1 reservation. Master Rifkind determined that the proper 2 measure was the practicably irrigable acreage of the 3 reservations. He then determined the acreage for each 4 of the reservations, and allocated water in accordance 5 with that determination.

6 This Court adopted Master Rifkind's
7 determination of irrigable acreage and the water 8 allocations, and in 1964 entered its decree implementing 9 the 1963 decision.

10 Thereafter, in 1977, in connection with a 11 joint motion to enter a supplemental decree respecting 12 the listing of present perfected rights, which matter 13 was called for in Article VI of the 1964 decree, the 14 five tribes of these reservations sought to intervene 15 for the purpose of seeking additional water for the 16 reservations. In the following year, the United States 17 filed a motion to amend the 1964 decree to seek 18 additional water for each of the reservations.

19 These pleadings and the responsive pleadings
20 of the State Parties were referred to Elbert P. Tuttle 21 as Special Master to hear the matter. Master Tuttle has 22 held lengthy hearings, and has made a report which is 23 filed before this Court. He has ruled that it was 24 proper to reopen the original proceedings for the 25 purpose of hearing claims that there exists additional

1 irrigable acreage on the reservation than was presented 2 in the initial proceeding.

3 I refer to this as the reopening issue. Some 4 refer to it as the omitted lands issue.

5 He has ruled further that it was proper to 6 hear claims of irrigable acreage for -- based on 7 boundary changes made by the Secretary of the Interior
8 for the reservations subsequently to entry of the 1964
9 decree, and he ruled that the State Parties could not 10 challenge whether the irrigable acreage claim was in 11 fact within the boundaries of the reservations. I will 12 refer to this as the boundaries issue.

13 Finally, he has ruled that it was proper for 14 the tribes to intervene as independent parties with 15 their own counsel to make claims for additional water 16 for the reservation, despite the claims -- the defenses 17 of the three states based on the Eleventh Amendment, and 18 he permitted the United States to continue to make 19 claims for additional water on behalf of each of the 20 tribes.

21 I will now address these three issues, and my 22 colleague will address following certain issues, 23 equitable and legal, related to reopening the case, and 24 also discuss issues respecting Master Tuttle's findings 25 with regard to practicably irrigable acreage.

1 With respect to reopening the case to hear
2 claims that there existed additional irrigable acreage 3 over that contended for by the United States in the 4 original proceedings, Master Tuttle concedes at the 5 outset that were these claims to be made in a different 6 lawsuit, they would be subject to the bar of res
7 judicata, that these claims are not indeed new claims, 8 but were within the issues originally tried and 9 determined some 20 years before.

10 He states, however, that Article IX of the 11 decree --

12 QUESTION: Did he say it would be res judicata
13 or law of the case?

14 MR. BORONKAY: He stated it would be res
15 judicata were these claims to be made in another 16 proceeding.

17 QUESTION: Oh, I see.

18 MR. BORONKAY: In this particular instance, he 19 referred, to avoid that bar, he states that Article IX 20 of the Court's decree permits the reopening of that 21 issue. That article provides that any party may apply 22 at the foot of the decree for its amendment or for 23 further relief, and that this Court reserves
24 jurisdiction for the purpose of entering any proper 25 order in relation to the subject matter of the 1 controversy.

2           We submit that that language neither in its 3 form nor its purpose allows a party to come back many 4 years after final adjudication to reopen an issue on the 5 basis of perhaps an error in trial judgment or what 6 amounts to the splitting of a cause of action. This 7 language of Article IX is found in major water
8 adjudications, particularly equitable apportionment
9 cases. Its office and function is to permit the Court 10 to modify a decree due to changed circumstances. Its 11 orientation is in the future. A changed condition which 12 means the decree is no longer workable, which means it 13 has to be modified to become workable.

14           We are aware of no case that has interpreted 15 language such as this to allow a party to come back 16 merely because he has a change of position, a different 17 position that he feels he should have taken and could 18 have taken in the original suit, and yet this is the 19 position urged by the United States and adopted by 20 Master Tuttle.

21           We submit that it is not only unprecedented, 22 but it is unsound to accept this interpretation, for it 23 obviously allows relitigation of issues finally 24 determined, casts an intolerable burden on the courts, 25 creates instability in judgments, and, of course, adds

1 unnecessary costs to litigants.

2 QUESTION: What do you suggest was the purpose
3 in the original report and action of this Court in 4 leaving some of these matters open for adjustments?

5 MR. BORONKAY: The adjustment that I believe
6 the Chief Justice refers to would be the boundary 7 adjustments in Article II(D)(5) of the decree, and that 8 is a specific provision that permits the reopening for a 9 specific purpose, and I will indicate that the condition 10 of reopening for that purpose has not been met in this 11 case, but with regard to Article IX, that is -- I might 12 call it a phrase of art. It is not just a bland, broad 13 statement reserving jurisdiction for any purposes. It 14 has a certain function to fulfill, and that is the 15 modification of a decree for changes in the future.

16 We submit that Article IX in no way permits a 17 party merely to say that if he had a second chance he 18 could do better, and that is the use being made of that 19 article here.

20 QUESTION: I suppose if the use of Article IX 21 made here is acceptable, one of the states or the lower 22 basin states -- basin states, either one could ask to 23 relitigate the division of water --

24 MR. BORONKAY: Precisely. Indeed, if Article 25 IX may be read so broadly, and we don't think it should,

1 there would be no reason for any party having an 2 interest to come in and relitigate matters if they feel 3 they have certain equities, or they believe they could 4 do better. Moreover, I believe there could be the 5 periodic reopening of this case for claims of irrigable 6 acreage.

7 QUESTION: This wouldn't be the last of it,
8 either.

9 MR. BORONKAY: Indeed, it would not. I
10 foresee future generations of United States Attorneys 11 wanting to second guess their predecessors, and 12 utilizing current technology, saying, indeed, we might 13 have asked for a greater amount of irrigable acreage 14 than was claimed 20 years earlier, and I don't see any 15 place to stop that process.

16 Moreover, Article IX was proposed by Master
17 Rifkind. Master Rifkind made it clear in the record 18 again and again that he was striving for a certainty so 19 far as possible of water rights and finality of a 20 decree, and he is the master that urged this 21 terminology, and yet it would be used to undermine his 22 purpose.

23 Accordingly, we feel there was no basis for 24 reopening the litigated matter which Judge Tuttle
25 indicates was litigated, and Article IX provides no

1 basis for relitigating some 20 years later.

2           If there are no questions, I will turn to the 3 boundaries issue, if I may. With respect to the 4 boundariers determination of Master Tuttle, we 5 respectfully submit his treatment is no more defensible 6 than with respect to the reopening issue. It is to be 7 recalled that the boundary issue was fully tried in the 8 first litigation, that California protested that some of 9 the boundaries being urged by the United States were 10 wrong, that the irrigable acreage on parts of the Mojave 11 and Colorado River Indian Reservations were outside the 12 reservations, and therefore had no basis for a Winters 13 doctrine water right.

14           QUESTION: Were the boundaries in dispute, all 15 those that had federal lands on one side and tribal 16 lands on the other?

17           MR. BORONKAY: To my recollection, there are 18 federal lands abutting the Indian reservations in the 19 case of Fort Mojave and Colorado River. And so, 20 California in protesting these boundary determinations 21 of the United States raised that issue. The United 22 States joined in that issue. There was no protest to 23 its being tried, and indeed it was fully tried, and for 24 the most part, the boundaries were found to be 25 incorrect.

1 QUESTION: What did we do with that 2 determination?

3 MR. BORONKAY: This Court adopted the 4 irrigable acreage that was computed based on the 5 boundary determination, adopted the water allocated 6 dependent on the amount of acreage so computed, but 7 rejected the findings as to the boundaries as being 8 unnecessary.

9 QUESTION: Well, we set it aside. We didn't 10 adopt that --

11 MR. BORONKAY: This Court did not adopt the 12 boundary findings, though it did adopt the acreage that 13 was calculated --

14 QUESTION: Yes, yes.

15 MR. BORONKAY: -- on those boundaries.

16 QUESTION: Yes. As long as that was the 17 acreage within the boundaries as then -- as the Master 18 had determined, but we didn't say those were the 19 boundaries.

20 MR. BORONKAY: This Court did not determine 21 the boundaries --

22 QUESTION: What is II(D)(5)? What is that?

23 MR. BORONKAY: II(D)(5) provides in setting
24 forth the allocations of water for the different 25 reservations, that provision states that these

1 allocations with respect to Fort Mojave and the Colorado
2 River Indian Reservation, that the allocations being 3 adopted by this Court that Master Rifkind found were 4 subject to adjustment in the event the boundaries are 5 finally determined.

6 And so, the issue before the Court today is 7 whether the United States could properly avail itself of 8 Article II(D)(5), whether it has made a showing that the 9 boundaries of these -- the disputed boundaries of these 10 two reservations had been finally determined.

11 QUESTION: Well, the Master thought that he 12 was finally determining them, didn't he? They had been 13 litigated between adverse parties. And that wasn't good 14 enough for this Court, I take it.

15 MR. BORONKAY: Master Rifkind had attempted to 16 determine the boundaries, and it wasn't good enough for 17 this Court, and I suggest that it wasn't good enough for 18 this Court for the reason that this Court was concerned 19 with the possibility that due to the states'
20 participation, the parens patriae doctrine would bind 21 other parties that might have land claims who were not 22 parties to the suit.

23 Accordingly, this Court rejected the findings 24 as to boundaries, but the matter might have been 25 finished at that point with respect to irrigable acreage

1 of each reservation, and as to the water allocation
2 dependent on irrigable acreage. I suggest that the 3 doctrine of res judicata would have bound all the 4 parties to the irrigable acreage determination had not 5 the Court in II(D)(5) given the United States another 6 chance, so to speak, an extra chance.

7           But I do not feel this Court intended by 8 giving the United States the extra chance that it could 9 determine those boundaries conclusively on the adverse 10 party by unilateral action such as it has presented in 11 this case. In this case, it relies on secretarial 12 orders based on surveys of boundaries for approximately 13 90 percent of its boundary claim, and for approximately 14 10 percent it relies on four or five judgments, most of 15 which are stipulated judgments.

16           In neither of these situations are the parties 17 adversely affected, the State Parties, given any 18 opportunity to participate in the determination of those 19 boundaries, and yet the United States says we are bound 20 by those boundaries. Our water rights are directly 21 affected by those boundary determinations, which include
22 or exclude irrigable acreage, and yet the United States
23 comes forward and says it may unilaterally determine 24 those boundaries for the purpose of modifying water 25 allocations of these reservations which resulted from a

1 complete adjudication with all adverse parties present.

2 We submit that that wasn't the intent of this 3 Court. It would be ironic indeed if the very boundaries
4 that were tried and found to be incorrect before Special 5 Master Rifkind were to be conclusively imposed upon the 6 State Parties by virtue of having the stamp of approval
7 of the Secretary of the Interior some years later.

8 QUESTION: Have any actions been filed by the 9 states separately to contest the boundaries as 10 determined by the Secretary of Interior?

11 MR. BORONKAY: Yes. Because of the concern as 12 to Special Master Tuttle's rulings, the Metropolitan 13 Water District filed in the United States District Court 14 approximately a year and a half ago an action in both 15 declaratory relief and under the Administrative 16 Procedures Act to test the administrative orders. That 17 action is still pending. The Court having heard it on a 18 motion to dismiss for lack of standing, for sovereign 19 immunity of the United States, for statute of 20 limitations purposes.

21 The Court, however, felt that it should not 22 rule pending the determination by this Court of this 23 case.

24 QUESTION: The states don't claim any interest 25 in the land itself. You are concerned only with the

1 water rights attached to it which might change because 2 of the boundary change. Is that right?

3 MR. BORONKAY: That is correct. We are 4 directly affected by that boundary just as an adjoining 5 landowner would be directly affected by their boundary.
6 We are affected for a species of real property, water, 7 as opposed to land.

8 So, for these reasons, we feel that the 9 mischief that could result from a ruling that the 10 boundary determinations of the Secretary of the Interior
11 is very great when we consider that these reservations 12 all abutt vast federal acreage under the ruling -- under 13 the control of the Secretary of the Interior, and that 14 he again and again surveys and resurveys land, and by 15 doing so he can add a great irrigable acreage to the 16 reservations, give them an additional water right with 17 an early priority, adverse to our position, and under 18 the proposed interpretation of the United States, we 19 would have no ability to contradict those boundary 20 determinations no matter how obviously wrong they were.

21 QUESTION: We are talking about what the 22 boundaries of the reservations were when the suit was 23 started, aren't we?

24 MR. BORONKAY: We are actually --

25 QUESTION: We are talking about -- What did

1 Master Rifkind purport to find?

2 MR. BORONKAY: He rejected the --

3 QUESTION: What kind of boundaries? The 4 boundaries at the time the suit started.

5 MR. BORONKAY: He essentially found with 6 regard to the two reservations -- there are five now 7 that have boundary questions. There were only two at 8 that time.

9 QUESTION: Yes. Yes.

10 MR. BORONKAY: With respect to the Colorado
11 River Indian Reservation, he found that the intended 12 boundary, the west bank of the Colorado River, was to be 13 the boundary as the river imperceptibly moved.

14 QUESTION: Yes.

15 MR. BORONKAY: The United States took a 16 position that the boundary was a fixed boundary. Hence 17 they sought to determine meander lines, and --

18 QUESTION: Were these reservations established 19 by Act of Congress, or by executive order, or by --

20 MR. BORONKAY: Some by executive order and 21 some by Acts of Congress, and I can't tell you at this 22 moment whether the Colorado River Indian Reservation was 23 one or the other.

24 With respect to Fort Mojave --

25 QUESTION: But you are not -- the question

1 isn't whether or not that a reservation that had a --
2 whose boundaries were not in dispute during this lawsuit
3 could now be changed, and the boundaries just expanded.
4 That is not the issue.

5 MR. BORONKAY: It is not the issue in that we 6 have no land interest, and --

7 QUESTION: This is what is the accurate
8 boundary at some time in the past.

9 MR. BORONKAY: It is what the boundary was in 10 the past, but the Secretary of the Interior in actions 11 taken subsequently to the 1964 decree purports to 12 restore lands, adding irrigable acreage, which he would 13 like recognized as always having been part of the 14 reservations.

15 QUESTION: Yes.

16 MR. BORONKAY: Now, we submit that when you 17 consider all the acreage that it is possible to add to 18 the reservations and give them additional water rights 19 to the detriment of the State Parties, we feel that the 20 United States has not met the condition of Article 21 II(D)(5) that there have been a final determination of 22 the boundaries for the purpose of modifying an 23 adjudicated water right, a right of each of these 24 reservations which resulted from a full adjudication.

25 We don't feel that merely Secretarial action,

1 administrative action, valid for administrative 2 purposes, is the type of action or activity that should 3 permit the United States unilaterally to come in and 4 say, now, we can modify the water rights and you can't 5 challenge it.

6 I believe this Court intended that we either 7 have the opportunity to challenge those water -- the 8 boundaries for water adjudication purposes or, as we 9 conclude, the United States is premature. They have 10 come to the Court in advance of being able to show that 11 the boundaries have been finally determined.

12 I may illustrate that with the Fort Yuma
13 Reservation, where there have been various solicitor 14 opinions over a 40-year period recognizing particular 15 boundaries, but the day before the United States filed 16 its motion you had a new solicitor's opinion that 17 ignored the three prior opinions and added 25,000 acres
18 to that reservation, and according to the United States, 19 we have no ability to challenge that, and yet our water 20 rights are directly determined.

22 the question of the intervention of the tribes. Master 23 Tuttle allowed the five tribes to intervene despite 24 objections of the three states urging their Eleventh 25 Amendment rights. In doing so, he relied on Section --

1 on Title XXVIII of the United States Code Section 1362.

2 We submit that 1362 doesn't relate at all to a
3 waiver of sovereign immunity of the states. Master
4 Tuttle cites some three United States District Court
5 cases which I submit badly misread the decision of this 6 Court written by Mr. Justice Rehnquist in Moe versus the 7 Salish and Kootenai tribes. That case permitted the 8 Indian tribe to have the same position as the United 9 States with respect to a statute that did not permit the 10 United States District Court to issue an injunction 11 against state enforcement of sales tax on the 12 reservation.

13 The case reasoned that 1362 permitted the 14 tribes to file a suit where the United States could have 15 sued in their behalf and failed to do so. So that case 16 treated the tribes as being in the same position as the 17 United States where the tribes brought the suit instead 18 of the United States.

19 This is a far cry, I submit, from saying that 20 the tribes are to be treated the same as the United 21 States for all purposes, such as waiver of the Eleventh 22 Amendment rights of the states, and indeed, in the many 23 statements of this Court in numerous cases that in order 24 -- that Congressional intent to waive the state's 25 sovereign immunity must be direct and explicit and will

1 not be implied unless there is an overwhelming --

2 QUESTION: "Waive" isn't really quite the 3 right word, is it? It is override. "Waive" suggests a 4 voluntary --

5 MR. BORONKAY: Over -- That is correct. I
6 stand correct. Override, unless there is an 7 overwhelming implication. Well, there is neither an 8 explicit indication in 1362 of such overriding, nor is 9 there any kind of implication in my opinion.

10 For these reasons, we feel that 1362 provides 11 no basis for Master Tuttle's permitting intervention of 12 the tribes. Moreover, if it were construed to permit an 13 intervention, it would be, or the overriding of the 14 Eleventh Amendment, it would be a partial waiver or 15 partial overriding in that the section itself, 1362,
16 confers jurisdiction upon the United States District 17 court. It does not refer or purport to extend the 18 original jurisdiction of this Court.

19 And finally, as the Moe case indicates, it was 20 only where the United States could have and failed to 21 sue on behalf of the Indian tribes that the Indian 22 tribes have the right to sue. In this instance, we have 23 the United States having brought the very cause of 24 action which the tribes seek to intervene.

25 For all these reasons --

1           QUESTION: Counsel, you didn't refer to the 2 case of Maryland versus Louisiana in connection with 3 this intervention issue. Did you think that case was 4 one that has some relevance for our purposes?

5           MR. BORONKAY: I believe it is distinguishable
6 on the grounds that the states were already involved, 7 and I didn't see any practical effect to be attained by 8 the sovereign immunity question as to individuals.

9           I would like to have saved my remaining time 10 for rebuttal.

11           (General laughter.)

12           CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Hunsaker?

13           ORAL ARGUMENT OF RALPH HUNSAKER, ESQ.,

14           ON BEHALF OF THE STATE PARTIES

15           MR. HUNSAKER: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
16 please the Court, as the Court is aware, there are two 17 main categories of land which are involved in this 18 matter. The first of which Mr. Boronkay addressed is 19 boundary lands. The second of which I would call 20 consciously excluded lands, and which we have referred 21 through this matter as omitted lands.

22           The states believe that they had finally 23 litigated the matter of these excluded lands, and I
24 think a review of the record will show that Master 25 Rifkind also believed that. I will not take the time to

1 quote, but I will paraphrase some comments from the 2 United States Attorneys with respect to these lands to 3 get it in our minds.

4           Mr. Warner, the United States Attorney who 5 tried the case, indicated to Master Rifkind that the 6 decree will serve the purpose of res judicata for the 7 maximum water for the reservations, and that there would 8 be no claim for other lands on the reservations even 9 though they may be irrigable, and he felt also, as he 10 indicated, that it was his duty to prove to the full 11 extent that he could the Indian water claims, and also 12 that the maps which they put into evidence showing the 13 irrigable lands constituted the United States bill of 14 particulars with respect to the lands that they claimed 15 to be irrigable.

16           Now, we believe that this does not therefore 17 describe inadvertent mistakes as the United States
18 Attorneys now seek to label the efforts of the U.S.
19 Attorneys in the 1950's. We believe that the 1963 20 decision and '64 decree of this Court became the law of 21 the case, that the matters were fully litigated, and 22 that res judicata principles apply.

23           We had spent seven weeks approximately 24 presenting evidence on this reopening matter, and indeed 25 the very same kind of evidence that was presented in the

1 fifties with respect to the claims for the five 2 reservations were presented in the relitigation of these 3 issues. There were soil classification experts who were 4 called to classify the soils involved, engineers who 5 were called to talk about irrigation systems and methods
6 of irrigating the lands involved. There were maps
7 presented showing the irrigation -- the irrigable 8 acreages claimed in addition to those submitted in the 9 decree in 1964.

10 QUESTION: Mr. Hunsaker, to what extent does 11 the larger amount of practically irrigable acreage found 12 by the present Special Master come from examining new 13 technology?

14 MR. HUNSAKER: In that regard, there -- most 15 of the lands submitted by the tribes comes from the 16 examination of new technology, so-called sprinkler and 17 drip irrigation, and so virtually a large percent, and I
18 cannot tell you the exact percentage now, but a large 19 percent of the lands presented by the tribes themselves 20 at this time comes from those technological advances.

21 QUESTION: Well, is that land that couldn't be 22 irrigated by other traditional methods that were in 23 effect at the time of the previous decree?

24 MR. HUNSAKER: No, the testimony in the case 25 would indicate that these lands were somewhat hilly, and

1 they could have been, I guess, leveled, but the 2 economics of doing that may have been prohibitive.

3           We feel that the fact that the current United 4 States Attorneys choose to ignore the assurances of 5 their predecessors of the fifties cannot serve as a 6 basis for relitigation of the issues. In effect, they 7 are saying that our predecessors cannot bind us, and we 8 do not believe that Court decrees should be treated so 9 lightly, but in fact deserve finality.

10           We think that in Article IX, when this Court
11 indicated that it would retain jurisdiction for matters 12 which were "deemed proper," that this was not mere 13 surplusage of language, but that this Court intended 14 that in order to come back before the Court with 15 additional matters, that they must indeed be proper, and 16 we feel that in this effort, that Article IX should not 17 be construed so broadly as to make this attempt at 18 relitigation proper, and even if it were to be so 19 considered, that nevertheless the preclusive doctrines 20 about which we have briefed and talked about this 21 morning should prevent this effort.

22           QUESTION: Are you to be understood as saying 23 that Article IX was not intended to allow a sort of 24 newly discovered issue problem to be raised?

25           MR. HUNSAKER: Well, Your Honor, I suppose in

1 the proper context that a newly discovered issue could 2 be raised. However, we do not think that this is a 3 newly discovered issue, for these lands were indeed 4 considered by the United States Attorneys in the 5 fifties, and for whatever their reasons were, were 6 excluded as being irrigable at that time, and were not 7 therefore presented to the Court, but they nevertheless 8 were considered by those attorneys at that time as to 9 whether or not they should be presented as being 10 irrigable.

11 QUESTION: Why -- Assuming the tribes are 12 properly in the case, why should the tribes be bound by 13 the previous decision? Were they parties at that time?

14 MR. HUNSAKER: They were parties in that the 15 United States represented them at the hearing before the 16 Special Master Rifkind. We feel that the case of 17 Heckman versus United States clearly sets forth the 18 obligation of the United States, and it indicates that 19 the representation by the United States is a full 20 representation, and that therefore they were represented 21 in the action.

22 It is true that they were not represented by 23 independent attorneys --

24 QUESTION: Assume -- Is there some claim in 25 the case that the United States breached its trust, or

1 did not properly represent the tribes at that time?

2 MR. HUNSAKER: Your Honor, that claim was 3 discussed during the case, but we submit that the 4 Special Master did not make any finding in that regard.
5 We further submit that the record does not have any 6 testimony in it which would support such a finding, and 7 while it was mentioned, that was essentially all that 8 occurred. It was simply broached in the context of 9 being mentioned, but there was no finding or --

10 QUESTION: But the preclusion of the tribe 11 would depend upon -- in this case would depend upon the 12 adequate representation of the United States in the 13 original decree?

14 MR. HUNSAKER: That's right. It would depend 15 upon the representation of the United States at that 16 time, and again which we submit was a full 17 representation. For the --

18 QUESTION: Mr. Hunsaker, if the Court were to 19 determine that the omitted lands issue recommendation of 20 the new Special Master is erroneous, would the Court 21 then have to remand on any question of conflict of 22 interest as far as the tribes are concerned?

23 MR. HUNSAKER: I believe that there is 24 insufficient evidence. Indeed, I am not aware really of 25 any direct evidence that was presented in the trial, and

1 I suppose that the only way that that determination
2 could be made would be upon a remand, because there 3 certainly is no finding in this record at this time by 4 Special Master Tuttle to that effect.

5 QUESTION: The Special Master really -- he 6 wouldn't have gone to the questions of law of the case 7 unless he had felt the Indians would be bound under some 8 principles analogous to res judicata.

9 MR. HUNSAKER: I think that's correct, Your 10 Honor. Indeed, Master Tuttle cites, we submit, in his 11 discussions about whether or not Article IX was intended 12 to preclude the representation of evidence, he cites 13 only one brief, and that is the Imperial Irrigation 14 District, versus all of the evidence that Master Rifkind 15 sought from in the way of admissions from the United 16 States Attorneys and put on the record himself that he 17 intended the litigation of the Indian issues to be 18 final.

19 And we feel that it is overwhelming in the 20 history of the transcript of these proceedings in the 21 1950's that it was intended to be and should be final.
22 There has been no fraud alleged, which is one of the 23 bases that this Court talked about in the Sea Land 24 Services, Inc., versus Gaudet opinion as a -- serving as 25 a basis to set aside a judgment or decree of the Court,

1 and no such allegations were made, and indeed no such 2 evidence was presented.

3           We do not feel that the matter of reliance
4 upon the decree is a necessary element of the preclusive
5 doctrines about which we talked. Nevertheless, evidence 6 was presented in the context of the trial held below, 7 and in the context of the equities involved to show that 8 there was major reliance upon the decree which had been 9 rendered by this Court in 1963.

10           Indeed, Arizona came to this Court with the 11 original action for the very purpose of finally and 12 fully establishing its right to this water. They had 13 been before the Congress many occasions seeking to 14 obtain authorization for the Central Arizona Project, 15 and had met with resistance, among the claims being that 16 they did not have a final adjudicated right to the water 17 involved.

18           And so, that was the very purpose in coming to 19 the Court with the original action, to establish that.
20 Since that time, they have obtained authorization
21 through the Congress for the Central Arizona Project.
22 They have assessed taxes against their citizens in three 23 of the counties to assure repayment of the reimbursible 24 features of the project. They have gone before the 25 Congress and talking about sizing of the canal to

1 deliver the water, and reliance upon the fact that there 2 would be received the amount of water that was 3 determined to be its remaining entitlement in this 4 decision.

5           And indeed the United States supported it
6 before the Congress, indicating that it had a firm 7 supply to its remaining entitlement, and therefore it
8 could invoke the reclamation laws of the United States
9 for purposes of building this project.

10           We submit to the Court that the preclusion 11 doctrines to apply to this situation, and that it should 12 affirm the 1964 decree as written, and return the 13 parties to their stated reliance upon that decree.

14           On the other hand, if Article IX is broad 15 enough to permit the reopening of the nature that 16 occurred before Master Tuttle, then we submit that it is 17 likewise broad enough to reopen for all purposes. And 18 some of those purposes that were presented to Master 19 Tuttle and rejected by him as not appropriate are the 20 fact that this Court in the interim since 1964 decided 21 two very important cases that defined further the 22 reserved water rights doctrine, those cases being United 23 States versus New Mexico and the State of Washington
24 versus the Washington State Commercial Passenger Vessels
25 Fishing Association.

1           The definitions and guidelines which were 2 rendered by this Court in those two decisions, we 3 submit, are that the reservation doctrine only reserves
4 that amount of water which is for the primary purposes 5 for which the reservation was created, and not for any 6 secondary purposes which it may serve, and further, that 7 though there may be a maximum reserve -- reserved water, 8 that the -- that doesn't necessarily mean that the 9 particular people involved will receive that full 10 amount, but they will receive the amount of that scarce 11 natural resource that is necessary to provide them with 12 a moderate living.

13           These decisions came down in '78 and '79 14 respectively. We submitted to Master Tuttle the 15 question on the basis that if he construed Article IX
16 broadly enough to permit a reopening, then it, too, 17 should be construed broadly enough to permit a reopening 18 to look at these issues and see whether or not there 19 should be a revision of the decree of 1964 based upon 20 these new guidelines that have been presented by this 21 Court in these two decisions. We submit that those 22 issues should have been heard by Master Tuttle and were 23 not.

24           The technology problem is also --

25           QUESTION: You say should have been. To what

1 extent were those other matters pressed on the Special 2 Master?

3 MR. HUNSAKER: Your Honor, we -- Mr. Chief
4 Justice, we presented motions to the Master at a 5 pretrial hearing that we be allowed to hear these issues
6 before him. These motions were presented in writing, 7 and the Master overruled our motions. Indeed, we were 8 in the process of discovery with respect to the moderate 9 living standard that would be applied. At the time we 10 had arranged to go to the various Indian reservations to 11 visit with them, and the Bureau of Indian Affairs to 12 obtain records with respect to the leasing of lands and 13 this kind of evidence, and of course that came to a halt 14 when our motions were denied.

15 There is also a very practical problem that 16 Arizona some day must face, and that is that there is so 17 much Indian land in the state that if the practicable 18 irrigable acreage standard is to be applied throughout 19 the state, then the existing water supply could only 20 supply one-third of the Indian reservation lands, and 21 none of the non-Indian lands, and we feel that this 22 issue, too, could be visited if the '64 decree is 23 construed broadly enough to allow reopenings of the type 24 that is sought for here.

25 QUESTION: Have water rights been generally

1 settled? Have reserved rights been settled with respect 2 to all the reservations?

3 MR. HUNSAKER: Mr. Justice White, they have 4 not. There is --

5 QUESTION: Is there some general adjudication
6 in progress?

7 MR. HUNSAKER: There is a general adjudication 8 on some of the reservations that is in process, not on 9 all. At this time, the Ninth Circuit has ruled that the 10 Arizona enabling act precluded it from adjudicating 11 Indian water rights, and my understanding is that this 12 Court has accepted certiorari with respect to that 13 issue. That is now before this Court from the Ninth 14 Circuit.

15 QUESTION: Well, were they -- were the 16 adjudications going on in -- the general adjudications 17 going on in the state courts?

18 MR. HUNSAKER: Yes, Your Honor.

19 QUESTION: What has the Ninth Circuit decision 20 got to do with that?

21 MR. HUNSAKER: Well, their -- Okay. I should 22 explain that, Mr. Justice White. They have -- There are 23 cases going on in the state courts, and there were cases 24 going on in the federal courts. The district courts in 25 the state of Arizona ruled that under the McCarren Act

1 it was proper that the state courts adjudicate these 2 issues, and so they referred the federal court 3 proceedings to the state courts.

4           The United States and the Indian tribes there
5 involved appealed those decisions to the Ninth Circuit, 6 and the Ninth Circuit has now held that Arizona may not 7 adjudicate, not because of the McCarren Act or any of 8 its holdings, but because of the Constitution, which has 9 some language in it with respect to divesting Arizona of 10 jurisdiction over Indian lands.

11           QUESTION: You mean the order of reference is 12 the subject of the appeal?

13           MR. HUNSAKER: I am sorry. I missed your 14 question.

15           QUESTION: The referring by the Federal 16 District Court to the state courts, is that being 17 challenged in the Ninth Circuit?

18           MR. HUNSAKER: Yes, Your Honor, and in 19 addition to that, the question of the Constitution has 20 been presented.

21           QUESTION: Well, whatever the standard was in 22 this -- in this case, it wouldn't necessarily prevent a 23 different standard being applied in other proceedings 24 with different parties, would it?

25           MR. HUNSAKER: Mr. Justice White, we have --

1                   QUESTION: Especially if the different 2 standard you are insisting upon originated in this 3 Court.

4                   MR. HUNSAKER: We have great concerns that the 5 state courts or the Federal District Court would feel 6 bound by the standard set forth by this Court because it 7 was instigated by the state courts.

8                   QUESTION: Well, which standard? Which 9 standard? The latest standard.

10                  MR. HUNSAKER: Well, that's the thing that we 11 feel there is some uncertainty about. We feel that the 12 moderate living standard is a further definition, and 13 that that should be applied. We would, of course, on 14 behalf of the state urge that application before any 15 state court or district court in the federal courts.
16 However, we are not certain that this would be applied, 17 but it does present us with a dilemma and a problem, and 18 we feel again that if Article IX permits the reopening 19 of the type here, then that would permit a reopening for 20 purposes of looking at whether or not the standard 21 should be applied in a state where it obviously cannot 22 work.

23                  In the remaining time available to me, I would 24 like to just for a moment approach the question of some 25 factual exceptions that we made. I will not go into

1 detail on these, because time does not permit, and 2 further, I think the Court will see what we have 3 asserted in the briefs, but I would like to simply say 4 that some of the legal questions with respect to the 5 factual issues are as follows, and some of the factual 6 questions.

7           This Court may not wish to reweigh all of the 8 evidence from this lengthy trial, but we did except to 9 some of the findings of Special Master Tuttle, and as to 10 the United States claims, the errors relate to the lands 11 which even the United States experts projected to be 12 only marginally profitable, but they based such 13 projections on yields and production costs and power 14 rates that we feel are not properly established in the 15 evidence and resulted in a shifting of the burden of 16 proof to the states rather than the Master requiring the 17 burden of proof to be carried by the United States.

18           As to the Indian tribe claims, the errors, we 19 submit, relate to lands which the Master found 20 profitable, and thus deserving of a permanent water 21 right based only on the projection of what we have 22 termed exotic crops, crops without a commercial history, 23 unproven in the area. In fact, one of the crops 24 happened to be grapes, and there have been some attempts 25 at grape growing in the Lower Colorado River Basin, and

1 they did not last, and have not carried on to be -- have 2 not proven to be profitable.

3 QUESTION: Which reservation was it proposed 4 to grow grapes on? Or which climatic zone of the --

5 MR. HUNSAKER: Well, I believe, Mr. Justice
6 Rehnquist, that it is proposed essentially now on all 7 reservations, because of the problem of drip and 8 sprinkler irrigation which I talked about, but there was 9 considerable evidence in particular about that on the 10 Fort Yuma Reservation.

11 QUESTION: That would be right by Yuma?

12 MR. HUNSAKER: Yes, that is correct. And that 13 is the area where there was some evidence with respect 14 to some attempts at grape growing that did not last on 15 the Monsanto Ranch near that area.

16 But the Master with respect to crop prices 17 used a method that was not employed by any of the 18 experts in the case, including those hired by the Indian 19 tribes, and also did not take into account the law of 20 supply and demand as to what size market must be looked 21 at with respect to whether or not a new grape acreage 22 could be brought into production and not affect the 23 market prices to be received.

24 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you.

25 Mr. Aschenbrenner?

1           ORAL ARGUMENT OF LAWRENCE A. ASCHENBRENNER, ESQ.,
2                                           ON BEHALF OF THE INDIAN TRIBES

3           MR. ASCHENBRENNER: Mr. Chief Justice, and may 4 it please the Court, the tribes relied on the 5 government's brief on the boundary dispute issue, and so 6 I intend to defer that question to Mr. Claiborne, and 7 proceed with the question of the omitted lands and the 8 other issues raised by counsel for the states.

9           The states say that the 1964 decree can't be 10 reopened because, one, res judicata bars it, two, 11 Article IX does not authorize it, and three, the law of 12 the case precludes it. We say they are mistaken on all 13 three grounds.

14           First, res judicata only applies to a 15 subsequent case between the same parties in the same 16 cause of action, a different case. This is the same 17 case. Second, Article IX by its express terms certainly 18 authorizes any change whatsoever. And third, we say the 19 law of the case does not bar reopening where there has 20 been a gross error which the states admit, where this 21 error has caused manifest injustice to one of the 22 parties, and there has been no significant showing of 23 detrimental reliance upon the other party.

24           QUESTION: To what extent do you mean that the 25 states admit the so-called gross error to which you

1 refer?

2 MR. ASCHENBRENNER: Mr. Justice Rehnquist, I
3 say that because they admitted that 80 percent of the 4 land claimed by the United States is practicably 5 irrigable today and 50 percent of the combined claims of 6 the tribes in the United States are irrigable today, and 7 that is what their experts admitted in trial. Now, in 8 their briefs and in this oral argument, they are 9 contending that a major portion of that land would not 10 have been irrigable at the original trial, but it is 11 today, but the fact is, and the record shows, that the 12 only change in technology that appears in the record 13 concerns drip irrigation, and drip irrigation the 14 states' experts contended could be substituted and 15 replaced with, if it didn't work properly, sprinkler 16 irrigation.

17 Well, sprinkler irrigation was available
18 during the original trial. The only difference in 19 standard between the original trial and the present
20 trial was the use of the Soil Conservation Service 21 standards with respect to sandy lands. That is only 22 1,750 acres.

23 QUESTION: What you are arguing is just that 24 the government was greedy enough the first time around.

25 MR. ASCHENBRENNER: No, Your Honor, I wouldn't

1 put it that way, and Special Master Tuttle didn't put it 2 that way.

3 QUESTION: No. Well, that is why we are 4 reviewing his findings.

5 MR. ASCHENBRENNER: All that the tribes are 6 asking for is to apply the same standard that was 7 applied in the original case, practicably irrigable 8 acres standard to determine what water should be 9 allocated.

10 QUESTION: Yes, but I asked you about what 11 sort of a gross error it was that you claimed should 12 allow this matter to be reopened after all these years.
13 And it boils down to just the fact that by hindsight, 14 the government should have been more aggressive or more 15 assertive, or whatever you want to say, that maybe they 16 could have gotten more if they had asked for it, but 17 that is not even a doctrine for reopening under a law of 18 the case, as I understand it.

19 MR. ASCHENBRENNER: Your Honor, we are not 20 merely saying that hindsight, that now because of 21 hindsight it is apparent they made a mistake. It is 22 apparent from the prior record before Judge Rifkind that 23 the methodology was totally flawed.

24 QUESTION: Do you think in any other kind of a 25 case, say, where there wasn't a Special Master, but just

1 litigation between ordinary private parties, one party 2 could come in 15 years later simply because it was an 3 equitable decree and there had been a provision to allow 4 reopening and saying under law of the case I now find 5 that I want to reargue things that were settled 15 years 6 ago?

7           MR. ASCHENBRENNER: Not in the usual case that 8 was 15 years old, Your Honor. What we have to look at 9 is the timing of the tribe's motion in perspective of 10 this entire case, and we have to look to see what has 11 happened to change the situation between 1964 and 12 today. I assume that if the tribes have discovered the 13 error, and the United States had, and made the motion in 14 1965, nobody would claim that this grievous error 15 shouldn't have been corrected. But so what has 16 materially happened in the --

17           QUESTION: Why do you say that? I mean, if 18 the decree had become final and been entered, I suppose 19 anyone whose standing under the decree when entered 20 would object to a reopening, whether in '65 or now.
21 Their claims might have been better the more time had 22 elapsed.

23           MR. ASCHENBRENNER: Well, I suppose one thing 24 it gets back to, Your Honor, is Article IX, which 25 expressly provides for reopening. Contrary to the

1 state's position that it only applies to equitable 2 apportionment cases, this provision was submitted by the 3 Imperial Irrigation District for the express purpose of 4 avoiding a claim of res judicata against the United 5 States, and to correct any error that the United States
6 might suggest to the Court had occurred --

7 QUESTION: But --

8 MR. ASCHENBRENNER: Pardon me.

9 QUESTION: Go ahead.

10 MR. ASCHENBRENNER: And they submitted this,
11 Your Honor, on January 11th, 1963, long after the issue 12 of equitable apportionment went out of the case. And 13 all the parties agreed to it.

14 QUESTION: Do you contend that Article IX
15 would allow any party to reopen any question if they 16 found that they simply hadn't made as strong claims as 17 they now thought they should have?

18 MR. ASCHENBRENNER: No, Your Honor.

19 QUESTION: Then how do you distinguish your 20 claim from that of, say, the states, who might feel, as 21 they apparently do, that had they asked for more, asked 22 for it in a different way in '63, they would have gotten 23 it?

24 MR. ASCHENBRENNER: You can only justify 25 reopening under the law of the case doctrine, which is

1 this case -- we are trying to reopen the same case -- if 2 you can find a gross error, where the other party had 3 not changed his position and relied to his detriment,
4 and as I will point out in a minute, none of the three 5 parties which claimed to show reliance demonstrated it 6 in the record.

7 QUESTION: But of course you don't get to the 8 reliance unless you show the sort of -- what you refer 9 to as a gross error that would justify the evaluation of 10 reliance.

11 MR. ASCHENBRENNER: Right, Your Honor. Well, 12 the gross error -- take the Chemehuevi tribe, for 13 example. The government only asserted and was awarded a 14 little fraction better than one-half of the irrigable 15 acreage which Judge Tuttle found to be practically 16 irrigable lands.

17 QUESTION: All other principals are bound by 18 the acts of their attorneys. Why shouldn't the Indian 19 tribes be?

20 MR. ASCHENBRENNER: Well, as Judge Tuttle
21 pointed out, the Indians weren't even there by their own 22 attorney.

23 QUESTION: Well, but, so you don't think --

24 MR. ASCHENBRENNER: They were there by the 25 government.

1           QUESTION: Yes, but certainly under Heckman
2 they are bound.

3           MR. ASCHENBRENNER: They are -- Well, now, 4 Heckman diin't discuss the issue of whether or --

5           QUESTION: Do you assert they are not bound?

6           MR. ASCHENBRENNER: I -- Yes, we allege 7 inadequate representation, and we stick by that. We --

8           QUESTION: But the Special Master didn't find 9 in your favor on that, did he?

10          MR. ASCHENBRENNER: No, but he didn't find 11 against us. In Footnote 71 of his report, he expressly 12 found it unnecessary to determine whether there was a 13 conflict or whether the conflict of interest prevented 14 the tribes from being bound, citing Hansberry versus 15 Lee, because he found we had a right to reopen under 16 Article IX, so he did not reach the issue of inadequacy 17 of representation.

18          And under Article IX, we are not compelled to 19 show inadequacy of representation under due process
20 grounds. We merely have to show, as Judge Tuttle found, 21 a grievous error, lack of detrimental reliance.

22          QUESTION: Your definition of any grievous
23 error, I suppose, is any claim that might have been made 24 but wasn't, that you could open up any portion of the 25 decree under that standard.

1                   MR. ASCHENBRENNER: No, I would say you
2 couldn't, Your Honor. As Judge Tuttle said, you only 3 reopen the decree where there is good cause therefore.
4 There is no good cause to change the practicably
5 irrigable acreage standard. The same policy reasons 6 which caused Judge Rifkind to say that we would 7 determine the future needs of the tribes measured by 8 irrigable acres exists today, because it provides the 9 certainty which other water users needed, and you 10 couldn't estimate how much the Indian population would 11 increase. Policy reasons are the same. And the same 12 applies to the other issues. If there is a good reason 13 to change, if it wouldn't hurt the other party, if it 14 would do justice under the law of the case, you could do 15 it.

16                   What the -- I think the states are arguing is 17 that -- or I should say what they are doing, I believe, 18 is confusing the grounds for reopening with the standard 19 to be used once reopened, it is determined that the 20 decree should be opened. Justice -- Judge Tuttle found, 21 and we agree that the mere fact there has been change in 22 technology is no ground to reopen the decree. The mere 23 fact that if we came into Court today and more acreage 24 would be irrigable because of advanced technology is not 25 a ground to reopen. It is only if we did not get a fair

1 hearing at that time under those standards that were 2 applied, but Judge Tuttle found that was ground for 3 reopening.

4           But he said, now, having found grounds for 5 reopening, he said, then it only makes sense to apply 6 today's technology, because it would just complicate the 7 case to go back and look at the technology in 1956 to 8 '58. Furthermore, the states never asked him to do so.
9 The states put on no evidence as to the difference in 10 technology between '60, 1960 and 1980, and they didn't 11 ask the Master to make any findings about it, and they 12 took no exceptions to it.

13           That issue should be out of the case. The 14 only thing the states did was ask the Master to 15 determine the technology at the time the reservations 16 were created. That's way back in 1865 or 1870. The 17 Master did reject that out of hand, but they never 18 requested him to take into account the difference in 19 technology between 1960 and 1980.

20           The states suggest that there would be no 21 injustice to the tribes because this Court approved of 22 the Special Master's holding, Special Master Rifkind's 23 holding that the acreage he found was reasonable. But 24 what this Court held was that "The various acreages of 25 irrigable land which the Master found to be on the

1 different reservations we find to be reasonable." Now, 2 the states suggest that what he is talking about is a 3 determination that the number of acres found was 4 reasonable.

5           We suggest what the Court -- the Court had 6 just previously said two sentences above, that the 7 tribes were entitled to all the practicably irrigable 8 acres on the reservation, and therefore that couldn't be 9 what it intended, it must have intended merely to 10 approve of the determination of irrigability of the 11 acres that the Special Master awarded.

12           With respect to the timing of our motion and 13 the state's claimed reliance, our motions were filed in 14 1977 and '78, 13 and 14 years after the decree, before 15 there was any substantial certainty with respect to the 16 present perfected rights. Remember, the tribes were 17 awarded 905,000 acre feet in the original case, less 18 than one-seventh of the 7,500,000 acres awarded to the 19 Lower Basin. But it wasn't until 1979 that over 20 three-quarters of the present perfected rights were 21 determined.

22           Now, present perfected rights have priority
23 over all other rights, including the Central Arizona
24 Project and the Metropolitan Water District, yet it 25 wasn't until after the tribes' motions were filed that

1 over three-quarters of the rights, of the present
2 perfected rights were determined. How, therefore, could 3 Central Arizona Project and MWD find -- place great 4 reliance on the Indian allocation of '64?

5           Second, there was huge uncertainty with 6 respect to the amount of water in the Colorado River.
7 Even today the state of Arizona claims that there is an 8 assured supply of water of 550,000 acres. They claim 9 that there was 356,000 when they tried to get the 10 Central Arizona Project going. In other words, Arizona
11 told the Congress when they got the Central Arizona 12 Project authorized that there was far less water than 13 they now feel is available today. This is largely due 14 to the fact that the Upper Basin states have not used 15 the water as fast as was anticipated.

16           Third, the states knew that the boundary
17 disputes had not been determined, and that the tribes, 18 if they won the boundary disputes, would be entitled to 19 more water, so there was uncertainty with respect to 20 even the additional Indian claims.

21           The Metropolitan Water District claims 22 reliance, arguing that after the '64 decree, they went 23 to their own water project and asked for additional 24 water to take the place of the water they lost to 25 Arizona, but they did not ask for any additional water

1 for the water they lost to the Indians. They lost
2 550,000 acres feet to Arizona, and they lost 55,000 acre
3 feet to the Indians, but they didn't ask their own 4 California Water Project for that -- to make up for the 5 55,000.

6 Now, today, in this case we are only asking
7 for 16,000 additional acre feet for the Indians, or less
8 than one-third of the 55,000. Metropolitan Water
9 District's excuse for not asking for the original 55,000 10 was that it was such a relatively minor amount, it was 11 unnecessary. Well, we suggest if they didn't bother to 12 go after 55,000 acres and supplement it, is it 13 reasonable to believe that they would think 16,000 was 14 such an enormous amount that it would change their 15 position?

16 Furthermore, the Metropolitan Water District
17 right now is using 1.3 million acre feet. The 16,000
18 acre feet we are claiming is just a fraction more than 1 19 percent of their water, well within the range of 20 estimating accuracy, the closest to which they claim 21 they can estimate in the river is 10 percent.

22 Finally, what the states are really 23 complaining about is injury or impact rather than 24 detrimental reliance, but even the injury they claim is 25 not to the extent to which it is claimed. Take Arizona,

1 for example. The testimony of Wes Stryner, the director
2 of the Land and Water Resources Department of the State 3 of Arizona, said that the per capita use of water in 4 Phoenix is over twice what it is in the city of Tucson, 5 and the reason it is over twice as much is because of 6 the watering of lawns, trees, and ornamental shrubs, and 7 that if the people in Phoenix would reduce their water
8 rate to be equivalent to Tucson, there would be more 9 than enough water to satisfy all the additional land 10 claims.

11           So, what does it come down to? Do the Indians 12 get the water for agriculture on the reservation, or do 13 the people of Phoenix get it for ornamental shrubs, if 14 you want to talk about equities.

15           Alternative intervention, for just a minute.
16 I think that Maryland versus Louisiana is directly on 17 point. I can't see any difference. In that case, 17
18 pipeline companies intervened in the case of 30 cases -- 19 30 states against another state and the United States 20 against another state, the exact fact situation we've 21 got here, except it's more stay.

22           QUESTION: You don't have to rely, then, on 23 1362.

24           MR. ASCHENBRENNER: No, Your Honor.

25           If there are no questions, I am going to say

1 thank you, Your Honor.

2 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well.

3 Mr. Claiborne?

4 ORAL ARGUMENT OF LOUIS F. CLAIBORNE, ESQ.,

5 ON BEHALF OF THE UNITED STATES

6 MR. CLAIBORNE: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
7 please the Court, before turning to the boundary lines, 8 it might be useful to say one or two words in addition 9 to what has been said by Mr. Aschenbrenner about the 10 omitted lands question.

11 I would ask the Court to recognize that 12 Article IX of the decree in this case is specific in 13 allowing amendment and modification. The word 14 "modification" when the provision was referred to was 15 omitted by the State Parties. It is that word on which 16 we rely.

17 Now, that term, "modification," is not the 18 common standard provision in the original decrees of 19 this Court. It is, on the contrary, a special form of 20 words which is common to water decrees, including the 21 water decrees of this Court in interstate cases, such as 22 Wisconsin versus Illinois and New Jersey versus New 23 York, cited by the Special Master.

24 In the ordinary original case in which this 25 Court retains jurisdiction, such as the off-shore cases,

1 beginning with the Louisiana and Texas cases, the order
2 retaining jurisdiction is far more restrictive. In 3 those cases, for instance, it read, "Jurisdiction is 4 reserved by this Court to enter such further orders and 5 to issue such further writs as may from time to time be 6 deemed advisable or necessary to give full force and 7 effect to this decree," not to bury this decree, not to 8 modify this decree.

9 QUESTION: Do you think, Mr. Claiborne, that 10 that language would normally be used to aid the parties 11 in the event of some substantial change in the supply of 12 water in the river, or something of that kind?

13 MR. CLAIBORNE: Justice O'Connor, that --

14 QUESTION: Rather than to reopen it for issues 15 which were litigated by the parties at the time of the 16 original decree?

17 MR. CLAIBORNE: Justice O'Connor, certainly 18 such provisions do typically address the question of 19 changed circumstances, and for that reason they are 20 appropriate in order decrees where predictability is not 21 always as certain as it might be, but it also authorizes 22 here the correction we suggest of mistakes and 23 omissions, at least if they can be shown to be of 24 sufficient magnitude to justify the exercise of the 25 Court's discretion.

1           For the moment, I am only speaking of the 2 power which the Court retained to reopen. Whether the 3 Court as a matter of discretion ought to exercise that 4 power is a different question.

5           I want to say one more thing about Article 6 IX. It was not an inadvertent provision that was 7 slipped in at the last moment without anyone's 8 noticing. It was a provision written by the Special 9 Master himself in his draft decree in May of 1960, this 10 same Special Master who had held the United States to 11 making all its claims, and who had indicated a 12 reluctance to be ready to reopen, but perhaps not too 13 surprisingly, although the Special Master pushed the 14 government attorneys as far as he could to making their 15 full claim, warned them that reopening was a closed 16 door; nevertheless, when coming to writing his decree, 17 perhaps thought to himself, I must, notwithstanding 18 having pressed the government to making its full claim, 19 allow for the event that I or they had made an error 20 which justice requires to be corrected at some later 21 date.

22           It will, of course, be in the lap of the Court 23 to determine whether that application will fail or not, 24 but I ought not wholly close the door.

25           That provision written by the Special Master

1 in May of 1960, circulated to the parties. Briefs were 2 written commenting upon the decree, commenting upon the 3 report. Oral hearings were held in New York for three 4 days before the Special Master, before he finalized his 5 report and recommended decrees. In none of those 6 proceedings was any suggestion made that Article IX 7 ought to be narrowed, specifically, narrowed so as to 8 prevent a reopening of the Indian allocations. No word 9 of that in any of these briefs, in any of these 10 hearings.

11           The matter this Master adhered to his 12 recommended decree in this respect. Article IX remained 13 unchanged, and that report was submitted to this Court.
14 This Court received the report in December of 1960, and 15 did not decide the case until June of 1963. In the 16 interval, there were hundreds of pages of briefs. There 17 were two lengthy oral arguments in this Court, and 18 during all of that time, no party suggested that Article 19 IX had been drawn too widely, too broadly.

20           On the contrary, the only party to speak to 21 Article IX was the Imperial Irrigation District, 22 insisting upon it as the way of preventing any claim of 23 res judicata should a mistake have occurred and 24 correction be appropriate.

25           At all events, the Court issued its opinion in

1 June of 1963, and then allowed the parties further time 2 in which to prepare a decree modifying that which the 3 Master had suggested in light of the Court's opinion.
4 That, of course, resulted in further briefing. One of 5 the provisions that was submitted to this Court as an 6 agreed provision of the decree was Article IX, and as I
7 say, no one during this further period once again
8 suggested any narrowing of that provision.

9 In that light, it seems to us we are entitled 10 to read Article IX to mean what it says, and it does say 11 that a modification may be made. Now, we don't suggest 12 that the Court was inviting the parties to rehear the 13 legal principles on which the case had been decided. We 14 do suggest that the Court indicated its willingness to 15 entertain an application for a factual error that had 16 been made in the case.

17 Let me say one other thing about the omitted 18 lands claim. The fear has been expressed that if --

19 QUESTION: Mr. Claiborne, suppose the case, 20 the issue is reopened, as you suggest it should be, and 21 suppose that there is a later case that indicates rather 22 clearly that the standard used by the Court and by the 23 Special Master in this '64 decree has now been changed, 24 or that it should no longer be applied. Why wouldn't 25 you say that the new legal standard would apply? I am

1 not saying there is one, but suppose there was?

2 MR. CLAIBORNE: Justice White, I make two 3 answers, or perhaps three. First, the Court has 4 retained power to do precisely as suggested. It would 5 be most unusual for the Court to invite a -- what is in 6 effect a rehearing of the legal standard on which the 7 Court decided the case in the first instance.

8 QUESTION: Any stranger than inviting 9 relitigation of the very issue that was litigated in the 10 first place?

11 MR. CLAIBORNE: I think so, Justice White.

12 QUESTION: Well, you must. That's right.

13 MR. CLAIBORNE: I should have said
14 parenthetically that I do not concede that there is 15 presently from this Court any different standard with 16 respect to the measurement of water properly allocated 17 to Indian reservations. On the contrary, as late as 18 1979, this Court in effect in its decree reaffirmed the 19 continuing application of the practically irrigable
20 standard. The Court entered a decree which specified 21 water rights on that basis, and it expressly provided 22 that with respect to any boundaries that were finally 23 determined, allocations of water should be based on 24 precisely the same formula.

25 Therefore, the Court itself has reaffirmed the 1 application of that standard in this case as recently as 2 three years ago.

3           Let me say with respect to the fear that if 4 the case is reopened now for this purpose, other
5 applications may be made to the Court at some future
6 date with respect to other matters or indeed on behalf 7 of the tribes for still more water, with respect to the 8 last, I would say that for our part we would not have 9 the courage to come before the Court to apply again. At 10 that time, latches reliance would indeed be an effective 11 bar against our application, but finally, the Court is 12 free, and we invite it to do so, to specify in its 13 decree at the end of this case a different Article IX, a 14 modification of Article IX which closes the door.

15           The Court is perfectly free to say, we will no 16 longer entertain a modification after this case is 17 finally closed.

18           QUESTION: I suppose we are equally free to 19 construe the existing Article IX to prevent the sort of 20 reopening which the government has tried to make here.

21           MR. CLAIBORNE: Justice Rehnquist, I cannot 22 say the Court is not free. I must say that to so 23 construe Article IX would be to strain its words.

24           QUESTION: Certainly not to strain the 25 doctrine of law of the case.

1           MR. CLAIBORNE: If I may turn to the question
2 of boundaries, I should say first that the boundary 3 adjustments in this case would entitle the tribes with 4 respect to the acreage which had been restored to their 5 reservations to a total of about 127,000 acre feet of 6 diversions from the --

7           QUESTION: Why do you call it restored? Do 8 you say that it was perfectly clear at the time the 9 Special Master determined boundaries that he correctly 10 determined them, but that the United States has now just 11 enlarged the boundaries, or what?

12          MR. CLAIBORNE: Mr. Justice White, no. We say 13 that the Secretary and some Supreme Court judgments have 14 determined what the original boundaries were.

15          QUESTION: Well, that isn't restoring.

16          MR. CLAIBORNE: Restoring in the factual sense 17 that these areas had been deprived of reservation status 18 in the interim, and now they have been restored to their 19 reservation status --

20          QUESTION: Well, how were they -- how were 21 they deprived of reservation status in the interim?

22          MR. CLAIBORNE: Most importantly, by being 23 deprived of allocation of water.

24          QUESTION: Well, had the Department of 25 Interior treated these lands as being outside the

1 reservation?

2 MR. CLAIBORNE: The Department of the Interior
3 had been ambiguous about the status of these boundary 4 lands, and so Master Rifkind found. Indeed, his 5 disallowance of the boundary claims which were advanced 6 by the lawyers in litigation on behalf of the Department 7 of Justice was in part premised on the fact that the 8 Interior Department had been ambivalent in its 9 characterization of the contested lands, and he found no
10 final or formal or clear ruling from the Land Department 11 as to these areas being included within the reservation, 12 and accordingly, thought himself free to decide the 13 matter for himself.

14 QUESTION: Well, if there was ambivalence, the 15 latest position of the Interior Department doesn't 16 remove it. It just -- it just exacerbates it, doesn't 17 it?

18 MR. CLAIBORNE: Justice White, no, the --

19 QUESTION: Well, it is just the only -- the 20 latest step. It is an ambivalence position.

21 MR. CLAIBORNE: The problem before was that 22 there were solicitor's opinions looking one way, and 23 there were other administrative actions looking the 24 other way. This Court from its study of 25 disestablishment cases is familiar enough with the

1 ambiguities that can arise from maps which show one 2 thing and rulings which show another, and sometimes 3 inconsistent rulings.

4 Now, at the highest level, the Department of 5 the Interior, after full consideration, has formally,
6 finally, and unambiguously determined what the true
7 boundaries of each of these reservations is. Nothing 8 ambivalent about the present status.

9 QUESTION: Well, unless it changes its mind in 10 the next Administration.

11 MR. CLAIBORNE: We have no reason to 12 anticipate such a change, Justice White.

13 QUESTION: Mr. Claiborne, has it been finally 14 resolved as to the Fort Mojave Reservation as well?

15 MR. CLAIBORNE: It has, Justice O'Connor.

16 Now, no one questions that this function of 17 determining, of defining the boundaries of an Indian 18 Reservation is one peculiarly left to the Department of 19 the Interior, that department which has a special 20 responsibility with respect to the public lands of the 21 United States, and also a special responsibility with 22 respect to Indian affairs.

23 At least those formal administratively final 24 decisions of the Department of the Interior are entitled 25 to a presumption of correctness, and they must be given

1 effect until and unless the court with jurisdiction sets 2 them aside, or until and unless they are 3 administratively set aside, which is an occurrence not 4 to be anticipated.

5           For all other purposes, these boundaries have 6 been treated as final and fixed.

7           QUESTION: Mr. Claiborne, can I just interrupt 8 on this? You say they are presumptively correct, but as 9 I understand your opponents, they argue they had no 10 opportunity -- they are treated as though they were 11 conclusively correct.

12           MR. CLAIBORNE: Justice Stevens, I say at 13 least they are presumptively correct.

14           QUESTION: But that doesn't win the case for 15 you. Isn't it your position they are conclusively 16 correct for the purpose of the case?

17           MR. CLAIBORNE: We don't have to, Justice
18 Stevens, I think, take the position that they are not 19 subject to challenge in the judicial proceeding 20 elsewhere.

21           QUESTION: But they are not subject to 22 challenge --

23           MR. CLAIBORNE: For the time being, they are 24 presumptively correct and must be given effect for that 25 because administrative decisions in the absence of a

1 vacation by a court are entitled to --

2 QUESTION: But in this proceeding, for the 3 purposes of determining the respective water rights, are 4 they not immune from challenge under the Master's 5 decree, and your opponents were not given an opportunity 6 to challenge? Or do I misread the report?

7 MR. CLAIBORNE: We do say, Justice Stevens, 8 that in this proceeding, in this Court, in light of the 9 Court's own ruling in 1973, there is no occasion to 10 review these decisions. That does not mean that the 11 State Parties will in other forums be deprived of an 12 opportunity to challenge.

13 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Claiborne, what is your 14 -- the United States' position in these other forums?
15 Are you taking the position that the Secretary's 16 proceedings are open to review, or are you moving to 17 dismiss for want of jurisdiction, or on sovereign 18 immunity grounds?

19 MR. CLAIBORNE: Justice White, as was 20 correctly stated, I think, by Mr. Boronkay, the United 21 States has in the proceeding filed in the Southern 22 District of California submitted a motion to dismiss 23 alleging --

24 QUESTION: So you are saying -- your position
25 is that these determinations are not subject to review

1 anywhere, here or in another forum.

2 MR. CLAIBORNE: I hope I do not have to -- I
3 disown the motion to dismiss which has been filed by the 4 United States in the district court. Whether that -- 5 all of those defenses or some of them will prevail in 6 that court is something which --

7 QUESTION: Well, suppose they had prevailed.
8 Would you still take the same position here?

9 MR. CLAIBORNE: Yes, we would. And -- we 10 would, assuming that that decision had survived appeal 11 or had not been appealed, and had had sustained our 12 motion to dismiss, we would rest on the correctness of 13 that ruling, and there is much law to the effect that --

14 QUESTION: But the United States is in this 15 Court litigating. It is not -- So it is subject to 16 being -- having its case decided here. You can't get 17 out of this case with a sovereign immunity claim.

18 MR. CLAIBORNE: I appreciate that. I
19 appreciate that that is so, though we invite the Court 20 to follow the indications of its prior decision with 21 respect to these boundary questions, remembering this.
22 Were it not for the decree of this Court in 1964, water
23 would presently be allocated to these boundary lands
24 because there are final determinations administratively 25 as to these boundaries, and because those lands have

1 been determined to be irrigable.

2           This Court enjoined the Secretary from 3 granting water to such lands until either there was an 4 agreement of the parties or this Court itself entered a 5 further decree. What this Court did not suggest,
6 indeed, suggested to the contrary, was that this Court
7 would also review these administrative boundary
8 determinations. On the contrary, as the Court well
9 knows, at its previous hearing, the Court determined 10 that the Special Master had wrongly in its name sought 11 to determine the boundaries. The Court said that that 12 matter would not be decided here, and even suggested 13 that the Secretary was free to allocate water in the 14 interim.

15           The decree for some reason was inconsistent 16 with the opinion in this respect, and on the contrary, 17 instructed the Secretary not to deliver water to these 18 contested boundary areas until they had been finally 19 determined, in which event an application must be made 20 to this Court to obtain water for such irrigable acreage 21 as was found there.

22           That is why we came to this Court, in 23 obedience to the 1964 decree. We came late, in part 24 because we wished to only come once. We waited until 25 all the boundary determinations had been finalized, and

1 indeed, as the Court knows, in one case the finalization
2 occurred the day before we filed our motion. We did not 3 delay once we had in hand the final decisions of the 4 Secretary.

5           Certainly the Court did not suggest on the 6 last occasion that the United States must go out and get 7 judicial vindication of secretarial orders. That would 8 indeed be most unusual. Those orders are final. This 9 Court has indicated that it need not review them, and 10 for good reason. This Court is not normally charged in 11 original cases with reviewing administrative findings of 12 this kind.

13           If there are appropriate proceedings which can 14 be had in some other court, and if a challenge in some 15 other court should disallow any of these boundary 16 adjustments, no harm will be done if in the meantime the 17 water is allocated. The recommended decree provides 18 that in the event that any boundary determination is 19 upset judicially, the allocation made to that extent 20 shall be diminished. The formula is clear. There will 21 be no need to reapply to this Court.

22           Now that the matter is before the Court, we 23 urge the Court not to be sidetracked by a suit belatedly
24 filed after the close of the evidence before the Master 25 in the Southern District of California, but to take this

1 opportunity to at long last allocate the water that has 2 for many years properly been attributable to the 3 boundary lands of these tribes.

4           The Court ought not be asked to postpone its 5 rulings, and the tribes ought not be asked to postpone 6 their entitlement to this boundary land any further.

7           With the exceptions which are not 8 controversial filed by the United States, we urge the 9 Court to approve in all respects the recommendations of 10 the Special Master.

11           CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.
12 The case is submitted.

13           (Whereupon, at 11:33 o'clock a.m., the case in 14 the above-entitled matter was submitted.)
