P R O C E E D I N G S

CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Riggs, you may proceed whenever you're ready.

ORAL ARGUMENT OF FRANK P. RIGGS, ESQ.,
ON BEHALF OF PETITIONERS

MR. RIGGS: Mr. Chief Justice and may it please the Court:

This is a gift tax case, here on a writ of certiorari to the Eleventh Circuit, which reversed a decision for the taxpayers by the United States Tax Court. It involves loans from a father to his son, who worked with him in the family businesses, and from that father to a family-owned corporation.

All loans were non-interest-bearing, and the stated terms of all were repayable on demand, with one exception. A note, while a ten-year note on its face, was determined by the Tax Court as a fact to be repayable on demand.

Therefore, there is only one issue: Are demand loans subject to gift tax on imputed interest? There is no subterfuge involved. The validity of the loans are not challenged by the Respondent. All loans are bona fide and they are what they purport to be.

QUESTION: Would it make any difference in your view if these were term notes, not demand notes?

1 MR. RIGGS: Yes, Your Honor.

2 QUESTION: Why?

3 MR. RIGGS: The major case is Berkman in the 4 United States Tax Court. There they were able to fit
5 into what is now 2512(b). There was an exchange.

6 As long as the term notes, as in the Berkman
7 and Blackburn cases, were given in exchange, we fit into 8 the exception to the normal definition of gift that's 9 listed by Section 2512(b). I'll come back to that if I 10 may, sir.

11 QUESTION: Mr. Riggs, when you responded to 12 the Chief's question about term notes, does that imply a 13 term note at no interest?

14 MR. RIGGS: Yes, Your Honor. I made that 15 assumption.

16 The son in this case, Lyle Dickman, died in 17 December of 1976. The father in this case, Paul Dickman 18 -- I'm sorry, the son died in May. The father died in 19 December of 1976, both dying in the same year.

20 In Lyle's estate, the son's estate, 100 21 percent of the unpaid balances on the indebtedness at 22 issue here were deducted and that deduction was accepted 23 by the Internal Revenue Service. In Paul's estate, the 24 father's estate, all of the notes at issue here were 25 reported as assets at 100 percent of the unpaid balance,

1 and that estate tax return was accepted by the Internal 2 Revenue Service.

3 Our point or our position and what we would 4 like to emphasize here at oral argument can be stated 5 briefly in three points:

6 One, the Gift Tax Code cannot be reasonably
7 interpreted to include the Respondent's right to use 8 theory. Whis theory that there is a property right to 9 use we submit amounts to no more than the attempt to tax 10 potential income as a gift.

11 Second, the decision below, if it is upheld, 12 will destroy the reasonable expectations of many 13 taxpayers and will add to an already overburdened 14 judiciary.

15 Three, if there is a gap in the present law
16 which should be corrected, Congress should act and not 17 the Executive or the Judicial Branches.

18 QUESTION: Mr. Riggs, were tax lawyers
19 advising their clients that the position you espouse is 20 correct before the Crown case?

21 MR. RIGGS: Justice O'Connor, I don't know how 22 they were advising their clients. Before Crown, a
23 district court in the Middle District of Texas, if I
24 remember correctly, decided this same issue and decided 25 it in favor of the taxpayer, and the Government did not

1 appeal that decision. That, before the Crown case, was 2 the only judicial action in the area to my knowledge.

3 QUESTION: It goes to your second point, about 4 the reasonable expectation of taxpayers, and I wondered 5 whether that is essentially post-Crown decisions 6 effects.

7 MR. RIGGS: No, ma'am. I really believe that 8 what's at stake here has been common among families as 9 long as there have been families. And a great many of 10 these loans are made with absolutely no tax results in 11 mind at all. That's the reason I was hesitant to 12 respond to you what tax lawyers are doing.

13 QUESTION: Well, I suppose a great many 14 intra-family loans can be made without tax consequences
15 under the provisions for the annual giving without tax 16 consequences and the cumulative life exemption.

17 MR. RIGGS: Yes, ma'am. But an awful lot of 18 taxpayers annually make the amount of the annual 19 exclusion as a gift. Then the very next dollar after 20 that either results in a tax or it reduces a one-time 21 lifetime credit.

22 QUESTION: Do you have to file a return if you 23 make gifts that are within the exclusion?

24 MR. RIGGS: No, Your Honor.

25 QUESTION: Now, let me put a hypothetical to

1 you. Suppose the father, a father, owns a commercial 2 building and the son occupies the commercial building, 3 conducting a business, and he charges no rent. Would 4 the reasonable value of the rent of that property be 5 taxable as a gift in your view?

6 MR. RIGGS: No, sir, not unless you add
7 something into the Gift Tax Code that has never been 8 there before. Our basic position in regard to the Code, 9 Mr. Chief Justice, is that the 1932 Congress knew what 10 they were doing.

11 They didn't pass a tax which taxed transfers
12 of property by gift in a vacuum. There already existed 13 a common law of gifts. It was very clear under the 14 common law of gifts that any consideration negated a
15 gift.

16 In fact, as we cite you to the Zeller case in 17 our reply brief, a loan was the antithesis of a gift.
18 And our position is that the United States Congress knew 19 that. They deliberately took the word "gift" in the 20 taxing phrase that's in 2501 and left it in there. We 21 have, we think, a great many indications that that was 22 deliberate on the part of the United States Congress, 23 that includes many fine lawyers.

24 QUESTION: Let me carry the hypothetical one 25 step beyond that. Suppose after several years of

1 allowing the son to use the commercial building
2 rent-free, the father gives him a quitclaim deed.
3 Taxable, the value of the property?

4 MR. RIGGS: No question about it. There's a
5 transfer of property by gift, the quitclaim deed, yes,
6 Your Honor.

7 QUESTION: Well, what's the difference in 8 terms of real estate transactions in the law of real 9 estate between a lease which conveys part of the 10 property, the use of the property, and the property 11 itself?

12 MR. RIGGS: The great difference, Your Honor, 13 is the common law on which the statute is superimposed.
14 A use -- and incidentally, the use doesn't have to be 15 actual under the Government's theory. The mere 16 opportunity is all that's required.

17 But a use has never been a gift. And our 18 whole point is that the Congress knew how to write this 19 statute. When they used the word "gift" they used it 20 advisedly, because look at Section 2512(b), if you
21 please. There they say that the excess of property
22 conveyed over a consideration received, not is a gift --
23 the United States Congress knew that a loan was not a 24 gift -- but they said it would be deemed a gift.

25 That's how the Berkman case came about, Mr.

1 Chief Justice. The loan in the Berkman case, the term
2 loan, was not a gift, was not a gift as the United 3 States Congress understood. But it fell under 2512(b)
4 and was deemed a gift.

5 QUESTION: Mr. Riggs, do I correctly
6 understand your argument essentially to be that if 7 Congress had wanted to tax this as a gift it should have 8 said so specifically, expressly?

9 MR. RIGGS: That's close, Mr. Justice
10 Brennan. I think that the fact that they used the word 11 "gift", that they went on in another area that clearly 12 was not a gift and said this also will be deemed a gift, 13 that they clearly knew what they were doing. There's no
14 question in my mind --

15 QUESTION: I thought you said among your three 16 -- I gather your third point was that this isn't really 17 any job for either the Court or the Executive, that this 18 is for the Congress to straighten out?

19 MR. RIGGS: Yes, sirree. Yes, sir.

20 QUESTION: Well, you know, in preparing for 21 this oral argument I ran across this. I wonder if you'd 22 comment on it.

23 MR. RIGGS: Certainly.

24 QUESTION: It's a statement by a very 25 respected authority on federal taxation:

1 "We have had enough experience with the tax
2 laws to know that Congress cannot do everything and that 3 it is ordinarily a mistake to expect the Congress will 4 formulate precise rules to cover every refinement and 5 detail of human experience so far as its tax results are 6 concerned. Many of the interstices must of necessity be 7 filled in by the courts and by administrative action."

8 MR. RIGGS: Justice Brennan, I share your 9 appreciation for that authority. I have great respect 10 for him.

11 That would require, we submit, a little more 12 ambiguity to fall into Dean Griswold's statement. We 13 don't believe the ambiguity is here. We don't question, 14 Justice Brennan, that Congress has the power to tax
15 these uses if it sees fit. But we do submit to you, it 16 clearly didn't see fit.

17 The experience in Great Britain is a beautiful 18 example of what happens when a legislature wants to tax 19 that far. I think it's very significant that they 20 avoided the use of the word "gift". They passed a 21 capital transfer tax. They knew better.

22 We submit, though, there's other evidence --

23 QUESTION: Mr. Riggs, I want to be sure.
24 You're conceding that Congress would have the power to 25 tax this as a gift?

1 MR. RIGGS: Oh, yes, sir.

2 QUESTION: Mr. Riggs, back up a minute. You
3 say that a demand note is different from the other note
4 that the Chief Justice --

5 MR. RIGGS: Yes, Your Honor.

6 QUESTION: How about an IOU?

7 MR. RIGGS: Well, I don't understand an IOU,
8 Justice Marshall, to be any more than, without any other 9 facts, than simply an open account loan, which amounts 10 to a non-interest bearing demand loan.

11 QUESTION: Is there any case on it?

12 MR. RIGGS: I beg your pardon?

13 QUESTION: Is there any case on it?

14 MR. RIGGS: No, sir, I don't know of any of 15 the present litigation that simply referred to the 16 obligation as an IOU. Of course, I believe that a note 17 is nothing but an IOU.

18 QUESTION: And a note that doesn't have a term
19 specified is due on demand, isn't it?

20 MR. RIGGS: Yes, Your Honor. Yes, sir. And 21 our whole point is that if your're going to find 22 something is not a gift -- and a loan is not; it's the 23 antithesis of a gift -- then you're going to have to fit 24 under this exchange of property transferred over the 25 consideration received.

1 But at the moment of that exchange even the 2 Respondent concedes no gift took place. There's an 3 equal exchange.

4 QUESTION: Let me carry an earlier
5 hypothetical yet a third step. Suppose the father gives 6 the son a 99-year lease on the property. Now, it's 7 still a lease. There's a reversion.

8 MR. RIGGS: Yes, sir.

9 QUESTION: Taxable as a gift?

10 MR. RIGGS: You have now the term. You have,
11 as I understand, no consideration, though. You have a 12 transfer of this term lease, this property, if you 13 will. But without the consideration, you're going to 14 have to find a gift. You're going to have to find a 15 transfer of property by gift.

16 I suspect -- I don't know, Mr. Chief Justice, 17 but it may be when you get to 99 years you're so close 18 to fee simple that you have something that can fit into 19 the normal definition of gift.

20 QUESTION: Let's cut it down to 50 years, 21 then.

22 MR. RIGGS: I don't know where the line is,
23 Your Honor.

24 QUESTION: What is the basis for your saying 25 that a lease for a term of years at no rent is not a

1 gift?

2 MR. RIGGS: The common law on which the very 3 knowledgeable 1932 Congress superimposed the gift tax, 4 Justice Rehnquist. Under the common law -- we cite the 5 Zeller case to you in our reply brief -- a loan is the 6 antithesis of a gift. A loan simply is not a gift.

7 QUESTION: And you say that if I own a
8 property in fee simple and give my son or daughter a 9 ten-year lease on it, that that is not a gift?

10 MR. RIGGS: There's no borrowing involved. I 11 would think that -- quite frankly, I haven't thought of 12 that area. I don't know of any reason that you can't 13 make a transfer of a property interest that would 14 qualify as a gift. But --

15 QUESTION: Well, that's the whole definition
16 of a gift, isn't it, the transfer of a property interest 17 without any consideration?

18 MR. RIGGS: The area in which we're in,
19 Justice Rehnquist, is a transfer for consideration.
20 See, that's the problem I'm having with the Justice's 21 question.

22 QUESTION: But I thought your answer to the 23 Chief Justice's question would have indicated that an 24 execution of a lease by a father to a child of say a 25 very valuable property, commercial property, a lease for

1 20 years free of any rent, wouldn't be a gift. Maybe I
2 misunderstood.

3 MR. RIGGS:. No, sir.

4 QUESTION: Why wouldn't that be a gift of a
5 property interest, as the Justice --

6 MR. RIGGS: I'm having a tough time, Justice
7 White, Justice Rehnquist, about bringing this into cur
8 problem, and that is a loan. I wouldn't be surprised -- 9 I haven't done the research, but I wouldn't be surprised 10 if a gift of a term certain --

11 QUESTION: But even if it were, you wouldn't 12 think that would govern this case?

13 MR. RIGGS: Exactly, Your Honor, exactly.

14 QUESTION: But the Solicitor General has cited
15 a number of cases, has he not, dealing with cases
16 arising out of charitable deductions for contributions 17 to charities, where the right to use property for a 18 given period of time rent-free has been treated as a 19 transfer of property for that purpose? And I think 20 there are a number of authorities in accord with that 21 view, are there not?

22 MR. RIGGS: In the charitable contributions
23 area, yes.

24 QUESTION: Yes.

25 MR. RIGGS: Yes, Your Honor. Of course, the

1 big difference is, we're talking about another statute
2 entirely. We're talking about a statute that allows a 3 deduction for a contribution to or for the use of. The 4 statute with which we're dealing here defines where 5 there's a gift tax. One place, under 2501, is when 6 there's a gift. Another place, under 2512(b), is where 7 there's an exchange that shall be deemed a gift.

8 And I apologize to Judge Rehnquist and Justice
9 White. I suspect that if the common law covered leases
10 that your point is well taken, Mr. Chief Justice.

11 But I have to get back here into this area of 12 a loan.

13 QUESTION: Well, no analogy necessarily 14 controls a concrete situation. But it's sometimes 15 helpful.

16 MR. RIGGS: We submit that there's even more
17 indications, Your Honor, that Congress, the 1932
18 Congress, not only knew what they were doing, but this 19 is a brand new addition into the gift tax. The time
20 elapsing between 1932 and the Internal Revenue Service
21 attack -- the Service has never denied the the statement
22 of the Seventh Circuit in the Crown case that taxation 23 of a use is brand new.

24 But they're asking you for more than taxation 25 of a use. They're asking you for taxation of an

1 opportunity to use.

2 QUESTION: Well, now, would you define how you
3 think the phrase "opportunity to use" is more expansive 4 than the term "use"?

5 MR. RIGGS: Yes, Justice Rehnquist. I can 6 think of three uses to which borrowed funds may be put:
7 one, investment, earn interest or dividends; another,
8 consume it, pay for an operation or something that you 9 need.

10 There's a third that I've had a devil of a 11 time getting across, because I guess it's unique to 12 business. But really, funds borrowed and used in a 13 business become at least to a minimum extent as much a 14 fixed asset of the business as a punch press, a tractor, 15 or anything else. You can't run a business without a 16 minimum amount of money that stays in the cycle between 17 receivables, inventory, purchases, accounts payable.

18 So that's at least three areas in which 19 borrowed funds may be used. Certainly, the imputed 20 interest, the potential income that the Service wants to 21 tax now, is not always there. That's the reason that I 22 say that the opportunity to use is much more expansive.

23 QUESTION: Well, you say the imputed income
24 isn't always there. But if there is a market interest 25 rate for money at a given time, certainly that would

1 justify the Service in saying that the value of the use
2 of the money is the going interest rate, wouldn't it?

3 MR. RIGGS: Yes, sir, and if the Code had 4 taxed that use. However, that's one of the what we call 5 or what I call invisible boomerangs, that I stole from 6 Justice Jackson. The Service position is that you have 7 the normal valuation problems here, that the rate of 8 interest will be determined based on the facts of the 9 case, not on what happens in some general market between 10 major companies and banks.

11 If that's true, every issue is a new case and 12 you don't even have the protection of collateral
13 estoppel. The credit ratings are not fungible any more 14 than individuals are. So we have that Pandora's box 15 we're looking at.

16 If I may, I'd like to emphasize a couple more 17 points that give evidence that the statute simply does 18 not include demand loans.

19 The 1932 committee reports were pretty well 20 identical out of the House Ways and Means Committee and 21 out of the Senate Finance Committee. Both of them used 22 some very broad words that the Respondent likes to 23 quote. But those broad words are followed by some 24 examples of what they meant.

25 One example is a joint bank account, where A

1 creates a joint bank account whereby A or B may 2 unilaterally withdraw. Now, if a property right to use 3 were in the thinking of these committees, they would 4 have never held that there is no gift to B until B does 5 withdraw and withdraw for his own use, because once that 6 chose in action is created why isn't there a property
7 right to use created in B?

8 QUESTION: Was this an account that bore 9 interest?

10 MR. RIGGS: Sir?

11 QUESTION: Was this joint account one that 12 bore interest?

13 MR. RIGGS: In the example, I would assume a 14 demand checking account. But I don't know that it would 15 matter.

16 There's one more evidence, and I guess the 17 strongest evidence, that the 1932 Code did not include 18 demand loans, and that's the concurring opinion in the 19 case below that we're asking you to reverse. That 20 opinion we submit flat tells you that this Code does not 21 tax demand loans. To quote them exactly, they say 22 taxpayers have "given away no property, no interest, and 23 no rights, but surely they have made a gift."

24 Our point, Your Honor, is that if you've given 25 away no property, no interest, no rights, under the Code

1 you have not made a gift and you have not even made,
2 once the exchange is even, you have not even made a
3 deemed gift.

4 I'm going to save a little bit for rebuttal if 5 there's no further questions.

6 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well.

7 Mr. Wallace.

8 ORAL ARGUMENT OF LAWRENCE G. WALLACE, ESQ.

9 ON BEHALF OF RESPONDENT

10 MR. WALLACE: Mr. Chief Justice and may it
11 please the Court:

12 Let me say a word first in response to some 13 questions that have arisen. The commentary, in response 14 to Justice O'Connor's question, in the journals in 15 response to both the Crown decision and its predecessor
16 district court decision in Johnson -- and we've cited
17 many of these commentaries -- were almost uniformly
18 critical and indicative that well-informed tax lawyers
19 did not believe that the gift tax did not reach demand 20 loans of this kind.

21 During this early period when interest rates
22 were low, this kind of device in tax planning was not 23 widely encountered. There wasn't litigation on this 24 subject. And the many articles cited -- one amicus
25 brief says there are hundreds of articles since Crown

1 advocating this device for tax planning -- have arisen
2 since the Crown decision.

3 This Court in Commissioner against Wemyss,
4 W-e-m-y-s-s, which we have cited in our brief, pointed 5 out that the gift tax law did depart from the common law 6 of what constitutes a gift and instead set up a broad 7 statutory definition.

8 Perhaps the most obvious way in which it 9 departed from the common law is in Section 2512(b) of 10 the Code, which is cited on pages 2 and 3 of our brief, 11 which says that:

12 "Where property is transferred for less than 13 an adequate and full consideration in money or money's 14 worth, then the amount by which the value of the 15 property exceeded the value of the consideration shall 16 be deemed a gift."

17 At common law, if there was consideration it 18 wasn't a gift. But the gift tax sets up its own 19 definitions.

20 In our view, this case presents one of those 21 happy situations in which the correct answer under the 22 statute coincides with the common sense answer. Any 23 person in this courtroom would find it a valuable 24 benefit to be given gratuitously an unrestricted right 25 to use several hundreds of thousands of dollars.

1 QUESTION: Well, but it applies, your 2 principle applies, to far different situations than 3 that, Mr. Wallace, doesn't it? The example cited by 4 some of the amicus briefs of a parent loaning a child 5 $10,000 to go back to school interest-free, or 6 presumably at even below the market rate, would be a 7 gift in the Government's view.

8 MR. WALLACE: That is correct, that would be a 9 gift. And the subject of tuition --

10 QUESTION: So I mean, we're not talking about 11 hundreds of thousands of dollars in tax planning alone.
12 We're talking about some very common transactions that 13 people would have had no thought they were tax planning 14 and no thought that they were making gifts.

15 QUESTION: Mr. Wallace, responding to Justice
16 Rehnquist, I would appreciate it if you did not confine 17 your response to money. If you are right, it applies 18 also to property.

19 MR. WALLACE: That is correct.

20 QUESTION: And when you get into the property 21 area, I'm troubled by where one draws the line. What 22 about a parent lending an automobile? The parents are 23 going abroad for a year. You use the term "a 24 substantial period of time" in your brief. What is a 25 substantial period of time?

1 Parents or friends lend a summer home or a
2 beach cottage or whatever. Where in the world are you 3 going to draw the line, and when would you know, when 4 would you ascertain what the value of the use of that 5 property is?

6 It's a Pandora's box, it seems to me. That's 7 why I want you to shed some light on it.

8 MR. WALLACE: Well, there are many difficult 9 questions under the gift tax law, many of which will 10 remain, however this case is decided. Many of them
11 revolve around the question of what constitutes support 12 for dependents that traditionally has not been subjected 13 to the gift tax, and these questions arise whether what 14 is involved is a loan or the direct payment of a corpus 15 that constitutes support.

16 The same question arises with respect to a 17 dependent whether you allow that person to have the use
18 of a portion of your residence or whether you supply 19 food and clothing for that individual which is 20 consumed.

21 And ordinarily, the Congress and the courts
22 and the Commissioner have proceeded on the assumption
23 that when there's a legal obligation to provide support 24 the provision of that support is not a gift subject to 25 the gift tax. What if it goes beyond a legal obligation

1 to a moral obligation? These are difficult questions.

2 There is a great difference between providing 3 the ordinary items of clothing, even if they may be 4 provided rather lavishly, and providing a series of 5 diamond bracelets which become a means of transferring 6 wealth from one generation to the next.

7 QUESTION: Well, how is it theoretically any 8 different?

9 MR. WALLACE: It has to be looked at in terms
10 of the purpose of the gift tax, which was to supplement 11 the estate tax. And if transfers of wealth are being 12 used in a way that would defeat the applicability of the 13 estate tax or of the income tax, which was also a 14 purpose, then there is more of a problem under the gift 15 tax law than if it's the ordinary kind of consumption of 16 property where the donor could have consumed his estate, 17 obviously, on more frivolous things, but instead he's 18 providing support and tuition benefits for his children, 19 but it's being consumed rather than passed along.

20 QUESTION: How did the transfers in this case 21 defeat the application of the gift tax -- or of the 22 estate tax?

23 MR. WALLACE: Of the estate tax. Well, I
24 think this is a fairly graphic example, because what is 25 being transferred here is the ability of wealth to

1 generate additional wealth. Hundreds of thousands of 2 dollars obviously can be invested to generate additional 3 wealth, and if they were so invested by the donor that 4 additional wealth would be added to the donor's estate.

5 QUESTION: Well, then it must follow from that 6 that the donor has some sort of a duty to invest, to 7 build up his estate so the Government can get a big tax 8 bite out of it.

9 MR. WALLACE: That doesn't have to follow, in 10 our view, because our theory of the gift is not that the 11 donor has foregone an accumulation to his estate and 12 that constitutes the gift. The gift is the value of 13 what is given on the market, what you would have to pay 14 for it if it weren't given to you. And the gift here is 15 the right to use that money which the donee has been 16 given.

17 And it's measured the same way as a gift of 18 stock would be measured. The gift of stock is not 19 measured by the dividends that the donor otherwise may 20 have accumulated in his estate, which is a speculative 21 matter. The value is what the donee would have had to 22 buy the stock for in the market if it hadn't been given 23 to him.

24 And the same thing is true of the gift here.
25 It's true that the donor might not have made good use of

1 that money. He may not have even tried to, or he may 2 have been unsuccessful in using it, and the same thing
3 is true of the donee. Whatever income is generated by 4 the gift is a question of income taxation.

5 But the gift is the right to use the money, 6 and that has its own value, which is what you would have 7 to pay for the right to use that money if it weren't 8 given to you.

9 QUESTION: Mr. Wallace, how would a taxpayer
10 know when to file a tax return? Consider the 11 hypotheticals that have been mentioned here.

12 MR. WALLACE: Well, only with good tax advice, 13 the same as --

14 QUESTION: I'd hate to be his tax lawyer.

15 QUESTION: No, I'd like to be one.

16 (Laughter.)

17 MR. WALLACE: The gifts have to accumulate to 18 a certain sum per person before there is any 19 responsibility to file a gift tax return. And 20 obviously, it is a complex tax matter these days for an 21 estate to be settled when the decedent has had a 22 substantial estate, and that is a time when there's a 23 review of the gift tax history of that taxpayer.

24 These are complexities that we have under the 25 law that Congress has enacted.

1 QUESTION: Mr. Wallace, what happens if you
2 give your son $250,000 with a demand note and he keeps 3 it for three years, and then you fall out with him and 4 you tell him, pay up? What about those three years?
5 Was that a gift?

6 MR. WALLACE: Well, it certainly was a gift in 7 our view.

8 QUESTION: It was a gift as long as you're a
9 nice boy. But when you became a bad boy it wasn't a 10 gift.

11 MR. WALLACE: We've never said that the gift 12 is the gift of the principal and that that's the measure
13 of the gift. What the gift was was the right to use 14 that principal for as long as the donor allowed him to 15 use it.

16 QUESTION: He'd have to pay for the three 17 years.

18 MR. WALLACE: For the three years.

19 QUESTION: But not the last year.

20 MR. WALLACE: For as long as he was allowed 21 the right to use it and to generate whatever income he 22 could from it by whatever means he chose. He might have 23 been unsuccessful and that's another question. But he 24 was given something that other persons did not have and 25 would have to pay for, which was the right to use that

1 money.

2 QUESTION: My only point was, if he had been a
3 nice boy he would still -- no gift.

4 MR. WALLACE: Well, he would still have the 5 same gift. The gift doesn't depend on a termination.
6 We just look at it periodically to evaluate it. The 7 gift is an ongoing gift.

8 QUESTION: So he gives him this $250,000 every 9 year, under your theory?

10 MR. WALLACE: He gives it initially, but it's 11 an ongoing gift for as long as he forebears asking for 12 repayment of it.

13 QUESTION: Not of the principal, just of the 14 reasonable interest, the going rate.

15 MR. WALLACE: The value of getting the use of 16 that money, the right to use it.

17 QUESTION: Under the Government's point of 18 view, Mr. Wallace, is there any difference really 19 between -- and I'm now speaking of an adult son, not one 20 who has a claim for support -- between lending $100, 21 we'll say, and lending $100,000, except that IRS has 22 more important things to do than going after gift taxes 23 on the $100 gift?

24 MR. WALLACE: Well, that's right, and there's 25 a yearly exclusion.

1 QUESTION: But they could as a matter of 2 principle, from your point of view?

3 MR. WALLACE: If the rest of the exclusion
4 were consumed with other gifts, they could as a matter 5 of principle say that this is the little bit that put 6 you over the top and there's a gift tax liability for 7 it.

8 QUESTION: I'm sorry, Mr. Wallace. I don't 9 know whether I heard your answer to Justice Powell's 10 question. When does the taxpayer file a return?

11 MR. WALLACE: He's required to file a return 12 if he has made gifts during the year that reach the 13 level that is not excluded.

14 QUESTION: Let me ask you a question based on 15 something of personal experience, perhaps. The place
16 where I spend part of my summers a number of people -- 17 it's kind of a summer colony -- a number of people had 18 originally a cottage, as they call them, near a lake.
19 And as their kids grow and have families of their own,
20 they've built themselves what they call a grannie
21 cottage and turned the main cottage over to one or more 22 kids in the summertime. And they do it summer after 23 summer after summer, so that it's not just a one-shot 24 deal.

25 I suppose if the value of that cottage that

1 they turn over to a kid and his family is $1,000 per 2 summer, that sooner or later they're going to have to 3 file a gift tax return?

4 MR. WALLACE: Well, $1,000 per year is 5 excluded from the gift tax.

6 QUESTION: But how about -- what's the total
7 you can give to any one?

8 QUESTION: Mr. Wallace, isn't $10,000 a year
9 excluded per person, and if you're a couple isn't it 10 $20,000 a year that you can give to any child?

11 MR. WALLACE: That is right, that is right.

12 QUESTION: So you're talking about big 13 dollars.

14 MR. WALLACE: We're talking about big dollars 15 before you incur any gift tax liability, unless you have 16 given those big dollars in other ways and this is the 17 amount that would put you over the top. That could 18 happen.

19 QUESTION: Mr. Wallace, the Service did not 20 seek review in either the Johnson or Crown cases, did 21 it?

22 MR. WALLACE: Well, we didn't seek review
23 beyond the Court of Appeals level in the Crown case, 24 because we had no conflict in the circuits at that 25 time.

1 QUESTION: Is that the reason for it?

2 MR. WALLACE: That is correct. That is our 3 ordinary practice in tax litigation, is to try to 4 develop a conflict in the circuits, although the Crown
5 case was a tempting one because it involved $15 million 6 in interest-free loans.

7 QUESTION: Well, you finally made it.

8 MR. WALLACE: We finally -- we developed our 9 conflict in the circuits and we're here.

10 QUESTION: And there was division both in the 11 Tax Court and in the Court of Appeals.

12 MR. WALLACE: That is correct, we had dissents 13 in both courts.

14 But we do find we're inhibited in trying to 15 develop a conflict in the circuits if this Court has 16 denied certiorari on the issue on our petition. So 17 there can be a price to pay for petitioning on the first 18 decision.

19 QUESTION: Has there been any specific attempt 20 by the Service to get specific legislation on this?

21 MR. WALLACE: There is recent testimony on the 22 subject which is cited in Petitioner's reply brief.
23 That testimony did specifically indicate that the matter
24 was pending before this Court in the Dickman case for 25 decision on the gift tax question. And we find that

1 Congress seldom acts before this Court has resolved a 2 pending case.

3 QUESTION: Mr. Wallace, isn't this a sort of 4 recent learning on the Commissioner's part? For how 5 many years has he taken this position, or how many years
6 was it before he learned about it?

7 MR. WALLACE: The pertinent revenue ruling was 8 in 1973, although the question was litigated in the 9 Johnson case in 1966. But as we have pointed out, the 10 terms of the regulations adopted both in 1932 and even 11 moreso in 1936 did embrace this kind of situation, even 12 though they didn't refer specifically to loans or demand 13 loans.

14 QUESTION: But the Commissioner never took any 15 steps in this direction until the sixties, did he?

16 MR. WALLACE: Not that we're aware of. But 17 during those --

18 QUESTION: Is that because interest rates were 19 so low that it wasn't worth it to the Commissioner to 20 file or what?

21 MR. WALLACE: Well, probably so. It's hard to 22 speak authoritatively about this, but interest rates 23 were low. This was not a commonly used and certainly 24 not a trumpeted device of tax planning. There were many 25 other matters to be litigated under the gift tax law, as

1 the decisions of this Court under the gift tax law
2 indicate.

3 QUESTION: Mr. Wallace, if your position, if 4 the Commissioner's position, is correct what are the 5 consequences for the Dean income taxability?

6 MR. WALLACE: Well, we think it's a separate 7 question, although we have explained in our brief why 8 --

9 QUESTION: Well, will we be back here hearing
10 the Commissioner argue for a different result there?

11 MR. WALLACE: We have explained in our brief
12 why we think the Dean case and the others that have gone 13 the same way were wrongly decided. But there so many 14 courts have gone against our position that that was 15 really the main topic of the recent testimony before 16 Congress, that they ought to take action because we've 17 been unsuccessful in trying to develop a conflict under 18 the tax laws.

19 Even though it seems fairly clear to us that 20 when an employer, whether it's a corporation or 21 otherwise, gives an employee an interest-free loan that 22 is a form of compensation which amounts to income for 23 the employee, we've had difficulty getting that position 24 accepted by the courts.

25 QUESTION: One other question if I may, Mr.

1 Wallace. Do you think the Commissioner has statutory 2 authority to prescribe certain statutory interest rates
3 in valuing gifts?

4 MR. WALLACE: I think he does have statutory 5 authority to prescribe at least the method in arriving 6 at the valuation of gifts, including specifying safe 7 harbor rates that would be generally applicable.

8 QUESTION: And what do you rely on there?

9 MR. WALLACE: Well, I don't have in the 10 materials before us the provisions of the Code that 11 grant the regulatory authority, but they are in the 12 Internal Revenue Code and they're the same provisions 13 that have authorized the myriad regulations the 14 Commissioner has adopted, including regulations about 15 accounting methods that have to be used in various kinds 16 of business transactions.

17 There have been different rates specified by 18 the Commissioner in asserting deficiencies in this area, 19 partly reflecting differences in prevailing rates of 20 interest at the time, but also partly reflecting the 21 particular circumstances of the case, because the demand 22 loan varies in its market value depending on the credit 23 status of the borrower.

24 A borrower who may not be in a good position
25 to relay the demand may have to pay a bank considerably

1 more for a demand loan if he's likely not to be able to 2 respond promptly to the demand and come across with the 3 principal, than another borrower who is a better credit
4 risk. And these situations vary in the gift tax cases 5 as well.

6 But we do emphasize the breadth of the 7 statutory language Congress used -- it's set forth on 8 pages 2 and 3 of our brief -- and the comprehensiveness 9 of the 1932 committee reports in adopting that language, 10 referring to the fact that the terms "property", 11 "transfer", "gift", and "directly or indirectly" are 12 used in their broadest and most comprehensive sense, to 13 reach every species of right or interest protected by 14 law and having an exchangeable value.

15 And the right to use this money for as long as 16 the donor permits is a property right in the sense that 17 it's protected by law. If it's deposited by the donee
18 in an interest-bearing account, he has a legal right 19 against the bank or against any other third party to the 20 use of those funds under the terms of the account, and 21 he has a right to the proceeds even against the donor
22 himself, as well as against all properties. So it is a 23 species of property protected by law.

24 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We'll resume there at 25 1:00 o'clock.

1 (Whereupon, at 12:00 noon the argument in the 2 above-entitled matter was recessed, to reconvene at 1:00
3 p.m. the same day.)

1 AFTERNOON SESSION

2 (1:00 p.m.)

3 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Wallace, you have 4 seven minutes remaining.

5 MR. WALLACE: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice.

6 We have set forth the contemporaneous Treasury 7 regulations in our brief, and on page 12 and 13 we have 8 discussed in particular the 1936 regulation which refers 9 to the enjoyment of property which is not itself fully 10 transferred, but the right to enjoy it is transferred 11 and subject to the gift tax, which fits the concept of 12 what we have here even though there was no specific 13 reference to a loan here.

14 The principal is a loan rather than a gift, 15 but the enjoyment in this case is the right to use that 16 money during the time in which the donor doesn't require 17 the principal to be repaid.

18 QUESTION: Mr. Wallace, what if, instead of 19 being an interest-free loan in this case, the loan were 20 made at the rate of six percent and the Commissioner 21 felt that the going rate at the time was 14 percent for 22 an unsecured loan. Could he attack that transaction in 23 your view the same way he attacks this one?

24 MR. WALLACE: He certainly could. Whether or 25 not successfully would depend on whether he could prove

1 that it came within the statutory criterion of property
2 transferred for less than an adequate and full 3 consideration in money or money's worth. That is the 4 criterion Congress has specified, as set forth in our 5 brief.

6 QUESTION: Mr. Wallace, as I understand it the 7 dimensions of this problem have been changed with the 8 increased exemption to $10,000 and $20,000.

9 MR. WALLACE: Well, yes, the applicability has 10 been changed, that is correct. There's exclusion of the 11 value of the gift, but the principal could be much 12 larger.

13 QUESTION: But the donee would have to receive 14 a very substantial sum of money before we'd have any 15 application of this.

16 MR. WALLACE: That is correct.

17 QUESTION: About how much?

18 MR. WALLACE: Well --

19 QUESTION: Hundreds of thousands?

20 MR. WALLACE: It would be many hundreds of 21 thousands.

22 QUESTION: It would depend on whether he had 23 already exceeded his allowance.

24 MR. WALLACE: For the year.

25 QUESTION: Yes.

1 MR. WALLACE: For the year. If there were 2 other gifts that year, you know, they too add up.

3 QUESTION: Under your position, in figuring 4 out whether you've exceeded your allowance you have to 5 include these things?

6 MR. WALLACE: That is correct. And they seem 7 to us squarely to come within the statutory definition 8 and the definitions in the committee reports and in the 9 regulations, and they are obviously a means of 10 transferring wealth to one's intended beneficiaries in a 11 way that would exclude the likelihood of additional 12 estate tax liability, in a way that transfers income tax 13 liability on any further income that's generated from 14 the donor, who is likely to be in a higher income tax 15 bracket, to the donee.

16 So they come squarely within the purpose, as 17 well as the broad language, of the gift tax law.

18 And I would like to be sure that the theory of 19 the Government is well understood here, because it has 20 erroneously been argued that we are in some way doubling 21 the taxation of income that's generated. The value of 22 the gift is not the income that is generated by that 23 property.

24 The way we value and tax the gift is precisely
25 the way we would with a gift of stock, by its market

1 value, here the market value of the right to use the 2 money. If the stock does in fact generate dividends, 3 that is a separate matter that is taxed under the income 4 tax law. If the donor had retained the stock he would 5 pay income tax on dividends that are generated, and if 6 the stock is given to the donee he pays income tax on 7 any dividends that are generated.

8 And the same thing is true of any income
9 generated by the use of the money. It in no way 10 duplicates the tax on the gift, which is the transfer of 11 the right to use that money.

12 QUESTION: If the affluent father should put 13 up $100,000 worth of Government bonds or market value 14 securities to secure the son's loan at a bank, would 15 there be any gift?

16 MR. WALLACE: There would, in the use of that 17 money, of that security that would otherwise be 18 available, whatever the market --

19 QUESTION: What's the value of the use of the 20 security?

21 MR. WALLACE: Whatever it would cost someone 22 to get it if it weren't given to him, the same as the 23 value of any other gift.

24 QUESTION: Well, how would you measure it?

25 MR. WALLACE: By what it would cost you to get

1 someone to put it up for you if you didn't have someone 2 willing to give it to you. It might -- it would take 3 expert testimony.

4 QUESTION: How do you measure the value of a 5 demand note the day it's given, where it's just on 6 demand?

7 MR. WALLACE: Well, we have talked about the 8 method of valuing it. It can only be valued 9 periodically and in retrospect.

10 QUESTION: But aren't all gifts normally
11 valued at the time the gift is given?

12 MR. WALLACE: And so is this. But this is an 13 ongoing gift. It's not just a gift that takes place at 14 the one time when it's first given, because the extent
15 of the gift can only be known by how long the donor
16 forebears in asking for it to be returned.

17 QUESTION: Let me change the hypothetical.
18 Father guarantees the loan at the bank. Any gift?

19 MR. WALLACE: Probably not in that situation, 20 although it could be argued that there's a market
21 value. There would be a gift, however, if father paid 22 the interest for the loan, which is --

23 QUESTION: No, I'm just -- I'm limiting this 24 to guaranteeing payment. Until he had to act on that to 25 fulfil the guarantee, there'd be no gift?

1 MR. WALLACE: There's no property being 2 transferred to the donee in that situation. But as we 3 pointed out in footnote 24 on page 18 of our brief, in 4 that dissent in the Tax Court in the Crown case, Judge 5 Simpson, joined by Judges Romm and Tamm and Wald and 6 Wilbur, did equate this situation with the situation
7 where the donor arranged for a bank to provide the use 8 of these funds to the donee and paid the interest. And 9 it's an economically equivalent situation and there is 10 the same gift under contemplation of the gift tax.

11 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Riggs, do you have 12 anything further?

13 REBUTTAL ARGUMENT OF FRANK P. RIGGS, ESQ.,
14 ON BEHALF OF PETITIONERS

15 MR. RIGGS: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice.

16 I'm concerned primarily with the big dollars
17 connotation that I have been listening to some here. I
18 would be less than candid with you if I didn't admit 19 that the whole area of estate and gift taxes affects 20 only the relatively affluent. But it seems to me like 21 that the question is, how shall we affect this group of 22 people, by the use of statutes or by new 23 interpretations?

24 I can only now try to report to you that much 25 of the effect of affirming the decision below. I

1 believe Justice Powell foresaw it when he asked, how do
2 you know if you made a gift? I would just add, how do 3 you know if you've used your annual exclusion, which 4 seems to have some effect on the feeling in this case?

5 If you can't know when you've used your annual 6 exclusion, and if you will, one more thing -- two more
7 things: One is, since 1976 we don't have separate gift 8 tax and estate taxes. They're combined. The estate is 9 simply the last gift. But since 1976 and before 1976, 10 all the way back to 1932, if you did not file a 709, a 11 gift tax return, there's no statute of limitations. If 12 this Court allows a brand new concept of gift to come 13 into the taxing picture, there literally is no limit, 14 until you get back of 1932, that this tax can place.

15 QUESTION: May I ask, Mr. Riggs --

16 MR. RIGGS: Yes, sir, Justice.

17 QUESTION: The Chief Justice asked Mr. Wallace 18 about the loan of securities as collateral for the 19 donee's loan. What do you think about that?

20 MR. RIGGS: Your Honor, I know there's a case 21 that's held exactly that it is not a gift, and I was 22 trying with my co-counsel desperately to find it when it
23 came up, but I cannot recall it. But I do know there's 24 a case in the Tax Court ruling it was not a gift.

25 QUESTION: Would you take the position that,

1 say, a taxpayer in a high income bracket could turn over
2 a portfolio of securities to someone else and say, I'm 3 just loaning these to you and you just keep the income,
4 and then when I want them back you give them back to me,
5 there'd be no gift?

6 MR. RIGGS: Well, may I add one more thing?
7 Is it returnable on demand?

8 QUESTION: Returnable on demand, yes. But 9 it's to their tax advantage to have the donee, you know,
10 being in a lower bracket --

11 MR. RIGGS: Yes, Your Honor. I think, first,
12 Lucas v. Earl would tax the income still to the grantor
13 of the loan. Second, again --

14 QUESTION: You say the income would be taxable 15 to the donor?

16 MR. RIGGS: Yes, sir, under the Lucas versus 17 Earl case of this Court many, many years back.

18 As to whether or not it's a gift, again, I've 19 been concentrating so hard on these loans, I would only 20 be speculating, Justice Stevens, and I've learned not to 21 do that already this morning.

22 QUESTION: Well, what if you turned over 23 $200,000, said, you keep in a savings account. Would 24 the income on the savings account be taxable to the 25 grantor in your view? And if so, why isn't the income

1 on these loans taxable to the donor?

2 MR. RIGGS: Yes, sir. Let me layer in some 3 more facts into your question, please. One, if you let 4 me layer in the premise that we have here a genuine 5 demand situation.

6 QUESTION: Right.

7 MR. RIGGS: Not a sham, but a genuine demand 8 proposition.

9 QUESTION: Well, there's no sham in my 10 hypothetical.

11 MR. RIGGS: Okay, sir.

12 QUESTION: He's entitled to the money whenever 13 he wants it.

14 MR. RIGGS: Then the fact of what the grantee 15 does with the funds is irrelevant under the Government's 16 theory. And my answer to you is no, sir, that theory is 17 not sound and it is not in the statute.

18 The thing that worried me about your hypo is 19 that, if you had a secret agreement that this would be 20 done, that it would be allowed to stay out, then you're 21 into the sham transaction theory, Gregory versus 22 Helvering. And the Government already has that tool to 23 fight the type of sham --

24 QUESTION: Well, I'm not assuming a sham. I'm 25 assuming it is, you keep it and when I want it back I'll

1 take it back, and then the son or the corporation says,
2 okay. There's no gift?

3 MR. RIGGS: No, sir, our position is it is not 4 a gift.

5 Let me --

6 QUESTION: Let me take you back to the 7 father's letting the son use a commercial rental 8 property that's worth $48,000 a year, we'll say. The 9 father's income and his taxable base is reduced by that 10 amount if he's not receiving that rent from some 11 independent source, isn't that right?

12 MR. RIGGS: Yes, sir.

13 QUESTION: And what about the son? Does he 14 have to pay any income tax on that?

15 MR. RIGGS: You're getting awfully close to 16 the Clifford case, Your Honor. I don't know, though, of 17 a decision applying the theory of Clifford under income
18 tax rules. But again --

19 QUESTION: Well, this would be a nice -- this 20 would be an interesting way to have this value, $48,000
21 a year or whatever, escape taxation altogether.

22 MR. RIGGS: If it would not be subject to 23 income tax. Our problem here is the gift tax. I'm not 24 that sure -- fact is, in the Crown case it's pretty 25 clear that the Government was arguing that was subject

1 to income tax as well as gift, and somehow or another I 2 think they settled it, it was indicated in a footnote in 3 Crown.

4 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well. Your time
5 has expired now, Mr. Riggs.

6 Thank you, gentlemen. The case is submitted.

7 (Whereupon, at 1:14 p.m., argument in the 8 above-entitled case was submitted.)
