

ORIGINAL

OFFICIAL TRANSCRIPT PROCEEDINGS BEFORE

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

DKT/CASE NO. 81-6756

TITLE MELVIN E. TUTEN, Petitioner v.
UNITED STATES

PLACE Washington, D. C.

DATE March 1, 1983

PAGES 1 - 27

ALDERSON REPORTING

(202) 628-9300
440 FIRST STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20001

1	C O N T E N T S
2	ORAL ARGUMENT OF	PAGE
3	LINDA GILLESPIE STUNTZ, ESQ.,
4	on behalf of the Petitioner	3
5	BARBARA E. ETKIND, ESQ.,
6	on behalf of the Respondent	20
7	LINDA GILLESPIE STUNTZ, ESQ.,
8	on behalf of the Petitioner - Rebuttal	26
9
10
11
12
13
14
15
16
17
18
19
20
21
22
23
24
25

1 P R O C E E D I N G S

2 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Ms. Stuntz, you may 3 proceed whenever you are ready.

4 ORAL ARGUMENT OF LINDA GILLESPIE STUNTZ, ESQ., 5 ON BEHALF OF PETITIONER

6 MS. STUNTZ: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice, and 7 may it please the Court.

8 This is a criminal case involving the 9 application to the particular facts of this case of 10 Section 5021(b) of the Federal Youth Corrections Act of 11 1950 and Section 3204 Chapter 22 of the District of 12 Columbia Code, in particular a provision of that section 13 multiplying by a factor of ten the penalty for repeat
14 offenders. These provisions are set forth at pages 2 15 and 3 of petitioner's brief.

16 Th question before the Court is: Whether 17 petitioner may be sentenced as a recidivist under 18 Section 3204 based on a conviction for which he served a 19 sentence of 2 years of probation pursuant to Section 20 5010(a) of the Federal Youth Corrections Act and was 21 granted an unconditional discharge.

22 The Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals which 23 answered a similar question in the negative is in 24 conflict with the District of Columbia Court of Appeals, 25 the court below, which answered this question in the 1 affirmative.

2 Petitioner maintains that the District of 3 Columbia Court of Appeals is in error and that his 4 sentencing as a recidivist was improper for two 5 independent reasons: Number one, his earlier Federal 6 Youth Corrections Act conviction was set aside pursuant 7 to Section 5021(b) when he received his unconditional 8 discharge; and number two, whether or not it was 9 technically set aside pursuant to Section 5021, it is 10 not a proper basis upon which to impose a recidivist
11 penalty under Section 3204.

12 The facts are not in dispute. On February 12, 13 1971, petitioner, then 19 years of age, entered a plea
14 of guilty in the District of Columbia Court of General
15 Sessions to the charge of carrying a pistol without a 16 license, in violation of 22 D.C. Code Section 3204.

17 The imposition of sentence was suspended, and 18 petitioner was placed on probation under Section 5010(a)
19 of the Federal Youth Corrections Act for a period of 2
20 years. Contrary to established Probation Department 21 procedures, petitioner's term of probation was allowed 22 to expire without judicial attention to the question of 23 whether or not he should have been discharged prior to 24 the end of his two-year term.

25 At the end of his term in 1973 petitioner was

1 granted an unconditional discharge. However, no
2 certificate was issued setting aside his conviction
3 pursuant to Section 5021(b) of the Youth Act.

4 On June 19, 1980, a two-count indictment was 5 filed charging petitioner with assault with a dangerous 6 weapon, a stick, and carrying a pistol without a 7 license, after having been previously convicted of 8 carrying an unlicensed pistol. Both offenses were 9 allegedly committed on November 23, 1979.

10 Prior to petitioner's trial, the government
11 informed the Court below, pursuant to D.C. law, that 12 petitioner had previously been convicted of carrying a 13 pistol without a license and was therefore subject to 14 the increased recidivist penalty provided by Section 15 3204. The previous conviction relied upon by the 16 government was the same 1970 offense for which 17 petitioner had been sentenced under the Federal Youth
18 Corrections Act.

19 On November 27, 1980, a jury found petitioner 20 not guilty of assault with a stick but guilty of 21 carrying a pistol without a license. On January 26, 22 1981, petitioner was sentenced to a felony term of not 23 less than two nor more than six years. Had he been 24 sentenced as a first-time offender pursuant to Section 25 3215 of the D.C. Code, the maximum sentence that he

1 could have been given is one year imprisonment.

2 Petitioner appealed his sentence as contrary
3 to Section 5021(b) of the Youth Act and of the 4 construction placed on that section by the Fifth Circuit
5 Court of Appeals in United States versus Arrington.

6 However, the District of Columbia Court of 7 Appeals affirmed. It found Arrington to be based on 8 unpersuasive authority and held that under Section 9 5021(b) only those youth offenders who are 10 unconditionally discharged by a court prior to 11 completing a Youth Act probationary sentence are 12 entitled to have their convictions set aside. The Court 13 concluded that a conviction which was not set aside was 14 a proper basis for the recidivist sentence that 15 petitioner received.

16 On October 12, 1982, this Court granted a 17 petition for writ of certiorari to review the decision 18 of the District of Columbia Court of Appeals.

19 The gist of petitioner's argument is that the 20 use of his 1971 Federal Youth Act conviction to trigger
21 the felony recidivist penalty contained in Section 3204
22 of the District of Columbia Code was improper on two 23 independent grounds: first, the 1971 conviction had 24 been automatically set aside pursuant to Section 5021(b)
25 by petitioner's unconditional discharge from probation;

1 and second, whether or not it was technically set aside,
2 it may not properly be used to trigger a recidivist 3 penalty. I would --

4 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Ms. Stuntz, would your 5 second ground require us to interpret differently than 6 did the D.C. Court of Appeals a statute dealing 7 primarily with local matters in the District?

8 MS. STUNTZ: Mr. Justice, the District of 9 Columbia Court of Appeals, as I understand its treatment 10 of that issue, which was very perfunctory, felt it was 11 not a matter for its determination as a court, but that 12 the issue was better addressed to Congress.

13 QUESTION: Well, that's one way of telling you 14 that you lose, I suppose.

15 MS. STUNTZ: I do not think there would be 16 involved any alteration of their interpretation. They 17 did not approach the question that fully.

18 QUESTION: Is it an independent state ground
19 for decision?

20 MS. STUNTZ: Your Honor, since it -- since 21 this question involves the interrelationship of both 22 statutes, it would be petitioner's position that there 23 would -- could be no independent state ground since it 24 necessarily involves the construction of both the 25 Federal Youth Corrections Act and the District of 1 Columbia provision.

2 QUESTION: But supposing this case had come to 3 us from New York or Illinois and the state court had 4 said, we are going to treat the Federal Youth
5 Corrections Act as a proper basis for a state recidivist
6 penalty. Now, that would clearly be an adequate state 7 ground, wouldn't it? And isn't that pretty much what 8 this Court did?

9 MS. STUNTZ: To the extent that that 10 interpretation of the Federal Youth Corrections Act, 11 which is plainly a matter for this Court's purview,
12 differed with a matter of this Court's interpretation, I 13 should think it would not be an adequate State ground.

14 QUESTION: Do you think we could prevent a 15 State court from treating a Youth Corrections Act 16 conviction as a basis for its own recidivist statute?
17 Couldn't New York pass a statute that says a second 18 conviction will result in an enhanced penalty and we 19 shall for this purpose treat any Federal conviction 20 whether youth or adult, as a first conviction? They 21 could do that, couldn't they?

22 MS. STUNTZ: Yes, Your Honor. I believe that 23 they could.

24 QUESTION: Well, isn't that pretty close to 25 what has happened here?

1 MS. STUNTZ: That is not the primary basis for 2 this Court's decision below --

3 QUESTION: Well, you say they --

4 MS. STUNTZ: -- as I understand it.

5 QUESTION: -- didn't articulate it that way,
6 but that's the net effect of the result reached, is it 7 not?

8 MS. STUNTZ: It may be, but as applied to this 9 particular case, but I believe the precedential value 10 that this case would set in terms of its construction of 11 the Youth Act Section 5021(b) and when set aside occurs 12 would have an impact far beyond this particular 13 jurisdiction.

14 QUESTION: At any rate, that's your second 15 point, isn't it? I take it you'd probably want to argue 16 your first point first.

17 MS. STUNTZ: Thank you, Your Honor. I will 18 proceed to that.

19 The government contends that the language of 20 Section 5021(b) is entirely clear and compels the 21 conclusion that a Youth Act conviction will be set aside 22 only when the youth has been discharged prior to the 23 expiration of his probationary sentence. Petitioner was 24 not discharged prior to the end of his 2-year 25 probationary term. Therefore, the government reasons in

1 the Court below, that this conviction was not set aside.

2 However, Section 5021(b) does not provide for 3 the set-aside of the conviction of a youth offender who 4 is discharged before the expiration of his sentence or 5 whatever sentence it is that's imposed upon him.

6 The language of the statute is that automatic 7 set-aside shall be granted to those youth offenders who 8 are discharged prior to the expiration of the maximum 9 period of probation, theretofore fixed by the Court.

10 Now, as with any question of statutory 11 construction, it is necessary to go back to the history, 12 structure, and underlying policies of the Youth Act 13 itself, at least briefly because I know the Court is 14 familiar with these matters, to see those -- what those 15 who drafted this language intended to do.

16 In its exhaustive review of the Federal Youth 17 Corrections Act in Dorszynski versus United State, this 18 Court found that the principal purpose of the Youth Act
19 is to rehabilitate persons who because of their youth 20 are especially vulnerable to the dangers of recidivism.
21 In furtherance of this principal purpose, sentencing 22 judges were authorized to choose from a variety of 23 sentencing options.

24 Under Section 5010 of the Act, a youth offender
25 may be committed to the custody of the Attorney General

1 for a period up to six years or such longer commitment
2 as may be authorized for an adult violator. The youth 3 offender may also be placed on probation with the 4 execution or imposition of his sentence suspended. Or 5 the youth may be sentenced as an adult should the Court
6 find he would not benefit from the Youth Act treatment.

7 The drafters of the Federal Youth Corrections
8 Act provided a powerful tool to the Youth Act Division 9 to be used in achieving this principal rehabilitative 10 purpose. This was the Division's discretion to 11 discharge committed persons unconditionally before it
12 was statutorily required that they do so under the Act
13 because upon such discharge the conviction of the youth 14 would be automatically set aside.

15 It was this provision, Section 5021(a), that 16 was before the United States Court of Appeals for the 17 Fifth Circuit in United States versus Arrington. There
18 the Court held that a youth offender's unconditional
19 discharge after satisfactorily completing a six-year
20 sentence under Section 5010(b) of the Youth Act set 21 aside his conviction under Section 5021(a).

22 As a result, the offender could not be 23 convicted of violating the Federal law which prohibits 24 the possession of firearms by a convicted felon, 18
25 U.S.C. Section 1202.

1 Citing the Court's decision in Dorszynski, the 2 Fifth Circuit stated, if a youthful offender has been 3 unconditionally discharged, the disabilities of a 4 criminal conviction are completely and automatically
5 removed. Indeed, the conviction is set aside as if it 6 never had been.

7 The government would have the Court discard 8 Arrington as an aberration, not based upon a complete
9 reading of Section 5021. According to the government 10 and the Courts below, Arrington's conviction was not set 11 aside because Arrington was not released prior to the 12 end of his Youth Act sentence.

13 The Fifth Circuit determined, however, that 14 because Arrington was given a sentence less than that 15 which he could have been given, his unconditional
16 discharge following the completion of that lesser term
17 earned him the set-aside of his conviction under Section 18 5021(a).

19 The Fifth Circuit's construction of Section 20 5021 is true to the distinctive character of the Federal 21 Youth Corrections Act as a tool of rehabilitation rather 22 than one of retribution.

23 Petitioner's case is even stronger than John 24 Arrington's. Arrington had been committed to the 25 custody of the Attorney General under Section 5010(b)

1 and had received unconditional discharge after 2 completing the six-year maximum term provided by Section 3 5010(b). Petitioner, on the other hand, received 4 unconditional discharge after serving a probationary 5 term of only two years.

6 Now, when the Youth Corrections Act was 7 enacted, no provision whatever was provided whereby 8 youths placed on probation rather than committed could 9 obtain the set-aside of their convictions. This waited 10 until 1961 when Section 5021(b) was added to extend the 11 same conviction set-aside benefits to youths serving 12 Youth Act probation as had been available to youths
13 committed under the Federal Youth Corrections Act.

14 Unlike the terms of commitment, however, the 15 Federal Youth Corrections Act specifies no maximum term
16 of probation at the end of which unconditional discharge 17 must occur, nor does it provide for mandatory 18 conditional release prior to the end of that maximum 19 term as is the case for committed youth offenders.

20 The government contends that according to the 21 plain language of the statute the youth must be released 22 prior to the term of probation initially imposed in 23 order to qualify for the set-aside of his conviction.
24 This reading of the statute, however, ignores the term
25 "maximum" even though the legislative history makes it

1 clear that the word "maximum" is in Section 5021 both 2 (a) and (b) for a reason.

3 The reason is to provide a benchmark by which 4 the youth eligibility for the set-aside of his 5 conviction can be measured. Unconditional discharge 6 prior to that benchmark grants automatic set-aside.
7 What is the maximum term of probation theretofore fixed 8 as is discussed in petitioner's reply brief? This is 9 not an easy question to answer.

10 Petitioner maintains, however, that the 11 drafters of the Federal Youth Corrections Act intended 12 unconditional discharges occurring before six years or 13 such longer period as an adult term may provide to carry 14 with it the set-aside of the conviction underlying that 15 term.

16 Acceptance of the government's contention 17 would lead to a number of anomalous results. An 18 offender discharged before the end of an extended period
19 of probation would be treated better than one discharged 20 at the end of a brief initial period of probation.

21 QUESTION: But isn't the thought, Ms. Stuntz,
22 that if someone sentenced under the Youth Corrections 23 Act is discharged prior to the term for which they have 24 probation, however long, that's a recognition of kind of 25 a specially good rehabilitation, whereas if the person

1 simply serves out the term, it's thought that's probably 2 about as expected but no big pluses?

3 MS. STUNTZ: Your Honor, I think that is 4 precisely why the statute was written as it was, to, as 5 the government puts out and as petitioner agrees, reward
6 not just average adjustment but -- but good behavior,
7 special response to the Federal Youth Corrections Act 8 program.

9 There is, however, in the language of the 10 statute the term "maximum," in recognition of the 11 anomalies that may result were a person discharged after 12 two years not allowed the set-aside of his conviction 13 and yet a person discharged after five years allowed 14 that set-aside. The term "maximum," which relates back, 15 petitioner contends, to the six years in the original 16 statute, provides a solid benchmark by which all 17 behavior under Federal Youth Corrections Act treatment
18 may be measured, especially in this case where there 19 never was an opportunity for petitioner to be discharged 20 before the end of his two-year probationary term due to 21 the failure of the Probation Department to alert the 22 sentencing Judge to the expiration of his term of 23 probation.

24 The government's interpretation of Section 25 5021(b) violates the foremost intent of the drafters of

1 the Federal Youth Corrections Act: to rehabilitate 2 those youths who can be reached by giving those who 3 respond to Federal Youth Corrections Act treatment a 4 fresh start.

5 Turning now to the second independent grounds
6 for reversal --

7 QUESTION: How does the fresh start concept
8 fit an acknowledged recidivist now, going to the policy 9 underlying the statute?

10 MS. STUNTZ: The question --

11 QUESTION: Assuming -- assuming he was 12 entitled to some special consideration for his first 13 offense, what justification is there for any special 14 consideration for him for the second offense?

15 MS. STUNTZ: Your Honor, I agree that the 16 benefit of hindsight often would change the application 17 of a --

18 QUESTION: Well, do not --

19 MS. STUNTZ: -- search warrant or -- or --

20 QUESTION: -- do not Judges in sentencing take 21 -- use hindsight to -- suppose a Judge were totally free 22 -- this is not directly related to your case -- but 23 suppose the Judge were entirely free, don't you think a 24 Judge would treat him as a second offender if there were 25 none of the points you raise?

1 MS. STUNTZ: I am sorry, Your Honor, I am not 2 sure I understand the --

3 QUESTION: Well, the Judge is going to look at 4 the total record. He looks at a sentencing probation 5 report, presentence report, and he finds the person has 6 committed other offenses. Now, suppose he had committed 7 an offense but had not been prosecuted for one reason or 8 another. Wouldn't the Judge, any sensible Judge making 9 the sentence, take that into account?

10 MS. STUNTZ: I think that is precisely why, 11 Your Honor, the set-aside provision was inserted and --

12 QUESTION: To prevent Judges from taking it 13 into account?

14 MS. STUNTZ: That -- whether or not the 15 set-aside completely expunges the record is an issue
16 which has not yet been finally adjudicated by the Court, 17 this Court or even the Courts below. They are in 18 disagreement on that matter, and I do not believe it is 19 an issue that needs to be determined today.

20 But the question is not whether petitioner's 21 commitment of a crime years later somehow goes back and 22 -- and disqualifies him from the set-aside of his 23 conviction.

24 QUESTION: Even when it's -- even when it's 25 practically the same crime?

5

1 MS. STUNTZ: Whether -- whether it is --
2 whether or not it is the same crime, Your Honor, the 3 question before the Court is did he qualify pursuant to 4 the statutory criteria set out in the Federal Youth
5 Corrections Act. That he committed a crime years later 6 is -- is unfortunate. And the Judge at that time has 7 the right to use his sentencing discretion in whatever 8 way he deems best. The question here is was that 9 conviction on the books at the time the Judge ten years 10 later when the second crime was committed.

11 Petitioner's position is, according to the 12 language of the Federal Youth Corrections Act and as 13 Arrington held, that conviction was set aside and was 14 not available to be used to trigger the increased 15 recidivist penalty.

16 Turning to the second independent grounds for 17 reversal, petitioner argues that whether or not his 18 conviction was set aside, it's not proper to use it as 19 the basis upon which to impose a recidivist penalty.
20 Federal Youth Corrections Act convictions are very 21 different kinds of creatures. Youths may be sentenced 22 to longer terms under the Federal Youth Corrections Act 23 than -- than may an adult.

24 QUESTION: Ms. Stuntz, you say it is not 25 proper to use it. Do you have some statutory frame of 1 reference in mind when you say that? That the -- is it 2 the general recidivist statute was not intended to 3 incorporate it or there is some constitutional problem 4 or is it a common-law observation?

5 MS. STUNTZ: Your Honor, I rely primarily upon 6 the rule of lenity. There is no legislative intent that 7 in the D.C. Code Section 3204 that Federal Youth 8 Corrections Act convictions be counted there. In the 9 absence of such legislative intent, it has been the 10 long-held doctrine of this Court that the imposition of 11 a harsher penalty which presumes such intent --

12 QUESTION: Well --

13 MS. STUNTZ: -- is improper.

14 QUESTION: Do you concede that at least by 15 implication the D.C. Court of Appeals has resolved the 16 issue of legislative intent against you?

17 MS. STUNTZ: The D.C. Court of Appeals has 18 certainly, at least by implication, resolved the issue 19 of the legislative intent of Section 3204.

20 QUESTION: Which is the one you want construed 21 according to the rule of lenity?

22 MS. STUNTZ: What I am asking the Court is not 23 just 3204 but also the Federal Youth Corrections Act, 24 because I think it's important to keep in mind the 25 policies of both acts to determine whether applying them

1 together, as they were in this case, makes sense and 2 serves the policies of either one. It is petitioner's 3 position that such use does not.

4 In conclusion -- and I would respectfully ask
5 that the remainder of my time be available for rebuttal
6 --

7 QUESTION: Very well.

8 MS. STUNTZ: -- petitioner would ask that for 9 these reasons and the reasons set forth in his briefs, 10 the decision of the District of Columbia Court of 11 Appeals be reversed and that his felony sentence be 12 vacated and his case remanded for resentencing pursuant 13 to Section 3215 of the D.C. Code as a first offender.

14 QUESTION: But he is no longer a youth? He is 15 no longer a youth?

16 MS. STUNTZ: That's correct, Justice.

17 QUESTION: He's 27 years old when he was 18 convicted, he was 27 years old?

19 MS. STUNTZ: That's correct.

20 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Ms. Etkind, you may 21 proceed whenever you are ready.

22 ORAL ARGUMENT OF BARBARA E. ETKIND, ESQ.,

23 ON BEHALF OF RESPONDENT

24 MS. ETKIND: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice, and 25 may it please the Court:

1 We believe that the question presented by this 2 case, whether petitioner is entitled to a set-aside of 3 his conviction under the Federal Youth Corrections Act, 4 is answered in the negative by the plain language of the 5 statute.

6 18 U.S.C. 5021(b) provides that a court may 7 unconditionally discharge a youth offender from 8 probation "prior to the expiration of the maximum period 9 of probation theretofore fixed by the Court which 10 discharge shall automatically set aside" the youth 11 offender's conviction.

12 Here petitioner was sentenced to two years'
13 probation under the Youth Corrections Act. It is 14 undisputed that he completed the entire probationary
15 term. Accordingly, he was never unconditionally
16 discharged prior to the expiration of the maximum period
17 of probation theretofore fixed by the Court.

18 QUESTION: If he were discharged one day
19 before the expiration, he would satisfy the statute?

20 MS. ETKIND: Yes, he would.

21 QUESTION: What do you think is the purpose of 22 the statute?

23 MS. ETKIND: I think the purpose of the 24 statute, Congress' purpose, was to hold out to youth 25 offenders the possibility of a set-aside as an

1 inducement to fully rehabilitate themselves and to take 2 --

3 QUESTION: Even though it's one day before?

4 MS. ETKIND: Well, I think -- I think it may 5 have to be one day before. Congress was looking for 6 some evidence of this rehabilitation, and the evidence 7 would be an early set-aside whenever that would come, 8 particularly in the case of a probation with a short 9 sentence, it might take nearly the whole sentence to 10 rehabilitate.

11 Petitioner was never unconditionally
12 discharged prior to the maximum period of probation. He 13 therefore was never entitled to the set-aside, and the 14 government was fully intent -- was fully entitled to use 15 it as a basis for the subsequent recidivist penalty.

16 Petitioner attempts to create ambiguity where 17 none exists in this statute by focusing on the statute's 18 use of the word "maximum." and on the absence of any 19 language in the statute such as "the sentence imposed on 20 him."

21 But it is clear from the phraseology of the 22 statute, the period of probation theretofore fixed by 23 the Court, that Congress was talking about the sentence
24 that would be imposed on the defendant. And Congress 25 could not have more clearly expressed that its use of

1 the word maximum referred to "the maximum period of 2 probation theretofore fixed by the Court."

3 In addition, petitioner now suggests that 4 "maximum" may refer to -- may refer to the available 5 sentence or the six-year sentence under the YCA as the 6 maximum. But in fact, when a court sentences a 7 probationer, the maximum to which he can be sentenced 8 under 3651 in the Federal Courts and also in the D.C.
9 Courts is five years' probation. So according to 10 petitioner's theory, any -- any probationer would 11 ultimately be entitled to set-aside relief.

12 As I mentioned to Justice Blackman, it was 13 Congress' purpose in -- in -- in holding out the 14 possibility of a set-aside to induce probationers, to 15 induce all youth offenders, to take advantage of the 16 treatment and guidance that was offered by the YCA
17 program. Accordingly, any construction of the statute 18 that makes the availability of set-aside relief turn on 19 the initial sentence as imposed would -- would thwart 20 that congressional purpose.

21 And it's for that reason, as well as the more 22 significant fact that its conclusion flies in the face
23 of the statutory language, that the Arrington decision 24 on which petitioner relies and which is the only 25 decision contrary to the holding below is of no

1 persuasive force at all.

2 While the case -- while this case here
3 presents -- involves the set-aside provision applicable
4 to probationers, Arrington involved the analogous 5 set-aside provision applicable to committed youth 6 offenders; that is, incarcerated youth offenders.

7 That section provides, "Upon the unconditional
8 discharge by the commission of a committed youth 9 offender before the expiration of the maximum sentence
10 imposed upon him, the conviction shall be automatically 11 set aside."

12 Notwithstanding this clear statutory language,
13 the Fifth Circuit in Arrington held that the defendant
14 there, who had completed his --the six-year sentence 15 that was imposed upon him was entitled to a set-aside.
16 That Fifth Circuit decision represents nothing less than 17 a holding that every defendant who is sentenced under 18 the Youth Corrections Act will ultimately be entitled to 19 a set-aside.

20 Petitioner complains that we are -- that we 21 interpret the Arrington decision too broadly, that 22 really all that the Fifth Circuit was holding was that 23 any youth offender who was committed to a sentence less 24 than that to which he could have been committed will be 25 entitled to a set-aside.

1 But there is no basis for petitioner's reading 2 of the Arrington decision. In the first place, the 3 Fifth Circuit never articulated such a limited ruling.
4 Indeed, it never even discussed the critical statutory 5 language prior -- before the expiration of the maximum 6 term imposed upon him.

7 And moreover, the petitioner's reading of the 8 Fifth Circuit's decision makes no sense at all, as a 9 hypothetical will show. If you take two defendants, 10 both of whom are sentenced to six years youth -- to six 11 years under 50 -- Section 5010(b) of the Youth
12 Corrections Act, one of the defendants has committed a 13 string of murdered, the other one has been convicted of 14 loitering.

15 Under -- under petitioner's reading of the 16 Arrington decision, the only defendant who would be 17 entitled to set-aside relief would be the mass murderer 18 because only he could have been sentenced to a greater 19 sentence; that is, under Section 5017(c), he could have 20 been sentenced to the maximum -- to a youth offender
21 sentence equivalent to the maximum sentence an adult 22 could have received.

23 But in any event, either reading of the 24 Arrington decision ignores the critical statutory before 25 the expiration of the maximum sentence imposed on him.

1 Moreover, either reading makes the 2 unavailability of set-aside relief turn on the sentence 3 as initially imposed, and therefore it thwarts the 4 congressional purpose of it holding out the set-aside as 5 an inducement to the youth offenders to take advantage 6 of YCA treatment in correctional programs.

7 If the Court has no further questions, I will 8 rely on argument.

9 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well. Do you have 10 anything further, Ms. Stuntz?

11 ORAL ARGUMENT OF LINDA GILLESPIE STUNTZ, ESQ.,

12 ON BEHALF OF PETITIONER -- Rebuttal

13 MS. STUNTZ: Thank you, Your Honor.

14 Petitioner does not maintain that any 15 probationer would be entitled to set-aside relief. As 16 the Justice pointed out, it is plain that Congress was 17 looking for evidence of rehabilitation and that this was 18 necessary in order to qualify for the set-aside of the 19 conviction. It was not to be a benefit indiscriminately
20 bestowed upon everyone under the Federal Youth
21 Corrections Act.

22 In looking for the evidence of rehabilitation, 23 the government would suggest, according to a strict 24 reading of all of the statute except one word, that it 25 must have happened one day or five days or any time

1 prior to the period of that probationary term. Aside 2 from the fact that, as we know in this case, there never 3 was even an opportunity for that to happen, this turns 4 the rehabilitative purposes of the Act on its head.

5 The more reasonable reading, more in line with 6 the policy of the Act, a more better gauge of evidence 7 of rehabilitation would be was the petitioner, was the 8 youth offender discharged prior to the six years under 9 which -- specified in Section 5010(b) of the Act?

10 If the Court would determine that in fact the 11 maximum is the five-year probationary term provided in 12 the Federal probation statute, that would be acceptable 13 as well. But there is most definitely a reference in 14 the statute to some maximum as the benchmark. This is 15 to how the evidence of rehabilitation is to be 16 determined. And only if that evidence is demonstrated 17 would set-aside be in order.

18 In this case, that evidence is demonstrated.
19 And petitioner would urge that conviction and the 20 decision of the Court of Appeals below be reversed.
21 Thank you.

22 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, Counsel.

23 The case is submitted.

24 (Whereupon, at 2:53 p.m., the case in the 25 above-entitled matter was submitted.)

CERTIFICATION

Alderson Reporting Company, Inc., hereby certifies that the attached pages represent an accurate transcription of electronic sound recording of the oral argument before the Supreme Court of the United States in the Matter of:

Melvin E. Tuten, Petitioner v. United States # 81-6756

and that these attached pages constitute the original transcript of the proceedings for the records of the court

BY

A handwritten signature in cursive script, appearing to read "Pine Hunsaid", written over a horizontal line.

(REPORTER)

RECEIVED
SUPREME COURT, U.S.
MARSHAL'S OFFICE

983 MAR 9 AM 2 15