2 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments
3 next in Elwood Barclay against Florida.

4 Mr. Nabrit, I think you can begin whenever you 5 are ready.

6 ORAL ARGUMENT OF JAMES M. NABRIT, III, ESQ., 7 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER

8 MR. NABRIT: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
9 please the Court, I represent the petitioner, Elwood
10 Barclay, who is here on a writ of certiorari to review a 11 judgment of the Supreme Court of Florida which on direct 12 appeal affirmed his murder conviction and a death 13 sentence.

14 The death sentence was imposed by a judge of 15 the Circuit Court of Duval County who entered written 16 sentencing findings that are the focus of our argument
17 here today. The judge disregarded an advisory jury
18 verdict which recommended that Barclay be given life
19 imprisonment, and the Florida Supreme Court affirmed.
20 Barclay lost by a four-to-two vote, and his rehearing 21 petition was denied by an equally divided court.

22 Petitioner brought the case here on 23 certiorari, and the state filed a brief agreeing that 24 this Court should review the case.

25 Now, let me begin my statement of the case

1 before I describe the proceedings in the court below by 2 briefly recounting five points about the Florida death
3 sentencing statute. It is a statute that has been in 4 this Court before. It was the statute approved in the 5 Proffitt case, and it was presented as having five 6 procedural safeguards.

7 First, a requirement that the death sentence
8 be based on specific written findings about aggravating
9 circumstances, which was supposed to serve as a guide 10 for the sentencer's discretion.

11 Second, the statute says that the list of 12 aggravating circumstances is limited to eight factors, 13 which are listed in the statute, and six of those I will 14 just refer to in a moment are involved in this case.

15 Second, the statute provided for an automatic 16 appeal, a review in which the Florida Supreme Court is 17 supposed to keep the sentencing decisions under the 18 statute in line with the statute.

19 Next, the jury had a special role. Although 20 it is called advisory, the jury -- the jury's judgment
21 is supposed to prevail under the Florida law unless no
22 reasonable mind could disagree that the death sentence 23 should be imposed, so that it is -- and finally, the 24 idea that both the judge and jury will make a judgment
25 both about the sufficiency of the aggravating

1 circumstances to justify a death sentence as well as a
2 weighing of the aggravating and mitigating 3 circumstances.

4 So, in summary, in the Proffitt case, the Court 5 said that after a verdict of guilt, there would be what 6 this Court referred to as an informed, focused, guided,
7 and objective inquiry into the question of whether a 8 death sentence should be imposed, and that would be at 9 -- that kind of objective inquiry, at both the trial and 10 appellate levels.

11 Now, in Barclay's case, Barclay was found
12 guilty in March of 1975, along with a co-defendant 13 Dougan. He was found guilty of first-degree murder in 14 the death of one Stephen Orlando, and two other 15 co-defendants were convicted by the same jury of 16 second-degree murder.

17 After the conviction, at the penalty trial, 18 the jury recommended a death sentence for the 19 co-defendant Dougan, but life imprisonment for Barclay.
20 And in the penalty hearing, the state argued for only 21 one of the eight statutory aggravating circumstances, 22 that the crime was heinous atrocious, and cruel, yet the 23 state made no effort at that penalty trial to convince 24 the jury that any of the other seven circumstances 25 applied.

1 And the majority of the jury came back with a 2 written finding, a written finding that sufficient
3 aggravating circumstances did not exist to justify a 4 death sentence, and a written finding that sufficient 5 mitigating circumstances do exist which outweigh any 6 aggravating circumstances.

7 The judge discharged the jury and directed a
8 pre-sentence investigation report, and a month later 9 entered his own written findings, and five years later,
10 in 1980, the judge substantially repeated the findings
11 when he reimposed the sentence after it was first 12 vacated on the basis of Gardner against Florida.

13 And the judge found seven aggravating
14 circumstances. Now, let me review some of them. The 15 first one is quoted in our brief at Pages 29 and 30, and 16 in this one -- this is at the bottom of Page 29 and the 17 bottom of Page 30. In this one the judge found as an 18 aggravating circumstance that Barclay had some prior 19 arrests, and he had a prior conviction for forgery and 20 for breaking and entering.

21 Now, it is acknowledged by the state that this 22 was an error, and the reason is that what the judge 23 found here was the absence of one of the statutory 24 mitigating circumstances, and it is acknowledged as a
25 matter of state law, it is acknowledged at Page 26, I

1 think, of the state's brief, that under the state's 2 Mikenas case, which the state cites, that it is not 3 correct to make the absence of mitigating circumstances 4 an aggravating circumstance, so that that was a finding 5 that is a non-statutory finding. It is a finding of an 6 aggravating circumstance that is not listed in the 7 statute.

8 There are two more points about that. One is 9 that mere arrests under -- and again, I am referring to 10 Florida law really as a predicate for the federal 11 arguments that I'll make later, but I am merely trying 12 to be descriptive. Under the Florida law, the mere 13 arrests don't qualify as convictions, even if there is a 14 relevant crime involved, a violent crime under one of 15 the other subsections, and convictions can't be proved 16 by the presentence investigation report. They have to 17 be proved by the state beyond a reasonable doubt at the 18 penalty trial.

19 Now, turning to the next two aggravating 20 circumstances found by the court, and these appear in 21 our brief at the bottom of Page 33 is one, and the next 22 one is over at Page 36, both of these are equally 23 flawed. The first one has to do with whether or not the 24 defendant was under a sentence of imprisonment at the 25 time of the murder, and it is undisputed that Barclay at

1 the time of the murder, Barclay was not in prison, he 2 was not supposed to be in prison, he was not on parole, 3 he was not on probation, none of that.

4 The judge found that he was not imprisoned at 5 the top of Page 34, but he said the criminal record was 6 an aggravating circumstance. So what the judge did here
7 again was to take a past criminal record and say that it 8 was something like, it resembled the statutory 9 aggravating circumstance.

10 The judge did something similar with the next 11 one, at Page 36. He said that -- This provision is 12 whether or not the defendant had been convicted of a 13 felony involving the use or threat of violence to the 14 person, and there was nothing like that in Barclay's 15 record, but the judge said that, well, he had been 16 convicted of breaking and entering, and the judge said, 17 it is not known if that prior felony involved the use or 18 threat of violence, but he said, however, such crime can 19 and often does involve violence.

20 So, again, he found something really not in 21 terms of the statute, but he said, well, it is something 22 like the statute, so that we have three findings by the 23 Court which really aren't in terms of the statute. The 24 judge said, well, I am finding something that resembles 25 the statute.

1 Now, the fourth one is whether or not there is 2 -- the murder created a great risk of death to many 3 persons. And this one is discussed in our brief
4 beginning over at Page 40, and the judge found that -- 5 the judges words, "Before, during, and after the 6 murder," the judge said, "there was a great risk of 7 death to many persons."

8 He based it on -- he's got a before and an 9 after, but he doesn't have a during in there. Before, 10 he said, the defendants drove around looking for a
11 victim, and it is undisputed that the victim was killed
12 in a deserted, lonely road, and that there was no one 13 else around, but the judge found that there was a great 14 risk of death to many persons based on the fact that 15 before finding a victim in a lonely, deserted spot, they 16 looked at and decided not to attack people in groups in 17 other parts of the city. It is a line of reasoning 18 that --

19 QUESTION: Does that -- Do you feel that is a 20 totally unreasonable finding on the part of the judge?

21 MR. NABRIT: I do, Your Honor. There is no
22 basis in that line of reasoning for distinguishing any 23 case from among many cases where a --

24 QUESTION: Let me suggest my own thought that 25 occurs to me. In the case of a premeditated murder, you

1 could say that, you know, there was malice aforethought,
2 et cetera, but the murderer was presumably looking only 3 for one victim. He wasn't just going randomly. But 4 here one gets the impression from the judge's findings 5 that these people were looking not for one victim, but 6 for almost anybody they came across that met a certain 7 description.

8 MR. NABRIT: Well, but a single victim who -- 9 and they were looking for one alone. I mean, the 10 purpose of the statute is to protect large groups of 11 people against death.

12 QUESTION: Well --

13 MR. NABRIT: Well, in --

14 MR. NABRIT: Well, let me put it in two -- let 15 me suggest there are two doctrines. One, it has to 16 involve a lot of people, and two, under the Florida law, 17 it has to be an actual risk of harm or death based on 18 the nature of the murder or the conduct immediately 19 surrounding the murder.

20 QUESTION: You feel that the Florida law
21 wasn't designed to produce a great number of people even 22 though they might have been individually isolated or by 23 themselves?

24 MR. NABRIT: I argue on both parts. There
25 weren't any great number of people. There was nobody

1 around at the time of the murder. And the decision to 2 -- the decision not to attack a large group of people 3 can't be considered as endangering a large group of 4 people.

5 QUESTION: Mr. Nabrit, the Florida Supreme 6 Court, though, obviously found that as a matter of 7 Florida law it met their statutory aggravating
8 circumstance on that fourth factor.

9 MR. NABRIT: That's correct, and our 10 argument --

11 QUESTION: So you are not asking us to say
12 that the Florida law is something else, are you?

13 MR. NABRIT: No, my argument is that the -- my 14 argument is a federal constitutional one, that there is 15 really no evidence of the offense or the statute is 16 construed in such a way that it is vague and overbroad.
17 It is an argument based on the Godfrey case at bottom, 18 but the -- well, let's look at the other half of it the 19 judge relied on.

20 The judge relied on something that happened
21 three days after the murder, which is the mailing of 22 tapes, tape recordings to the news media, and said, this 23 event endangered a half-million people of Jacksonville.
24 The problem with that is the same one. There is nothing 25 in the evidence. The state never tried to prove that

1 there were any circumstances that made this dangerous.

2 This wasn't the state's theory.

3 And so there is no evidence to support a
4 notion that anyone was in fact endangered.

5 Now, there are three other aggravating
6 circumstances, and our argument is set forth in our 7 brief at Pages 48 to 63. I think I will not go through 8 them, because my time is limited, and I will instead 9 turn to the main two legal arguments.

10 QUESTION: When they came upon the victim, was 11 the victim alone or accompanied by others?

12 MR. NABRIT: Alone. He was a single 13 hitchhiker, alone.

14 QUESTION: Suppose there were two people
15 there. Would it be unreasonable or irrational for the 16 judge making the decision to think that two people would 17 have been killed instead of one?

18 MR. NABRIT: Well, the -- well, I mean, there 19 are -- I -- perhaps not. There are several points. One 20 is that two people even wouldn't be enough to create 21 many people, to equal many people under the Florida law, 22 and it is set forth in our brief. So, our argument
23 really is that this is a surprise overbroad construction 24 of the law based on -- as the law has been interpreted 25 in those Florida cases.

1 Now, we have two principal arguments. Our 2 first argument is that the trial court sentencing 3 findings violated Barclay's rights under the Eighth and 4 Fourteenth Amendments, and the argument is, as I said
5 before, based not merely on the notion that state law
6 wasn't followed, but based on the idea that a 7 combination of non-statutory aggravating circumstances 8 and the factually base is so overbroad construction of 9 the Florida statute created the violation.

10 The second argument, which I will make later, 11 is really in the nature of a rebuttal argument. It is 12 our answer to the state's contention that even if we are 13 correct about the first argument, there need not be a 14 reversal, that the error is in some way harmless or it 15 does not -- at least it does not call for reversal.

16 The main theme of the Eighth Amendment cases 17 from Furman down to date has been that consistency in 18 the avoidance of arbitrariness is the indispensable
19 element to the constitutionality of capital sentencing.
20 We think that the use of aggravating circumstances not 21 provided in the statute violates the Eighth Amendment 22 because it makes capital sentencing ungrounded and 23 arbitrary, and to establish that, we point to the three 24 main purposes that statutory aggravating circumstances 25 are supposed to serve.

1 The list of statutory circumstances is 2 supposed to enable the legislature to decide what kinds
3 of cases deserve the death penalty, so that there is a 4 legislative judgment represented by the limited list of 5 statutory aggravating circumstances. And if you take an 6 example from our case of the prior criminal record, the 7 first one the judge used, the legislature of Florida
8 didn't decide that if someone had a prior record for a 9 prior arrest and a prior record for forgery, that that 10 was the kind of aggravating circumstance that justified 11 the death sentence.

12 The second purpose, the second function of the 13 statutory aggravating circumstances is to guide the 14 sentencer's exercise of discretion, to channel the 15 discretion.

16 And the third function was to provide a basis 17 for appellate review, so that the appellate court would 18 have a way of looking at the findings and attempting to 19 ensure that similar results would be reached in similar 20 cases, and it is our position that all three of these 21 purposes of statutory aggravating circumstances are 22 defeated if the judge is allowed, as the judge in this 23 case did, to make up the aggravating circumstances as he 24 goes along. A factor that one judge will think 25 aggravating will be evaluated differently by another,

1 and a judge presumably will change his view as time
2 passes, so that the danger of arbitrary decision-making 3 is reintroduced into the process.

4 QUESTION: Mr. Nabrit, may I ask this one
5 question? Is it your legal position that the same, if 6 there is one permissible aggravating circumstance that 7 has been properly found, or are you taking the position
8 that there are no statutory aggravating circumstances 9 that could properly be found on this record?

10 MR. NABRIT: We take the latter position, Your 11 Honor, but our argument is that there is a 12 constitutional violation based on the fact that even if 13 only some of them are outside the statute, that that 14 violates the Eighth Amendment, but we do take the latter
15 position. In our brief, Part 1-A of our brief addresses 16 each of the seven aggravating circumstances found by the 17 judge, and attempts to show that they are either outside
18 the statute or that they are flawed under the Godfrey 19 guide.

20 QUESTION: I take it if the Florida Supreme 21 Court agreed with your view that there were no statutory 22 aggravating circumstances, they also would have set 23 aside the death penalty.

24 MR. NABRIT: That's correct. That's correct.

25 QUESTION: Yes.

1 QUESTION: Mr. Nabrit, do you have any 2 thoughts as to how the Florida system compares with 3 Georgia's? I regard Georgia as kind of a threshold
4 state, if I can describe it that way, so far as 5 aggravating circumstances are concerned, and I wondered 6 if you felt Florida was the same or was different.

7 MR. NABRIT: No, I think it is different. I
8 think there is nothing in the Florida decisions that 9 uses the threshold language or the language in the 10 recent opinion of the Georgia Supreme Court after the 11 remand in the Zandt case.

12 On the question of the Eighth Amendment, in 13 summary, I guess, our position is that the safeguards
14 that aggravating circumstances were supposed to serve 15 under the statute fell through in this case, that the 16 trial court really didn't live up to what was 17 represented in Proffitt, to assure that after Barclay's 18 conviction there really would be an informed, focused, 19 guided, and objective inquiry into the question of 20 whether or not he would be sentenced to death, and I
21 think that none of those adjectives really fairly 22 describe the findings on which Barclay was sentenced to 23 death, and we submit that the sentence violates the 24 Eighth Amendment.

25 Now, turning to the second point, which as I

1 said before is a rebuttal argument, what we are doing in 2 Part 2 of our brief is answering the Attorney General's 3 contention that Florida's rule, which is embodied in its 4 Elledge case, and which we will call the Elledge rule, 5 makes it appropriate for the court below to affirm even 6 if there were constitutional errors, even if there was a
7 violation of the Eighth Amendment, or several violations
8 of the Eighth Amendment of the kind that we complain 9 about in our first argument.

10 Let me describe the Elledge rule. The Elledge 11 case provides really, as we see it, two rules for 12 dealing with a case where the trial court has made an 13 error, either an error by considering a non-statutory 14 aggravating circumstance or by misapplying one of the 15 statutory circumstances, but where there are other valid 16 aggravating factors remaining in the case.

17 Now, the Elledge case says that a reversal is 18 required, that that situation calls for a reversal if 19 there are statutory mitigating findings, because the 20 reviewing court can't tell whether the error distorted 21 the weighing process, so that -- so, to be clear, under 22 Florida law, it is error to consider a non-statutory 23 aggravating circumstance, and they call it error. They 24 call it error even in those cases where they don't 25 reverse.

1 And the cases where they don't reverse are 2 under the second half of the Elledge rule, and that is 3 that the death sentence will be affirmed if there are no
4 statutory mitigating circumstances, no statutory 5 mitigating circumstances, and that is the -- the state 6 law premise of Elledge is in the language which is 7 quoted at the top of Page 87 of our brief.

8 The idea is that so long as there are some 9 statutory aggravating circumstances, there is no danger
10 that non-statutory circumstances have served to overcome 11 the mitigating circumstances in the weighing process, in 12 other words, that there is nothing to balance against 13 whatever aggravating circumstances remain, and therefore 14 it is called -- what happens is what the Attorney 15 General refers to in quoting the Ford case as a 16 presumption of death, that -- The state quotes the same
17 language we do from Ford saying, there being no 18 mitigating factors present, death is presumed to be the 19 appropriate penalty.

20 Now, our argument is that that rule itself
21 violates the Constitution. It is a rule of appellate 22 review, a procedural rule about when you do and when you
23 don't reverse in the presence of a constitutional error,
24 but that this Elledge rule violates the Constitution.

25 Assuming that Elledge is a presumption, a rule

1 of law, it violates Lockett. It directly violates the 2 holding of the Lockett case, because the Ohio statute in 3 Lockett, remember, was one where if there were statutory 4 aggravating circumstances found, and there was no
5 statutory mitigating circumstance, then the death
6 sentence was mandatory.

7 That was what that statute did, and the 8 Elledge case is identical in the way it ignores the 9 non-statutory mitigating factors, and the Ford case,
10 which I mentioned before, the Ford case in the Florida 11 Supreme Court, makes it plain that that is the way the 12 Elledge rule operates, because it shows that the Elledge
13 rule operates even if there are non-statutory mitigating 14 circumstances in the record.

15 There is a presumption of death, so that the 16 presumption overrides non-statutory mitigating
17 circumstances just like the Ohio statute in the Lockett 18 case did.

19 The second -- we really have four objections 20 to the Elledge rule, and the first one I have just 21 mentioned, which is based on Lockett. The second one is 22 that the penalty is automatic without regard to the 23 sufficiency of the aggravating circumstances. It is 24 just a mechanical rule, and that that violates Woodson 25 and Lockett, which require there be a judgment about the 1 appropriateness of the death penalty.

2 The final two points I will touch on quickly,
3 and they are familiar to the Court. Assuming that 4 Elledge is not really strictly a mechanical rule, and 5 does involve some judgment or some guess as to what the 6 trial court would have done in the circumstances, then 7 we have the Stromberg principle, which is the same 8 argument that is before the Court in the example of 9 Stevens, and we also have a general Eighth Amendment 10 argument that that kind of review doesn't meet the 11 special Eighth Amendment requirements of reliability 12 which are required because of the special harshness of 13 the death penalty.

14 I would like to reserve my remaining time.

15 QUESTION: Mr. Nabrit, before you sit down, do 16 you have any special comment about Lewis against the 17 state?

18 MR. NABRIT: Well, Your Honor, we --

19 QUESTION: The reason I ask this is that your 20 opponent doesn't cite it at all, and you cite it 21 profusely. From his brief it is as though it doesn't 22 exist.

23 MR. NABRIT: Well, that's right. If the Lewis 24 case -- we make the argument about the Lewis case, Your 25 Honor, in our brief in Part 2-A -- Part 2-B, and our

1 argument is that if Lewis is the Florida law, and Lewis 2 was reversed, a case from the same judge, if that is the 3 Florida law, then there is no non-arbitrary application 4 of Elledge that could rule against Barclay.

5 So the key factor in Lewis was the jury 6 recommendation of life, and Lewis says that where the 7 jury recommends life, then that counts as if it was a 8 finding of a mitigating factor. Lewis is ignored in 9 some of the other cases. If Lewis is the law, then 10 Barclay plainly should win.

11 QUESTION: Maybe you will explain why --

12 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Allbritton.

13 ORAL ARGUMENT OF WALLACE E. ALLBRITTON, ESQ.,

14 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENT

15 MR. ALLBRITTON: Mr. Chief Justice, may it
16 please the Court, the state of Florida has never claimed 17 that defendants in her courts receive a perfect trial, 18 but only a fair one, and as of this date, approximately 19 1:35 p.m., that is all the Constitution requires.

20 I think because of the multiplicity of 21 challenges hurled at cases availing the death penalty,
22 it would seem that the only time a capital defendant
23 receives a fair trial is when he is acquitted. I think 24 the overriding issue before this Court is whether the 25 imposition of the death penalty in the instant case

1 contravenes any of the protections afforded by the 2 petitioner or to him under the Constitution, not only 3 the federal but the state.

4 A good starting place is the standard of 5 review followed by the Florida Supreme Court in its 6 review of death penalty cases. That court assumes, and 7 logically so, that where there are multiple statutory 8 aggravating factors and there are no mitigating factors 9 at all, then the weighing process would have reached the 10 same outcome by the trial judge even had he not 11 considered what is termed an improper aggravating 12 factor.

13 Now, this principle is well illustrated in 14 several cases, and I will mention only two of them. One
15 is Dobbert v. State, where the Florida Supreme Court 16 held that the trial judge improperly found two 17 aggravating factors, but since there were no mitigating 18 factors at all, a reversal of the death sentence was not 19 required.

20 And in Ford v. State, cited on Page 15 of my 21 brief, the same result was reached by the Florida 22 Supreme Court, and what is interesting about both of 23 those cases is that this Court declined to review either 24 one of them on certiorari.

25 I have no hesitancy to urge to this Court that

1 petitioner's death penalty was properly imposed based on 2 proof beyond a reasonable doubt of what I count as five 3 statutory aggravating factors, and no mitigating factors 4 at all.

5 In thinking about this, I want it to be 6 understood that in finding this non-statutory 7 aggravating factor that is now complained of to the 8 Court, the trial judge did not consider any evidence 9 that he would not have otherwise known. Rather, it was 10 necessary for the trial judge to consider petitioner's 11 prior criminal record because unless the existence of 12 this mitigating factor is negated, then there will be a 13 presumption that petitioner had not engaged in any 14 previous course of crime at all.

15 This is again well illustrated in the Florida
16 Supreme Court case of Booker v. State, where that court 17 rejected, now, an argument that the trial judge had 18 considered a non-statutory aggravating factor because on 19 cross examination the defendant was interrogated as to 20 his prior criminal activity.

21 Now, the Florida Supreme Court pointedly
22 stated that those questions were posed to the defendant
23 in order to negate or show the absence of a mitigating 24 circumstance. That is, that the defendant had no 25 significant history of prior criminal actions.

1 Now, this was necessary, as the court pointed 2 out, and I quote the words of the court: "Unless this 3 mitigating factor is negated, there would be a 4 presumption that the defendant had not engaged in any 5 previous criminal activity." Therefore, I say to you 6 that in finding a non-statutory aggravating factor, the 7 trial judge not only did not review any evidence that he 8 was not entitled to do so. Rather, he was required to 9 review that evidence in order to determine the existence
10 of a -- or the non-existence of a mitigating factor.

11 QUESTION: Mr. Allbritton, do you plan to 12 address the Lewis case, as Justice Blackmun inquired 13 about, which appeared to hold that if a jury found that 14 the defendant should be sentenced to life, that was 15 treated as a mitigating circumstance then, and required 16 a different action when it was challenged by the 17 defendant?

18 MR. ALLBRITTON: Only to the extent that I
19 don't believe in the Lewis case that the Florida Supreme 20 Court so held. I don't read the case that way at all, 21 but if we assume that they did so hold, then I say in 22 the instant case it has to be obvious that this 23 mitigating factor, that is, the advisory verdict of the 24 jury, was completely outweighed by the multiple 25 statutory aggravating factors that were found by the

1 trial judge and twice approved by the Florida Supreme 2 Court.

3 Now, I submit to you that unless this Court
4 does a legal about-face and Proffitt v. Florida, that 5 that case should control the instant case here. The 6 Proffitt opinion at 428 US Page 246 sets forth the 7 aggravating factors found by the trial judge. Now, the 8 second of those reads, and I quote, "The petitioner has 9 a propensity to commit murder."

10 Now, I find this interesting, because this 11 aggravating factor of propensity to commit murder was 12 not then and never has been a statutorily enumerated 13 aggravating factor under Florida law. I think, frankly,
14 there is no getting around the point that this Court
15 approved the use of a non-statutory aggravating factor
16 when used, now, along with other statutory aggravating
17 factors.

18 The decision in Elledge v. State supports the 19 respondent's argument here, because the Elledge court in 20 construing Proffitt read something in there, I believe, 21 that is not there, but rather than to go into that, 22 let's take Elledge the way it stands, and Elledge simply 23 holds that a non-statutory aggravating factor will not 24 vitiate a death penalty where there are other 25 statutorily enumerated factors and there are no

1 mitigating factors.

2 That is the holding in Elledge. I would like
3 to tell you how they came to do that. From the record
4 in Elledge, there was a non-statutory enumerated
5 aggravating factor, and of course there was a statutory 6 aggravating factor, and the trial judge had alluded to 7 something that could have been construed as being a 8 mitigating factor.

9 Well, now, what the Florida Supreme Court
10 wanted to do, and what they did do, was to be sure that 11 a non-statutory aggravating factor would not be used to 12 offset a mitigating factor in the weighing process, but 13 we don't have that problem here, because there were no
14 mitigating factors at all unless you do as my honorable 15 opponent would urge you to do, and that is substitute
16 your judgment and reweigh all of the aggravating factors 17 that were weighed by the trial judge and approved by the 18 Florida Supreme Court.

19 If you do that, then you will depart from the 20 decision in Eddings v. Oklahoma.

21 QUESTION: But isn't there another
22 possibility, because I thought when you answered Justice
23 O'Connor you said that it is possible to read the Lewis
24 case, I guess it is, as saying that when the jury 25 recommends life sentence rather than death, that that

1 may be viewed as a mitigating circumstance which imposes
2 a burden on being sure that the aggravating outweigh.

3 Now, how do you explain Lewis if you make -- 4 if you --

5 MR. ALLBRITTON: May be. May be. That's 6 true. It may be. But the Florida Supreme Court does 7 not undertake to dictate to the trial judge what he 8 shall regard as mitigating evidence. That is a matter
9 for the sentencing authority to do, not for the Florida
10 Supreme Court.

11 QUESTION: Then how do you explain Lewis?

12 MR. ALLBRITTON: Just the way I did to Justice 13 O'Connor, that I don't believe, and I don't read the 14 case --

15 QUESTION: You said to her, if I recall, that 16 that may mean that the aggravating outweighed that 17 mitigating circumstance, but then you have just now told 18 us that you can't engage in weighing when there are some 19 non-statutory aggravating circumstances. I'm not sure 20 your arguments are consistent.

21 MR. ALLBRITTON: I'm not sure I understand
22 you, and I submit to you, sir, I don't -- I'm not sure 23 you understood what I said. You may have. I don't 24 know. But if I said that, I did not mean to say it.

25 QUESTION: May I ask you again, then?

1 MR. ALLBRITTON: Sure.

2 QUESTION: How do you explain Lewis?

3 MR. ALLBRITTON: Lewis, as I understand it,
4 there is language in it which would indicate that a jury 5 advisory can be viewed if the trial judge so desires as 6 a mitigating factor. However, the verdict of the jury
7 -- it isn't really a verdict, it's an advisory. It
8 isn't binding on the trial judge at all, and if he so 9 desires in view of the -- in view of the other evidence,
10 you can read Lewis as saying that he can use that as a 11 mitigating factor, but I don't think the Florida Supreme 12 Court has required him to do that. I don't read the 13 case that way.

14 QUESTION: It's entirely a matter within the 15 discretion of the trial judge whether or not to view it 16 as a mitigating factor under your submission?

17 MR. ALLBRITTON: That's correct, because he is 18 the sentencing authority under Florida law. He is the 19 one that does the weighing under Florida law. The 20 Florida Supreme Court simply on review looks at the 21 evidence and determines if it is competent to support
22 the aggravating factors that the trial judge has found.
23 They do that.

24 In fact, the duty is well stated in Songer v.
25 State, which this Court referred to in Proffitt v.

1 Florida, and I quote: "Where the death penalty has been 2 imposed, this Court has a separate responsibility to 3 determine independently whether the imposition of the 4 ultimate penalty is warranted." And that is what they 5 do. They don't reweigh in the sense, if you please, to 6 determine if the death penalty is or should be initially 7 imposed, but what they do on review is to determine if 8 it has been lawfully imposed, if there is competent 9 evidence cited by the trial judge in support of his 10 findings.

11 I think, too, that the Florida Supreme Court 12 standard of review in death penalty cases can be 13 reviewed actually for what it is, and that is the 14 application of the harmless error rule. Now, there is 15 nothing new in this, because more than 30 years ago in 16 North v. State, decided in 1952, the Florida Supreme 17 Court expressly held that the harmless error rule was 18 applicable in capital cases.

19 And not only that, in the two Ferguson cases, 20 which I cite in my brief, the application of the 21 harmless error rule is clear. For example, in Ferguson,
22 417 Southern 2nd 631, the Court held that, and I quote, 23 "Any error that occurred in the consideration of the 24 inapplicable aggravating circumstances was harmless."

25 And again, in Ferguson 417 639, the Court held

1 that any error that occurred in the consideration of the 2 two inapplicable aggravating factors was harmless, based 3 on the weighing process that the judge followed.

4 And interestingly, in the recent case of Ford
5 v. Strickland, Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals en banc 6 opinion filed January 7th, 1983, Chief Judge Godbold, in 7 a dissenting opinion in part and specially concurring in 8 part, stated that he interpreted the Florida Supreme 9 Court to apply a harmless error rule in refusing to 10 order resentencing, and that the Florida Supreme Court's 11 actions so interpreted passed constitutional muster.

12 This Court, several Justices, I think, have 13 opted for the application of the harmless error rule.
14 In Zant v. Stevens, Justice Powell, in a dissenting
15 opinion, stated he would leave it open to the Georgia
16 Supreme Court to decide whether it had authority to find 17 that the instruction complained of was harmless error.
18 In Drake v. Zant, Justice White dissents, dissenting to 19 a denial of cert, stated that as a matter of general 20 constitutional policy, he thought it essential that 21 appellate courts be able to employ a harmless error 22 rule.

23 In fact, this Court has employed the harmless
24 error rule in several cases, Schnevel v. State, Meritan 25 v. Wainwright, Harrington v. California, and in the 1 well-known Chapman case.

2 Now, then, looking at Petitioner's brief, the 3 tenor of it is, of course, that the trial judge 4 committed egregious error in failing to find any 5 mitigating factor at all.

6 Well, really, this is understandable when 7 viewed from where he sits. However, this claim has been 8 made and rejected by the Florida Supreme Court in many 9 cases. They are cited in my brief, Lucas v. State, 10 Sireci v. State, Mikenas v. State. And in that case --
11 it's a good case on point. It says -- The court there
12 -- Let me phrase this properly -- rejected the argument 13 that certain testimony should have been treated as 14 mitigating factor. There was psychiatric testimony at 15 trial, and it was argued that the trial judge erred in 16 refusing to regard that as mitigating.

17 Well, the Florida Supreme Court pointed out
18 that the testimony was apparently permitted by the trial 19 judge in an abundance of fairness to the defendant, but 20 that the court was not required to give it weight as a 21 mitigating circumstance.

22 Now, that is -- they leave the weighing,
23 initial weighing to the trial judge. This premise, I
24 think, is supported -- I don't think; it is -- well
25 supported by this Court's decision in Eddings v.

1 Oklahoma. There, this Court reviewed the Oklahoma death
2 penalty statute which permitted a defendant to present
3 evidence as to any mitigating factor that he so desired, 4 and then stated that Lockett v. Ohio requires the 5 sentencer to listen, but as to the weight to be given to 6 the mitigating evidence, I quote the words of the 7 court: "We do not weigh the evidence for them."

8 And in this connection, it must be pointed out
9 that Lockett held that while the sentencing authority 10 must not be precluded from reviewing anything offered as 11 mitigating, it did not undertake to dictate the weight
12 that the various factors are to be given by the trial
13 court, and that actually Lockett v. Ohio does not claim,
14 does not hold, and does not indicate that this Court
15 would substitute this judgment for that of state courts 16 in capital cases at all.

17 QUESTION: Mr. Allbritton, would you
18 characterize the Florida scheme as a threshold scheme
19 like that of Georgia, or a balancing scheme? It wasn't 20 clear to me from your brief.

21 MR. ALLBRITTON: It's both. Your Honor, the 22 significance of the aggravating factor at the threshold
23 of the process is to determine if the death penalty may 24 be imposed, if it can be imposed. If there is one or 25 more, then the judge knows that it can be imposed, but

1 thereafter, then there is a weighing process, weighing 2 the aggravating against the mitigating. That is where 3 the weighing comes in for him to find out or make up his 4 mind if he should impose the death penalty.

5 QUESTION: Under the Florida scheme, if the 6 trial judge found no mitigating circumstances, and found
7 one or more aggravating circumstances, is the trial
8 judge required to impose the death penalty?

9 MR. ALLBRITTON: Oh, no. No, he isn't.

10 QUESTION: So he just balances all the 11 facts --

12 MR. ALLBRITTON: Yes.

13 QUESTION: -- in your scheme.

14 MR. ALLBRITTON: No, absolutely, he is not.
15 There is no requirement that he impose it at all. He 16 might find five aggravating factors, and no mitigating 17 factors.

18 QUESTION: But if he finds some aggravating
19 factors, he may impose the death penalty, even though 20 some of his aggravating factors may be set aside on 21 appeal?

22 MR. ALLBRITTON: As long as there are no
23 mitigating.

24 QUESTION: Right. Right.

25 MR. ALLBRITTON: But under the Elledge case,

1 the Supreme Court will not permit, Justice White, a 2 non-statutory aggravating factor to offset any 3 mitigating factor in the weighing process. That's the 4 point.

5 QUESTION: Well, assuming no mitigating 6 factors at all, in Florida, I take it your submission is 7 that the judge may consider in deciding whether to 8 impose the death penalty statutory as well as 9 non-statutory mitigating circumstances.

10 MR. ALLBRITTON: No, sir. That was an error.
11 Well, it would be an error. Now, you see, Justice
12 White, at the time of petitioner's trial --

13 QUESTION: Yes.

14 MR. ALLBRITTON: -- in February and March, 15 1975, non-statutory aggravating factors had not been 16 withdrawn from use by the Florida Supreme Court. That 17 was not done until two years afterward, when that court
18 decided Furley v. State.

19 QUESTION: That may be. Nevertheless, the law 20 of Florida at the time of this sentence was that the 21 judge could use non-statutory circumstances.

22 MR. ALLBRITTON: Yes, it was. That was the 23 law. Absolutely.

24 QUESTION: So we should judge this case as 25 though it still was the law. Is that it?

1 MR. ALLBRITTON: You can if you want to, but 2 if you apply the law as it is now, you are still going 3 to come to the same conclusion.

4 QUESTION: Because of harmless error, or 5 what?

6 MR. ALLBRITTON: Harmless error. Absolutely.

7 QUESTION: Well, that isn't the -- is that the 8 basis for the judgment below?

9 MR. ALLBRITTON: It's been referred to as the 10 harmless error, yes. And I don't see any other reason 11 to call it anything but that. They use words to the 12 effect that where there are multiple aggravating and no
13 mitigating --

14 QUESTION: What is the purpose of withdrawing 15 the use of non-statutory aggravating circumstances as --

16 MR. ALLBRITTON: I don't know.

17 QUESTION: -- as factors then? Would it
18 always be harmless error?

19 MR. ALLBRITTON: Not under all cases, no.
20 There is one case -- I'm sorry, the states, now --

21 QUESTION: Well, how do you know this one is 22 one of them?

23 MR. ALLBRITTON: I beg your pardon?

24 QUESTION: How would you know that this one is 25 one of them, if you applied the current Florida law?

1 MR. ALLBRITTON: Because there was no
2 mitigating factors to be offset --

3 QUESTION: Well, I understand that.

4 MR. ALLBRITTON: -- by the non-statutory 5 aggravating factor. That is why.

6 QUESTION: Unless Lewis required that the jury
7 recommendation be considered as a mitigating factor.

8 MR. ALLBRITTON: Let's assume you do that,
9 that it requires that. If the aggravating, 10 non-statutory aggravating factor offsets that, you still 11 have five statutory enumerated aggravating factors 12 proven beyond a reasonable doubt, and that hasn't been 13 -- well, it has, too. He argues that it is, and he 14 wants you to substitute your judgment for that of the 15 state trial judge.

16 QUESTION: Mr. Allbritton?

17 MR. ALLBRITTON: Sir?

18 QUESTION: Didn't Proffit say that the judge
19 had to use "informed, focused, guided, and objective 20 inquiry?"

21 MR. ALLBRITTON: That's what he does. Yes, 22 sir.

23 QUESTION: Isn't that what he said?

24 MR. ALLBRITTON: Yes, sir.

25 QUESTION: Now, where can you get harmless

1 error under that rule?

2 MR. ALLBRITTON: Well, because harmless error
3 is used in everything. If you are going to take out the 4 harmless error --

5 QUESTION: If you are going to be objective,
6 how can you make a harmless error?

7 MR. ALLBRITTON: Justice Marshall, if you take 8 out harmless error, you are requiring the trial to be 9 perfect, and none of them are. There isn't anything in 10 the realm of human affairs that is without some error 11 somewhere. We can't give a man a perfect trial. He 12 can't get one anywhere else. Nowhere. But we can come 13 as close to it as humanly possible.

14 QUESTION: And if you don't make it, it's 15 harmless?

16 MR. ALLBRITTON: It's -- Yes, sir, it
17 certainly is. It is harmless.

18 I want to -- my time is about up. I had other 19 things to say, but they will go by the board.

20 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: You have about three 21 minutes left.

22 MR. ALLBRITTON: Yes, sir. I am aware of the 23 holdings in Stromberg v. California, Yates v. United 24 States, Street v. New York, and the other cases. Those 25 were First Amendment cases involving a general verdict

1 of guilt. However, I agree with Justice White when he 2 stated in dissenting opinion in Drake v. Zant that the 3 imposition of the death sentence despite a failure to 4 sustain all of the aggravating factors found by the jury 5 does not conflict with either Stromberg v. California or 6 Street v. New York.

7 QUESTION: You are rowing upstream. That was 8 just a dissent.

9 MR. ALLBRITTON: I know it.

10 (General laughter.)

11 MR. ALLBRITTON: I've got a good paddle,
12 though.

13 Judge, I want to conclude on this point. It 14 seems to me, and I know this is policy, or politics, or 15 whatever, but it seems to me, and it seems to us down 16 there in that little state of Florida, that at some 17 point it must be acknowledged that the seemingly 18 never-ending procedural path of capital cases does more 19 to undermine the criminal justice system and society's 20 confidence in it than it does to protect the rights of 21 those who have killed fellow human beings.

22 Hopefully, and I say this hopefully, that we 23 can re-echo the statement found in Stein v. New York to 24 apply to the state of Florida, that the people down 25 there in that state are entitled to some measure of due

1 process just as much as a murdering defendant is 2 entitled to it.

3 Thank you.

4 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Do you have anything
5 further, Mr. Nabrit?

6 ORAL ARGUMENT OF JAMES M. NABRIT, III, ESQ., 7 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER - REBUTTAL

8 MR. NABRIT: Yes, Mr. Chief Justice. May it
9 please the Court, in the few moments I have left, I
10 would like to talk about how I see the harmless error
11 concept coming into this case, and also say something 12 about the Lewis case.

13 I think a factual point to be made about how 14 Lewis fits in here is that there were facts upon which 15 the jury might reasonably have found that there were 16 both statutory and non-statutory mitigating 17 circumstances for Barclay. The argument of counsel was 18 based on the record that he was a follower, he was not 19 the leader of the group of people who were convicted of 20 the murder. His family status, that he had a wife and 21 five children, that he had a job, that he was a young 22 man, only 23 years old.

23 And a major factor that was emphasized to the 24 jury was the disparity of sentencing, the disparity of 25 punishment between Barclay and the other two people who

1 got second-degree murder but who the jury knew had 2 committed two murders, that were sentenced to terms of 3 imprisonment.

4 The jury also might very well have based its 5 finding on either of four of the statutory mitigating 6 factors, the age, the fact that the state did not prove 7 the prior record. They might have found lesser 8 participation, and they may have found domination by 9 Dougan.

10 Now, it seems to me that the state's 11 distinction of Lewis is not correct. Lewis is an 12 application of the Elledge rule. It is an appellate 13 level rule and not a trial level rule. The Lewis case 14 was sent back for resentencing, the same judge, and the 15 same counsel representing the state. Mr. Allbritton
16 argued it, and Judge Olaff decided Lewis, and he made 17 the same kinds of errors he did here, and the Court of 18 Appeals reversed Lewis because three of these same kinds 19 of aggravating circumstances were reversed.

20 And the ground for a remand in Lewis was 21 merely that there was a jury, the remaining aggravating
22 circumstance had to be weighed against a jury's life 23 recommendation.

24 Now, turning to the harmless error point, this 25 is not really a harmless error case in the ordinary

1 sense, in the Chapman sense. There is no submission by 2 the state -- there is no inquiry by the state into the 3 question of prejudice. Certainly the court below didn't 4 rely on harmless error. They didn't acknowledge that 5 there was any error at all. So whether you call it the 6 Elledge rule or harmless error, it is really the same 7 thing. It is harmless error principles attempted to be 8 used in justification for a presumption, a legal rule,
9 the Elledge rule, and our four objections to the Elledge
10 rule, I think, pertain whether you call it harmless 11 error or not.

12 The counsel did not in argument and in his 13 brief disagree with our characterization of Elledge as 14 ignoring, Elledge and Ford, ignoring non-statutory 15 mitigating circumstances, and the only exception to that 16 is Lewis, is the Lewis case. Lewis is the law, as I 17 said before. There is no non-arbitrary application of 18 the law that would convict Barclay.

19 But even examining this case under -- if we 20 ever got to trying to apply the Chapman v. California 21 doctrine to this case, considering the special care and 22 reliability required in capital sentencing, the fact 23 that the death sentence was by no means foreordained in 24 this case. There is no way that you could say beyond a 25 reasonable doubt that the error, the multiple

1 constitutional errors, we submit, that were the basis of 2 the sentence of Elwood Barclay could be harmless.

3 My time has expired. Thank you.

4 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.
5 The case is submitted.

7 the above-entitled matter was submitted.)
