CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments next in Connecticut against Johnson.

Ms. Lager, I think you may proceed whenever you are ready.

ORAL ARGUMENT OF LINDA K. LAGER, ESQ.,
ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER

MS. LAGER: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the Court, the principal issue in this case is whether as a matter of federal constitutional law the state prosecution is entitled to show that a constitutional error in an unobjected to portion of a lengthy, detailed, and elaborate jury instruction is harmless beyond a reasonable doubt.

In 1981, the Connecticut Supreme Court foreclosed the prosecution that opportunity by automatically reversing the Respondent's 1976 convictions on attempted murder and robbery after finding Sandstrom error. That finding of Sandstrom error was premised solely on the court's use of the word "conclusively" twice, and the balance of the instructions were in fact described by the Connecticut Supreme Court as "precise, elaborate, and cast in highly permissive language," and the Connecticut Supreme Court also found that if the word "conclusively" had not been

1 used in this jury instruction, it would not have found
2 Sandstrom error.

3           The state maintains that a finding of an 4 arguably conclusive presumption did not warrant
5 automatic reversal in this case. Furthermore, the state 6 of Connecticut maintains that a reviewing court can 7 determine the impact of an unconstitutional jury 8 instruction on the verdict, and that in this case, 9 because the instruction could have no impact on the 10 outcome of the case, the instruction was harmless beyond 11 a reasonable doubt.

12           The Respondent in this case was charged with 13 four crimes that took place on Saturday night and early 14 Sunday morning of December 20th and 21st, 1975, the 15 weekend before Christmas. It is not necessary to repeat 16 to this Court the sordid details of the rape and the 17 kidnapping aspects of this case, because they are not 18 before this Court.

19           QUESTION: Ms. Lager, that is seven years ago, 20 isn't it?

21           MS. LAGER: That is correct, Your Honor.

22           QUESTION: Why did it take four years in the 23 Connecticut court to get decided?

24           MS. LAGER: The case was -- excuse me. The 25 Connecticut Supreme Court decided the case in 1981

1 principally because there were problems in obtaining the 2 complete transcript. In fact, most of the trial
3 transcript had been obtained in 1977 and 1978. Then it 4 was discovered that there were portions missing. Those 5 portions involved the hearing on the motion to 6 suppress. In this case, there were initially five 7 defendants, and some of the hearings on the motions to 8 suppress were conducted jointly with other defendants.

9           The last portion of transcript involving the 10 motion to suppress was received by counsel on November 11 26th, 1980. The case was then rapidly briefed and 12 argued in June of 1981 under a special briefing schedule
13 that the Connecticut Supreme Court had set up.

14           What was involved in this case --

15           QUESTION: Does this happen frequently in the 16 state of Connecticut?

17           MS. LAGER: This was a somewhat unusual 18 circumstance. There have been problems in the state of 19 Connecticut --

20           QUESTION: Just somewhat unusual?

21           MS. LAGER: -- with transcription. I think 22 the length of the delay in this case was somewhat -- 23 extremely unusual.

24           In this case, the victim clearly had ample 25 opportunity in over five and a half hours of being with

1 the Respondent and his five companions to view them. In 2 fact, in the course of her testimony before the trial 3 court, she was able to give clear identification of the 4 Respondent and his co-assailants by details of clothing
5 and physical description. It was also undisputed that 6 the Respondent was the leader of the group, that he 7 initiated the incident, that he took the most active 8 role, and that he was the most vicious, that he gave 9 directions, that he restrained the victim, that he 10 threatened her, and that he was the first one to rape 11 her.

12           The crucial facts, I believe, before the Court 13 are those that are surrounding the robbery and the 14 attempted murder, and I will concentrate this afternoon 15 on the facts surrounding the attempted murder because in 16 my opinion, and the Respondent virtually concedes that 17 there was overwhelming evidence of intent necessary for 18 robbery by not even discussing those facts in his 19 brief.

20           QUESTION: May I ask you a question? You are 21 going to argue that the error was harmless, I think, 22 now.

23           MS. LAGER: That is correct.

24           QUESTION: Before you get to that, I am not 25 quite clear on your position with respect to when the 1 harmless error argument should be made in Connecticut.

2 In the state against Truppi, the court had an opinion in 3 which it discussed that it would sometimes entertain a 4 harmless error challenge and sometimes it would not.
5 Now, if as a matter of Connecticut practice the 6 Connecticut Supreme Court should decide, well, Sandstrom 7 errors are going to give rise to automatic reversal, 8 would we have power to tell it it could not do that?

9 MS. LAGER: I believe that what the 10 Connecticut Supreme Court did is decide as a matter of 11 federal constitutional law that it would not review the 12 error in Truppi as being harmless. Its citations are 13 solely to federal cases.

14 QUESTION: Well, they cite State against Zeco,
15 which is a Connecticut case, State against Sorbo, a 16 Connecticut case, Elman against State, a Connecticut
17 case, State against Briggs, a Connecticut case.

18 MS. LAGER: Those citations are to cases in 19 which the court, the Connecticut Supreme Court was 20 willing to apply a harmless error rule --

21 QUESTION: Right.

22 MS. LAGER: -- and the Connecticut Supreme 23 Court has indicated in a decision that was decided on 24 January 5th of 1982, Turcio versus Manson, which was 25 cited at Page 3 of the Respondent's brief, in a footnote

1 that they would not decide in the Turcio case nor did
2 they decide in the Johnson case, this case, that there 3 can be no language or other circumstances which could 4 operate to cure an intent instruction containing the 5 phrase "conclusively presumed."

6           Subsequently, in a decision of March 30th, 7 1982, State against Kervin, the Connecticut Supreme 8 Court appeared to be moving towards this Court's total 9 record review analysis in determining whether a jury 10 charge could be harmful. In that case, they 11 specifically emphasized that the charge should not be 12 examined in a vacuum, that it should be viewed in the 13 context of the factual issues raised at the trial. The 14 challenge in that case was premised on Sandstrom and 15 based on a claim that an elemental portion of one of the 16 offenses was improperly given. In fact, there was a 17 dissent that would have held that charge in violation of 18 Sandstrom.

19           QUESTION: I am not sure I understand what 20 your explanation of what the state of Connecticut's 21 position is on harmless error on this issue. Does the 22 court sometimes review it and sometimes not review it?

23           MS. LAGER: I think that the state of 24 Connecticut has a very ambivalent position with the 25 application of the harmless error rule, and I think it

1 has adopted a case by case review. I think the reason
2 that the Court declined to apply the harmless error
3 doctrine in State against Truppi, although they 4 considered the issue when it was raised by the 5 prosecution, was because of the nature of the 6 instruction that was given in that case, and in this 7 particular case --

8           QUESTION: Well, does that mean -- I just want 9 to be sure I follow what you are explaining to me. Does 10 that mean that the Connecticut Supreme Court as a matter 11 of Connecticut practice sometimes entertains the 12 challenge to instructions and sometimes does not?

13           MS. LAGER: It appears that the Connecticut
14 Supreme Court as a matter of federal constitutional law
15 sometimes entertains the instruction -- the challenge 16 that the error was harmless and sometimes it does not.
17 The only stated position that the Connecticut Supreme 18 Court has given in this regard is the one in State
19 against Truppi, is that we sometimes apply the harmless 20 error rule.

21           It appears that if the --

22           QUESTION: Well, is it your position that they 23 must apply it in every case?

24           MS. LAGER: No, Your Honor, my position is not 25 that they must apply the harmless error rule in every

1 case, but if the prosecution asks the Connecticut
2 Supreme Court to review an error for its harmlessness as 3 a matter of federal constitutional law, that it must at 4 least use the harmless error test.

5 QUESTION: Let me just state it to be sure I 6 understand it correctly. As a matter of federal 7 constitutional law, a state supreme court must entertain 8 a harmless -- must make a harmless error examination 9 every time the prosecutor asks it to.

10 MS. LAGER: In the context of an 11 unconstitutional jury instruction, yes.

12 QUESTION: Ms. Lager, before you go on, would 13 you mind telling me where "conclusively presumed" was 14 used in the instructions at 23A and 25A? Was it used in 15 respect of only one of these offenses, or all of them?
16 And if less than all, which?

17 MS. LAGER: At 23A, Your Honor, the court was 18 giving a general instruction with respect to the 19 question of a finding of intent. The second time that 20 the word --

21 QUESTION: This would cover all of the 22 offenses charged.

23 MS. LAGER: That is correct. The Connecticut
24 Supreme Court found, however, that the language of the 25 instructions on the kidnapping offense was sufficiently

1 permissible and phrased solely in terms of inference 2 therefore that any error in the general instruction was 3 cured by that specific one.

4           QUESTION: The court drew back from that 5 instruction in the latter part, did he not, where he 6 said, "If you believe the victim's version as to the 7 defendant's conduct at the bridge, you may presume he 8 intended what would be the natural and necessary 9 consequences of his actions."

10           MS. LAGER: That is correct, Your Honor, and 11 in fact the argument was made to the Connecticut Supreme 12 Court that what was operating in this case was not 13 merely a conclusive presumption at all, that the court's 14 language was ambiguous. The Respondent in fact makes 15 quite a to-do about the fact that the court instructed 16 on a rule of law, but the rule of law that the court
17 instructed on is as follows. "The intent is a question 18 of fact for the jury to find." That was clearly told to 19 the jurors. And then the court said, "However, you 20 should be aware of the rule of law that will be helpful 21 to you, and that is that a person's intention may be 22 inferred from his conduct, and every person is 23 conclusively presumed to intend."

24           QUESTION: In the court's opinion, that 25 discussion relates only to the first count of attempted

1 murder. The Connecticut Supreme Court did not discuss 2 that, as I recall it, in the counts on kidnapping and 3 robbery.

4 MS. LAGER: What the Connecticut Supreme Court 5 found is that this general instruction that appears at 6 the bottom of Pages 22A and 23A of the appendix was 7 unconstitutional despite the other language that was 8 used in the qualifying language in the charge. It then 9 proceeded to examine each of the four separate offenses 10 to determine whether there was any spillover from that 11 general instruction.

12 QUESTION: The first being the charge of 13 attempted murder?

14 MS. LAGER: The first being the charge of 15 attempted murder.

16 QUESTION: That is where the "conclusively 17 presumed" was repeated at Page 25A?

18 MS. LAGER: That is correct. In that portion, 19 after the judge explained to the jury that they must 20 find that the Respondent had the specific intent to 21 cause the death of the victim, and they must ask 22 themselves what intention did the defendant have in 23 mind, did he alone or participating with others intend 24 to commit the crime of murder, and that no one could 25 look into a person's mind and see what the intention

1 is. The court went on to say again in an ambiguous way, 2 "The only way to decide that question is to infer from 3 the accused's conduct in the light of the surrounding 4 circumstances, but as previously stated, every person is 5 conclusively presumed." We have --

6 QUESTION: Ms. Lager, am I right in thinking 7 this about the state's position, that the questions as 8 to whether the instructions considered as a whole might 9 have improperly influenced the jury on the 10 constitutional issue of burden of proof go into deciding 11 whether or not there was so-called Sandstrom error, and 12 then the question of harmless error is whether on that, 13 on the issue that the instructions were addressed to, 14 the evidence was so overwhelming that probably no damage 15 was done?

16 MS. LAGER: That is an aspect of the state's 17 position. The state is not before this Court to 18 relitigate the Connecticut Supreme Court's finding that 19 the jury instruction violated -- the "conclusively 20 presumed" jury instructions violated Sandstrom. The 21 state's argument is that the other instructions in the 22 charge and the totality of the entire record in this 23 case, including the overwhelming evidence of guilt, 24 would allow a reviewing court to assess the impact of 25 this unconstitutional instruction on the outcome of the 1 case.

2           QUESTION: But I think your response assumes 3 that the Connecticut Supreme Court at any rate simply 4 took one instruction in isolation, and said, look, this 5 violates the Sandstrom case, and then didn't treat the 6 other portions of the instructions that might be assumed 7 to counteract that effect. I read the Supreme Court of 8 Connecticut's opinion somewhat differently, that they 9 assimilated all the balancing of the various parts of 10 the instructions into the final question, did it 11 improperly influence the jury in an unconstitutional 12 way, into the question of was there Sandstrom error, and 13 therefore the question of the harmlessness of that error 14 would have to be taken somehow out of the -- outside of 15 the instructions, which have already been fully 16 canvassed in the determination of whether there was 17 constitutional error.

18           MS. LAGER: I would agree that if the test 19 that was adopted would simply require a canvass of the 20 instructions to determine whether the Sandstrom error 21 was harmless, as the Respondent has suggested in his 22 brief, you would have the equivalent of an automatic 23 reversal rule given what the Connecticut Supreme Court 24 did in this case. The state's argument before this 25 Court is that one must look at the instructions as part

1 of the entire trial record, and determine --

2           QUESTION: Well, would that extend to a 3 situation where the instruction on intent is clearly 4 wrong under Sandstrom, and there is no redeeming 5 instruction whatever, so that if you are simply 6 canvassing the instructions, you have to reach the 7 conclusion that the jury was improperly instructed in 8 violation of Sandstrom, but the testimony at the trial 9 is that the defendant took the stand on the question of 10 intent, perhaps was asked the question, did you intend 11 to do this, and the defendant said, sure. They were 12 defending maybe on self-defense or something like that, 13 so that you would say the error was harmless not because 14 of anything contained in the instructions, but because 15 the evidence on that issue was so overwhelming the jury 16 would have reached that conclusion no matter what burden 17 of proof it had been assigned.

18           MS. LAGER: Yes, I would agree with Your 19 Honor's statement.

20           QUESTION: Could I put it another way, that 21 the only way to be successful is that the appellant has 22 to first show, has the burden of showing that there is a 23 violation of Sandstrom, and secondly, he must show that 24 there is not harmless error.

25           MS. LAGER: No, Your Honor. The state's

1 position would be that the appellant has the initial 2 burden of establishing -- the defendant below would hav 3 the initial burden of establishing that there was 4 Sandstrom error, and then according to well established 5 principles of this Court, the burden would shift to the 6 prosecution to establish that error to be harmless
7 beyond a reasonable doubt, and in shifting that burden 8 to the prosecution, the appellate court would be allowed 9 to examine how the instruction affected the outcome of 10 the case.

11           If the appellate court could conclude beyond a 12 reasonable doubt that there is no reasonable possibility 13 that a rationale trier of fact could have entertained a 14 reasonable doubt about intent, so that the instruction 15 resulted in a conviction where there otherwise would 16 have been an acquittal, then, despite the finding of 17 Sandstrom error --

18           QUESTION: You mean, you assume that you put 19 yourself in the position of a juror who is told about 20 this conclusive presumption. And it has no effect on 21 him at all.

22           MS. LAGER: That's not precisely the analysis 23 that --

24           QUESTION: It's close, though, isn't it?

25           MS. LAGER: Not exactly, Your Honor, because --

1 QUESTION: Well, how do you get at the word
2 "conclusive?"

3 MS. LAGER: What an appellate court --

4 QUESTION: What do you think "conclusive"
5 means to the average person?

6 MS. LAGER: I think that the word "conclusive" 7 had to be viewed particularly in this case in context.
8 I think what the jury in this case would have heard are 9 the following things. In -- questions of facts --

10 QUESTION: My question was very simple. What 11 does the word by itself, "conclusive", mean to the 12 average person?

13 MS. LAGER: To reach a conclusion, Your Honor.

14 QUESTION: Reasonable what?

15 MS. LAGER: To reach a conclusion.

16 QUESTION: Well, how can you reach a 17 conclusion as to a presumption that is -- oh, yes, you 18 reach a position he is guilty.

19 MS. LAGER: Well, that is not exactly what the 20 jury in this case was told. The jury in this case was 21 told that intent was a question of fact, that they were 22 the fact finders, that the prosecution bore the burden
23 of proving intent among all of the elements of the crime 24 beyond a reasonable doubt, that the jury was to examine 25 and assess the credibility of the victim, who was the

1 only one to supply direct evidence of the acts of the 2 defendant at the time of the offense, that the jury was 3 then to assess all of the objective facts concerning the 4 circumstances, such as the time of day -- it was 4:00 in 5 the morning -- such as the temperature -- it was ten 6 degrees below zero -- such as the fact that the victim 7 unequivocally identified the defendant, such as the fact 8 that the jury never came back in this case and asked for 9 reinstruction on either the attempted murder or the 10 robbery charges, such as the fact that the defense 11 counsel never objected to the instruction that was 12 given, that the issue of the defendant's intent was not 13 closely disputed or at issue in this case, and that the 14 theory of the defense did not really in any way involve 15 either the attempted murder or the robbery charges.

16           QUESTION: Well, after all of that, why did 17 you need the presumption instruction?

18           MS. LAGER: Well, at the time that that 19 instruction was given, and I don't believe that any 20 court since the Sandstrom decision would give that 21 instruction, it had been a recognized statement of what 22 I would like to describe as the standardized inference 23 of intent, proving intent from an accused conduct. It 24 is pretty clear that in most cases, we don't have the 25 hypothetical situation where the accused comes in and

1 says, I did it, except, for example, in a case -- and 2 that I intended to do it. You may have a case like 3 Sandstrom itself where the accused admitted his act but 4 hotly contested the fact that he could form the specific 5 intent.

6           Therefore, I don't think the judge could be 7 faulted for giving this instruction, given the state of 8 the law, and that there is really a very limited 9 salutary effect in an automatic reversal rule in this 10 type of a case. Indeed, it would probably be -- the 11 more likely effect would be probably be for the public 12 confidence in the administration of justice to be 13 undermined when the general public hears that under the 14 facts and circumstances of a case such as this one, a 15 new trial has been ordered on the attempted murder and 16 the robbery counts.

17           Even if we assume that the jury followed the 18 presumption, the question is also what in fact would 19 this jury have done that would have been any 20 different --

21           QUESTION: I think that you and I are in the 22 same position. We don't know because we were never on a 23 jury.

24           MS. LAGER: Well, I think that --

25           QUESTION: Or am I wrong?

1 MS. LAGER: I think that in fact an appellate 2 court --

3 QUESTION: Am I wrong?

4 MS. LAGER: I think that --

5 QUESTION: I know I've never been on a jury.

6 MS. LAGER: Well, I've never been on a jury
7 either, Your Honor.

8 QUESTION: I've never been in a jury room.

9 MS. LAGER: But I think that appellate courts
10 accepting and in fact sanctioning a standardized 11 inference of intent understand what jurors do when they 12 attempt to find intent. What they do is, they look at 13 the evidence to see what acts and conduct have been 14 proven beyond a reasonable doubt, and they assess 15 credibility and perform the other functions that jurors 16 do. They then look to the evidence to see the natural 17 and necessary consequences of those acts under the 18 attendant circumstances that are established by the 19 evidence.

20 They then ask themselves, has any 21 countervailing evidence been introduced in this case 22 which raises a reasonable doubt, that is, a doubt based 23 on reason, not a speculative doubt, about the 24 defendant's intent, and then they reason from all of the 25 above to find that intent has been established beyond a

1 reasonable doubt, and in fact the reasoning process that 2 this jury engaged in, assuming they followed the charge 3 in this case, had to be that process, because that's 4 what they were told to do specifically in the attempted 5 murder instructions. They were told to examine all of 6 the circumstances, to assess credibility, to draw 7 inferences.

8           Furthermore, they were told, properly 9 instructed on the kidnapping charge on how to draw an 10 inference of intent from conduct, and the only 11 reinstruction that the jury heard on the issue of intent 12 was a reinstruction on the kidnapping charge.

13           QUESTION: Incidentally, the Respondent is now 14 incarcerated on what conviction?

15           MS. LAGER: The Respondent is incarcerated on 16 the kidnapping and sexual assault convictions.

17           QUESTION: And what are his sentences?

18           MS. LAGER: He is serving now as a result of 19 the reversal an 18 to 36 year sentence.

20           QUESTION: And if the consequence of the 21 Supreme Court of Connecticut's decision is what?

22           MS. LAGER: The consequence of the Supreme 23 Court of Connecticut's decision is that the state is now
24 obliged to conduct a second trial of the attempted 25 murder and the robbery convictions, bring this victim

1 back in after seven years of the incident to repeat the 2 details of the story, establish the same case.

3 QUESTION: Well, what sentences did he get on 4 those two?

5 MS. LAGER: He got a -- the consequence of the 6 reversal was that the minimum sentence was reduced by 7 ten years, and the maximum sentence was reduced by 20 8 years.

9 QUESTION: So he had --

10 MS. LAGER: He got a 28 to 56 year sentence 11 originally.

12 QUESTION: Twenty-eight to 56, and he is now 13 serving a --

14 MS. LAGER: An 18 to 36 year sentence.

15 QUESTION: -- 18 to 36.

16 QUESTION: Why must the state re prosecute?

17 MS. LAGER: Why must the state re prosecute?

18 QUESTION: That is what you just said.

19 MS. LAGER: The state's position in a case 20 such as this one is that the gravity of the offense is 21 so serious that it would be necessary to re prosecute the 22 defendant.

23 QUESTION: Well, that's a matter of discretion
24 on the state's part.

25 MS. LAGER: It is a matter of prosecutorial

1 discretion.

2 QUESTION: So it doesn't have to.

3 MS. LAGER: It does not have to, but as the 4 case stands now, it is in a posture of having a retrial
5 on the two counts that were ordered to be retried.

6 I would like to reserve --

7 QUESTION: Let me have those figures again.
8 You said 18 to 36 under the adjusted sentence.

9 MS. LAGER: Twenty-eight to 56 under the 10 original sentence.

11 QUESTION: Well, it is down to 18 to 36, you 12 said.

13 MS. LAGER: That is correct.

14 QUESTION: Now, on the assault charge, what 15 was the sentence on that? And were they consecutive 16 or --

17 MS. LAGER: If I may have a moment.

18 (Pause.)

19 QUESTION: Well, if it takes time, don't use 20 the time now. I can check that.

21 MS. LAGER: If you look at Pages 51A and 52A
22 of the appendix --

23 QUESTION: Thank you. Thank you.

24 MS. LAGER: -- that would give the sentence.
25 I would like to reserve the rest of my time

1 for rebuttal.

2 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Barnett?

3 ORAL ARGUMENT OF JERROLD H. BARNETT, ESQ.,

4 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENT

5 MR. BARNETT: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it 6 please the Court, this case -- this case involves the 7 question of whether an admittedly unconstitutional
8 instruction that posited the element of intent as a 9 question of law, contrary to decisions of this Court, 10 and which remained uncured in a viewing of the charge as 11 a whole, can ever be considered harmless error by virtue 12 of the strength of the state's evidence. That is the 13 position that the Petitioner has taken here today, and 14 it is the position taken in the Petitioner's brief.

15 There is really no question that the error was 16 not corrected by the remainder of the charge. There has 17 been some mention that the inference charge on intent, 18 concededly permissible in the specific instructions on 19 the kidnapping charge, constituted some sort of a cure, 20 but the Connecticut Supreme Court ruled otherwise when 21 it refused to import the kidnapping instructions into 22 the instructions on robbery which was the third count, 23 for the reason that the structure of the charge did not 24 permit such a construction.

25 The initial error was made common to all

1 crimes involved in the information.

2 QUESTION: Was that the one at Page 23A?

3 MR. BARNETT: That's the one that appears on 4 Page 23A, Justice Brennan.

5 QUESTION: With the word "conclusive."

6 MR. BARNETT: The word "conclusive," where the 7 jury was instructed on a rule of law that every person 8 is conclusively presumed to intend the natural and 9 necessary consequences of his act, and of course in 10 Sandstrom versus Montana, this Court noted that 11 "presume" had a common meaning of acceptance of a 12 proposition as true without proof, and "conclusively," 13 of course, has common meanings of irrefutable, final, 14 and decisive.

15 QUESTION: I am not sure I understood the 16 state's position just as you have stated it. I thought 17 the state's position was that taking the record as a 18 whole, that is, the instruction as a whole, that there 19 was sufficient ambiguity to afford a basis for a 20 harmless error holding.

21 MR. BARNETT: I do not understand the state's 22 position to be such, Your Honor. I understand the 23 state's position to be that a cure may have been 24 effected by the specific instructions on kidnapping.
25 However, the Connecticut Supreme Court refused to follow

1 such a suggestion because of the structure of the 2 charge, and further, it could only mean that if the 3 state's position were made and considered, that the jury 4 would have been submitted these crimes on two theories, 5 one concededly unconstitutional, and one claimed to be 6 constitutional, and I believe that settled law is that 7 if the theories are to be viewed as alternatives, that 8 the unconstitutionality, the admitted 9 unconstitutionality would require the convictions to be 10 set aside.

11 Yes, Justice Rehnquist.

12 QUESTION: Mr. Barnett, supposing that an 13 appellate court reviewing a claim of Sandstrom error in 14 the charge to the jury saw there was one sentence in a 15 very long set of instructions that might be interpreted 16 as suggesting a conclusive presumption, but came across 17 seven or eight restatements of the proposition, as you 18 often get in a series of complicated instructions, which 19 simply used the -- clearly spoke in terms of an 20 inference that was permissible under the Sandstrom 21 decision. It concludes on the basis of all that that 22 the jury simply wasn't misled.

23 Now, is the proper result for that appellate 24 court to say there was no Sandstrom error, or that there 25 was Sandstrom error but it was harmless, without

1 examining into the evidence at all?

2 MR. BARNETT: My position, if Your Honor
3 please, is that it would be proper for an appellate 4 court to rule on the possibility of misunderstanding
5 solely from the language of the charge, that if there 6 was language which imported a conclusive presumption 7 that the error could only be corrected in the charge.

8 QUESTION: Well, but supposing the appellate 9 court concludes that it was corrected in the charge, 10 that there is something that taken all by itself might 11 be Sandstrom error, but other parts of the charge really 12 cured it, so that the impact on the jury was de 13 minimis. Now, is the answer that the appellate court 14 reaches in that situation that there was no violation of 15 Sandstrom or that there was a violation but it was 16 harmless error?

17 MR. BARNETT: I think that the appellate court 18 would have to rule or would rule in my opinion that 19 there was no violation of Sandstrom because the charge 20 has to be considered as a whole.

21 QUESTION: Mr. Barnett, I gather, or do I, 22 that you think that an examination of the evidence is 23 irrelevant to the determination of the issue we have to 24 decide?

25 MR. BARNETT: I so think, Your Honor, and I

1 base that on what I am going to posit to the Court is a 2 concept of what is a jury's verdict, and I refer to 3 language used by Justice Rutledge in Kotteokos versus 4 the United States, where he said that a verdict is more
5 than a judgment on the facts. A verdict is a judgment 6 of law rendered by a court of laymen, and I think that 7 that language explains why this Court has treated 8 incidents of instructional error differently than it has 9 treated incidents of evidentiary error.

10           QUESTION: Now, do you suggest that we have 11 never treated for harmless error purposes instructional 12 error?

13           MR. BARNETT: No, I do not make that 14 suggestion. My suggestion is that although Petitioner 15 has not placed much emphasis on the word "conclusively," 16 that when the Connecticut Supreme Court said that the 17 convictions had to be overturned because the word 18 "conclusively" was used, "conclusively" became more than 19 a word, and I think the decision of the State Supreme 20 Court shows that. "Conclusively" became a concept.

21           The Connecticut Supreme Court overturned these 22 convictions because in its opinion this instruction
23 withdrew the element of intent from the jury's 24 factfinding function insofar as attempted murder, where 25 it was specifically stated for the second time, and

1 insofar as the crime of robbery was concerned, where 2 nothing was stated as to how the element of intent
3 should be ascertained, and it became a sort of guessing 4 game between the invalid presumption and the subsequent 5 mention of inference in the kidnapping instructions, and 6 by taking it from the factfinding function of the jury, 7 by effectively eliminating intent as an element of the 8 crime, what has been done is that the factual elements 9 of the crime have been taken from the decision of the 10 only body which is constitutionally able to make that 11 decision, namely, the jury.

12           And in brief, my position here today is that 13 the invalid presumption amounted to a directed verdict.
14 It was the functional equivalent of a directed verdict.

15           QUESTION: Well, Mr. Barnett, isn't your 16 position basically an attack on the whole notion of 17 harmless error? Certainly in Harrington against 18 California, the court seemed to have been faced with a 19 similar argument, the argument that you can't put 20 yourself in the position -- an appellate court can't put 21 itself in the position of jurors, but as I understand 22 it, the court rejected that argument. It said, we don't 23 know, of course, what jurors sat, but our judgment has 24 to be based on our reading of the record and what seems 25 to be the probable impact of two confessions on the 1 minds of an average jury.

2           Certainly, in that case, they thought they 3 could decide what a reasonable jury would have done
4 without that particular unconstitutional Bruton
5 violation.

6           MR. BARNETT: That is true, Justice Rehnquist, 7 and I stated that the Court has treated instances of 8 instructional error differently from instances of 9 evidentiary error, such as existed in Harrington.

10           QUESTION: What cases are you relying on for 11 treatment of instances of instructional error?

12           MR. BARNETT: I am relying on Wyler versus the 13 United States, the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and 14 Joiners versus the United States, Bollenbach versus the 15 United States.

16           QUESTION: All of those were trials in federal 17 court, weren't they?

18           MR. BARNETT: Yes, they were.

19           QUESTION: And wasn't the court in those cases 20 interpreting a statute of Congress providing that 21 technical errors shouldn't be used as ground for 22 reversal?

23           MR. BARNETT: That is correct, but I believe 24 that this Court in Chapman versus California mentioned 25 that the rule adopted in that case, very much like the

1 federal harmless error statute that preceded it, was not 2 designed to relate to substantial rights, so I think 3 those cases do become very relevant.

4 QUESTION: But there is no reason why one
5 should govern the other, is there?

6 MR. BARNETT: Well, I think that the idea of 7 directed verdicts and their functional equivalents have 8 been discussed by this Court lately. I refer to Justice
9 Brennan's concurrence in Chiarella versus United States, 10 which is cited in both briefs, that where it -- where 11 the error is evidentiary, apparently from the nature of 12 the violation, the material is admitted improperly for 13 the jury's factfinding determination. Therefore, on 14 review, a court can eliminate that tainted item and make 15 a determination of what impact it had upon the jury, and 16 furthermore, in evidentiary matter, the jury, of course, 17 is told that it is the supreme judge of facts, it may 18 accept or reject any evidence.

19 When it comes to instructional error, the jury
20 has no choice. The jury is always told that it has a 21 duty to abide by the instructions given to it by the 22 court, and I believe that this Court has said that the 23 crucial assumption behind the constitutional scheme of 24 trial by jury is that the jury will listen, follow, and 25 obey the instructions.

1           So therefore in the case of instructional 2 error, you must start with the proposition that the 3 error had an impact on the jury in the sense that they 4 understood and followed.

5           QUESTION: And that it is irreparable other 6 than by better instructions?

7           MR. BARNETT: It cannot be cured except by 8 other language in the charge.

9           QUESTION: Well, now, in this case, Mr.
10 Barnett, I appreciate that argument as to the attempted 11 murder, where twice "conclusive" was used, but how do 12 you carry this as instructional error into the other 13 convictions --

14          MR. BARNETT: Into the robbery --

15          QUESTION: Yes.

16          MR. BARNETT: -- conviction. Justice Brennan,
17 I believe it is Footnote 4 of my brief where I mention 18 that the robbery -- the effect of this court's decision
19 on the robbery conviction will not afford Mr. Johnson 20 one less day in the prison. Footnote 3 sets forth the 21 sentences, which are consecutive and which are 22 concurrent. And Footnote 4 mentions that Mr. Johnson 23 petitioned this Court, and his petition was denied, and 24 as a result of concurrent sentences on robbery and 25 kidnapping, it really is not factually going to make

1 much difference.

2 QUESTION: Even on parole?

3 MR. BARNETT: Even on parole. It will not 4 make much difference.

5 QUESTION: Well, you say it won't make much
6 difference. Will it make any difference?

7 MR. BARNETT: That, on parole, I cannot tell 8 you, Your Honor, whether it will definitely make any 9 difference or not. We have had some recent statutory 10 changes, and I am not quite certain how much credits 11 would be allocated to him.

12 QUESTION: Would it make a difference if he 13 were ever paroled and convicted of a new crime for 14 recidivism purposes?

15 MR. BARNETT: It would increase his past 16 record. He is a recidivist at the present time, Justice 17 O'Connor.

18 QUESTION: Is there another one? That's the 19 robbery.

20 MR. BARNETT: It's the robbery. What the 21 Connecticut Supreme Court did in its construction of the 22 charge is that it took the general instructions and 23 analyzed them and found uncured error. Then it made an 24 analysis between the general instructions and the 25 specific instructions on each crime. For attempted

1 murder, the error was compounded. For kidnapping in the 2 second degree, the second charge in the information, the 3 court felt that the error was cured by the permissive 4 inference language that attended the description on how 5 intent should be ascertained for that crime.

6           On the third charge, robbery in the first 7 degree, the court went to great lengths in describing 8 the nature of the intent, but it never described how the 9 intent should be ascertained, so the jury was left with 10 two specific instructions which could be construed as at 11 variance with each other, the attempted murder, 12 admittedly invalid, and the kidnapping, admittedly 13 valid, plus the general instruction which had been made 14 common to all crimes, and in the Truppi case, which is 15 referred to in a footnote in my brief, this procedure is 16 set forth. The Connecticut Supreme Court in the Truppi 17 case held that by giving a general instruction on 18 intent, the jury would interpret that general 19 instruction every time the court mentioned intent.

20           So therefore, when it came to robbery, the 21 court refused and properly so to speculate on which 22 prior instruction the jury had adopted, and on that 23 basis overturned the conviction also.

24

1 And on that basis overturn the robbery conviction also.

2 QUESTION: Do you think it is always improper 3 for an appellate court to say what the jury might have 4 done under other circumstances?

5 MR. BARNETT: Well, Justice White, I think 6 that much of it depends upon the instruction. Where the 7 instruction has been given as a conclusive presumption
8 and is removed from the jury, I believe that this Court 9 recognized in the United Brotherhood case that -- and in 10 the Wyler case -- that to ask the Court to decide a 11 factual element that was not properly submitted to the 12 jury was, in effect, asking the court --

13 QUESTION: What about an evidentiary error?

14 MR. BARNETT: In an evidentiary --

15 QUESTION: -- in which the jury is told, you 16 consider all the evidence; and the jury considers all 17 the evidence. And then some evidence is found to have 18 been improperly admitted, and the Court finds harmless 19 error on the grounds the jury would have come out that 20 way anyway.

21 MR. BARNETT: Yes. In the evidentiary
22 situations it's somewhat different because of the nature
23 of the violation and the fact that the inquiry proceeds 24 at a lower level, it does not proceed on the level --

25 QUESTION: Well, not unless the appellate

1 court is coming to a conclusion as to what the jury
2 would have done absent the evidence or with the evidence.

3 MR. BARNETT: Oh, absent the evidence?

4 QUESTION: Yes. So it's performing in a way a 5 jury function.

6 MR. BARNETT: It is, but it can perform it
7 because it can say with some certitude that this tainted 8 item of evidence had no impact on the jury.

9 QUESTION: Well, what about the certitude 10 based on the evidence that the jury couldn't possibly 11 have found anything but that the defendant intended the 12 act?

13 MR. BARNETT: First, the appellate court must 14 assume that the jury followed the instruction. So if 15 the jury --

16 QUESTION: Well, you have just told us we 17 should assume the jury's followed instructions.

18 MR. BARNETT: Yes. That the jury followed the 19 instruction, so if in the decisional process the jury 20 used the invalid presumption as a way to find guilt, it 21 does not affect a cure merely because the appellate 22 court can say the jury would have convicted on the 23 evidence anyway, because it would show that the jury did 24 not act properly in considering intent as a factual 25 element to be adjudged in terms of all the evidence.

1           QUESTION: But if the jury, you say the 2 appellate court is foreclosed from saying, if the jury
3 had been properly instructed, it would have found him 4 guilty anyway because it couldn't have done anything but 5 found that he intended what he did.

6           MR. BARNETT: No, Your Honor.

7           QUESTION: The Court can't do that?

8           MR. BARNETT: No, Your Honor, I am saying that 9 if the jury used an improper decisional process fostered 10 by the instruction which it must be presumed that they 11 followed, then that is an error that affected the 12 verdict. And that is the test under Chapman v.
13 California.

14          QUESTION: Well, it affected the verdict.

15          MR. BARNETT: And the test is not whether the 16 same result would have been achieved had the error not 17 have occurred. That is the test.

18          QUESTION: What about the hypothesis that I 19 posed to your opponent? Supposing that the jury is 20 erroneously instructed along the conclusively presume
21 lines on the issue of intent; the evidence at trial
22 shows the defendant took the stand, admitted intent, 23 simply advanced a self-defense defense by way of 24 avoiding a guilty verdict. And during closing argument 25 the counsel for the defendant says, we concede intent,

1 what we are really arguing about here is self-defense;
2 we think you should find him not guilty for that reason.

3           It goes to the appellate court. You say they 4 could not say in the light of this situation that 5 whatever burden of proof was put on the State with 6 respect to the element of intent, a reasonable jury 7 would have found it met here?

8           MR. BARNETT: I must answer the question this 9 way, Justice Rehnquist --

10           QUESTION: You cannot answer it yes or no?

11           MR. BARNETT: Yes, I can answer it yes or no.

12           QUESTION: But you are going to take some time
13 doing it. Okay.

14           MR. BARNETT: But may I explain my answer a 15 little. My answer is that, no, an appellate court could 16 not in the case of an instruction worded as this one, 17 because the wording of this instruction means that it 18 did not reach the jury in the manner in which it is 19 constitutionally required to. And for that reason the 20 confession and the admissions of counsel would not act
21 to cure. And that, I think, is one of the difficulties 22 that courts have had with the Sandstrom situation where 23 the instruction was capable of two interpretations and 24 where the claims may before this Court, somewhat 25 belatedly, were that the error was harmless because

1 assume it was burden shifting, the burden didn't matter
2 because of Sandstrom's confession.

3 QUESTION: But on this kind of an instruction,
4 is it your position that no amount of evidence, no
5 matter how overwhelming, could permit a reviewing court 6 to say that it was harmless error?

7 MR. BARNETT: That is my position, Mr. Chief
8 Justice, that if the instruction posited as conclusive, 9 and I draw that to the analogy to the directed verdict,
10 that no court has the power to direct a verdict in a 11 criminal case no matter how conclusive the evidence may 12 be.

13 QUESTION: Even if a reviewing court would say 14 that no rational mind could have been misled by the 15 ambiguity in the instruction in the light of the 16 overwhelming evidence? You would maintain that position?

17 MR. BARNETT: I maintain that position.

18 QUESTION: It doesn't leave much left to the 19 harmless error rule, does it?

20 MR. BARNETT: Well, it depends, if Your Honor 21 please, I submit, on what type of error has been 22 committed. I maintain that position because of 23 decisions from this Court that there are institutions 24 that have certain functions and that if the function of 25 one institution is taken away from it, then the error

1 cannot be cured because of the constitutional 2 requirement of trial by jury.

3 QUESTION: May I ask, Mr. Barnett, do you
4 concede that the instruction in this case was ambiguous?

5 MR. BARNETT: No, I most certainly do not. I
6 concede it was the most unambiguous instruction there 7 could be.

8 QUESTION: Mr. Barnett, may I just ask you 9 what your understanding of the holding of the 10 Connecticut Supreme Court was? I don't read in their 11 opinion the same theory of defending this judgment that 12 you advance in argument today. They don't say anything 13 like that.

14 MR. BARNETT: Justice Stevens, perhaps I 15 should start with answering something that you asked of 16 Ms. Lager. The harmless error rule in Connecticut for 17 criminal cases generally revolves about a case called 18 the State v. Evans, which is cited in the respondent's 19 brief in the section which explains how the error was 20 considered below.

21 State v. Evans rests on two premises: the 22 Connecticut Supreme Court will consider on a plain error
23 basis claims where error was not claimed at the trial
24 level when a newly articulated constitutional position
25 is announced by this Court and where the record shows

1 that the petitioner may have been deprived of a fair
2 trial because of denial of constitutional right.

3           And in this case the decision notes that they 4 have accepted claims made on the basis that this Court's 5 decision in Sandstrom v. Montana. But they have never 6 ruled on a case where the claim of error involved an 7 instruction stated conclusively as this one.

8           Subsequently, in Turcio v. Manson in a habeas 9 corpus case, convictions were reversed. The instruction 10 was either the same or similar to this.

11           QUESTION: Well, I am still not sure I 12 understand. Does that mean in your view that they have 13 taken a position that as a matter of Connecticut 14 practice they will always consider a Sandstrom error to 15 be not subject to harmless error?

16           MR. BARNETT: No, if Your Honor please, it 17 means that they have taken the position that failure to 18 object to the instruction at trial will not bar you from 19 appellate review in the sense of Wainwright v. Sykes.

20           QUESTION: Well, all right. So you are over 21 the Wainwright against Sykes problem, you have got the 22 error before the Supreme Court of Connecticut. When, if 23 ever, will they allow the prosecutor to say, well, 24 granting there was Sandstrom error, nevertheless it was 25 harmless because we look at the entire record. Have

1 they passed on that question?

2 MR. BARNETT: I don't believe that the 3 Connecticut Supreme Court has passed on that question.
4 Error has been found to exist or not to exist according 5 to the language of the instructions.

6 QUESTION: And what do you understand them to 7 have done in this case as a reason for rejecting the 8 prosecutor's argument that this error was harmless? Why 9 did they reject that?

10 MR. BARNETT: They rejected it because the 11 error, the instructional error, was uncured by the 12 remainder of the charge and because of its conclusive, 13 expressly stated conclusive nature, removed the element 14 that could have been interpreted by a reasonable jury.

15 QUESTION: But that doesn't really meet the 16 argument that the prosecutor makes that it could also be 17 cured by the abundant evidence of guilt.

18 MR. BARNETT: No. They --

19 QUESTION: And then they don't really deal 20 with that argument, do they?

21 MR. BARNETT: The decision does not expressly 22 address that. But I think it is implicit in the 23 decision that an error of this type can be cured only in 24 the charge.

25 QUESTION: Mr. Barnett, as I understand your

1 position, the Sandstrom function is a functional 2 equivalent of a directed verdict. If so, why was the 3 case submitted to the jury on the attempted murder 4 question at all? Why didn't the Judge simply say that 5 as a matter of law he concluded that the evidence was 6 insufficient to go to the jury on that issue?

7 MR. BARNETT: That certainly would have been 8 error, Justice Powell. I think it certainly would have 9 been error.

10 QUESTION: Why? You say the instruction was 11 the equivalent --

12 MR. BARNETT: Yes.

13 QUESTION: -- of a directed verdict --

14 MR. BARNETT: Yes.

15 QUESTION: -- on the issue of intent. Intent 16 is a necessary element of the crime, isn't it?

17 MR. BARNETT: Yes, it is.

18 QUESTION: What's the difference in this 19 instance?

20 MR. BARNETT: May I, Judge?

21 QUESTION: If the Judge had said --

22 QUESTION: Can you have a directed verdict in 23 Connecticut in a criminal case?

24 MR. BARNETT: No, you most certainly cannot.

25 QUESTION: Never?

1           MR. BARNETT: Never. And it is my claim that 2 this instruction was the equivalent of a directed 3 verdict.

4           QUESTION: Can the Judge just dismiss that 5 count?

6           MR. BARNETT: Well, the question, Your Honor, 7 is why would the Judge dismiss the count? We claim that 8 the count was improperly submitted to the jury because 9 the jury was directed to find on an element of the count 10 of attempted murder.

11          QUESTION: But it still had to find the other 12 elements, didn't it?

13          MR. BARNETT: The jury still, as a factual
14 situation, would -- that is the only, the only, element 15 in which the conclusive presumption was used.
16 Everything else was posited as a question of fact.

17          QUESTION: You haven't said very much about 18 the failure to object here.

19          MR. BARNETT: No, I haven't, Mr. Chief 20 Justice, because the Connecticut Supreme Court accepted
21 the claim. I have pointed out in my brief in a footnote 22 that the statement in the State v. Ruiz, referred to by 23 Ms. Lager, was not made in the situation of an approved 24 jury instruction. It was made in a comment by the 25 Supreme Court of Connecticut to a claim that the

1 evidence in a certain case was insufficient on which to 2 base a jury's verdict of guilt.

3 QUESTION: The whole purpose of objections is 4 to give the trial in the courts an opportunity to 5 correct an asserted error, is it not?

6 MR. BARNETT: Yes, it is, sir. However, this 7 is a case on direct review, and I think the Connecticut 8 Supreme Court was quite proper in treating it under --

9 QUESTION: Well, as I understand it,
10 Connecticut Supreme Court practice, or at least that's 11 what happened here, was that notwithstanding the failure 12 to object --

13 MR. BARNETT: That is correct.

14 QUESTION: -- they were willing to entertain 15 the --

16 MR. BARNETT: Yes, yes, Justice Brenner.

17 QUESTION: And did.

18 MR. BARNETT: It did. And fully considered
19 the issue.

20 Thank you, Your Honors, for the privilege of 21 addressing you.

22 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Ms. Lager, do you have 23 anything further?

24 MS. LAGER: With respect to the claim of the 25 concurrent sentence doctrine that was raised by Mr.

1 Barnett, the sentences, in response to your question 2 earlier, Mr. Chief Justice, were 10 to 20 years on the 3 attempted murder count, 8 to 16 years on the kidnapping
4 count, 10 to 20 years on sexual assault, and 5 to 10 5 years on the robbery, which was concurrent with the 6 kidnapping offense.

7           The effect of the Connecticut Supreme Court's 8 reversal is that the the State of Connecticut is obliged 9 to retry the defendant on both the robbery and the 10 attempted murder counts.

11           QUESTION: Now, you say obliged again.

12           MS. LAGER: Or can exercise its prosecutorial 13 discretion. As it stands now, the --

14           QUESTION: But if it does not, the respondent 15 has 15 to 36, is that right?

16           MS. LAGER: If it does not, the respondent has 17 18 to 36. But there is certainly no question of 18 mootness with respect to the the State of Connecticut, 19 who is the petitioner today, and the consequences to the 20 the State of Connecticut. And as far as the reversal of 21 the defendant's conviction on those charges, 22 notwithstanding the fact that the sentence was 23 concurrent.

24           The other point that I would like to make is 25 that harmfulness of an error should not depend on an

1 absolute rule concerning the point in a trial where the 2 error occurred. An evidentiary error may be 3 devastating, and an instructional error may be 4 insubstantial or insignificant. And that is one of the 5 reasons that this Court has announced a harmless-error 6 rule and why it should be appropriately applied in the 7 proper case under the correct circumstances. Thank you.

8 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, Counsel.

9 The case is submitted.

10 (Whereupon, at 3:00 o'clock p.m., the case in 11 the above-entitled matter was submitted.)
