I think that is a fair

1 statement, yes.

2 QUESTION: That doesn't mean a contract for 3 life, like life tenured judges. It just means --

4 MR. DAVENPORT: So long as the jobs were 5 available and those conditions existed which were 6 appropriate for them to be employed.

7 QUESTION: Well, why wouldn't you be fully 8 protected, your clients be fully protected, if the case 9 went to trial, and let's assume hypothetically first the 10 court, the state court, decided that any claim under 11 contract would be preempted, but that he went on to try 12 the case on a fraud theory, on tort, and gave a 13 recovery. Your clients don't really care whether they 14 recover on contract or tort, do they?

15 MR. DAVENPORT: I think that's a fair
16 statement, yes, sir.

17 QUESTION: But I presume they would prefer 18 having two bases for recovery rather than just one.

19 MR. DAVENPORT: Absolutely. I as a 20 practitioner would, and certainly I would advise them 21 to.

22 QUESTION: Well, the fraud claim is a little 23 harder to prove.

24 MR. DAVENPORT: Yes, there are five, I believe 25 five, elements.

1 QUESTION: Reliance and things like that.

2 MR. DAVENPORT: Fraud must be made with an 3 intent to deceive, to someone, knowing that he is going 4 to -- or presuming that he is going to rely upon it; and 5 that he must rely; and it must be false; and there must 6 be detriment.

7 QUESTION: And in some states it requires
8 clear and convincing evidence, as against a 9 preponderance.

10 MR. DAVENPORT: That is correct.

11 QUESTION: Does that apply in your state?

12 MR. DAVENPORT: That applies in the entire 13 State of Kentucky.

14 There is one other item that I would like to 15 reply to, and that is this question about the union 16 being the obligated representative of all of the 17 employees. I would simply again like to refer to the 18 contract that the union in secret, without the other 19 employees that theoretically if that were true they 20 would be inclined to represent, sat down with the 21 company when the company had made a decision that it had 22 made a bad choice and made a contract which was 23 detrimental to the 400 that it was in a fiduciary 24 position and obligated to represent fairly.

25 Now, we contend they are not, they are not the

1 representatives. But that is a fair statement of what 2 position they were in if that theory would be bought.
3 They were not the representatives. If they were the 4 representatives, they did everything in their power to 5 enter into a written contract which on page 10 of the 6 brief of Belknap, Inc., says: "The company and the 7 union further agree that, in the event it is necessary 8 that the company terminate replacement employees in 9 order to comply with this recall schedule, such 10 termination shall not be subject to grievance and 11 arbitration provisions of the contract."

12               So they wrote the 400 out of the contract, and 13 that is fair representation? I would think not.

14               There are four cases which predominantly deal
15 with torts that have come before this Court: Linn
16 versus United Plant Guards, Machinists versus Gonzalez, 17 Motor Coach Employees versus Lockridge, San Diego
18 Building Trades Council versus Garmon, and Farmer versus 19 United Brotherhood of Carpenters.

20               In the Linn case, upon which we rely, state 21 court was allowed in that case to take jurisdiction of 22 and adjudicate differences between a plant manager of 23 the employer who sued for libel against the union -- a 24 tort. In Machinists versus Gonzalez, Gonzalez sued his 25 own union and the Court in that case said there was no

1 infringement of any apparent wrong or any apparent
2 deviation of the power of the National Labor Relations 3 Board, because the state court had only to consider the 4 elements of the union constitution and nothing to do
5 with the strike, and he recovered in that case.

6           In Motor Coach Employees versus Lockridge, a 7 union member sued the union. Relief was denied and 8 overturned by this Court, with fair comment that had the 9 state court been able to consider only the constitution 10 of the union that it would have been a matter which they 11 had jurisdiction of; however, they had to consider a 12 security clause of a contract and had to rely upon that 13 for adjudication, and the Court felt that that was 14 arguably within the purview of the NLRB. So Motor Coach 15 Employees versus Lockridge favorably commented upon the 16 right of Lockridge to sue, but denied his right to have 17 it adjudicated by a state court, on the theory that in 18 order to do so they would have to consider and comment 19 and adjudicate a plant -- a contract security clause.

20           In San Diego Building Trades Council versus 21 Garmon, the holding of that Court extensively argued the 22 theory of state court adjudication and decided that the 23 state court could not award damages for peaceful 24 picketing, a matter which was arguably within the 25 purview and preempted by the Act.

1           In Farmer versus United Brotherhood of 2 Carpenters, a union officer sued in tort for damages and 3 the Court in that case favorably commented upon his 4 right to sue in tort, however, reviewed the proof and 5 decided that the proof called for the state court to 6 rely upon apparent unemployment discrimination -- I mean 7 employment discrimination -- and therefore, while the 8 Court sanctioned the right of the state court to 9 adjudicate pure tort, if in doing so the state court had 10 to pass upon an employment discrimination matter they 11 felt that that was arguably within the jurisdiction of 12 and preempted by the NLRB.

13           I'm citing these because I think that these 14 five cases graphically set forth what the Court's 15 progress up to this time has been, and that in two of 16 these cases state courts were allowed to adjudicate 17 tort; in two other of these cases the state court -- the 18 ability of state court to do so was approved, however, 19 the case was overturned because there was reliance on 20 matters which was arguably under the preemption doctrine 21 of the NLRB.

22           So I'm saying it is our position that tort has 23 been allowed before, tort has been allowed under, for a 24 better expression, thinner cases and circumstances than 25 this; and that our only position is one which could

1 probably be summed up by arguments that have been made 2 by questions from this Court far better than I would 3 ever have the ability to do so.

4 But essentially we must, I feel, give some 5 attention to simple propositions of law which I learned 6 in law school, and that is, for every wrong there must 7 be found a remedy. State courts have never been 8 preempted from adjudicating tort. That is matters which 9 were reserved to the state court by the Tenth 10 Amendment. Now, to the extent that the National Labor 11 Relations Act may have carved out areas of that --

12 QUESTION: You don't really mean all that, do 13 you?

14 MR. DAVENPORT: Sir?

15 QUESTION: You don't really mean that the 16 state courts have been -- can adjudicate any kind of a 17 tort without preemption?

18 MR. DAVENPORT: Oh, no, no.

19 QUESTION: Well, that's just what you said.

20 MR. DAVENPORT: I beg your pardon. I didn't 21 mean to, sir. I meant that tort in general had not been 22 preempted, that certain areas of tort adjudication have 23 been preempted by the NLRB.

24 And essentially all of the relief which these 25 people are asking is, as simply put forth by the

1 questions, it's no imposition upon a employer to go out 2 and hire employees and tell them the reasonable, the 3 satisfactory circumstances under which they will be 4 employed, and that they may have to be terminated at 5 such a time in the future, or to say nothing, for that 6 matter; but not to overtly advertise something that it 7 knows full well it cannot fulfil.

8           The depositions in the record in this case
9 show that on February the 1st, at the time the strike
10 began, and prior to that time there had been meetings 11 with their attorneys and the plan to hire replacement 12 employees had already been put into effect. The 13 employer was present and in meeting with their attorneys 14 when the language of the advertisement was put into 15 effect.

16           So it cannot be said that the employer was 17 saying something he didn't know the consequences of.
18 The employer was well represented at that time, by one 19 of the most prestigious law firms in the State of 20 Kentucky. And that therefore, when you overtly go out 21 of your way, when you also are planning to give a raise, 22 when you most assuredly must have been advised that to 23 do so is to create an unfair labor practice, and then to 24 hire a complete set of employees knowing that you may 25 not be able to fulfil those obligations, we submit is a

1 matter which is not even arguably within the preemption
2 area carved out by Congress.

3 Thank you.

4 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.

5 The case is submitted.

6 (Whereupon, at 2:12 p.m., the case in the 7 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
