1 York imposes on the judicial decision to detain an accused 2 delinquent prior to trial and to rebut at the same time 3 several alleged deficiencies in this procedures which were 4 assigned to it in the opinions below and are noted by 5 Appellees.

6 I will then turn to Appellees' two principal 7 arguments under Mathews versus Eldridge, namely, that some 8 crimes must be excluded from Section 320.5(3)(b) and that 9 some guidelines for judicial decision making must be added 10 so that the statute would survive scrutiny under the due 11 process clause

12 QUESTION: What are the conditions on which an 13 adult offender, given all the same factors, could be 14 detained before a trial?

15 MRS. GORDON: In New York, Your Honor?

16 QUESTION: Yes, in New York.

17 MRS. GORDON: In New York -- New York provides 18 bail for adults and does not have a preventive detention 19 statute. It has been noted, however, that New York's bail 20 law generally does take at least some account of future 21 crime in the community if that is your point.

22 Of course Your Honor is aware that the District
23 of Columbia itself does have a preventive detention 24 statute which was cert denied in United States versus 25 Edwards. I believe it was the term before last. And, we

1 suggest -- we contend -- that our statute is identical in 2 all material respects to Edwards and, accordingly, would 3 pass muster in the same manner.

4 Appellees do make one other argument other than 5 their Mathews argument and that is that pre-trial
6 detention to prevent crime as distinguished from pre-trial
7 detention to assure appearance at trial is constitutional 8 punishment and we have addressed that argument in our 9 reply brief at pages 1 through 11.

10 Turning to the --

11 QUESTION: In your view what constitutional
12 limits are there on a state's authority to detain people 13 who are not accused of any crime to prevent them from 14 committing future crimes?

15 MRS. GORDON: People who are accused of a crime 16 to prevent them from committing a crime?

17 QUESTION: Who are not. Can you detain somebody 18 if they are not?

19 MRS. GORDON: No, Your Honor, you cannot detain 20 somebody that has not been accused of a crime --

21 QUESTION: All right. And, if they have been 22 accused of a crime, what constitutional limits are there 23 in your view?

24 MRS. GORDON: We would suggest, Your Honor, that 25 there are two separate constitutional limits. One is

1 quite important and one you have heard a great deal about 2 today and that the Fourth Amendment and probable cause.
3 That is not quite -- Well, probable cause is noted by 4 Appellees in the course of their discussion. They have 5 not really made a separate Fourth Amendment challenge.

6 QUESTION: Do you think that is a requirement,
7 probable cause?

8 MRS. GORDON: I think that probable cause in the 9 sense of Gerstein, which we believe is met under this 10 statute, and in the sense of New York's further 11 requirement that there be an adversarial probable cause 12 hearing for these juvenile, which the prosecution has the 13 burden, that that probable cause requirement is well met 14 in this case. We do not suggest that an affirmative 15 finding of probable cause must be present at the time of 16 detention.

17 In other words, it is sufficient in our view 18 that it is provided and the child be given an opportunity 19 to negative it at the time of detention and that it is 20 there after found based on the prosecutor's burden.

21 In other words, it need not be simultaneously 22 affirmatively found.

23 QUESTION: Is there any other constitutional 24 limitations?

25 MRS. GORDON: Yes, Your Honor, absolutely, and

1 that arises from the existence of the detention or perhaps 2 if you want to call it conversely, the release statute 3 itself. And, that statute has a due process relation in 4 the same sense as any other statute that creates an 5 interest in property or liberty would have a due process 6 relation.

7 And the appropriate test for that statute is the 8 Mathews versus Eldridge test and it involves both 9 considerations of its permissibility under the due process 10 clause and the appropriate measure of the process that is 11 due which is exactly the issue we addressed in this case, 12 the principal issue we addressed in this case.

13 Returning to the statutory scheme, I think it is 14 significant that we know, first of all, who the person is 15 or who the child is that is involved. And, the juvenile, 16 according to New York law is -- the juvenile delinquent
17 under New York law is an individual who commits an act 18 between the ages of 7 and 16 which, if done by an adult, 19 would be a crime.

20 Under Section 302.2 of the Family Court Act, the 21 Family Court's jurisdiction is not quite so confined. A 22 juvenile who has done that conduct within the 7 to 16 age
23 range may be prosecuted in the Family Court until he is 20 24 if a designated felony is involved or until he is 18 if 25 another felony or misdemeanor is involved. A designated

1 felony is -- We provide a list of them for you at page 6
2 of our brief in the second footnote. It is essentially a
3 list of crimes allocated by age which permit a Family 4 Court judge sitting at disposition, which is the analog of 5 sentencing, to give an initial placement period of three 6 to five years which is somewhat higher than the 12 to 18
7 month initial placement period that is available for other 8 crimes.

9 The place at which -- The proceeding at which 10 detention may be considered is called an initial 11 appearance and if a child has been detained on an 12 emergency basis by an admitting detention authority, who 13 is represented here today by the New York City Department 14 of Juvenile Justice which is administered by Appellant, if 15 he has been admitted to such an agency on an emergency 16 basis, this initial appearance where detention may be 17 considered, must be on the next court day and never set 18 more than 72 hours later.

19 If the child has not been detained, in other 20 words he has been released by the police after his arrest, 21 his initial appearance is within ten days.

22 And, I call your attention to a new provision of 23 the statute, noting parenthetically that this juvenile 24 delinquency procedural code was recently amended and all 25 the amendments became effective last July. And, there are

1 some differences between the new law and the old law and 2 this is one of the differences.

3 QUESTION: Is the probable cause standard the 4 same?

5 MRS. GORDON: The probable cause standard is 6 exactly the same, Your Honor.

7 There is one difference, however, the police, on 8 releasing the child, must give him an appearance ticket 9 and the appearance ticket now must provide that in a 10 designated felony he must return to court within 72 hours 11 and in other cases, crimes charged, he must return within 12 14 days.

13 This makes some difference in looking at the 14 opinions below and in noting Appellees' brief, because one 15 of the assignments of error in this case is that somehow 16 the police decision to release a child rather than detain 17 him or bring him directly to the court, made, according to 18 the district judge and Appellees, the judge's decision, 19 who was sitting in that court later, error because he 20 decided to detain him and the gap in time between the time 21 the child was originally arrested and released and 22 ultimately appeared in court and when detained was pointed 23 out as an inadequacy in the statute, although, of course, 24 it relies on the police decision and not on the judge's 25 decision.

1 In any event, the new provision of the law now 2 restricts the time limit the child could possibly be on 3 the street if the police arrest him.

4 QUESTION: Do you think there are stronger 5 reasons to apply this restraint on juveniles than on 6 adults?

7 MRS. GORDON: Absolutely. I don't know whether 8 they are stronger, Your Honor. I think they are 9 different.

10 And, essentially they are as follows: Let us
11 assume that a state has an interest, a preventing crime
12 interest, which is universal. It applies to adults, it 13 applies to juveniles. The state has, with respect to that 14 juvenile, another interest which I would submit to you it 15 does not have, at least in the same form that it has with 16 respect to the juvenile, and that is child protective 17 interest. It is concern that a child at the formative 18 stages of his life not be engaged in a series of criminal 19 acts, lest that kind of anti-social behavior harm him 20 normative development. And, related to that, that he 21 should not be engaged in those criminal acts lest he 22 actually become physically harmed by them, namely, a 23 police officer shoots him. The liquor store that he is 24 holding up, the individual, the owner, not realizing that 25 he is only 14, thinking he is 18, acts immediately and

1 harms him. New York has those interests in the child. In 2 that sense, it has its parents' patria interest 3 which --

4 QUESTION: You are suggesting that liquor store
5 owners shoot people, I think, who are 18 but not 14?

6 (Laughter)

7 MRS. GORDON: I am sorry, Your Honor.

8 The point I was trying to make was that the 9 state has an interest in keeping the child harm free, and 10 while it may have some interest in that with respect to 11 adults, it has a stronger interest with respect to the 12 child. That is the only point.

13 In addition, Your Honor, we would also say that 14 the child's pre-trial interest in liberty is not the same 15 as an adult. The essence of being a child, of being an 16 unemancipated minor is dependence and custodial status.
17 Obviously, an adult does not have an absolute right to 18 freedom, that is certainly true, but he certainly has a 19 higher right than the child. So, those interests in 20 relation make what I would submit to you is a match in 21 favor of the state interest in preventive detention, 22 pre-trial preventive detention for juveniles, which match 23 might not turn out to be the same if one carried the 24 analog to the adult, to adult pre-trial --

25 QUESTION: But, the trouble is if you have got a

1 hardened criminal, you can deny him bail. But, the infant
2 doesn't get any benefit. He can be the most decent child 3 and committed one mistake and he goes.

4 MRS. GORDON: No, Your Honor, not quite.

5 QUESTION: I said he could go.

6 MRS. GORDON: Could go, right. It is true under 7 New York statute any --

8 QUESTION: Well, why that difference? Why not 9 give the child a chance, the same chance you give a grown 10 person?

11 MRS. GORDON: Well, it is equally true, Your 12 Honor, that a first offender, if that is the point, who 13 comes up for bail may be denied bail. At least in New 14 York that is true. Denied bail is a discretionary matter.

15 QUESTION: A first offender can be denied bail?

16 MRS. GORDON: A first offender may be denied 17 bail --

18 QUESTION: In New York?

19 MRS. GORDON: In New York except for -- 20 QUESTION: For petty larceny?

21 MRS. GORDON: No.

22 QUESTION: Well, all right.

23 MRS. GORDON: Petty larceny --

24 QUESTION: But, an infant can be held in jail 25 for petty larceny, first offense.

1 MRS. GORDON: That is correct.

2 QUESTION: There is a difference, isn't there?
3 Why the difference?

4 MRS. GORDON: That is correct. Whether --

5 QUESTION: On that one hypothetical.

6 MRS. GORDON: There is a further difference
7 which I think follows from my elaboration to the Chief
8 Justice and that is New York has a stronger interest, I 9 think, in preventing that juvenile from committing any 10 further crime than it perhaps has in the adult. The risk 11 to the juvenile from committing that crime is higher than 12 the adult charged with petty larceny.

13 And, perhaps more importantly --

14 QUESTION: Are you sure that a juvenile in the 15 average juvenile home is better off on not committing 16 another crime and not learning how to commit another
17 crime?

18 MRS. GORDON: Do you mean --

19 QUESTION: The average juvenile home is not as 20 conducive to good living as a home is, the average home.

21 MRS. GORDON: It depends a lot, as our detention 22 specialist said, and indeed the detention expert for the 23 City of the trial below, it depends a lot on the home, 24 Your Honor. If you are a child living on the streets, 25 then perhaps any home is better, and that is not to

1 suggest that there is anything wrong with the detention 2 facilities that we have.

3 I would call one other fact to your attention,
4 Your Honor. When I say that a juvenile accused of petty 5 larceny may be considered for detention, I say that 6 advisedly, because in the juvenile case histories that are 7 presented to you by the Appellees, there is at least -- I 8 believe at least two petty larcenists. None of them were 9 first offenders, Your Honor. They had records of seven, 10 six, five prior contacts with the Family Court.

11 QUESTION: Well, I do assume that in the City of 12 New York you have found at least one first offender 13 juvenile.

14 MRS. GORDON: Who was detained?

15 QUESTION: Well, are there any?

16 MRS. GORDON: These are Appellees' exhibits.
17 They were Petitioners' below. They --

18 QUESTION: Do you say there are no -- How do you 19 get the second offenders up there if you don't have any 20 first ones?

21 (Laughter)

22 QUESTION: Are you able to shed any light -- 23 What is the practice if you know with respect to first 24 offenders? Are they detained for shoplifting?

25 MRS. GORDON: First offenders are considered for

1 detention. For any detention, there must be facts and 2 reasons on the record that are developed at this hearing.

3 If we look at these hearings, at least so far as 4 we have them in the record, and we only have 34, we find 5 not merely criminal -- the commission of a crime, but as 6 Appellees' witness below, the psychiatric witness below, 7 Dr. Zinn testified, a pattern, associated character-
8 istics -- In other words we find a child who is charged 9 with committing a crime who is also not being supervised 10 at home, who, when he was arrested, lied to the police, 11 who is a truant at school. In other words, you find a 12 combination of associated characteristics which are called 13 a delinquent pattern.

14 Now, we do not have in this record, and so far 15 as we know from the information that we have, Mr. Chief 16 Justice, we don't have a single petty larcenist detained.
17 That is all we can say because the data is not assembled 18 any other way and Appellees, who are attempting to prove 19 their point, I assume, in showing us that there were minor 20 criminals who were detained who did not have records, did 21 not provide us with that information.

22 Just returning briefly to the statutory scheme, 23 at this initial appearance, the juvenile has all due 24 process rights that this Court has heretofore elaborated.
25 He is for a preliminary stage of a proceedings and indeed

1 some others. He is present, he is represented by counsel, 2 he has the right to remain silent, he has the right to 3 oppose any information offered against him, and he has the 4 right to offer information on his own behalf.

5 The judge, if he comes to the detention decision 6 at all, must pass through two release options, options for 7 conditional and unconditional release, much like the 8 Federal Bail Statute, one must pass through some 9 unconditional release options, much like the District of 10 Columbia Preventive Detention Statute where the judge must 11 also pass through some release options.

12 Judge Quinones, who testified below for the 13 state, indicated, I think quite eloquently, exactly how a 14 judge comes to this conclusion and that is -- He said, and 15 this a point of the application of the statute, Chief 16 Justice, he starts with absolutely no detention. In other 17 words, he starts essentially opposed to detention. If 18 then facts and circumstances are developed at this 19 hearing, then those facts and circumstances overcame or 20 may have overcome what Judge Quinones called the strong 21 presumption against detention.

22 QUESTION: I guess there are no statutory 23 requirements in that require under the New York scheme, is 24 that right, for what the judge has to consider?

25 MRS. GORDON: No. There are no additional

1 criteria, as Appellees call them, or guidelines for 2 decision making other than the standard itself which is 3 precise, serious risk of pre-trial crime.

4 QUESTION: What review is there of the Family
5 Court decision to detain a juvenile?

6 MRS. GORDON: The decision is reviewable by 7 several routes, generally by writ.

8 Now, Appellees say that this really is a 9 non-reviewable situation omitting to point out that most 10 of the appellate law with respect to juvenile delinquency 11 has been made by the progress of these writs up through 12 the courts and that New York takes a relaxed or quite 13 liberal view of the doctrine of capable of repetition, yet 14 evading review, and renders these decisions.

15 Indeed, the New York Court of Appeals decision 16 which upheld this very statute was on a writ.

17 And, they omit one other thing. In the juvenile 18 case histories that they brought to bear and introduced as 19 evidence, one, Tony Gomez, was released from pre-trial 20 detention by the writ that they suggest to you is not 21 available. So, there is a thorough going review.

22 QUESTION: Does the New York -- Go ahead.

23 QUESTION: I just wanted to know, you said there 24 were several mechanisms. What are the others?

25 MRS. GORDON: There is an appeal by commission

1 to the Appellate Division. There are motions for 2 reconsideration and I believe --

3 QUESTION: What about the probable cause
4 hearing? Won't that occur before anything else could 5 happen and it has to happen within six days, doesn't it?

6 MRS. GORDON: Correct.

7 QUESTION: That is reviewable.

8 MRS. GORDON: That is reviewable.

9 QUESTION: Wouldn't that always be -- If 10 probable cause isn't found, there is a release, isn't 11 there?

12 MRS. GORDON: That is correct.

13 QUESTION: So, really what is going to be 14 reviewed in all these proceedings by a writ is the finding 15 of probable cause, isn't it?

16 MRS. GORDON: No.

17 QUESTION: Well, why -- I would think by then 18 the probable cause -- By the time you can get a writ, the 19 probable cause hearing will go on.

20 MRS. GORDON: Well, that is exactly what 21 Appellees are saying. They are saying, well, this is 22 really non-reviewable because the issue of my detention 23 become moot, not necessarily a probable cause but a 24 fact-finding when the child is arguably convicted, which, 25 in New York if you are detained, it proceeds very quickly.

1 QUESTION: Well, by the time you could get a
2 writ wouldn't the probable cause hearing have been held?

3 MRS. GORDON: Yes, but the probable cause --

4 QUESTION: And, then there would have been a
5 release if there isn't probable cause.

6 MRS. GORDON: Yes, Your Honor, but as I was 7 indicating, these are two separate notions, one the Fourth
8 Amendment notion, and the other the detention standard.
9 The fact that there was probable cause found would not 10 necessarily mean that the detention was appropriate, that 11 the pre-trial detention was appropriate.

12 But, in any event, even if it were so construed, 13 New York --

14 QUESTION: But, it would mean that it couldn't 15 happen without probable cause.

16 MRS. GORDON: Certainly that is true. He 17 certainly couldn't stay in without the probable cause 18 hearing, but an affirmative finding of probable cause 19 doesn't necessarily cure a bad detention.

20 But, the New York State courts --

21 QUESTION: But, it helps.

22 MRS. GORDON: Yes, it does.

23 The New York State courts have not viewed the 24 detention issue as moot, thus we have in the Court of 25 Appeals the very case we have before you.

1 QUESTION: Right. But, when they review it, at 2 least for all practical purposes, there already has been a 3 finding of probable cause?

4 MRS. GORDON: Yes.

5 QUESTION: Okay.

6 MRS. GORDON: And, often a fact-finding, a 7 conviction.

8 QUESTION: Yes. Do you mean they will still 9 review if there has been a conviction?

10 MRS. GORDON: Yes.

11 QUESTION: For what purpose?

12 MRS. GORDON: To establish the appropriate
13 detention --

14 QUESTION: Just for the guidance for the future?

15 MRS. GORDON: Pardon me?

16 QUESTION: Because of the guidance for the 17 future?

18 MRS. GORDON: Exactly, guidance for the future 19 and because it is an issue capable of repetition, yet 20 evading review.

21 The child in People ex rel. Wayburn versus 22 Schupf was long convicted when the Court of Appeals 23 decided the issue.

24 There are relatively few remaining minutes and I
25 would like to come to -- I think we have at least touched

1 upon the first Mathews argument that Appellees advance 2 which goes to this balancing of interest that I was 3 elaborating for the Chief Justice before.

4 We believe that there are at least -- In 5 addition to their failure recess the second child 6 protective interest that is involved in the statute, and 7 their failure to note that there is a distinction between 8 a juvenile's interest in pre-trial liberty and an adult's 9 interest in pre-trial liberty.

10 When Appellees press this analysis they get to 11 a third error which is perhaps the most pervasive. And, 12 that is since they hypothecate that some group of crimes
13 must be excluded from this prevention detention statute 14 and they characterize them as trival crime, but they never 15 define what kinds of crimes they mean. Their weighing of 16 the state interest and the juvenile's interest in these 17 crimes that are to be excluded is, in fact, a false 18 weighing.

19 In other words, without knowing what kinds of 20 crimes Appellees have in mind, they never can assess the 21 importance of the state's interest in including them in a 22 detention standard, nor from the juvenile's interest in 23 pre-trial liberty in excluding them from the standard.
24 So, that when they say that the juvenile's interest 25 outweighs the state's interest, they really have not made

1 the requisite comparison or the one that Mathews requires.

2 In addition, the suggestion that some group of 3 crimes should be excluded from the statute turns out to 4 be, on the testimony of their own witness, the 5 criminologist below, to yield a worse statute than the 6 statute that is now on the books. It yields a worse
7 statute because, as their witness testified, the more you
8 qualify crimes, the more you require that somebody predict 9 a specific crime, which you would necessarily have to do 10 to exclude crime, the worse your prediction becomes.

11 In other words, your error rate increases with 12 every adjective or modification and with every 13 particularization. And, indeed, the easiest thing to 14 predict is the eventuation of crime and not particular 15 crime.

16 QUESTION: Attorney General, may I ask this 17 question?

18 MRS. GORDON: Surely.

19 QUESTION: What do we do about the fact that 20 both courts below found as a fact that the law was carried 21 out with unfettered discretion by the Family Court judges 22 and they decided against you on due process grounds?

23 MRS. GORDON: Well, that I don't find a problem 24 with.

25 QUESTION: You do?

1 MRS. GORDON: Because there was a question of 2 law. It is a question of law. In other words, they did 3 not find as a matter of fact that the law was administered 4 with unfettered discretion.

5 QUESTION: Well, they -- If I may interrupt you 6 again, it seemed to me that they concluded that whatever 7 might be said under Gerstein against Pugh which was a 8 Fourth Amendment probable cause case --

9 MRS. GORDON: Right.

10 QUESTION: -- that under the Fourteenth
11 Amendment there were no standards so that the Family Court 12 judges, in their own unfettered discretion, determined 13 when to detain these young people.

14 MRS. GORDON: I was about to -- Let me turn to 15 that argument and pick up with you and Justice O'Connor.
16 And that is that we have said, said at the outset of this 17 case that it is not guidelines for the decision making 18 that will make this statute constitutional. It is the 19 facts and reasons requirement and the stenographic record 20 which is the requirement that takes a standard and 21 translates it to a particular case. And, that is the 22 standard here. In other words, the stenographic record 23 and the facts and reasons requirement.

24 We said that Kent versus the United States
25 established that proposition and we adhere to it.

1 The converse proposition that Appellees are 2 arguing, namely, that guidelines for decision making, as 3 opposed to the facts and reasons requirement, somehow are 4 the thing that makes the statute constitutional, finds no
5 warrant in the law, and they cite us to no case which says
6 that guidelines, whether administrative or judicially -- 7 quasi judicially created in a legislative capacity of a 8 judiciary body, are what make the law constitutional.
9 There is no case like that.

10 Now, I think if we follow in terms of logic 11 exactly what results from guidelines as opposed to from 12 facts and reasons we have to conclude that what the court 13 said in Kent, namely, it is facts and reasons and not 14 guidelines, that that is the appropriate standard.

15 And, I point out the following: We cited in our 16 opening brief the prefatory nature of guidelines for bail
17 decisions, not the Federal Bail Statute and the New York 18 Bail Statute. Appellees don't challenge us on that at 19 all. They agree apparently that these are prefatory.
20 What is prefatory, Your Honor, seems to me cannot possibly 21 be constitutionally mandated.

22 Second, the existence of guidelines in no way 23 translates itself into the decision making process. For 24 example, if I were to take the seven general
25 considerations that Judge Quinones testified were common

1 in making these decisions and distribute them widely to 2 every judge -- every Family Court judge in New York State, 3 I would nonetheless be unable by that distribution to 4 guarantee that any judge would not write on his record, to 5 use the classic law school example, the boy was wearing a 6 red tie. In other words, the guidelines themselves don't 7 make the judge do anything.

8 Now, certainly the facts and reasons requirement 9 can result in an error here and there, but certainly that 10 requirement, the translation of the standard to the 11 record, is what protects the juvenile from unfettered 12 discretion.

13 Indeed, the guidelines allows exactly the same 14 kind of subjective decision making that Appellees are 15 arguing against because they don't won't the judge to do 16 anything. The facts and reasons requirement, in contrast, 17 do.

18 QUESTION: How can you measure due process
19 without guidelines?

20 MRS. GORDON: What do you mean, Your Honor, 21 guidelines? If I give you --

22 QUESTION: How can you -- Any kind of 23 guidelines, written, oral. Don't you have to have 24 guidelines to have due process?

25 MRS. GORDON: I have to have a relatively

1 certain standard.

2 QUESTION: Well, don't you have to have a
3 standard?

4 MRS. GORDON: I have to have a standard and I
5 have a standard here.

6 QUESTION: What is the standard?

7 MRS. GORDON: Risk, serious risk of pre-trial
8 crime. It is not suggested -- At least Appellees bring no 9 authority --

10 QUESTION: Is that all?

11 MRS. GORDON: That is -- And in the context, you 12 must understand, a post-arrest context where the conduct 13 is regulable in and of itself.

14 QUESTION: What else?

15 QUESTION: Is protection of the child a guide?

16 MRS. GORDON: Protection of the child certainly 17 is a guide. It is the state interest in the statute and 18 it does obviously guide the decision making.

19 But, for example -- Let me call your attention
20 to one example. The Judiciary Act of 1789, Your Honor, 21 had a provision in it that said defendants accused shall 22 be admitted to bail. That -- And that statute was 23 constitutional, Your Honor, and that didn't have any more 24 guidelines than that.

25 Now, the Kent statute --

1 QUESTION: Do you want me to give you some cases 2 where this Court said in due process you do have to have 3 guidelines? Do you need those?

4 MRS. GORDON: Your Honor, the question is what 5 is -- ,

6 QUESTION: You don't, do you?

7 MRS. GORDON: No, I don't think so, Your Honor,
8 but I am not --

9 QUESTION: Do you know of any other case that 10 the answer to the lack of due process is answered by you 11 don't need any guidelines?

12 MRS. GORDON: I -- To go to Mathews, Your Honor, 13 the weighing process and the risk of error analysis that 14 Mathews requires, the risk of error analysis -- I think, 15 as I have been trying to point out to you, that the 16 additional of guidelines in this case, just like the 17 addition of prefatory guidelines in a bail statute, no 18 more make that risk of error analysis better or worse.
19 In fact, they do almost nothing.

20 QUESTION: Well, let's put it this way. Does it 21 help?

22 MRS. GORDON: I don't know especially in light 23 of the fact that Judge Quinones --

24 QUESTION: I give up.

25 MRS. GORDON: -- that Judge Quinones testified

1 that there were common considerations, that the Second 2 Circuit found that there were common considerations, and 3 that Appellees now concede at page 67 and page 21 and 22
4 of their brief that there are common considerations that 5 are used --

6 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Your time has expired
7 now, counsel.

8 MRS. GORDON: Thank you.

9 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Guggenheim?

10 ORAL ARGUMENT OF MARTIN GUGGENHEIM
11 ON BEHALF OF THE APPELLEES

12 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it 13 please the Court:

14 The issue in this case is an important one which 15 permits the Court to answer the question left open in re 16 Gault, whether the Constitution has a role to play in 17 protecting juveniles from inappropriate deprivation of 18 liberty before their trials.

19 To ask the question is to answer it. In this 20 case the decision to detain before trial is an important 21 one in any criminal justice system, but it is especially 22 important in the juvenile system.

23 The time between arraignment and trial has been 24 recognized by this Court to be the most critical time in 25 the trial process. Detention for juveniles, as this

1 record amply supports, is even worse for young offenders.

2 QUESTION: Why is it worse for young offenders?

3 MR. GUGGENHEIM: As the record supports, it can 4 traumatize them -- Actually I used the wrong phrase when I 5 said offenders -- young persons accused of crime. It is 6 the needless detention. If they didn't need to be 7 detained in the first place, it is worse for them than for 8 adults. It is their first experience very often away from 9 their home and loved ones. It can disrupt their school 10 setting and their opportunity for advancement. This 11 record shows it has done that to prejudice individuals.

12 QUESTION: Does the record show how many first 13 offenders or at least persons brought for the first time 14 before the juvenile court are detained on that basis?

15 MR. GUGGENHEIM: There were two kinds of record,
16 two parts of the record that are relevant. One are the 34
17 case histories. Of them, nine juveniles had never before
18 been arrested and brought before the court. Seventeen -- 19 Twenty-three of the juveniles had never had any prior 20 adjudication whatsoever. So, there is a powerful record 21 to demonstrate that this is applied to people arrested for 22 the first time.

23 QUESTION: Is there a report in the nature of 24 probation report presented before the decision is made?

25 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Yes. There was testimony at

1 trial by Hubert Benjamin, a probation officer of 30 years
2 experience, who testified that the juvenile will be 3 interviewed for from ten to forty-five minutes prior to 4 the initial appearance. And, during that interview, the 5 probation officer will ask the juvenile questions, 6 including what were you doing at the time you were 7 arrested, what got you involved in this offense. And,
8 based on that interview, ten to forty-five minutes, make a 9 recommendation to the court whether to parole or to detain 10 the juvenile pre-trial.

11 It has been applied countless times to juveniles 12 who have never before been arrested, to juveniles who have 13 never before been convicted, and, as the record 14 demonstrates, to juveniles overwhelmingly the number of 15 times who are accused of only minor offenses.

16 And, detention along with adults --

17 QUESTION: When you say minor offenses, Mr.
18 Guggenheim, can you give us some example of what 19 specifically you are talking about?

20 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Yes. In the record one example 21 was a juvenile who was playing a game called "Three Card 22 Monte," a gambling game in violation of the New York 23 gambling law. He was detained before trial. Another was 24 a juvenile --

25 QUESTION: What was the character of the New

1 York offense which he violated?

2 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Gambling law.

3 QUESTION: What, a misdemeanor?

4 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Yes, a misdemeanor.

5 The record also shows that 33 percent -- New 6 York, of course, categorizes by Felony A to E and then 7 Misdemeanor A and B. Misdemeanor is punishable by one 8 year for A's and B's six months. Thirty-three percent of 9 the Vera Justice study of accused juveniles were 10 accused -- Thirty-three percent of those brought on 11 charges of the misdemeanors were detained before trial.

12 QUESTION: Now, what is the upper limit of the 13 punishment of an adult on a B misdemeanor?

14 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Six months.

15 QUESTION: Six months.

16 QUESTION: And, your clients were detained for 17 what crimes?

18 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Well, my clients is the whole
19 class.

20 QUESTION: The named class representatives.

21 MR. GUGGENHEIM: They were accused of more 22 serious offenses, but they were only --

23 QUESTION: Armed robbery and what else?

24 MR. GUGGENHEIM: One was armed robbery. One was 25 attempted murder.

1 QUESTION: Yes.

2 MR. GUGGENHEIM: But, of course, they only
3 represent the class -- The class, as the briefs clearly 4 show, are all juveniles in the state who were eligible for 5 detention and all juveniles in the state who were accused 6 of being delinquent are eligible for detention.

7 QUESTION: One wouldn't have to reach out to the 8 unnamed class member, the "Three Card Monte" defendant, to 9 adjudicate the cases of your clients, would they, an armed 10 robber potentially and an attempted murder?

11 MR. GUGGENHEIM: One would not have to reach out 12 to them to what end? The question in this case is whether 13 this statute is constitutional.

14 QUESTION: But, underlying the presentation of 15 your case to the Second Circuit, I gather, was the 16 assumption that there couldn't be any sort of an 17 individualized consideration or whether this statute as 18 applied to certain people might be constitutional and 19 unconstitutional as to others. What is unconstitutional 20 about applying this statute to the particular named people 21 in this case?

22 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Several things, but before I 23 give an answer, I would like to point out that that is 24 only a third or a half of the question about the case, 25 because the case --

1 QUESTION: Why don't we try it with that third 2 or that half?

3 MR. GUGGENHEIM: The broadest issue raised
4 before this Court is whether detaining and individual 5 accused of even serious offenses before he or she has had 6 a day in court, presumptively innocent, because of a 7 belief that the individual will commit more crime if 8 released, thereby assuming the individual has already done 9 something wrong, violates the due process clause.

10 QUESTION: The Second Circuit didn't answer that 11 question.

12 MR. GUGGENHEIM: That is right. The Second 13 Circuit --

14 QUESTION: So, why is it before this Court?

15 MR. GUGGENHEIM: It is before this Court, in 16 answer to your question, because it is an issue in the 17 case which goes to this point. Even if this statute 18 contained the kind of standards and criteria which might 19 permit a court to detain an individual before trial, 20 comporting with the due process clause in the Mathews and 21 Eldridge test, the question would still remain, may a 22 court detain an individual before trial or is that 23 punishment before trial?

24 QUESTION: Well, you are saying then that 25 because the standards may be unsuitable or perhaps

1 unconstitutional for a "Three Card Monte" defendant, your 2 clients were armed robbers and attempted murders can't be 3 detained under it because of some overbreadth concept?

4 MR. GUGGENHEIM: No. With all respect, my 5 client is the "Three Card Monte" accused as much as to the 6 same extent as --

7 QUESTION: Who are the named parties in the 8 case?

9 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Martin, Rosario --

10 QUESTION: What are they charged with?

11 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Justice O'Connor identified 12 charges correctly, but --

13 QUESTION: Okay.

14 MR. GUGGENHEIM: -- they are not my only 15 clients.

16 QUESTION: Well, you are saying that the named 17 parties can't be held under this statute because it is 18 unconstitutional as to a "Three Card Monte" defendant. Is 19 that what you are saying?

20 MR. GUGGENHEIM: No. I am saying that we have 21 proven that the Appellees class has had its rights
22 violated under the Constitution.

23 QUESTION: What rights of the named plaintiffs 24 in this case have been violated?

25 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Well, if this were not a class

1 action, the question would be could Mr. Martin challenge 2 this statute because arguably it could be invoked or 3 permits detention for crimes that he hasn't been accused 4 of.

5 I don't believe though that the law of class
6 action limits the Court in any way to that inquiry.

7 QUESTION: Well, it certainly doesn't prevent us
8 from addressing the question of the standing of the named 9 plaintiffs to represent the rest of the class and to at 10 least determine -- I would think you at least start out 11 with the status of the named members of the class. The 12 class action may be a good deal broader, but certainly you 13 don't ignore the status of the named members of the class.

14 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Well, I think that once a
15 class --

16 QUESTION: Let me put the question to you
17 another way. Your suggestion, it sounds to me, is that 18 because a class has been certified, the Court must 19 adjudicate the statute on its face rather than as applied
20 to A, B, C, or D. I would think the class action
21 certification wouldn't prevent the Court from saying, 22 well, this statute is perfectly all right as applied to 23 the named plaintiffs. It is unconstitutional as to this 24 lawyer's other clients.

25 MR. GUGGENHEIM: That may be right, Justice

1 White.

2 QUESTION: Well, is it right or not?

3 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Well, my point is that the 4 inquiry as applied includes the as applied in this record.

5 It would be moot for this Court to consider the question

6 of whether the statute was applied fairly to Martin --

7 QUESTION: Well, we might --

8 MR. GUGGENHEIM: -- who is already over 16.

9 QUESTION: Well, we might come out with 10 completely different answers as to how -- as to its 11 constitutionality as applied to the named plaintiffs and 12 as applied to the "Three Card Monte" plaintiff.

13 MR. GUGGENHEIM: But, both were detained under 14 the same statute, so I --

15 QUESTION: Oh, all right.

16 MR. GUGGENHEIM: -- would now answer --

17 QUESTION: Then you are attacking the statute on 18 its face.

19 MR. GUGGENHEIM: And, that is exactly the 20 action.

21 QUESTION: We don't have to do that.

22 QUESTION: We don't have an overbreadth doctrine

23 for criminal procedural statute. The overbreadth

24 doctrine, facial attacks, involve only First Amendment

25 situations.

1 MR. GUGGENHEIM: This isn't an overbreadth
2 attack in the way that it is in the classic First 3 Amendment case. This is an attack on a statute which says
4 that the depriving individuals of liberty in the absence 5 of any standard, not because of absence of notice to the 6 accused, but because the statute has been and can be 7 applied inappropriately is unconstitutional.

8 QUESTION: Well, that argument goes just as well
9 to your clients as to the other members of the class. I 10 agree with that.

11 MR. GUGGENHEIM: I can finally answer the 12 question Justice Rehnquist put to me by saying that even 13 the named plaintiffs have a proper attack on this statute 14 by arguing that the absence of standards in this scheme 15 render the statute unconstitutional on its face and as 16 applied to them.

17 But, this is not an as applied case. This 18 record was an attempt to show, as the New York Court of 19 Appeals agreed, although finding it constitutional, that 20 this statute contains no criteria that would require a 21 court to make a finding one way or another. It is up to 22 the court's unfettered discretion each and every time.
23 That is true for Martin.

24 QUESTION: Okay. But, apart from adjudicating 25 the case of Martin, the court may not be required to make

1 a finding, but it makes perfectly sensible findings that 2 he is apt to commit another crime. Now, the statute may 3 be unconstitutional as applied to somebody else with 4 respect to whom different findings have been made. What 5 is unconstitutional about that?

6 MR. GUGGENHEIM: This statute contains no
7 precisely drawn standards.

8 QUESTION: Well, so what? What case says you 9 have to have precisely drawn standards when you can 10 examine the way a statute is administered on a 11 case-by-case basis?

12 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Well, okay. That leads to 13 another infirmity in this statute. Its very existence 14 permits the deprivation of liberty without meaningful 15 review.

16 Martin couldn't obtain. The "Three Card Monte" 17 offender couldn't obtain it.

18 QUESTION: Well, Martin is getting it right now.

19 MR. GUGGENHEIM: I would respectfully disagree.
20 If that is the Court's view, the case is moot. Martin has 21 been convicted, he is no longer under 16, the statute is 22 no way capable of repetition as to him. The very nature 23 of this case is that it is an on-going problem.

24 QUESTION: You used the word "convicted." Has 25 he been convicted as an adult or as --

1 MR. GUGGENHEIM: No. Adjudicated, sentenced, 2 sentence fully served, and he is now 19 years of age and 3 his particular facts, I respectfully submit, are not 4 dispositive in any way respecting the broad reach of this 5 statute or its unconstitutionality.

6 QUESTION: Well, I suggest to you you may not 7 want an adjudication. If all you want is an adjudication 8 on space and we find that in some circumstances this 9 statute is perfectly constitutionally applied, you lose 10 your entire case. It just isn't unconstitutional on its 11 face. Then I would think you would want us to say, well, 12 it is unconstitutional as applied to other people in your 13 class, other members of your class.

14 MR. GUGGENHEIM: But, they are part of the 15 record in every sense.

16 QUESTION: I understand that part of your 17 argument certainly goes to a facial challenge even with 18 respect to the named plaintiffs and everybody else like 19 them. I understand that. But, we may not agree with you 20 on that.

21 MR. GUGGENHEIM: This statute is a textbook 22 example of a statute without standards. Any juvenile is 23 eligible for detention. The record shows that most 24 juveniles detained not only were accused of minor 25 offenses --

1 QUESTION: What if a state -- What if the 2 federal government or the state, in order to implement its 3 constitutional requirements of bail, says unreasonable
4 bail shall not be required? Now, what kind of a standard 5 is that?

6 MR. GUGGENHEIM: The --

7 QUESTION: Sometimes you just adjudicate
8 individual cases under that standard. No standards other 9 than reasonableness.

10 MR. GUGGENHEIM: The question of bail is a very 11 different one. With respect to the standards, there is an 12 overlap, but with respect to the basis for detention, what 13 goes to the heart of the infirmity of this scheme is that 14 the prediction or the reason for the detention is not that 15 someone won't return to court, which is the bail basis, 16 but that someone will commit a crime if released. That 17 goes to the heart of what the court has to find or presume 18 in order to detain.

19 We claim that this statute has no standards in 20 several respects, but among them is that the court is not 21 limited in a finding of substantial probability that the 22 individual committed the offense of which he or she is 23 accused, no finding of probable cause, no finding of 24 probable conviction or sentence.

25 QUESTION: With your argument I would take it

1 would go to adults as well as juveniles, to the same
2 statute, the same vagueness.

3 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Not with bail but with 4 preventive detention.

5 QUESTION: Yes.

6 MR. GUGGENHEIM: It is inconceivable to me, as 7 this Court said in Kent against the United States, that a 8 court of justice dealing with adults with respect to a 9 similar issue would proceed in this manner. There is no 10 such state --

11 QUESTION: Kent wasn't a constitutional case, 12 was it?

13 MR. GUGGENHEIM: No. I am simply making the 14 point of the language of the opinion. It was 15 inconceivable to this Court that the District of Columbia 16 would deal with adults, that any state would the way they 17 dealt with juveniles. That is the argument here.
18 Inconceivable that a state would deprive an individual of 19 liberty on the unfettered, open-ended discretion that it 20 can do so in this case.

21 QUESTION: You mean you don't know of any 22 jurisdictions around that are considering prevention 23 statutes for adults?

24 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Yes, I do, but to contrast 25 that --

1 QUESTION: What do you mean you do? You do know 2 some?

3 MR. GUGGENHEIM: I know of one in this district, 4 for example. And, in Hunt against Roth, although the 5 Court struggled with the meaning of the phrase, proof is 6 evident and presumption great, in both schemes the 7 legislature required as a sine qua non that there be a 8 finding that the individual probably committed the crime, 9 a substantial likelihood, that it be limited to very 10 serious offenders.

11 QUESTION: Well, wouldn't you be here making the 12 same argument if the judge or the officer in the first 13 instance before he had to make a finding of probable 14 cause? That is a great standard too.

15 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Well, yes, it is. Yes, it is, 16 Your Honor.

17 QUESTION: Well, would you be here making
18 exactly the same argument?

19 MR. GUGGENHEIM: I would for this reason. The 20 Mathews and Eldridge test --

21 QUESTION: The answer is, yes, you would be 22 making the argument.

23 MR. GUGGENHEIM: But, only in this sense. It is 24 a flexible test. What is due process? The question is is 25 the mere finding of probable cause enough? I would be

1 here saying no. Add to that, limited to the Martin fact 2 pattern, accused of attempted murder, limited to a showing 3 of substantial probability of ultimate placement, clear 4 and convincing evidence of the ultimate fact that the 5 person is likely to have committed a crime, raise the 6 standard of proof. Add them together and I think Mathews 7 is met and detention is not arbitrary assuming the second 8 argument would be reached adversely to our case which is 9 that detention before trial itself is punishment for that 10 purpose.

11 I clearly put that argument aside to say I
12 would be here if the only thing New York did was add 13 probable cause. But, New York not only doesn't have 14 probable cause, it has no standard of proof. It is 15 applied to everybody.

16 QUESTION: But, very quickly it has it.

17 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Yes, but the limit of detention 18 in no way mitigates the massive curtailment of liberty 19 that this Court finds to be at the heart of the due 20 process clause. It interferes with preparation for trial, 21 it increases the probability of conviction, it increase 22 the probability of ultimate placement. The record 23 demonstrates all of those things overwhelmingly and in an 24 undisputed way. So, the mere 17-day detention is only the 25 tip of the iceberg in its effect adverse to the person's

1 liberty interest.

2 QUESTION: But, there is no possibility of 3 conviction here.

4 MR. GUGGENHEIM: I am using the word not in its 5 technical sense. Adjudication and placement. There is no 6 possibility of conviction.

7 One of the other irrational aspects of this 8 case -- and I could answer this in another way, Justice
9 Rehnquist, to the Martin and Rosario fact pattern, 10 although I frankly think the case is much broader than 11 that -- that juveniles accused of the most serious 12 offenses from 13 to 16 are prosecuted in New York as 13 juvenile offenders in the adult court. For them 14 preventive detention may not be applied.

15 Similarly, juveniles -- Persons 16 to 18, which 16 in most states are juveniles, but not in New York, are not 17 eligible for preventive detention.

18 QUESTION: Well, the first example may simply 19 vindicate your opponent's view that New York regards its 20 parents' patria role with the children as being involved 21 to a certain extent in the detention.

22 MR. GUGGENHEIM: I cannot explain the 23 irrationality of the scheme I have just described. But, 24 the record is plain, from Judge Quinones to every piece of 25 datum in this record, that the purpose of this detention

1 is singular. It is to protect the community from crime in 2 the interim. That is its only purpose and there is not 3 dispute about that.

4 Now, one of our claims in this case is that it
5 is punishment before trial and I would very briefly like 6 to explain that argument.

7 This constitutes an affirmative restraint
8 imposed by the state for a purpose historically regarded 9 as punishment, incapacitation. In United States against 10 Brown and Kennedy against Mendoza-Martinez this Court has 11 plainly held that.

12 This comes into play only because the individual 13 is accused of wrongdoing and it is applied to behavior 14 which is already a crime.

15 The state may not detain individuals before 16 trial because of a belief that they will commit a crime in 17 the interim before their conviction. But, if they may, it 18 is plain that any exception to the general rule that 19 incarceration follow rather than precede adjudications of 20 guilt can be justified, if at all, by a compelling state 21 interest. There is none in this case. The only and lame 22 justification for the scheme presented by the state is 23 that the facts and reasons requirement of this statute 24 make up for all of the absences of procedural due process 25 protections.

1 That requirement of facts and reasons was put 2 into this statute by the legislature, as the Attorney 3 General in his brief at page 36 points out, solely so that 4 the legislature could see how the statute was operating.
5 There is no question that there is no meaningful 6 opportunity to review the detention decision made by the 7 judge even with the facts and reasons.

8 QUESTION: How about habeas?

9 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Habeas is available as a 10 theoretical remedy, but when a judge has before him or her 11 a case in which the other side, the state, says, Your 12 Honor, the statute says that the court may detain when it 13 finds a serious risk and it has found so in this case and 14 stated its reasons and facts on the record, that ends the 15 inquiry. Not a single case has been uncovered by the 16 state or by the Appellees to show release of a juvenile 17 for violation of the statute of detention when the facts 18 and reasons were given on the record.

19 I have litigated countless habeas corpus cases, 20 a decision in the record, but one does not win unless the 21 violation was that the court said go to jail without --

22 QUESTION: What happens in the counties outside 23 of New York where the judge is not a juvenile court judge, 24 he is a regular judge?

25 MR. GUGGENHEIM: No, he is a juvenile court

1 judge. He is sometimes what they call a three hatter and 2 sits as judge of three courts. But, when he is sitting a 3 juvenile court judge, that is his role.

4 QUESTION: Is that the judge that is going to 5 get a writ of habeas?

6 MR. GUGGENHEIM: I don't know --

7 QUESTION: Against himself? Against himself?

8 MR. GUGGENHEIM: I doubt that, but I frankly 9 don't know.

10 But, certainly in New York different judges sit, 11 but the point is it is an illusory -- And, as the 12 legislature said, we want to see a review of the scheme, 13 but it doesn't meaningfully protect.

14 Justice White is quite right, as the process 15 moves along, the individuals in detentions, that is the 16 way it works.

17 QUESTION: Mr. Guggenheim, you made an equal 18 protection claim below as well.

19 QUESTION: Oh, yes.

20 MR. GUGGENHEIM: We believe as a basic point
21 that if this Court does not find that this statute 22 violates due process of law, it almost certainly does not 23 violate equal protection of the law. We have abandoned 24 that claim at this time.

25 We think that the heart of our case is that this

1 statute cannot withstand scrutiny. We think as a 2 bottom-line point detention before trial for the purposes 3 envisioned by this statute offend for other reasons the 4 due process clause. It is not necessary for the the Court
5 to decide this case to reach that other issue. But, if it 6 is to reach that other issue, we submit that this is a 7 classic example of utilizing the statute in the wrong way.

8 Most of the juveniles who are detained are 9 ultimately released home. The vast bulk are released home 10 and half are never even convicted.

11 QUESTION: Is it possible also that a class 12 action was not the appropriate way to approach this 13 problem?

14 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Frankly, Your Honor, it is the 15 only way to approach this problem.

16 QUESTION: Not a case by case?

17 MR. GUGGENHEIM: There is no Article 3 case or 18 controversy. I have litigated this case in different 19 manner since 1973 in the state courts. Now, when you come 20 into the federal court to challenge this, if you don't 21 have a class action, your clients group up and they grow
22 out of the age -- This isn't even a Hunt v. Roth case 23 where you can say, well, when you are released from 24 prison, you may ultimately be rearrested assuming you 25 don't get life.

1 Here, when they are 16, they are out of the 2 jurisdiction. It is incapable of repetition. It is only 3 by the device of class action that we can litigate it.
4 And, the identity of the plaintiff is relevant only to the 5 inquiry, I submit, of whether a class action is properly
6 certified. Once it is properly certified, and in this 7 case it would be all juveniles eligible for detention, 8 then the "Three Card Monte" detainee is as important an 9 example as the Martin example.

10 We have evidence in this record that judges base 11 their decision to detain on the political climate of the 12 situation, of how much media attention a case gets. One 13 judge's policy, perfectly lawful under this statute, 14 reviewable by writ or otherwise, to detain all juveniles 15 who are accused of an offense in which a gun was involved.
16 That is in the record.

17 Now, that may be lawful with a statute which has 18 a showing of a standard of proof and a probable cause and 19 likelihood of conviction and other protections. This 20 statute lacks all of the essential protections which the 21 Constitution requires in the due process clause.

22 What is nice about this case, if I may, is that 23 affirmance is going to improve a system of justice which 24 this Court on numerous occasions has condemned for its 25 failure to live up to its ultimate promise. What is wrong

1 with juvenile justice in part, this Court has noted on 2 many occasions, is that it fails to deter and it often 3 fails to rehabilitate. Every major study of juvenile 4 justice shows in full conformity with this record that the 5 vast majority of juveniles are punished, if at all, before 6 their trial.

7 QUESTION: Could bail be required, reasonable 8 bail be required?

9 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Yes. New York, in its wisdom, 10 has not imposed such a requirement and we think frankly 11 that that is sensible in many ways because there are laws 12 that --

13 QUESTION: It may be that my question is would 14 it be constitutional to require bail before there is 15 release?

16 MR. GUGGENHEIM: I think it would be 17 constitutional.

18 QUESTION: Reasonable bail?

19 MR. GUGGENHEIM: Well, now you are asking me the 20 same question as before. Is that standard itself
21 constitutional?

22 QUESTION: I thought you were making an argument 23 that -- bordering on an argument that you shouldn't be 24 able to detain juveniles at all.

25 MR. GUGGENHEIM: No, I am not making that

1 argument. I am saying that this Court can comfortably 2 affirm in the knowledge that it will result in fewer 3 juveniles being punished before their trial, but not in 4 fewer juveniles being detained when there is a need to 5 bring them to court for their trial when there is a risk 6 of flight because they are elibilbe for detention under a 7 statute not being charged.

8 Since 1981, in June, this statute has been 9 enjoined in New York. It hasn't been operating, and yet 10 arrest statistics show that the arrest rate is down.
11 There is not compelling state reason to justify this 12 statute. There is a strong policy reason to overrule this 13 statute so that juveniles will be detained in conformity 14 with the Constitution after they have been proven guilty 15 beyond a reasonable doubt and not before.

16 If there are no further question --

17 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, counsel, the 18 case is submitted.

19 (Whereupon, at 3:02 p.m., the case in the 20 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
