2                   CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER:   Mr. Winkler, I think 3   you may proceed whenever you are ready.

4                   ORAL ARGUMENT OF JAMES T. WINKLER, ESQ.
5                   ON BEHALF OF PETITIONER, JIM McNEFF, INC.

6                   MR. WINKLER:   Mr. Chief Justice, may it please 7   the Court:

8                   This case is before the Court pursuant to writ
9   of certiorari pursuant to 28 U.S.C. Section 1254.
10   Respondents, the Operating Engineers Trust Fund, filed a 11   Complaint for fringe benefit collection pursuant to 12   Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act.

13                   The District Court on cross motion for summary 14   judgment granted motion for summary judgment for 15   respondents.   The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit 16   affirmed.   The Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in 17   this decision passed on the issue of the enforceability 18   of minority pre-hire agreements and noted in its 19   decision the conflicting decisions of the various 20   circuits and that adopted what it called to be a middle 21   ground between the decisions of the Eighth and Tenth and 22   the -- on one hand which state that 301 actions are 23   different than unfair labor practice actions and the 24   conflicting opinion of the Fifth Circuit which adopted
25   the NLRB position that the minority pre-hire agreements

1 are unenforceable unless the union represents the 2 majority of the employees.

3           The Ninth Circuit adopted what it called a 4 middle ground, that there has to be a notice of 5 repudiation; until then minority agreements are fully 6 enforceable and that the issue of coercion in obtaining 7 the pre-hire agreements is not applicable until that 8 notice of repudiation.

9           Now, the department interpretation in this 10 case involves an interpretation of Section 8(f) of the 11 Act and this Court's decision in Higdon. Higdon 12 involved an unfair labor practice matter, and therefore 13 it is important to try and figure out what effect an 14 unfair labor practice context will have in a Section 301 15 litigation.

16           And in view of that, it is important to look 17 at this Court's decision in Howard Johnson, which said
18 that the basic policies in an unfair labor practice
19 context cannot be ignored in a Section 301 case.

20           In Howard Johnson it involved a Burns 21 successorship issue -- excuse me, it involved an attempt 22 by a union to apply the contract of a predecessor to a 23 successor, and then Burns was not allowed in the Section 24 8(a)(5) context. This was again attempted in the 301
25 context in Howard Johnson, and this Court would not

1 allow that.

2 Now, in order to understand the Board's 3 position in Section 8(a)(5), you have to go back to the 4 Board's position in R.J. Smith. The Board's case -- the 5 case of R.J. Smith was commented extensively by -- upon 6 extensively by this Court in Higdon. In R.J. Smith it 7 involved an employer which had not complied with the 8 pre-hire agreement.

9 According to the administrative law judge
10 before the Board, the administrative law judge said that 11 there's -- noncompliance had been concealed from the 12 union. And that's a very important point.

13 Despite this active noncompliance by the 14 union, the Board reviewed legislative history and 15 decided that because there was no majority status, that 16 the contract was unenforceable.

17 And it is important to note that it did review
18 legislative history and in the -- in its interpretation 19 of Section 8(f) of the Act. It noted that there are 20 certain provisions that -- there are certain exceptions 21 in Section 8(f) that Congress intended to allow -- 22 excuse me -- Congress intended to allow for employers to 23 have a steady access of -- a steady supply of workmen 24 from the labor organization and to -- excuse me -- the 25 provisions that Congress wanted to allow in enacting

1 Section 8(f), it wanted to allow employers to have two 2 benefits.

3 One was to give the employers an opportunity 4 to have workmen provided by the union. Because 5 employers often go from job site to job site in the 6 construction industry, they don't necessarily have their 7 stable complement of employees.

8 And secondly, pre-hire agreements would allow 9 employers the opportunity to make bids based on a 10 predetermined cost.

11 Now, because of these two benefits, Congress 12 allowed pre-hire agreements to be not unlawful under 13 Section 8(a) and 8(b) of the National Labor Relations
14 Act. But the Board noted that the Section 8(f) language 15 itself showed the limits of its effect, and it noted the 16 proviso to Section 8(f) which stated that an election 17 may be called upon by any -- by anybody and it would not 18 despite the existence of the contract.

19 Now, normally, elections cannot be obtained 20 when there is an existence of a contract in the -- in 21 any -- excuse me -- in any other industry.

22 Now, it is very important to note that right 23 after noting this intent of the proviso, the Board then 24 stated that, and I quote, "Thus, the proviso constitutes 25 a statutory safeguard against just the sort of 1 irresponsibly imposed minority union representation 2 which this record reveals."

3           That's a very important quote. I didn't put 4 that in my brief or the reply brief.

5           The Board then went on and said, because you 6 can file an election petition, it would be inconsistent 7 with this purpose to not allow an examination of 8 majority status in the litigation of refusal to bargain 9 in cases where the employer is refusing to comply with 10 the agreement.

11           So the old issue in R.J. Smith was the 12 retroactive application -- was the retroactive 13 enforcement of a collective bargaining agreement, the 14 pre-hire agreement. As a matter of fact, the general 15 counsel of the Board argued that you couldn't look back 16 beyond 6 months, the statute 10(b), statute of 17 limitations, because of this Court's decision in Bryant 18 and the usual presumption of majority status that it can 19 only -- usual presumption of majority status in 20 collective bargaining agreement can only be attacked 21 within the last 6 months by filing a charge with the 22 Labor Board showing that it was obtained unlawfully 23 because it was a minority union.

24           But the Board said that doesn't matter here, 25 because it's not unlawful to enter into an 8(f)

1 agreement. Therefore, we can go back beyond the 6 2 months and look back, way back to the beginning of the 3 agreement to find out when it was, what kind of an 4 agreement it was, and whether or not there is a majority 5 status to support it.

6           So the entire purpose of the R.J. Smith
7 decision was to look back and see whether or not it 8 could be retroactively applied.

9           Now, as I pointed out in my brief, the D.C.
10 Circuit denied enforcement and adopted the theory that 11 respondents argue in their brief that you have to 12 actually file for a petition for an election and until 13 that point in time the contract is enforceable.

14           The Board did not take the petition for 15 certiorari at that time. It waited until the Higdon 16 case. And it's important to note in the Higdon case it 17 sort of reached the issue in the backdoor manner.
18 Higdon was an 8(b)(7)(c) matter involving unlawful 19 picketing for recognition.

20           And it's important to note that the issue of 21 minority status is not at all involved in the issues, 22 the basic element to an 8(b)(c) violation. An 8(b)(c) 23 violation is made up of basically picketing for an 24 unreasonable period of time not to exceed 30 days where 25 the object is recognition and there has been no

1 petition filed for an election with the National Labor
2 Relations Board.

3           That has nothing to do with the minority 4 status of a union. The issue only comes into effect in 5 an affirmative defense if the Board has said that the 6 literal terms of 8(b)(7)(c) do not apply in a situation 7 where the union is not seeking initial recognition. In 8 other words, if it already has a contract or a 9 bargaining history, then it can -- then it can picket 10 for recognition beyond 30 days.

11           However, the Board said that they will not 12 allow that affirmative defense where the recognition is 13 not based on majority status. Therefore, the issue of 14 majority versus minority status was joined in that case.
15 And the Board relied on its R.J. Smith decisions and its 16 decisions under section 8(a)(5) of the act. And the 17 D.C. Circuit again reversed, and that's how it came 18 before this Court.

19           And as is shown by the petition and briefs to 20 the Court by the Board, this Court passed not only on 21 the 8(b)(7) issue but it, in order to reach that issue, 22 it had to go back and pass on the Board's position in 23 Section 8(a)(5), and it commented on the Board's 24 decision in R.J. Smith. And it also commented on and 25 passed favorably upon the Board's decision that minority

1 pre-hire agreements are not enforceable unless the union
2 obtains majority support.

3 Now, the Board rule is basically that, when a 4 union obtains majority, the pre-hire agreement is 5 enforceable. Until then it is not. And you have to 6 look both at the R.J. Smith decision and also look to 7 the Board's brief to find out the reasons for its 8 policy. Basically, it limits the purposes of the 9 statute -- excuse me, it limits the adaptation of the 10 statute to its purposes.

11 In other words, once an employer obtains union 12 members from the union hiring hall, the skilled pool of 13 employees, then the union will normally obtain majority 14 status, and the agreement is therefore enforceable. In 15 situations where they do not obtain that -- do not use 16 that pool and the union does not obtain majority status, 17 then the agreement is not enforceable.

18 Now, it is very important to look at the basic 19 reasons behind the Board's decision. This Court and the 20 Board has said that the voluntary compliance of Section 21 8(f) agreements, of minority Section 8(f) agreements, is 22 not itself unlawful and has said it's all right.

23 Now, the reasons for that is not that the 24 voluntary compliance of the pre-hire agreement is itself 25 good for employees. It is important to note that the

1 voluntary compliance of minority pre-hire agreements is 2 in itself inconsistent with employee rights. It's just 3 because of this accommodation to the particular needs of 4 the construction industry that it has allowed this 5 exception. And that is why the Board said in R.J. Smith 6 that the record revealed an irresponsibly imposed 7 minority representation.

8 Now, you might wonder why did the Board say 9 that when there is no specific findings that any 10 employee was disadvantaged by that.

11 QUESTION: Mr. Winkler, I think in your briefs 12 you didn't deal with the Section 306(a) of the 13 Multi-Employer Pension Plan Amendments, Plan Amendments
14 Act of 1980. Are you going to treat it in your oral 15 argument?

16 MR. WINKLER: Yes, I am, Your Honor. I also 17 did respond to that in my reply brief.

18 QUESTION: I guess I didn't notice that. I am 19 sorry.

20 MR. WINKLER: Okay. It's about the last four 21 or five pages of the reply brief.

22 QUESTION: May I just ask one question here?

23 MR. WINKLER: Yes, sir.

24 QUESTION: If I understand you correctly, the 25 enforceability of the agreement depends on whether or not

1 there was in fact a majority status.

2 MR. WINKLER: That is correct.

3 QUESTION: And when, in your view, is it
4 appropriate for that determination to be made? Is it 5 your view that the employer can just wait until the 6 union sues to, in this case, to collect the pension 7 obligations, just wait until they sue and then you have 8 a trial of whether there is majority status?

9 MR. WINKLER: That is correct. Under the 10 Board's position, yes.

11 QUESTION: Would you say that if the -- if the 12 company had in fact made the payments and then realized 13 that the union never acquired majority status, that it 14 could sue for a refund?

15 MR. WINKLER: I don't believe so. Just 16 because the Board and the courts say that voluntary 17 compliance is all right. In other words, they haven't 18 violated any law and they have complied. And the Board 19 has also said they can unilaterally make changes. They 20 can apply some and not to others. In fact, in R.J.
21 Smith for a certain period of time it did make payments 22 in the trust fund on a few of the union employees, but 23 those employees were still the minority.

24 There are several things to note about your 25 situation that may seem inequitable at first blush that

1 employers can wait until that point in time. But often,
2 as the Board noted in Higdon, an employer engages in two 3 job sites at the same time, one using the pre-hire
4 agreement and one not. And under the Ninth Circuit's 5 notice of repudiation rule, it's really an 6 all-or-nothing situation. I have many clients that 7 engage in that type of activity.

8 QUESTION: Would it also be true that the 9 employer could pay below the union scale as long as 10 nobody complained about it and then later on the 11 employees might say, well, you signed the pre-hire
12 agreement which -- well, in this case I take it there 13 was an undertaking to pay according to the union scale.
14 Would that obligation also be unenforceable, in your 15 view?

16 MR. WINKLER: That is correct.

17 QUESTION: Yes.

18 MR. WINKLER: The entire agreement is 19 unenforceable in the Board's position.

20 QUESTION: It's just a matter of voluntary,
21 unless the employer voluntarily elects to do --

22 MR. WINKLER: That's right.

23 QUESTION: -- what he said he would.

24 MR. WINKLER: And it's because that it is 25 inconsistent with employee rights just to in effect

1 recognize a minority union. And it is only enforceable
2 up to a point in time.

3 It is important to note that the position
4 taken by respondents and the position taken by the court
5 below would in effect reverse the Board's R.J. Smith 6 decision. The Board's R.J. Smith decision would not be 7 enforced under either interpretation, because there is 8 no notice of repudiation and there is no election result.

9 The respondents do cite a couple of cases in 10 support of their position that -- they contend that the 11 Board supports their position, and they cite one 8(b)(7)
12 case and they cite also another representation case.

13 I responded to both of those cases in my reply
14 brief. But it is important to note that respondents did 15 not go to the very issue, the enforceability of pre-hire
16 agreements, which are contained in Section 8(a)(5)
17 cases. In my reply brief I cited 13 NLRB Section 18 8(a)(5) cases in response to the position cited by 19 respondents.

20 Now, I noted that the position taken by 21 respondents the -- would in effect reverse the R.J.
22 Smith decision, would in effect reverse the Ruttman
23 decision, would reverse certain parts of the Corrugated 24 Structures decision and other decisions by the Board.

25 There are also some -- one point to be

1 considered is that employees do not necessarily have any 2 detriment by the position taken by the petitioner herein
3 or by the Board. In R.J. Smith, of course, the Board 4 said as a matter of law, employees receive a certain 5 detriment because of court enforcement and Board 6 enforcement of the decision.

7           Also, in the Ruttman decision, which was a 8 companion to the R.J. Smith and also noted by this 9 Court, the employees actually receive higher wages and 10 higher fringe benefits rather than under the pre-hire 11 agreement of the other union. Also, in the -- 14           MR. WINKLER: Thank you, Your Honor.

16 above-entitled matter was recessed, to reconvene at 1:00 17 p.m. this same day.)

AFTERNOON SESSION

(1:00 p.m.)

CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: You may resume, Counsel.

MR. WINKLER: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the Court:

Just a few more points I would like to make. I keep on referring to the Board's R.J. Smith decision because it is the basis of the Board's policy and it sets out the Board's policy in total. It is very important to note that not only did respondent not rely on Section 8(a)(5) cases in its brief, it did not even cite in its entire brief the R.J. Smith decision. It is completely avoiding the Board's position on these matters.

Now, this Court in Higdon also pointed out the very issue of the enforceability of minority agreements in 301 litigation which was raised in the AFL-CIO brief and by the Board in its reply brief. And this Court in Higdon stated that 301 -- in 301 litigation minority status may be litigated just as it is in an --

QUESTION: Mr. Winkler, you know, it's correct about your opponent, but, you know, the government cited the R.J. Smith case. They found it distinguishable.

MR. WINKLER: I am sorry?

QUESTION: The Solicitor General cited the

1 R.J. Smith case and seems to think it's distinguishable.

2 MR. WINKLER: I disagree. I don't see how it
3 can be, because the -- okay -- they went in the R.J.
4 Smith decision, they went all the way back and found 5 that there was no enforceable agreement, and also they 6 --it was not -- excuse me, there is no notice of 7 repudiation in R.J. Smith.

8 The government distinction is very simple. It 9 simply says that that was an unfair labor practice
10 proceeding and this is a 301 litigation. And that I 11 think was discussed and resolved in the Higdon decision 12 itself. And also, it goes right back to the Howard 13 Johnson case that says the basic policies in an unfair 14 labor practice case should not be -- should also be 15 controlling in a 301 case.

16 Now, the entire line of cases along there,
17 Howard Johnson, were really ignored by the government in 18 its case. It just gave a blanket statement. The two 19 are completely separate. And I think that if you look 20 at my reply brief, you will see that the entire history
21 from Lincoln Mill and Howard Johnson on up to Higdon 22 itself says you just cannot ignore the basic policies in 23 unfair labor practice context.

24 Now the litmus test to be applied here is the 25 basic policies. And if you look at those Board cases I

1 cite in my reply brief, all 13 of them, you will find 2 that in those cases where the statutory policies were 3 intendedly applied, the contract was enforced. When the 4 employer went to the union hall and got union employees, 5 the contract was enforced. And when it was -- the 6 employer used non-union employees on non-union job 7 sites, the contract was not enforced because that's 8 against public policy.

9           You should also look, I believe, at the 10 Board's Land Equipment case, which I cited in my reply
11 brief. Respondents also were involved in that case.
12 The Trust Funds intervened in the Board proceedings.
13 Now, in that case the idea of voidability -- a 14 repudiation rule was brought up before the Board, and 15 the Board again rejected it specifically. And the Board 16 did find majority status in that case. The union did -- 17 excuse me, the employer did go to the union hall, got 18 employees, and the employers are bound to honor the 19 agreement.

20           However, it is only bound to honor the 21 agreement that to a point in time when the union first 22 obtained majority status. The Board disagreed with the 23 administrative law judge in that case, which gave it 24 retroactive enforcement even before that period of time.

25           Now, that case was enforced by the Ninth

1 Circuit Court of Appeals, and I didn't cite the Ninth 2 Circuit decision. It was just a memorandum opinion at 3 649 F.2d 867.

4           So what you have here is the Ninth Circuit in 5 an unfair-practice context enforcing this contract back 6 to the point in time when they had majority but not 7 before. But in the 301 context the same court would 8 enforce that contract all the way back to the beginning 9 because there was no notice of repudiation.

10           Now, getting to the issue of the Trust Funds
11 involved in this case, whether or not under Section 12 306(a) there is some special reason that they shouldn't 13 be bound to the same rules by the NLRB.

14           Let me just point out one case I cited in my 15 brief, the District Court case of Sorrenton pointed out 16 in the minority agreement, it's really for the employees 17 to decide whether they want the contract and that 18 includes trust fund benefits. And the court would be 19 second-guessing those wishes of the employees if they in 20 fact gave them trust fund benefits or put the -- put the 21 entire contract into effect.

22           And it pointed out also that trust fund 23 payments to benefit -- to employees is not necessarily a 24 benefit to them, it may take away from the ability of 25 the employer to give other --

1           QUESTION: Mr. Winkler, 306(a), the language
2 there is collectively bargained agreement. Now, is 3 there a difference between a collectively bargained
4 agreement and a collective bargaining agreement?

5           MR. WINKLER: I notice the distinction in the 6 language there. I don't know exactly what they're 7 talking about there. I notice in -- in Higdon itself, 8 this Court was careful to use the term "pre-hire 9 agreement" --

10          QUESTION: Well, clearly enough, a pre-hire 11 agreement is not yet a collective bargaining agreement.
12 But may it not be a collectively bargained agreement?

13          MR. WINKLER: Oh, I would say not.

14          QUESTION: Why not?

15          MR. WINKLER: The idea of collectively --

16          QUESTION: Why not?

17          MR. WINKLER: -- collectively bargained 18 assumes that the -

19          QUESTION: Well, if they sat down and 20 bargained, even though it was a minority pre-hire 21 agreement, isn't that --

22          MR. WINKLER: That'd be --

23          QUESTION: -- collectively bargained even if 24 it's not a collective bargaining agreement?

25          MR. WINKLER: The idea of collective

1 bargaining assumes the idea that they're acting as the 2 agent of the employees, as the collective bargaining
3 agent for those employees.

4 QUESTION: Well, do you think Congressmen --
5 Congress chose that language, "collectively bargained 6 agreement," purposely to indicate maybe a distinction?

7 MR. WINKLER: I do not believe that they did.
8 I notice in the original Senate version they also had 9 the words "collectively bargained." I believe they also 10 said -- made a reference to a "collective bargain 11 agreement" in 308(a). And that's pointed out in my 12 reply brief.

13 But I would note that the Sorrenson decision 14 has some practical effect in the Board's DeAngelo and 15 Kahn decision, which is also cited in my reply brief.
16 The only issue in DeAngelo and Kahn are really the trust 17 fund payments. The employer voluntarily complied with 18 the agreement on one job site, but then on another job 19 site it gave what it would have been the trust fund 20 payments, it gave that extra amount to the employees in 21 additional take-home pay. It was a federally funded 22 project, and therefore, under the Davis-Bacon Act they 23 had to pay a certain amount, and that amount was the 24 same as the overall union contract.

25 So the employees actually got a greater

1 take-home pay under that arrangement. So it's not like 2 the employees necessarily -- it's basically for the 3 employees to decide what they want, and if they have not 4 chosen the union, the union contracts do not apply.

5 QUESTION: What is necessary for the employer
6 to escape the pre-hire agreement under the judgment that 7 you are attacking.

8 MR. WINKLER: Basically, if the -- if the 9 unions -- if it is not established that the union 10 represents the majority of the employees, then the 11 contract is not enforceable.

12 QUESTION: I know that is your -- that is your 13 view. But what, under the decision below, what is 14 necessary for the employer to escape?

15 MR. WINKLER: They have to, in effect, give a
16 notice of repudiation.

17 QUESTION: And that notice of repudiation
18 cannot be just a refusal to abide by the contract?

19 MR. WINKLER: Basically, if they say not.
20 They say it can be an open and notorious, and that 21 would, in effect, give notice. But they have said that 22 that did not occur here.

23 QUESTION: But even if it were -- even if a 24 refusal to comply was a notice as to the future, it 25 wouldn't be effective to negate obligations accrued up

1 to that time.

2 MR. WINKLER: That's true.

3 QUESTION: And your -- your view is that 4 nothing in the contract is binding on the employer until 5 there's a majority representation.

6 MR. WINKLER: That's true. That's my view.
7 That's also the Board's view. What we have here is 8 basically --

9 QUESTION: Well, the Board -- I don't know how 10 you can say it's the Board's view when the general 11 counsel is on this brief for the government.

12 MR. WINKLER: Well, the general counsel and 13 the Board --

14 QUESTION: Are not one and the same.

15 MR. WINKLER: -- are not one and the same. I 16 don't mean that lightly. I mean I do not believe that 17 is an accurate representation of the Board.

18 QUESTION: Well, we have recognized that for 19 some purposes, have we not? I mean Congress has 20 recognized that.

21 MR. WINKLER: That's true. That's right in 22 the statute. And I do not think that it's an accurate 23 representation of the Board. I might add, if you 24 compare the brief of the general counsel -- excuse me, 25 of the government in this case with the brief of the 1 Board given in Higdon, they do not match at all. They 2 are totally inconsistent, and they are totally contrary 3 to each other.

4 QUESTION: But if the counsel or the Board
5 makes a representation to this Court in a case of this 6 kind, you suggest that that carries no weight?

7 MR. WINKLER: Oh, it should be given some 8 weight, but then again I think you should take a look at 9 the Board decisions itself.

10 QUESTION: Is this a case where his 11 independence is directly involved, counsel's 12 independence?

13 MR. WINKLER: I can't say that. I don't think 14 that he's speaking for the Board.

15 QUESTION: Well, this is an amicus case. I 16 suppose if the Board were a party --

17 MR. WINKLER: That's right.

18 QUESTION: -- to this case, and then there's a 19 brief filed on its behalf, you should be able to assume 20 that it represents the Board's view, shouldn't you?

21 MR. WINKLER: Well --

22 QUESTION: But that isn't the case here.

23 MR. WINKLER: In Higdon the brief was on 24 behalf of the National Labor Relations Board.

25 QUESTION: This is the brief of the United

1 States.

2 MR. WINKLER: I know. But in Higdon the brief 3 was --

4 QUESTION: And not the Board.

5 MR. WINKLER: -- filed on behalf of the 6 National Labor Relations Board.

7 QUESTION: It was the brief of a party in 8 Higdon, wasn't it?

9 MR. WINKLER: That's correct. And you might 10 as well take the Higdon brief and, you know, change the 11 caption and sign my name to it. I mean I am just 12 adopting exactly what the Board is saying all the way 13 through.

14 QUESTION: Did the Board prevail in Higdon?

15 MR. WINKLER: Yes, it did. Yes, it did.

16 I might point out that under 306(a), I pointed 17 out a few things in my -- in my reply argument. One 18 thing I would especially like the Court to look at is 19 that in -- I believe that the issue raised was also 20 resolved by Kaiser where this Court said that defenses, 21 labor law defenses, are not implicitly repealed. And I 22 think that settles the matter.

23 Also, in this matter you might take a look -- 24 this is really probably not even a defense. There's a 25 question whether or not this is even a defense here if

1 the entire agreement is not enforceable.

2 Also, I think the initial premise, and I 3 request you to take a good look at my reply brief on 4 this, the initial premise was that the legislative 5 history in the Committee Print was to 301(a). It was to 6 301(a) and to (b).

7 And the entire section taken together shows 8 that what they were trying to do was set up a statutory 9 right and to give -- so that you can give certain 10 remedies. And it's set forth in (b) all the remedies 11 that you can give. You've got attorney's fees, you have 12 liquidated damages, you have extra interest rates. It's 13 really quite a penalty.

14 The government -- thank you, Your Honor.

15 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Jett.

16 ORAL ARGUMENT OF WAYNE JETT, ESQ.,

17 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENT, FRANK L. TODD, ET AL.

18 MR. JETT: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
19 please the Court:

20 Petitioner McNeff has argued from the 21 viewpoint that because a breach of a Section 8(f)
22 agreement before majority status is achieved is not a 23 violation of Section 8(a)(5) of the National Labor
24 Relations Act, that that breach then cannot be remedied
25 by a suit brought under Section 301.

1           However, we have shown in our briefs that 2   Section 8(a)(5) cases and all unfair labor practice 3   cases are government litigation pursued by the 4   government at government expense to enforce rights and 5   duties that are created by statute under the Act.

6           By comparison, private rights and duties that 7   are created by private agreement have been left to 8   enforcement according to the normal processes of the 9   courts under Section 301 litigation.

10          That is a tandem system of handling labor
11   disputes that has served the country well since 1947
12   when Section 301 was enacted.

13          There is no reversal involved of any Section 14   8(a)(5) case in enforcing the contract rights in a 15   judicial action. Those Section 8(a)(5) cases would be 16   exactly as valid with the enforcement of contract rights 17   in this Section 301 action as they are presently; 18   namely, the government would not issue a Complaint and 19   would pursue litigation as a matter of public policy to 20   enforce a contract when majority status is not shown.

21          We have shown in our brief at least two clear 22   similar circumstances in which -- one of which this 23   Court has recognized in the Iron Workers case. For 24   example, Section 8(e) agreements, the hot-cargo clauses, 25   are not enforceable by picketing, just as the minority

1 agreement in Iron Workers was not enforceable by 2 picketing because of the limitations of Section 3 8(b)(7). However, those hot-cargo clauses are clearly 4 enforceable by judicial action.

5 In addition, we have also shown the Pittsburgh
6 Plate Glass decision of this Court, in which it clearly 7 recognizes the established rule of law that nonmandatory 8 subjects of agreement may be included in collective 9 bargaining agreements, and when they are, they are 10 judicially enforceable. However, they are not 11 enforceable by government litigation under Section 12 8(a)(5) cases. And that is what Pittsburgh Plate Glass 13 held.

14 QUESTION: Well, what happens in a -- outside 15 the construction industry when -- when an employer
16 purports to recognize a minority union and execute a 17 contract with that union?

18 MR. JETT: It is an unfair labor practice, 19 Your Honor.

20 QUESTION: Well, is it enforceable in a 301
21 action?

22 MR. JETT: Your Honor, it would not be, 23 because --

24 QUESTION: Why not? Why not?

25 MR. JETT: Because --

1 QUESTION: Give me your argument.

2 MR. JETT: According to our argument, we would 3 agree with this Court's decision in Carey versus 4 Westinghouse Electric. This Court has said that if 5 there is an unfair labor practice involved in the 6 execution of a labor agreement, the superior authority
7 of the Board can be invoked at any time in order to hold 8 the --

9 QUESTION: Well, that may be the authority of 10 the Board, but what about the -- what about a 301 case?

11 MR. JETT: Well, Your Honor, as far as an 12 unfair labor practice involved in a 301 case in the 13 situation you're talking about, if there is an 14 allegation of an unfair labor practice, it must be 15 submitted to the Board in the form of a charge.

16 Now, such a case has just been litigated in --

17 QUESTION: Well, suppose that an employer signs 18 -- outside the construction industry, signs a contract 19 with a minority union and perhaps everybody promising to 20 pay a certain wage, and one day he just lowers the wage 21 unilaterally, and then he gets sued in a 301 action for 22 -- for the contract wage.

23 MR. JETT: Your Honor, as a matter of fact,
24 that exact circumstance --

25 QUESTION: What happens?

1           MR. JETT: -- has just been litigated in the 2 Ninth Circuit.

3           QUESTION: What happens?

4           MR. JETT: It's the Glazers case that was 5 cited in our brief. And what happened is the Court said 6 -- and analyzed Iron Workers in doing so, analyzed the 7 issues largely before this Court. What happened was 8 they said if there is an unfair labor practice involved, 9 it is to be presented to the Board.

10          QUESTION: But the employees couldn't sue 11 under those circumstances, a 301 action?

12          MR. JETT: They could sue, yes, Your Honor.
13 And as a matter of fact --

14          QUESTION: Well, could they collect? Could 15 they collect the promised price?

16          MR. JETT: The -- the Iron Workers -- the 17 Glazers case enforces the contract and says it does so 18 because the unfair labor practice must be kept under the 19 primary jurisdiction of the Board and that otherwise 20 that would require litigation of the intent of the 21 unfair labor practice statutes in Section 301 cases, and 22 the Ninth Circuit in the Glazers versus Custom Model 23 case declined to do that. And I -- as a matter of fact, 24 the --

25          QUESTION: So Glazers -- your case is a

1 fortiori from the Glazers case?

2 MR. JETT: It certainly is highly consistent 3 with our case. It adopts the same arguments that we 4 have made. It simply is a situation which is outside
5 the construction industry. And I think it is a more 6 clear representation of the Ninth Circuit's view as to 7 whether employee representational issues -- in other 8 words, the litigation of majority status -- can be 9 litigated before the courts in Section 301 cases as 10 opposed to before the Board.

11 And the Ninth Circuit clearly came down in a 12 well-reasoned opinion there that came out after -- well, 13 it had not been officially reported as yet at the time 14 of our brief, but we cited it, and it has been, of 15 course, officially reported. But they followed the same 16 analysis essentially that we did in analyzing the 17 references to litigation of majority status in Iron 18 Workers and said that that was not by any means a 19 holding, it was not a 301 case that was litigated in 20 Iron Workers, it simply was a matter of turning aside an 21 invalid union argument made in the Iron Workers case.
22 Now --

23 QUESTION: Well, what's the -- under 301 what 24 would be the theory of -- that the employer would use if 25 he's sued, just like in this case, and he came back and

1 said, well, I sent you notice last week that I am 2 repudiating the contract? And what does -- what's the 3 301 theory on that?

4 MR. JETT: Your Honor, we have argued that 5 repudiation is not a proper defense. We -- we have 6 argued that there is no right of repudiation.

7 QUESTION: You are different from the Board 8 then?

9 MR. JETT: We are different from the 10 government's brief in that respect.

11 QUESTION: You don't think that's a Board
12 brief, either, eh?

13 MR. JETT: Your Honor, it is to the extent
14 that it represents the government's views. However, I 15 must note that, as the Court has already mentioned, that 16 this is not a case that has had the benefit of being 17 litigated through the Board's processes so that the 18 Board itself has had the benefit of a full record and 19 having briefs and arguments made before the Board and 20 developed it on the basis of its expertise.

21 QUESTION: Well, is it once you've signed the 22 pre-hire agreement, once the employer signs, under your 23 view, he is permanently stuck with it?

24 MR. JETT: Not at all, Your Honor. As a 25 matter of fact --

1           QUESTION: When is he not subject to suit in 2 the 301 action?

3           MR. JETT: The agreement, according to our 4 argument, is that he would not be bound to the agreement 5 after the Board certifies a union election result that 6 the union has lost. That is exactly the same treatment 7 --

8           QUESTION: So the employer, before he can get 9 out of the agreement, he has to -- he has to precipitate 10 a representation election?

11          MR. JETT: An election has to be precipitated, 12 we'll put it that way.

13          QUESTION: And he has to win?

14          MR. JETT: The employer may do it. As the 15 Iron Workers decision says, when this Court referred to 16 the fact that the agreement was voidable, the precise 17 means and the only means that this Court referred to was 18 the filling of a petition under the proviso. And that 19 filing of a petition, as we have shown in our brief, 20 keeps all employee representation issues -- the 21 determination of appropriate bargaining unit, the 22 determination of eligibility of voters -- all of those 23 aspects are kept before the Board.

24          QUESTION: So it changes the burden, the 25 pre-hire changes the burden with respect -- it changes

1 the normal rules with respect to how a -- how majority 2 status is to be determined?

3 MR. JETT: Your Honor, it does not. As a
4 matter of fact, it -- in order to pursue our argument, 5 it keeps it exactly where it has been since 301 was 6 enacted; and that is, all employee representation issues 7 are determined by the Board in exactly the same way that 8 they always have. And that's an awfully important 9 aspect.

10 QUESTION: Well, I know, but you -- the 11 employer, unless there is some solid evidence of 12 majority representation, an employer isn't normally 13 required to act like the union is the majority 14 representative. And if he says, look, you've had plenty 15 of time to get -- to get -- to get yourself organized
16 and you aren't, and I am repudiating the pre-hire 17 agreement right now because you just don't represent the 18 -- the employers.

19 MR. JETT: Well, Your Honor --

20 QUESTION: Or the employees. And you say, 21 well, no, the pre-hire is going to force him to go to 22 the Board.

23 MR. JETT: Your Honor, what --

24 QUESTION: In order to prove that the union
25 isn't the majority representative.

1           MR. JETT: What it would force him to do, 2 require him to do is to do what he agreed to do; that 3 is, perform according to the agreement until there is an 4 expression of self-determination by the employees in 5 which they vote out the union.

6           QUESTION: So you -- so you do say that 7 pre-hire does change the --

8           MR. JETT: Yes, Your Honor, it does. It does 9 to this extent: As this Court recognized in Iron 10 Workers, 8(f) specifically was intended as an exception 11 to the general requirement of the law that there be 12 majority status before a contract can be signed.

13           And let me, if I might, look specifically at 14 the objectives of Congress when they enacted Section 15 8(f). I believe there are four clear objectives that 16 can be identified. The first one is that the employers 17 in the construction industry needed the ability to sign 18 binding contracts that would establish firmly their wage 19 rates that could then be used by them in preparing bids 20 that would be entered into competitive bidding for 21 construction projects.

22           When those bids are accepted, the employer is 23 bound contractually to perform by them, and he needs 24 reliable labor costs. Otherwise, he is substantially at 25 risk.

1           Secondly, to the same extent, it is very 2 common in the construction industry that time is of the 3 essence in performing a construction contract once he 4 gets the winning bid. Therefore, he needs a ready 5 source of labor that he can call on immediately in order 6 to perform the contract. It's not common at all for the 7 way construction projects develop and bids are won, the 8 employer normally cannot afford to keep a full staff of 9 workmen on his staff and on his payroll. He must have a 10 source of workmen. And he needs that on a reliable, a 11 contractually reliable basis.

12           Now, from the union standpoint, there were 13 also two objectives. The unions needed to have some 14 approach to stabilize working conditions in their 15 geographic areas over a period of years. And the 16 legislative history clearly recognizes that they had 17 been doing that by the practices of signing agreements 18 applicable to geographic areas over 1, 2, or 3 years.

19           I would cite the legislative history, since it 20 has been questioned in the reply brief, pages 423 to 25, 21 pages 451 and 52, page 759 and 777.

22           Clearly, it was the intent of Congress to 23 validate the practice of signing binding contracts that 24 would stabilize working conditions within an area so 25 that the union and the employer would not have to bid on

1 a project or to bargain on a project-by-project basis
2 after the employees got out on the site where there 3 could be disruption of work at the job site.

4 And fourth, the fourth objective is also a 5 union objective. Congress recognized that because of 6 the high mobility and the short -- shortness of jobs in 7 the construction industry, that the construction unions 8 did need certain organizing mechanisms that were out of 9 the ordinary for other industries. One of those, they 10 recognized that the unions needed an exclusive hiring 11 hall to refer their workmen out, and they also 12 recognized a need for the 7-day union security clause.
13 Both of those objectives, both of those mechanisms are 14 expressed precisely in the wording of Section 8(f).

15 Now, I refer to those objectives in some 16 detail because they must be examined to recognize that 17 every one of those four objectives of Congress requires 18 a binding contract in order to achieve it. Congress 19 looked at the existing law at that time and said that, 20 well, they've got to have a binding contract in order to 21 achieve those objectives; right now they have to show 22 majority status before they can sign that.

23 Now, if they were -- if we were to follow that 24 approach, we would have to be ready for the NLRB to 25 conduct elections and every bargaining unit from the

1 construction industry. And clearly, the legislative 2 history says at several places it's not feasible in the 3 construction industry to contemplate having elections in 4 every unit in order to certify the union as the 5 bargaining agent.

6           They said, therefore, because of that, the 7 unfeasibility of elections in every unit and because we 8 need these four objectives under the circumstances of 9 the construction industry to be met, we are authorizing 10 the pre-hire agreement, we are validating the practices 11 that have been used by the unions, and we are doing it 12 by enacting Section 8(f).

13           QUESTION: Well, you would force the -- you
14 would force the employer before the Board in any case 15 where he seriously doubted the -- the majority status of 16 the union.

17           MR. JETT: Your Honor, in order to present a 18 question of employee representation, it is all -- has 19 always been the requirement that that question of 20 representation be presented to the Board. The cases are 21 replete that the Board is the administrative tribunal 22 that has the expertise to make that decision.

23           And let me say this about the prospect of a 24 transfer wholesale of the employee representation issues 25 in the construction industry from the Board, where it's

1   been for the last 25 years, into the courts. The courts
2   simply do not have the capacity to continue absorbing 3   the additional doses of litigation that they're 4   getting. The litigation arena is too crowded already.
5   And under such a ruling, under 301 cases, both the state 6   and the federal courts would then be involved in 7   litigating majority status issues.

8               It's doubly troublesome to contemplate moving 9   employee representation issues from the Board to the 10  courts for this reason. If anything, the litigation 11  burden on the courts would indicate that legislatively 12  those burdens should be moved from the courts to 13  administrative tribunals. And yet we would have 14  thousands and thousands of employee representation
15  issues. In effect, every enforcement of a pre-hire 16  agreement would be litigated in the courts rather than 17  the Board.

18              QUESTION: Well, Mr. Jett, even if we affirm 19  the Ninth Circuit here, it would have the effect of 20  moving a lot to the courts, wouldn't it, unless your 21  view were adopted in the process?

22              MR. JETT: Your Honor, that is correct. To 23  adopt the Ninth Circuit's view, it would result in 24  moving majority status to the courts. That was stated
25  in dictum views because even under the Ninth Circuit's

1 view holding for us, there was no repudiation here. But 2 that is why we are pointing out it's so -- it's such an 3 important aspect of this case that the proper legal 4 structure for deciding the case is set, because if it is 5 -- if courts are led to believe that those issues of 6 majority status of an appropriate bargaining unit, all 7 of those things that go into determining majority 8 status, it's by no means just a situation of checking 9 the payroll and determining who is a union member.

10 QUESTION: How do you respond to Mr. Winkler's 11 position, though, that the Board itself has viewed these 12 agreements as unenforceable?

13 MR. JETT: Your Honor, they -- the Board has 14 not reviewed -- viewed them as unenforceable under 301.
15 The Board has never decided that issue. It wouldn't be 16 called upon. That's what's before this Court.

17 It is unenforceable from the standpoint that 18 the government will not pursue litigation at government 19 expense under Section 8(a)(5) to enforce that 20 agreement. So that -- that would stand completely. And 21 as a matter of fact, I would like to point out in regard 22 to the ERISA Amendment that basically the same 23 government attitude toward the enforcement of these 24 private rights is maintained in ERISA, because while the 25 ERISA Amendment creates the statutory right or

1 obligation to perform the contract, there is also a part 2 of that amendment that says the Secretary of Labor will 3 not initiate litigation to enforce that contract.

4           And so basically, it is simply a situation 5 that the Board has said and ERISA has said that the 6 government is not going to expend its agency resources
7 to enforce this as a matter of public policy. However, 8 under the ERISA Amendment, they did add the provision 9 that entitles the private trustees to recover their 10 costs of pursuing that litigation.

11           So in that respect of what the ERISA Amendment
12 did is simply add the statutory obligation that 8(a)(5) 13 doesn't provide for performance here, it adds the 14 statutory obligation but again it leaves the litigation 15 in private hands just as it was under 301.

16           QUESTION: Incidentally, what do you suggest 17 is the reason that that ERISA Amendment speaks for the 18 collectively bargained agreement rather than a 19 collective bargaining agreement?

20           MR. JETT: Your Honor, I believe that it is 21 common usage in ERISA to speak in that terminology as 22 opposed to collective bargaining agreement. It --

23           QUESTION: In other words, this is a different 24 thing than a collective bargaining agreement?

25           MR. JETT: I believe that ERISA, while it

1 intended collectively bargained agreement to apply 2 broadly to these kinds of agreements, I believe they 3 were not concerning themselves with the intricacies of 4 unfair labor practice law in terms of recognizing the 5 policies of the Board in any detail. But I believe that 6 at the very minimum what has to be said about the 7 legislative history of the ERISA Amendment is that with 8 the citation of the Overhead Door case that expressed 9 disapproval of Overhead Door and McDowell, both of them 10 being clearly 8(f) cases in which majority status was 11 raised, the minimum that can be said is that Congress
12 intended that that statutory obligation in Section 515 13 applies to 8(f) agreements. They viewed those 14 agreements --

15           QUESTION: That they may be collectively
16 bargained even if not collective bargaining agreements?

17           MR. JETT: Correct, Your Honor, although I
18 would say this. I don't believe the history of Section 19 8(f) indicates that a pre-hire agreement is not a 20 collective bargaining agreement. I believe that the 21 decision of this Court in Iron Workers was -- was 22 specific and express in saying that -- that the 23 collective bargaining agreement does not move to the 24 status of a Section 9 representative which would entitle 25 it to enforcement under Section 8(a)(5). But it didn't

1 say that -- that this is not a collective bargaining 2 agreement. In my estimation, clearly it's a collective 3 bargaining agreement. It sets wages and working 4 conditions for employees on whose behalf the union 5 bargained.

6 QUESTION: Isn't one of the requirements for a 7 collective bargaining agreement that the union has to 8 represent the employees?

9 MR. JETT: Your Honor, it is, except in 8(f)
10 cases. And what Congress intended to do in 8(f) was 11 enable both employers and unions to step into the vacuum 12 that exists before a project is actually manned.

13 QUESTION: Well, does 8(f) shed light on 14 whether the -- one of the requirements of a collective 15 bargaining agreement is that the union represent the 16 employees?

17 MR. JETT: Your Honor, I believe that Section 18 8(f) specifically contemplates agreements and binding
19 agreements in which it expressly is with a minority 20 union. That's specifically and expressly what 8(f)
21 intends, that you be able to enter into binding
22 agreements when it is conceded that the union is a 23 minority union. That's what it says on its face.

24 And the only -- the only point that Congress 25 saw fit to protect was that enabling employers and

1 unions to step into this vacuum and deal with binding
2 contracts on the basis that met the needs of both 3 parties was the proviso -- they didn't want the 4 employers and the unions to stick the employees with 5 something that the employees didn't want.

6           And as a matter of fact, in looking at the 7 legislative history on the purpose of the proviso, the 8 clearest explanation I find of exactly what Congress had 9 in mind and what was bothering it on the proviso appears 10 in the -- in the Committee Print of the Senate 11 Subcommittee on Labor that was published right at the 12 time the Joint Conference adopted the Senate version of 13 Section 8(f). And that proviso, or that explanation on 14 a section-by-section basis explains the proviso with a 15 more limited purpose even than what we have discussd so 16 far.

17           It says this: Agreements permitted by this 18 section may not operate as a bar to a petition for an 19 election sought by a union not party to such 20 agreements. You look at the legislative history in 21 light of that explanation, and what Congress was really 22 worrying about when it added the proviso is they -- and 23 the legislative history shows clearly they were 24 concerned about sweetheart contracts between corrupt 25 employers and paper unions.

1 I cite the the Committee statement of the 2 legislative history at page 967. And the paper 3 union/sweetheart contract motive is shown in the 4 legislative history at page 425 and at pages 992 and 994.

5 So under that circumstance, what they were 6 really protecting against is -- is the employees getting 7 stuck with a sweet deal that benefited the employer and 8 the union but not the employees.

9 Now, the argument has been made that the 10 employees are disadvantaged --

11 QUESTION: Well, isn't it true, Mr. Jett, that 12 the -- according to your position, it really doesn't 13 make any difference for the purposes of this case where 14 this majority status issue is to be litigated or even 15 whether it is to be. Until it is, you say the 16 contract's enforceable?

17 MR. JETT: Yes, Your Honor.

18 QUESTION: So you don't -- it's -- it's -- all 19 you have to say is that the majority status has never 20 been determined and you're suing for back pay, so to 21 speak.

22 MR. JETT: In terms of this contract -- or 23 this case, it is clear that there was neither 24 repudiation under the Ninth Circuit view or a 25 determination of majority status until after the period

1 that was enforced in the contract. And clearly, we 2 would prevail on that basis. But once again, it is most 3 important --

4 QUESTION: But you would like to go on 5 prevailing on the same contract?

6 MR. JETT: It is most important that the right 7 reasons be given for that prevailing; otherwise, the 8 wrong reasons will undoubtedly lead to erroneous
9 decisions in future cases. And certainly, the decision 10 we believe of the Ninth Circuit, at least the dictum on 11 handling majority status in the courts, would certainly 12 lead to very erroneous decisions -- that is, the 13 litigation of majority status in the courts. Now --

14 QUESTION: Well, I don't -- I don't know. I 15 don't know whether the court would be necessarily 16 obligated to hear the issue rather than defer to the 17 Board and tell the parties to take it to the Board as a 18 matter of primary jurisdiction.

19 MR. JETT: Your Honor, as a matter of fact,
20 that is an extremely important point here and one 21 actually that the petitioner has taken both sides of.
22 If you look at the opening brief of the petitioner here, 23 they've argued that it was improper -- or that the 24 District Court should have deferred to the Board, and 25 argues quite extensively that that should be done. They

1 are now arguing essentially that, yes, it ought to be 2 litigated in the -- in the courts.

3 Now, we believe that if the Court were to take 4 the view that, yes, the agreements are void ab initio, 5 if you -- if you don't prove majority status and they're 6 a nullity from the beginning, it would certainly be 7 better to defer to the Board for a determination of 8 majority status than to litigate in the courts.

9 QUESTION: Mr. Jett, you don't -- I don't 10 think you're going to -- you're going to say that every 11 time you sued on a pre-hire agreement and the employer
12 said -- said, sorry, but I am repudiating right now, 13 you're not going to wage a losing battle, you're not 14 going to litigate forever when you know you don't have 15 majority status. And I am -- I wouldn't think the 16 employer, if there is any doubt about it, or if there is 17 substantial doubt about it, is going to litigate forever 18 either.

19 MR. JETT: Well, Your Honor, of course, our -- 20 our trustees, the parties respondent here --

21 QUESTION: Yes.

22 MR. JETT: -- are in the position of 23 attempting to enforce the fringe benefit rights, and are 24 in the position that in order to -- if -- if the Ninth 25 Circuit were to be taken at face value on the dictum,

1 would be in the position of having to come up with union
2 majority status proved to see whether it could be proved 3 to the court's satisfaction that that was established 4 before repudiation.

5 We would not be in the position, of course, of 6 going beyond what evidence is available. But at the 7 same time, we would have the prospect of needing to 8 enforce contract rights that have accrued to the 9 employees involved.

10 Now, I would like to --

11 QUESTION: Well, you certainly would agree, I 12 suppose, that if the employer took it to the Board, the 13 question of majority status to the Board, and he won, 14 that you haven't got any contract rights?

15 MR. JETT: Your Honor, if we --

16 QUESTION: From -- from at least the 17 prospective.

18 MR. JETT: From that date forward, yes, Your 19 Honor. And we have shown that. As a matter of fact, in 20 my letter citing the two additional cases that was 21 presented to the Court today, I would like to refer to 22 the Board's policy in that matter in non-construction
23 industry cases. In a non-construction industry 24 circumstance, when a petition is filed and goes to 25 election and the contract basically is still in effect,

1 the Board's clear policy is that the contract remains in 2 effect to the date of Board certification of election 3 results.

4 QUESTION: And if there is unilateral change,
5 it's an unfair labor practice, is that it?

6 MR. JETT: That is correct, Your Honor. That 7 is correct. But as far as -- and I might refer to 8 that. That's the Trico Products case that I cited 9 today. It goes in some detail into the Board policy, 10 that to create a hiatus or instability simply on the 11 filing of the petition would be adverse to the policies 12 of the act because the employees would be unsure of what 13 their rights are until the time of actual certification.

14 QUESTION: But that's in a case where the 15 union had been at one time certified as the majority 16 representative?

17 MR. JETT: Not necessarily so, Your Honor. It 18 would be in a situation in which at least there had been 19 recognition of majority status, because, as I said, 20 that's a non-construction industry case. And that would 21 not necessarily be a Board certification.

22 In other words, a petition can be filed at a 23 certain window of time during which the contract does 24 not present a bar, and when the Board then proceeds to 25 an election the Board says that its clear policy is to

1 maintain the status quo of the agreement until the time
2 that the election results are actually certified.

3 Now, I would like to deal with two concepts
4 that I think have -- have come round to the argument 5 that is made by petitioner in this case. I think it's 6 most important to deal with the concepts of repudiation 7 and voluntariness, in order to clarify the way in which 8 they have been intermixed.

9 Repudiation is the concept that the Board has 10 developed under 8(a)(5) cases in which the employer can 11 breach the contract --

12 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Your time has expired.
13 We will take that on the briefs, Counsel.

14 MR. JETT: Thank you.

15 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.
16 The case is submitted.

18 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
