1                                   P R O C E E D I N G S

2                   CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments
3 first this morning in Berlin against Central Bank of 4 Nigeria.

5                   Mr. Chayes, you may proceed whenever you're 6 ready.

7                   ORAL ARGUMENT OF ABRAM CHAYES, ESQ.,
8                   ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER

9                   MR. CHAYES: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice, and 10 may it please the Court:

11                  The question in this case may appear at first 12 glance to be a technical and abstract one, but it 13 touches directly and deeply the power of the national 14 government to regulate and protect the foreign relations 15 of the United States.

16                  Congress in 1976, acting in the exercise of 17 its powers over foreign affairs and foreign commerce, 18 enacted the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act which was 19 comprehensive legislation establishing circumstances and 20 conditions in which suit may be brought in the courts of 21 this country against foreign sovereigns and the 22 procedures regulating such suits.

23                  The question here is whether as an aspect of 24 this legislation Congress can, within the meaning of 25 Article III of the Constitution, ensure that all such

1 suits against foreign sovereigns may be brought in the 2 federal courts, the courts of the nation.

3           The court below, the Second Circuit, held that 4 there was an impenetrable constitutional barrier to this 5 congressional choice. Why? The plaintiff here, 6 petitioner in this Court, is Verlinden B. V., a Dutch 7 corporation. Thus, the suit is between a foreign 8 corporation and a foreign sovereign.

9           The diversity clauses of Article III do not 10 cover such a suit. They cover suits between a citizen 11 of the United States and a foreign sovereign, but not 12 between an alien and a foreign sovereign. So recourse
13 must be had to the arising under clause of Article III 14 which grants jurisdiction in a constitutional sense to 15 the federal judiciary over suits arising under the laws 16 of the United States. But Judge Kaufmann below held 17 that this case does not arise under the laws of the 18 United States, and so he dismissed on the constitutional 19 grounds.

20           It is our contention here and the main 21 proposition in this case that the case does indeed arise 22 under a law of the United States, and that law is the 23 Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act. Jurisdiction in 24 this --

25           QUESTION: Absent that act what would be the 1 situation in this case?

2 MR. CHAYES: Absent that act we don't believe 3 there would be jurisdiction.

4 QUESTION: Wouldn't be anything.

5 MR. CHAYES: No, sir. Jurisdiction in this 6 case is founded on the special jurisdictional section of 7 the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act that codified in 28 8 USC 1330; and that provides for original jurisdiction in 9 the federal courts without regard to a mounting 10 controversy of any nonjury civil action against a 11 foreign state with respect to which the foreign state is 12 not entitled to immunity. So in order for jurisdiction 13 to attach, the foreign state defendant must be one -- 14 must be not entitled to immunity with respect to the 15 claim asserted.

16 QUESTION: Mr. Chayes, is the absence of 17 sovereign immunity as defined in the act an element of 18 the plaintiff's cause of action, or is it an affirmative 19 defense, in your view?

20 MR. CHAYES: We believe it is an element of 21 the plaintiff's case, because it is a jurisdictional 22 requirement under 1330 that sovereign immunity must be 23 absent the federal rules, and in the absence of the 24 federal rules, general pleading principles require that 25 the plaintiff plead and prove subject matter

1 jurisdiction in order to establish his case.

2           We did so in this case. The situation is such 3 that the defendant cannot waive or concede subject
4 matter jurisdiction, because as we know and as happened
5 in this case, the absence of subject matter jurisdiction 6 can be raised by the court sua sponte or by any party at 7 any time during the course of the case; and that's what 8 happened here. So -- and the act provides, indeed, that 9 in case of a default the court must determine that -- on 10 the evidence that the plaintiff is entitled to recover, 11 which means that he must determine that there is no 12 immunity. And the cases in the lower courts in which 13 there have been defaults have followed that practice.

14           So that within the narrowest notion of the 15 arising under clause, as Your Honor suggested, the 16 federal question of the sovereign immunity of the 17 defendant is a central element of plaintiff's claim -- 18 of plaintiff's case in every instance arising under the 19 act.

20           But I should say that the act is much more 21 than a jurisdictional statute or a mere authorization to 22 sue. The Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act represents a 23 major departure in U.S. policy. Until the act was 24 passed, the ability of a private party to sue a foreign 25 state was totally a matter of the discretion of the 1 executive branch of the national government. No case 2 against a foreign state could be brought in a state or 3 federal court where the executive branch suggested 4 immunity. Now, up until --

5 QUESTION: Why was that, Mr. Chayes?

6 MR. CHAYES: Well, that was because of the 7 opinions of this Court.

8 QUESTION: So it was a -- Do you think it was 9 grounded in the Constitution?

10 MR. CHAYES: No. The doctrine dates, of 11 course, from the Schooner Exchange, one of Chief Justice 12 Marshall's great opinions, in which, alluding to the 13 fact, which has been a dominant theme in sovereign 14 immunity jurisprudence, that every case against a 15 foreign sovereign touches the dignity of the foreign 16 sovereign, and involves the foreign relations of the 17 country, Justice Marshall established the principle in 18 the Schooner Exchange that foreign sovereigns were 19 absolutely immune. That is, no case of any kind could 20 be brought against a foreign sovereign in the courts of 21 the United States.

22 In cases that arose from time to time, for 23 example, when a case was initiated by the attachment of 24 a commercial vessel owned by the foreign sovereign, the 25 sovereign might appeal to the Department of State to 1 suggest immunity. That is to suggest to the Court that 2 this was a case in which immunity was appropriate. When 3 the State Department --

4 QUESTION: Mr. Chayes, before the Foreign 5 Sovereign Immunities Act, there would have been no
6 jurisdictional basis for a federal court to entertain 7 this particular suit, would there?

8 MR. CHAYES: It is not clear, Your Honor.
9 That is, until 1952, there were no in personam
10 jurisdiction against a foreign sovereign. The cases 11 were begun by attachment of a foreign sovereign's 12 property, but I think you are correct. It is what -- 13 the question that the Chief Justice asked earlier.
14 Until the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act was enacted, 15 it does not appear that there was jurisdiction for a 16 suit by an alien versus a foreign sovereign, although I 17 can't say for sure that no such cases were brought.

18 In 1952, as you know, again, as a matter of 19 executive policy, the United States government adopted 20 the restrictive view of foreign sovereign immunity, and 21 the State Department indicated that it would not suggest 22 immunity in cases growing out of the commercial acts of 23 foreign sovereigns. But that was an act of grace on the 24 part of the Department of State. The Department of 25 State was not bound by that, and in fact in some cases

1 involving commercial acts the State Department did 2 suggest immunity.

3           The jurisprudence of this Court tells us that 4 the Court, this Court, the state courts, and the federal 5 courts were bound by the executive -- by the executive 6 suggestion and could not disregard it, and in the 7 absence of a suggestion, the Republic of Mexico versus 8 Hoffman tells us that the Court had to follow the 9 policies enunciated by the State Department.

10           But as I said, the Foreign Sovereign
11 Immunities Act has changed all of that. In the first 12 instance, it judicializes the whole field of foreign 13 sovereign immunity, and remits the question of sovereign 14 immunity to judicial determination. Second, it codifies 15 the restrictive theory of immunity, and subjects foreign 16 sovereigns to suit in cases arising out of commercial 17 transactions, ordinary torts, and that sort of thing, 18 directly parallel, both in concept and language, to the 19 Tucker Act and the Federal Tort Claims Act, by which the 20 United States has consented to sue against itself.

21           QUESTION: Would you say, Mr. Chayes, that 22 this dichotomy that was developed in 1952 is somewhat 23 analogous to the old concept of proprietary and 24 governmental functions?

25           MR. CHAYES: Yes. Exactly so, Mr. Chief

1 Justice. In fact, we used to talk about it in Latin and 2 call it use imperii and use guesti, but it was the same
3 general kind of distinction. That is, now the Act 4 doesn't quite take the old line. It says, when the 5 foreign sovereign makes a contract, it doesn't matter 6 whether it is a contract for guns for the army or for 7 wheat for the starving poor, that is contract, and the 8 government ought to respond according to the laws of 9 contract. It doesn't matter what the ultimate purpose 10 of the contract is.

11 Or if the ambassador's car strikes a person, 12 the government ought to be liable, even though that was 13 the ambassador carrying out political functions of the 14 government. But it's the same general conception, Your 15 Honor.

16 QUESTION: Assuming that a foreign country had 17 no assets in this country, how would you --

18 MR. CHAYES: You could not enforce if there 19 were no assets. Of course, the situation until the 20 enactment of the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act in 21 1976 was, you could never get attachment against foreign 22 assets. One of the major departures of the Act was to 23 provide for enforcement of the judgment by attachment of 24 the assets.

25 The Act also defined the causes of action

1   which would lie against the foreign sovereign and the 2   extent of liability, so that we see here an extended,
3   comprehensive legislative pattern, legislative structure 4   dealing with the entire range of actions against a 5   foreign sovereign expressly made binding on both state 6   and federal courts as a pre-emptive exercise of federal 7   supreme legislative power.

8               Now, there is no doubt that this case falls
9   within the statute. It arises -- it is a suit on a 10  contract, a contract for the purchase of cement. The 11  defendant was -- The Central Bank of Nigeria is a 12  foreign sovereign. It repudiated the letter of credit 13  that financed the contract. The whole thing was a 14  commercial transaction.

15              The court below in identical cases involving 16  U.S. corporate plaintiffs held that the contacts with 17  the United States were sufficient to bring this 18  transaction within the purview of Section 1605(a)(2) of 19  the Act dealing with commercial claims. And second, the 20  Act applies as a matter of interpretation to suits -- 21  statutory interpretation, to suits against an alien -- 22  excuse me, suits brought by an alien against a foreign 23  sovereign.

24              The statute says that. It says any civil 25  action. Both courts below agreed that the statute

1 extends to suits brought by an alien plaintiff. The 2 government's brief, which represents the views of the 3 Justice Department and the State Department, the two 4 executive departments that were the draftsmen of the 5 Act, agrees that the statute extends to suits by an 6 alien.

7           It is the only way that Congress could have 8 fulfilled its twin purposes, which were to provide 9 judicial protection for American business enterprise in 10 the courts in suits against a foreign sovereign, and at 11 the same time to concentrate that litigation in the 12 federal courts.

13           And finally, I think it makes -- it is 14 important to note at this point that there is no problem 15 here of opening the floodgates to a whole series of 16 suits with which the United States has no connection, no 17 interest, no concern. That would be inappropriate for 18 determination by the federal courts.

19           QUESTION: Mr. Chayes, you made the statement 20 that it was the purpose of the Act to concentrate the 21 litigation in the federal courts.

22           MR. CHAYES: Yes, sir.

23           QUESTION: As opposed to state court suits?

24           MR. CHAYES: Yes, indeed, Your Honor. The 25 court -- the Act permits suit in the state court, but

1 subject to a power of removal by the foreign defendant, 2 so any suit begun in a state court may be removed by the 3 foreign defendant at any time. It is not subject to the 4 usual time limit on removal.

5           The fact of the matter is, of course, that 6 most actions that have been begun in state courts have 7 in fact been removed, and the Congress in the 8 legislative history stated that the purpose of the 9 removal jurisdiction was to provide for concentration of 10 the suits -- of the litigation in the federal courts, 11 for two reasons. First, to ensure uniformity of 12 decision, and second, to ensure that the delicacy and 13 sensitivity of the question of suits against a foreign 14 sovereign would be recognized in the courts of the 15 nation, the nation being the one that bears 16 international responsibility for the acts of the 17 judicial department.

18           So, there is no doubt that that was the 19 purpose of the statute. I do want to say that -- what I 20 started, that there is no problem here of a flood of 21 litigation that would be inappropriate for determination 22 in the federal courts. Congress established a different 23 set of thresholds and limits than the party plaintiff.
24 It required in 1605(a) and 1605, 6, and 7, the statutes
25 withdrawing -- the sections withdrawing immunity, it

1 required that for immunity to be withdrawn, the 2 transaction in suit had to have substantial connection 3 with the United States, as was the case here, where the 4 transaction was financed through the Morgan Bank in New 5 York.

6           So, the alien will not be able to bring suit 7 unless the transaction has substantial connection with 8 the United States, and once that is so, it seems to me 9 hard to argue that suits against a foreign sovereign are 10 not most appropriate for determination in the federal 11 courts. That goes all the way back to Alexander 12 Hamilton, who in the 81st Federalist said that since the 13 nation will be responsible for the judgment of its 14 courts in suits touching foreign citizens and foreign 15 affairs, the nation -- the courts of the nation should 16 have jurisdiction to hear them.

17           We maintain that the statute as so construed
18 is constitutional. It is constitutional for the reason 19 I gave in the answer to Justice O'Connor's question that 20 the plaintiff's case contains a necessary federal 21 element, the absence of immunity, and it is 22 constitutional under the teaching of the Osborn case,
23 which says that where Congress has legislated on a 24 matter within its competence, here the foreign relations
25 of the United States, and has legislated

1 comprehensively, it may grant jurisdiction to cases 2 arising within that -- within the ambit of that 3 legislative program, even though the particular case may 4 not be governed on the merits by federal law.

5           So, for those two reasons, it seems to me the 6 jurisprudence of this Court makes it clear that the 7 statute as construed is constitutional, and this cases 8 arises under the Constitution and laws of the United 9 States within the meaning of Article III.

10           QUESTION: We don't need to decide the case on 11 any broader basis for you to win than to say that the 12 Congress may vest the decision of any federal question 13 on that.

14           MR. CHAYES: Yes. I will -- I --

15           QUESTION: Whether it is in defense or --

16           MR. CHAYES: That is correct. You don't have 17 to decide it on any broader basis than the basis that 18 was involved in my response to Justice O'Connor's 19 question, and we feel that on that basis it is a very 20 easy case. It is no different than the Federal Tort 21 Claims Act, in which -- which this Court has said cases 22 under the Federal Tort Claims Act arise under the 23 Constitution and the laws of the United States. That is 24 exactly what this is.

25           And therefore, although it seems to me

1 perfectly clear that the Osborn rationale covers this 2 case, you are quite right, Justice White, that you don't 3 have to go anywhere near that far to decide in our favor.

4 QUESTION: Does that still leave you with the 5 question of a substantial connection?

6 MR. CHAYES: No, Your Honor. That issue was 7 decided in the consolidated appeal below, with respect 8 to five cases that were identical in terms of 9 substantial connection with this case. All of those 10 five cases, the court of appeals found, had the 11 substantial connection, in Texas Trading, Texas Milling
12 and Trading versus the Republic of Nigeria.

13 The only thing that differentiated those five 14 cases from this one was the citizenship of the 15 plaintiff, and the legislative history says that the 16 citizenship of the plaintiff should not constitute a 17 connection, and of course the jurisprudence of this 18 Court under International Shoe suggests the same thing.

19 I would like, if I may, Your Honors, to 20 reserve the rest of my time for rebuttal. Thank you.

21 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well.

22 Mr. Bator?

23 ORAL ARGUMENT OF PAUL M. BATOR, ESQ.,

24 ON BEHALF OF U. S. AS AMICUS CURIAE

25 MR. BATOR: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it

1 please the Court, it is the government's submission in 2 this case that important diplomatic and foreign 3 relations interests of the United States will be 4 adversely affected if the holding of the court of 5 appeals is affirmed, and if suits by foreigners against 6 foreign countries are relegated to the state courts.

7           The single most critical proposition relevant 8 to this case is one that oddly enough nobody disputes at 9 all. That proposition is that it is for Congress to 10 decide, as a matter of federal law, whether and on what 11 conditions a foreign country should be amenable to suit 12 in an American court, whether by a plaintiff or an 13 American -- a foreigner or an American citizen.

14           Nobody argues that this question is reserved 15 to the states or is governed by state law. Under its 16 regulatory Article I authority, Congress has power to 17 decide as a matter of the diplomatic foreign relations 18 and foreign commerce interests of the United States, 19 whether foreign countries should be amenable to suit.

20           QUESTION: Well, do you think under Article I
21 Congress could simply pass a statute that said any time 22 a foreign government wants to sue or be -- or someone 23 wants to sue a foreign government in this country, we 24 aren't laying down any sort of law at all to govern the 25 suits, but the federal district court shall have

1 original jurisdiction?

2 MR. BATOR: There would be an antecedent
3 question in that case, Justice Rehnquist, which is 4 whether the transaction sued on has such connection to 5 the United States that it is a legitimate, rational --

6 QUESTION: Well, supposing Congress said, we 7 don't care whether the transaction had any rational 8 connection. We want all such suits brought here. And 9 in this particular case there was no connection at all.

10 MR. BATOR: Well, I can conceive of a case
11 where the suit by a foreigner against a foreign country
12 would be so foreign to any substantive American concern 13 whatever that it shouldn't be in an American court at 14 all.

15 QUESTION: Even though Congress had said it 16 should?

17 MR. BATOR: It is conceivable that there is a 18 case that has nothing to do with the United States, and 19 where it shouldn't be in an American court at all, but 20 this statute and this case is so far from that extreme 21 problem that really this Court, I think, does not need 22 to be concerned with it.

23 QUESTION: Under what provision of the 24 Constitution would you determine under Justice 25 Rehnquist's example that it could not be in the federal 1 court?

2 MR. BATOR: I assume that the relevant
3 question whether it would be a rational judgment by 4 Congress to decide that in regulating the foreign 5 relations and foreign commerce of the United States, the 6 case should be assigned to an American court. I would 7 say that that would --

8 QUESTION: You would have to rest it on the 9 federal protective jurisdiction concept. Is that right?

10 MR. BATOR: It may be -- it may be that -- you
11 see, if the case is going to be in an American court, 12 then it seems to me there clearly must be protective 13 jurisdiction to put it in a federal court. That is, it 14 seems to me that this question could be divided into two 15 parts. The first -- and the concern in this case might 16 be thought of in two stages.

17 The first is under what circumstances should 18 an American court have jurisdiction to adjudicate, and 19 that is the question that is subject to Congress's 20 regulatory power. Now, if that question is answered in 21 the affirmative, that the transaction between the 22 foreigner and the foreign government is sufficiently 23 American to make it legitimate to authorize an American 24 court to adjudicate it, then the question is whether the 25 Constitution requires Congress nevertheless to leave the 1 matter to a state court.

2 Now, on that point, the diplomatic and foreign 3 relations interest of the United States comes into play, 4 because in this Court's jurisprudence and in the 5 legislative history of this statute, the one thing that 6 was clear was the judgment that a uniform, sensitive 7 national resolution of the question of the amenability 8 of a foreign government to sue in the courts of this 9 country needed a federal national solution.

10 QUESTION: Under your view, Mr. Bator, as I
11 understand it, then, you think we cannot simply resolve 12 the case by dealing with the arising under question 13 discussed by Mr. Chayes, but in fact have to also 14 discuss the protective jurisdiction question. Is that 15 right?

16 MR. BATOR: No, I believe I misspoke if that 17 is the impression I gave. I think that this is a clear 18 arising under case, and no, the Court does not need to 19 go into fancy problems of protective jurisdiction.
20 Why? In this case, Congress has exercised its undoubted 21 Article I regulatory authority to create a regulatory 22 scheme, which is the -- the scheme governing the 23 amenability of foreign governments to sue.

24 Now, if there is one thing clear about the 25 arising under clause, it is that if Congress has an

1 Article I power to create a regulatory scheme, it has a 2 matching Article III power under the arising under 3 clause to call on federal trial courts to apply and 4 interpret and enforce that scheme. That is, the 5 surprising conclusion of the court of appeals in this 6 case was that although Congress has power as a matter of 7 federal law to regulate the question of amenability, the 8 Constitution requires it to leave the enforcement of its 9 regulatory scheme to a state court.

10 Now, it is that proposition that turns the 11 Osborn case on its head. In this case, the Court does 12 not need to worry about some of the more far-reaching 13 conclusions of Chief Justice Marshall in Osborn, just as 14 it doesn't, I think, really need to worry about 15 protective jurisdiction, because this case is within the 16 core of the arising under clause as interpreted in 17 Osborn.

18 In this case, Congress has enacted a 19 comprehensive statute which governs this important and 20 sensitive diplomatic issue, and now it says the 21 enforcement of that question and the decision of issues 22 under this statute should be in the hands of the federal 23 courts.

24 Under the opinion of the court of appeals in 25 this case, we are in this really anomalous situation.

1 That judgment says that this plaintiff must now sue 2 Nigeria in a state court. What is going to happen in 3 the state court?

4 QUESTION: Well, in the state court it could 5 be moved rather readily, couldn't it?

6 MR. BATOR: It could be removed, Mr. Chief 7 Justice?

8 QUESTION: Yes, could it? Could it?

9 MR. BATOR: Well, in order for the case to be 10 removable by the foreign government, it would have to 11 first be determined that it is a case arising under 12 federal law for purposes of Article III. That is to 13 say, if this statute is unconstitutional in the way it 14 confers original jurisdiction, it would be very hard to 15 see how it is constitutional in allowing a defendant to 16 remove the case to federal court.

17 QUESTION: Does this case arise under the '76
18 Act?

19 MR. BATOR: Yes, Mr. Chief Justice. This case
20 arises directly, as Chief Justice Marshall explicated 21 the clause, under this Act because in order for this 22 case to be in the court, at the forefront of the case, 23 the district court must decide the applicability and the 24 meaning of this regulatory scheme which Congress enacted
25 pursuant to its Article I power.

1           And that is what the district court did in 2 this case. It wrote an elaborate opinion on the 3 question whether Nigeria's contacts in this case were 4 sufficient to lift its immunity.

5           QUESTION: What did Congress say about state
6 court jurisdiction in the '76 Act?

7           MR. BATOR: Congress permitted plaintiffs to 8 choose a state court, but Congress very plainly said
9 that in any case where the plaintiff chooses a state 10 court, the defendant foreign government has an automatic 11 right to take it to federal court, and Congress in its 12 reports made it very clear why it wished that removal 13 power to exist.

14           The report of the Senate and the House says, 15 in view of the potential sensitivity of actions against 16 foreign states and the importance of developing a 17 uniform body of law in this area, it is important to 18 give foreign states clear authority to remove to a 19 federal forum actions brought against it.

20           QUESTION: Is there any explanation in the 21 legislative history as to why the state court
22 jurisdiction provision was given and -- with one hand 23 and taken away with the other?

24           MR. BATOR: I think, Your Honor, that the 25 Congress did not feel it wanted to cut down on the

1 plaintiff's right to choose a forum if the foreign 2 government agreed to stay in state court. As a
3 practical matter, I don't think it's very significant,
4 because we are informed by the State Department that it 5 is absolutely routine for foreign countries to remove 6 these cases, because foreign countries themselves have 7 given ample notice that they want suits against them 8 brought in the court of national dignity. And that was 9 another reason for the enactment of this statute.

10 Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice.

11 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well. Mr. Shulman.

12 ORAL ARGUMENT OF STEPHEN N. SHULMAN, ESQ.,

13 BY INVITATION OF THE COURT, AS AMICUS CURIAE

14 IN SUPPORT OF JUDGMENT BELOW

15 MR. SHULMAN: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
16 please the Court, this is a suit on a letter of credit.
17 The only federal question or issue in this case is 18 whether the respondent, a foreign sovereign, is immune.
19 That issue can be decided by a state court. The Foreign 20 Sovereign Immunities Act applies to courts of the United 21 States or of the states. A state court can apply the 22 Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act in determining immunity 23 just as it applies the U.S. Constitution in determining 24 the due process limitations on personal jurisdiction.

25 The case of Texas Trading v. -- Texas Trading

1 and Milling Corporation v. Federal Republic of Nigeria,
2 to which Mr. Chayes referred, illustrates this point.
3 In that case, the Court found that Nigeria's activity in 4 purchasing cement amounted to a commercial activity
5 outside of the United States under the FSIA. It found
6 that harm to United States companies that were not paid
7 on their letters of credit constituted a direct effect
8 in the United States under the FSIA.

9           The Court then turned to an analysis of the 10 contacts with the forum necessary to sustain personal 11 jurisdiction. The Court there found that Nigeria's 12 extensive use of the Morgan Guaranty Trust Company, 13 through which it had advised the letters of credit, 14 constituted a purposeful availing itself of the 15 privilege of conducting activities in the United States 16 under the rule of Hanson v. Denckla and International 17 Shoe.

18           Now, the fact that the court of appeals cited 19 Hanson v. Denckla and International Shoe and interpreted 20 those decisions did not make this case one that arises 21 under the Constitution of the United States. By the 22 same token, the fact that the court applied the FSIA in 23 determining whether or not there was commercial activity 24 and a direct effect does not make this case one that 25 arises under the laws or a law of the United States.

1           The case clearly does not meet the well 2   pleaded complaint rule set forth in the landmark case of 3   Louisville and Nashville Railroad v. Mottley.

4           This Court should construe the Foreign 5   Sovereign Immunities Act to provide jurisdiction only 6   when the plaintiff is a citizen. This is the same thing 7   that this Court did in 1800 when it was considering the 8   Judiciary Act providing jurisdiction when an alien was a 9   party. The Court there in Mossman v. Higginson held 10   that the other party had to be a citizen, and the rule 11   of strict construction set forth in Romero versus 12   International Terminal Operating Company would support 13   this Court in interpreting the statute to require that 14   the plaintiff be a citizen where there is not a federal 15   question, where there is not a case arising under.

16           QUESTION: The court of appeals didn't agree
17   with you on that point, did it? I mean, it -- I take it 18   it would have liked to construe the statute that way, 19   but it felt it just couldn't.

20           MR. SHULMAN: That is correct, Justice
21   Rehnquist. I am arguing in support of the judgment
22   below, and this is an additional ground which I believe 23   is available to support the judgment. The court below
24   did agree with the analysis that Mr. Chayes and Mr.
25   Bator had put on the case, which is that the Congress

1 intended the statute to apply when an alien was a 2 plaintiff. However, that analysis is not supported by 3 the legislative history of the case.

4           The legislative history shows that what the 5 statute was designed to do was to adopt a restricted
6 standard of immunity and to have those standards 7 determined judicially rather than politically by the 8 executive department. It does not show a purpose to 9 expand the jurisdiction of federal courts beyond the 10 diversity and federal question jurisdiction scope that 11 they previously had. The Congress did contemplate that 12 there would be FSIA cases in federal courts, of course, 13 and normally there will be litigation in the federal 14 courts, because normally the plaintiff will be a citizen
15 of the United States.

16           The Texas Trading case again illustrates that 17 point. There were four companies there, all of whom 18 were citizens of the United States.

19           When the plaintiff is not a citizen, and when 20 the claim at issue is not federal, Article III 21 forecloses federal jurisdiction. All that the Foreign 22 Sovereign Immunities Act does in those circumstances is 23 to provide authority to pursue the claim. It is much 24 like the statute which allowed a suit at law but not a 25 summary attachment to collect the Puerto Rican tax in 1 Puerto Rico v. Russell and Company.

2 It is like the Act of Congress limiting the 3 immunity of national banks from state taxation in Gully 4 v. First National Bank. The provision of authority to 5 pursue the claim does not constitute the creation of the 6 case arising under the laws of the United States.

7 QUESTION: But according to Mr. Chayes, to 8 properly plead a case that will entitle you -- the 9 district court to have jurisdiction, you have to plead 10 not only that it is a foreign sovereign, but that it is 11 not entitled to immunity.

12 MR. SHULMAN: That is correct, Justice
13 Rehnquist, but the reason why you must plead it is 14 because the federal rules require you to make a 15 statement of the jurisdictional basis of the claim, and 16 that same rule, which I believe is Federal Rule 8, goes 17 on to say that the claim itself is set forth 18 separately. In fact, the rule shows that the 19 jurisdictional statement is not part of the claim.

20 QUESTION: And the statute requires it. The 21 statute requires that there be no immunity. Section 3, 22 1330A. Doesn't it say that?

23 MR. SHULMAN: Your Honor, the statute provides 24 for jurisdiction when the foreign state is not immune.
25 That is correct.

1           QUESTION: The state is not entitled to 2 immunity.

3           MR. SHULMAN: That is correct, Your Honor.

4           QUESTION: Well, if the statute says it, you 5 certainly have to allege it.

6           MR. SHULMAN: You allege it as part of your 7 jurisdictional statement.

8           QUESTION: The statute says so.

9           MR. SHULMAN: Justice Marshall, let me draw 10 your attention to the legislative history of this 11 statute, which is cited in the brief filed by Guinea as 12 an amicus curiae, and I quote from the House report as 13 follows: "An implicit waiver would also include a 14 situation where a foreign state has filed a responsive 15 pleading in an action without raising the defense of 16 sovereign immunity."

17           We believe that the issue of sovereign 18 immunity is an affirmative defense. We would answer the 19 question that Justice O'Connor asked Mr. Chayes contrary 20 to the way he answered it. It is true that the 21 jurisdictional allegations in the complaint will refer 22 to the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act. It also 23 happens, by the way, that one of the amicus briefs filed 24 in this case urges that the court solve the 25 constitutional difficulty by treating it as if it was

1 not --

2 QUESTION: In this case, didn't the complaint
3 set forth the reasons against sovereign immunity? They 4 went into a little detail on it, didn't they? Or did I 5 read it wrong?

6 MR. SHULMAN: Well, Your Honor, I do not have 7 the specific complaint of the Verlinden Company in this 8 case.

9 QUESTION: Well, this is a couple of weeks 10 ago.

11 MR. SHULMAN: But the --

12 QUESTION: I am trying to see how much of an 13 issue this is.

14 MR. SHULMAN: It is not -- It is not an issue 15 in the sense of arising under. It is an issue in the 16 sense that it is a decision that needs be made in a case
17 under the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act. No one 18 challenges that before a state can be held liable, the 19 state must be held to be not immune. The standards on 20 which that statement, that decision would be made are 21 federal standards. That does not mean that that 22 constitutes a case arising under the law of the United 23 States for purposes of original federal jurisdiction.

24 QUESTION: Well, don't you have to allege all 25 of the jurisdictional elements? For instance, in a

1 diversity case, I take it you have to allege that A is a
2 citizen of Connecticut, B is a citizen of Rhode Island,
3 and there is more than whatever the jurisdictional 4 amount requirement is in controversy. Analogously to 5 that, wouldn't you have to allege in your jurisdictional 6 allegations here that this claim is one with respect to 7 which the foreign state is not entitled to immunity?

8 MR. SHULMAN: That is correct, Justice
9 Rehnquist, but the logical extension of that point in 10 terms of the point that Justice Marshall was making 11 would mean that a diversity case was a case arising 12 under a federal law, because you had to plead in your 13 case as an element of your case the diverse citizenship 14 of --

15 QUESTION: Well, but I think the difference
16 is, diversity, the diversity statute confers
17 jurisdiction only, without any substantive requirement.
18 Here you do have the substantive requirement that is in 19 effect part of a jurisdictional requirement that the 20 claim of sovereign immunity be not substantively made 21 out under the Act.

22 MR. SHULMAN: That doesn't vary appreciably 23 from the fact that you have to determine what the 24 citizenship of a corporation is, and the standard, which 25 is that the corporation would be a citizen of the states

1 in which it does business and the state in which it is 2 incorporated, is a substantive law, if you will, in that 3 same sense.

4 QUESTION: But there has to be a line
5 somewhere. How about the Federal Arbitration Act? All 6 you have to allege is that it is a contract, and 7 provides for arbitration.

8 MR. SHULMAN: The Federal Arbitration Act, of 9 course, does not provide jurisdiction.

10 QUESTION: Oh, yes, it does, doesn't it?

11 MR. SHULMAN: I don't believe so.

12 QUESTION: I thought it is a basis for federal 13 jurisdiction. Didn't the Polygraph case, that Bernhard
14 against Polygraph --

15 MR. SHULMAN: Mr. Justice, my impression of 16 the Arbitration Act is that it is not jurisdictional.

17 QUESTION: Must the complaint affirmatively 18 recite that the transaction on which the claim is based 19 was a transaction involving the proprietary commercial 20 interests of the sovereign? Must that be affirmatively 21 stated in the complaint as a basis for jurisdiction?

22 MR. SHULMAN: I think the answer to that 23 question, Mr. Chief Justice, is no. What the complaint
24 must allege is that there is jurisdiction under Section 25 1330. 1330 says that the --

1           QUESTION: You let it go to the proof, the 2 evidence, to determine that it was a proprietary
3 commercial function. Is that it?

4           MR. SHULMAN: Because, among other things, 5 that is not the only basis for determining 6 non-immunity. There is also non-immunity when there has 7 been a waiver of immunity. And as I read to the Court
8 from the legislative history, one instance in which a 9 waiver takes place is by the foreign sovereign failing 10 in its responsive pleading to assert the defense.

11           QUESTION: Mr. Shulman, may I ask you another 12 question? Let me assume that we are over the statutory 13 hurdle. I understand you rely very heavily on that.
14 And then to the Constitutional problem. And then I 15 assume also with you that the allegation under the 16 federal statute is that the immunity question is a 17 defensive question rather than part of the affirmative
18 claim. Would you nevertheless agree that if the case
19 had been brought in a state court, and the only defense 20 was sovereign immunity, that there would be appellate 21 jurisdiction in this Court to review a state court 22 judgment against the foreign sovereign?

23           MR. SHULMAN: Yes, there certainly would.

24           QUESTION: Does it not then follow that within 25 the meaning of Article III, that the case arises under

1 the laws of the United States?

2 MR. SHULMAN: No, it does not follow, because 3 Article III requires two things. One is arising under 4 the laws of the United States, and the other is a case
5 or controversy. You must have a case or a controversy
6 arising under the laws of the United States. If this 7 case had been decided in a state court, and the foreign 8 state were held to be not immune, and the state court 9 went on to hold that the letter of credit was not 10 breached, this Court would not review the immunity --

11 QUESTION: If the letter was not breached, but 12 assume they enter a judgment against the foreign 13 sovereign, is my hypothetical.

14 MR. SHULMAN: In the case where the judgment
15 was entered against the foreign sovereign --

16 QUESTION: Right.

17 MR. SHULMAN: -- then this Court would review, 18 and in that case you would have a case or controversy.

19 QUESTION: You would have a case arising under 20 this constitutional or federal law.

21 MR. SHULMAN: That's correct. That's correct.

22 QUESTION: Why don't we have that now, then?

23 MR. SHULMAN: Because in the context of 24 original jurisdiction --

25 QUESTION: But the Article III doesn't draw

1 that distinction.

2 MR. SHULMAN: The whole basis of the 3 independent state ground rule, Your Honor, is, I
4 believe, that whenever the Court has appellate 5 jurisdiction, it does not necessarily follow that a 6 federal court had original jurisdiction.

7 QUESTION: I know that is true as a statutory 8 matter, but just confining our attention to the language
9 of the first few words of Article III, Section 2, I am 10 not sure that you don't have a problem.

11 MR. SHULMAN: I believe that is because you 12 are excluding from that confining the words "case or 13 controversy."

14 QUESTION: But we do have a case or 15 controversy.

16 MR. SHULMAN: Because you do not have a case
17 or controversy under -- involving the Foreign Sovereign 18 Immunities Act until that issue is raised and 19 litigated. You could have a case brought by a plaintiff 20 against a foreign sovereign, let us say in a state 21 court, removed by the foreign sovereign, who does not go 22 on to assert immunity, and the case would go through the 23 federal court without a federal issue ever having come 24 up.

25 In that case, it would have been an improper

1 exercise of federal jurisdiction. Conversely, you could 2 have a state --

3 QUESTION: But that case would not have been 4 reviewable here, either. If it stayed in the state 5 court, and there was no federal -- no defense of 6 sovereign immunity, the only defense was that we paid
7 the bill, or whatever it might be, there would be no 8 federal question for us to review.

9 MR. SHULMAN: That's correct.

10 QUESTION: So it seems to me that as long as 11 the sovereign immunity defense is maintained, and if you
12 agree that we would have appellate jurisdiction over a 13 state case which has no other federal question in it, 14 then does it not follow within the meaning of Article 15 III that that case arises under federal law?

16 MR. SHULMAN: No. It does follow within the 17 meaning of Article III that that case or controversy 18 arises under federal law for purposes of appellate 19 jurisdiction, because at that point in the schedule, you 20 have a case or controversy. You do not have a case or 21 controversy for purposes of original jurisdiction.

22 QUESTION: What if on these facts the case had 23 been brought prior to 1976 and before the Act? What 24 would you --

25 MR. SHULMAN: Prior to 1976, there would be no

1 basis for federal jurisdiction in this case.

2 QUESTION: Even if the executive branch raised 3 no objection?

4 MR. SHULMAN: There would have been no way to 5 get into the federal court. There is no federal 6 coloration to the case.

7 QUESTION: How about state court?

8 MR. SHULMAN: The case could have been brought 9 in a state court. Then you would have had a question of 10 whether or not the executive branch would choose to make 11 a suggestion of immunity or not. And that seems to me
12 to be what the point is. There is no great unusual 13 aspect to a state court making a decision on a federal 14 question.

15 QUESTION: But now, in 1976, Congress has said
16 a suit may be brought in states and granting removal 17 jurisdiction to a federal court, has it not?

18 MR. SHULMAN: That's correct, and I believe --

19 QUESTION: Then does that act -- does not that 20 action arise under that statute?

21 MR. SHULMAN: Mr. Chief Justice, the question
22 of when a claim arises, a claim arises under a statute
23 involves whether or not the source of the right that you 24 are asserting is a federal law or not. This is the -- 25 the fact that there is lurking in the background of the

1 case somewhere a federal issue does not make the case 2 one arising under a federal law. It makes it a case in 3 which a federal question is presented which may 4 eventually be reviewable by this Court on appellate 5 jurisdiction, because there is then a case or 6 controversy. But it does not mean that it becomes a 7 matter of original jurisdiction in the district court.

8 Now, I would like to say a word about the 9 protective jurisdiction concept which has floated about 10 the briefs a bit, and specifically the petitioner's 11 brief raises four areas in which it suggests that there 12 is a protective jurisdiction of some sort here.

13 Those four areas are the Osborn v. Bank of 14 United States area which Mr. Bator also sought to assert 15 as a basis, the removal of state proceedings against 16 federal officers for actions under color of their 17 office, the authority of a bankruptcy trustee to sue in 18 federal court on a state law claim, and then the 19 National Mutual Insurance Company v. Tidewater Transfer
20 case and the Textile Workers Union v. Lincoln Mills
21 case.

22 Now, in the first three of those suggested
23 bases of protective jurisdiction, you see the difference 24 between a true federal interest in the ultimate 25 disposition of the case and a collateral federal

1 interest in one question in the issue.

2 In Osborn, the basic powers of the bank, the 3 rights and liabilities of the bank, the whole aspect of 4 the bank was a matter of federal interest. In the 5 removal cases, the federal interest was the assurance 6 that federal officers would not be impeded in the 7 performance of their duties by states.

8 QUESTION: Why is that -- Why would you say 9 that is arising under, or why would you say that -- 10 certainly the substantive rule of those removal cases 11 isn't necessarily federal law.

12 MR. SHULMAN: That's correct, Your Honor, but 13 the necessity for a federal officer to be able to 14 perform his duties without impediment by the state is a 15 federal matter of -- basic to the whole issue.

16 QUESTION: You don't think the federal 17 government has the same sort of an interest in assuring 18 foreign governments that they can litigate in the right 19 forum?

20 MR. SHULMAN: That is exactly the point that I
21 am trying to get at, Mr. Justice White, and it is that 22 there is a difference between the federal interest in 23 the ultimate issue at stake and the federal interest in 24 an issue along the way, that the issue, the ultimate 25 issue at stake here is whether or not this letter of

1 credit has been breached, and whether or not this letter
2 of credit is enforceable, and the federal government 3 doesn't have any interest in that question at all.

4 QUESTION: It's got an interest in not making 5 some foreign government made. It probably has more of 6 an interest than it has in making sure some employee 7 doesn't get mad.

8 MR. SHULMAN: It's interest in making sure 9 that a foreign sovereign does not get mad can be 10 adequately taken care of through appellate review of 11 state court determinations on non-federal issues with 12 non-diverse parties.

13 QUESTION: That's a long way around the 14 mulberry bush, isn't it?

15 MR. SHULMAN: You know, the state has an 16 interest, the state has an interest in making 17 determinations as to the enforceability of contracts 18 within its state. The state has an interest in that.
19 The state -- The states kept to themselves the interest 20 to exercise those interests except in those areas where 21 there was a federal case because the action arose under 22 the laws or where there was diversity. Here you don't 23 have that.

24 QUESTION: Didn't Congress say that they had 25 an interest in this?

1           MR. SHULMAN: Yes, they did. Every now and 2 again Congress enacts some constitutional statute.

3           QUESTION: Well, who better -- What better arm 4 of government is to determine that, what the federal 5 interest is, than Congress?

6           MR. SHULMAN: Your Honor, Congress clearly is 7 the arm of government to determine what its federal 8 interest is.

9           QUESTION: And Congress said that in this type 10 of case, the federal courts shall be open to this type 11 of action.

12          MR. SHULMAN: And this Court -- Then this 13 Court sits to ensure that the Congress does not open 14 federal courts to cases --

15          QUESTION: Then it violates the Constitution
16 of the United States, the action of Congress? Does it?

17          MR. SHULMAN: If it calls for -- 18          QUESTION: Does it?

19          MR. SHULMAN: Yes.

20          QUESTION: It does violate the Constitution?

21          MR. SHULMAN: Yes. Yes.

22          QUESTION: What provision?

23          MR. SHULMAN: Article III of the Constitution, 24 which provides that the judicial power shall exist only 25 in cases or controversies where there is a case arising

1 under the laws --

2 QUESTION: Doesn't it also say Congress shall 3 determine the jurisdiction of the federal courts?

4 MR. SHULMAN: No, it does not, Your Honor. It
5 says Congress shall establish such inferior courts, but 6 the Constitution establishes the judicial power of the 7 United States, not the Congress.

8 QUESTION: And what in the Constitution
9 decided that you cannot determine this action, this 10 case?

11 MR. SHULMAN: Your Honor, the Article III --

12 QUESTION: I will make the question simpler.

13 MR. SHULMAN: Thank you.

14 QUESTION: What, if anything, is there in the 15 Constitution that says that this case shall not be 16 decided by this Court?

17 MR. SHULMAN: There is nothing in the 18 Constitution that says this case shall not be decided by 19 this Court. This case should be decided by this Court.
20 But this case could not have been brought as a matter of 21 original jurisdiction in the district court.

22 QUESTION: Could not?

23 MR. SHULMAN: Right. It was, improperly, and 24 this Court will have to decide that.

25 QUESTION: I know we will.

1           MR. SHULMAN: That is the function of the 2 judiciary, is to determine the constitutionality of 3 legislative encroachments on the judiciary. Just as 4 this Court can't render advisory opinions, district
5 courts cannot be given original jurisdiction over 6 non-federal cases which are not diverse.

7           QUESTION: Is the statute unconstitutional?

8           MR. SHULMAN: If it means that the plaintiff 9 does not have to be a citizen, it is unconstitutional, 10 Your Honor. I believe that the statute can be read to 11 say that the plaintiff needs be an American citizen, in 12 which case the statute would not be unconstitutional.
13 The statute is also not unconstitutional when the claim 14 at issue is a federal claim. It is only in the context 15 where it is a state claim that is involved.

16          QUESTION: Mr. Shulman, in your reference to 17 the protective jurisdiction, you took care of the first 18 three problems, but you didn't get to Tidewater.

19          MR. SHULMAN: All right. Thank you. In the 20 Tidewater case, the petitioner's argument is based on 21 what subsequent commentary has shown to be the only 22 defensible basis for the decision, but there was no 23 majority in Tidewater in favor of protective 24 jurisdiction.

25          And in Lincoln Mills, the petitioner also

1 turns to commentary for support, but the majority of the 2 court in Lincoln Mills premised its decision on the fact 3 that there would be a federal common law applied which 4 is an action arising under, and the federal common law
5 to be applied was on the subject matter that the cases 6 are about, which is the enforcement of collective 7 bargaining agreements, the ultimate issue, the federal 8 issue in the disposition of the case.

9 Here, the ultimate disposition is simply of a 10 letter of credit. That is not a matter of federal law.
11 It is not a matter of federal common law, statutory law, 12 or constitutional law. The judgment below should be 13 affirmed. Thank you.

14 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you.

15 Mr. Chayes, you have two minutes remaining.

16 ORAL ARGUMENT OF ABRAM CHAYES, ESQ.,

17 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER

18 MR. CHAYES: Mr. Chief Justice -- Thank you.

19 First, as to your question whether this case 20 could have been brought before 1976, the answer is no.
21 What happened in 1976 was that the Congress exercised
22 its Article I legislative power, and by doing so created 23 as an essential aspect, as an essential part of the 24 plaintiff's case here the issue of sovereign immunity.

25 As Justice Marshall suggested, that was

1 pleaded in our complaint. At AA in the record, the 2 jurisdictional paragraph refers to Section 1330, and if 3 you look at Paragraphs 7 to 15 -- to 12 of the record
4 and then throughout the record, you will see allegations
5 of connections with the United States designed to show
6 that the claim is a proprietary -- based on a 7 proprietary rather than a governmental action, and that 8 it falls within 1605(a)(2).

9           That this is an essential part of the 10 plaintiff's case is proved by the Mine versus Guinea 11 case, the very case that provided the basis of the 12 amicus suggestion of interest. That case has been 13 dismissed below by the Court of Appeals of the District 14 of Columbia. Although it raised the same issue that was 15 here, the court of appeals never reached that issue, 16 because it found, examining the issue of immunity, that 17 Guinea was immune in that case, and therefore there was 18 no subject matter jurisdiction, and it dismissed.

19           It did that not as a matter of defense on the 20 merits, but as a threshold question at the outset of the 21 case, just as we contend and as Justice O'Connor 22 suggested in her question.

23           Now, I would like to leave with the Court the 24 following point. These cases will not go away if the 25 Court sustains the court of appeals' opinion. These

1 cases will not just disappear. They go to the state
2 courts. We can imagine a case in which Olympian York 3 Company owns -- a Canadian company owns real estate in 4 the city of New York. An embassy in the U.N. rents real 5 estate from the company, and doesn't pay its rent. The 6 company has to sue it if the -- Judge Kaufman's opinion
7 is right in the housing court of the city of New York.
8 That is, the foreign sovereign has to be dragged into 9 the housing court of the city of New York and defend its 10 lease.

11 QUESTION: Well, that is if the operation of 12 an embassy is a proprietary function.

13 MR. CHAYES: No, because it is a lease, and it 14 would be a commercial contract within the meaning of 15 1605(a)(2). And there would be no removal, because, as 16 said before, if there is no original jurisdiction 17 constitutionally, there can be no removal.

18 Thank you, Your Honor.

19 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.
20 The case is submitted.

21 (Whereupon, at 11:09 o'clock a.m., the case in 22 the above-entitled matter was submitted.)
