1 rules, regulations, and procedures to carry out the Social 2 Security Act.

3 The further issue is whether the Secretary acted 4 arbitrarily and capriciously in not promulgating mandatory
5 time limits.

6 We urge that the critical point here is this:
7 Both congress and the Secretary looked long and hard at 8 whether mandatory time limits should be imposed. Both 9 concluded that mandatory time limits would tend to 10 undermine the effective operation of the Social Security 11 disability system.

12 QUESTION: I take it, Mr. McGrath, you
13 acknowledge that the Secretary has the power to issues 14 regulations imposing such effort.

15 MR. MC GRATH: Yes, we do, Justice Blackmun.

16 In that context, we urge that it was totally 17 inappropriate for the District Court to overrule the 18 policy choice made by Congress and the Secretary.

19 The Social Security disability system is a very 20 complex management problem and there are three reasons for 21 this. One is that the number of claims has been rapidly
22 expanding. There were more than two million disability 23 claims last year.

24 The second thing is that many of these claims 25 present very difficult physical and mental and economic

1 issues, especially since many of the claimants themselves 2 are unable to present their claims effectively because of 3 their very situation.

4 And, third, and perhaps most troublesome as a 5 management matter, the statute gives the Secretary three 6 quite conflicting mandates. One is to pay claimants who 7 are eligible as quickly as possible.

8 But, secondly, given the dollars involved in the 9 program, it is equally important that claimants not 10 entitled to benefits not be paid.

11 And, finally, the Secretary is under an 12 obligation to conduct the program as fairly and accurately 13 and uniformly as possible.

14 Over the last ten years, Congress and the 15 Secretary have wrestled with how best to manage the 16 program given these conflicting concerns. Each of them 17 has considered on a number of occasions the imposition of 18 mandatory time limits and each has decided against such 19 imposition, even though they recognized that that would 20 undoubtedly result in faster decisions in many cases, they 21 also recognized that it almost certainly would result in 22 many more wrong ones.

23 First, I would like to focus on what Congress
24 did. For one thing, Congress, on a number of occasions, 25 has amended the Social Security Act in a manner that is

1 inconsistent with any intent to impose mandatory time
2 limits, and I want to mention just two instances.

3 One is that when it established the Supplemental 4 Security Income program, the SSI program, which is part of 5 the Social Security system, it had put into the statute
6 the same reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing
7 requirement.

8 In addition, however, in that case, it put in a 9 90-day requirement for ALJ hearings, but most 10 interestingly, it exempted from that requirement 11 disability cases.

12 It is our position that the inclusion of a 13 90-day requirement as to the SSI program, but the 14 exemption from that of disability claims is clear
15 indication that when Congress intended to impose time 16 limits, it knew how to do so and did do so --

17 QUESTION: Mr. McGrath, in that connection did 18 Congress do something about interim payments?

19 MR. MC GRATH: It has done something about 20 interim payments in connection with the Title II program.
21 Several years ago it imposed interim payments where a 22 claimant's disability payments are being discontinued. It 23 imposed such interim payments at the reconsideration stage 24 and it is our position that Congress' imposition of 25 interim benefits for that narrow class of disability

1 claims, Title II claims, is a further indication that 2 Congress did not intend the broad kind of interim relief
3 imposed by the District Court.

4 QUESTION: What is the present status
5 legislatively of that interim program?

6 MR. MC GRATH: That interim program actually 7 expires, I believe, at the end of this month, but starting 8 next year some new rules apply at the reconsideration 9 stage including hearings, de novo type hearings that were 10 not required prior to this time.

11 QUESTION: Mr. McGrath, if the Court of Appeals 12 in this case had granted relief only to the individual 13 Plaintiff, Mr. Day, would you be here?

14 MR. MC GRATH: We would probably not be here in 15 this sense, Justice O'Connor, that this case may not have 16 been cert worthy and we may not have petitioned for cert.
17 But --

18 QUESTION: Would the Court have had the power 19 and authority in your view to order relief for an 20 individual plaintiff in the nature of saying you have to 21 complete your work within "X" number of days and, 22 furthermore, you can have interim relief?

23 MR. MC GRATH: We believe not on the facts of 24 this case. It is possible that you could have an extreme 25 case where a claimant could prove that the Social Security

1 Administrator had simply put that case on the back burner, 2 refused to act on it, and mandamus might be appropriate.

3 QUESTION: Well, do you agree that Section
4 405(b) gives a claimant a right to a hearing within a 5 reasonable time?

6 MR. MC GRATH: No, Justice O'Connor, not in so
7 many terms. We believe that the Secretary has a broad 8 obligation to run the program as expeditiously as 9 possible, but that that obligation also -- That overlaying 10 that operation --

11 QUESTION: Well, does it impose an obligation of 12 any kind on the Secretary to grant an administrative law 13 judge hearing within a reasonable time?

14 MR. MC GRATH: It does on an overall basis. The 15 Secretary is required, we believe and we concede, on an 16 overall basis to try to conduct hearings as rapidly as 17 possible. The problem is, as Congress --

18 QUESTION: Well, how rapid is that in Vermont?

19 MR. MC GRATH: In Vermont, it really --

20 QUESTION: In the face of the District Court 21 findings of fact.

22 MR. MC GRATH: Well, if you look at the District
23 Court findings of fact on -- Let's take administrative law 24 judge claims, hearings, all the Court found was that in 25 approximately 47 percent cases were not decided within 90

1 days.

2 QUESTION: I thought it also found that in 3 Vermont there were enough administrative law judges to go 4 around and the case load was pretty small and, therefore, 5 it was easily handled within a 90-day interval, 6 particularly because the errors that it found were simply 7 errors of judgment, if you will.

8 MR. MC GRATH: At the ALJ stage, the Court did 9 not rely on any errors. It just relied on the percentage 10 of cases that took more than 90 days.

11 And, the problem is, as Congress has noted over 12 and over again, many cases simply take a longer period of 13 time to develop the facts. In many cases, perhaps the 14 claimant has not really been able to make out a claim, but 15 as Justice Brennan noted last year in the Campbell 16 decision, the agency still has an obligation to try to 17 develop the facts itself to see whether there is a valid 18 claim. Many times that involves additional medical or 19 vocational or other information.

20 In Day's case itself, he had not made out a 21 claim. It was only after a quality review proceeding with 22 the Social Security Administration that additional 23 neurological tests were ordered which eventually resulted 24 in his being able to establish a claim. That is the 25 point.

1 As Congress most recently noted in 1982 in the 2 hearing -- in the congressional report that accompanied 3 one of the bills that eventually was enacted in '82, in 4 many cases, take a longer period of time. And the 5 problem with mandatory time limits is that they, by their 6 very nature, are arbitrary and do not permit the 7 additional work in cases where that work needs to be done.

8 QUESTION: Well, I guess the Court tried to 9 fashion various exceptions to its order to cover most of 10 those situations.

11 MR. MC GRATH: But, the problem with the Court's 12 order is this: It does not recognize the dynamics of the 13 situation. For example, the Court ordered that ALJ 14 hearings be held within 90 days. This did not take into 15 account that many times the administrative law judge would 16 want additional medical or vocational information. He 17 can't conduct the exams himself. He needs the help of 18 others and frequently that takes time.

19 It did not take into account that many times the 20 facts are difficult to come by and they are not acquired 21 within 90 days. It did not take into account the fact 22 that the facts change. We are talking about disability, 23 on-going disability situations where the important thing 24 is what are the facts at the time. And, many times at the 25 administrative law judge stage those facts have changed

1 and that may not be apparent until before the hearing.

2 What the Court did is that Court said, well, 3 yes, if it has been the fault of the claimant, then the 4 90-day period does not bar the Secretary. The problem 5 with that is there are a whole host of other factors that 6 could cause a delay and the Court did not take those into 7 account.

8 QUESTION: Mr. McGrath, is the hearing de novo
9 at the administrative law judge stage?

10 MR. MC GRATH: Yes, it is.

11 QUESTION: And, that is the second de novo 12 hearing the claimant has had?

13 MR. MC GRATH: Well, the hearing at the -- What 14 happens at the state level stage is not as full -- Is not 15 as full an evidentiary hearing as it is at the ALJ stage.

16 QUESTION: It is characterized as a de novo
17 hearing.

18 MR. MC GRATH: It is characterized as a de novo 19 hearing because of the fact that it is a de novo review of 20 the state's original finding, yes.

21 QUESTION: Has Congress ever considered whether 22 it is really necessary to have, first of all, that many 23 hearings and, secondly, two de novo hearings?

24 MR. MC GRATH: Well, Congress has considered
25 that on a number of occasions and, indeed, as I indicated

1 in response to an earlier question, has actually required 2 a new, so-called face-to-face hearing at the 3 reconsideration stage, particularly in the case of 4 claimants whose disability benefits are being withdrawn.
5 And, I believe the theory was that as to those cases there 6 is a particular concern that the case be made out as best 7 as it can at an early stage so that a claimant can be kept 8 on the disability system where he or she has come to rely 9 on the Social Security.

10 QUESTION: What is the average case load of the 11 administrative law judges?

12 MR. MC GRATH: The average case load of the 13 administrative law judges is over 200 cases per 14 administrative law judge. That average case load has been 15 increasing over the last ten years. In fact, the number 16 of requested hearings has gone from about 70,000 in 1974 17 to about 350,000 this year.

18 But, during that period of time, the Secretary 19 has about doubled the number of administrative law judges 20 from about 400 to about 800.

21 I think it is interesting that there are less 22 than 500 sitting federal district court judges in this 23 country today. There are almost twice as many 24 administrative law judges coping with this load of cases.

25 QUESTION: Is there an overload in Vermont?

1 MR. MC GRATH: The situation in --

2 QUESTION: I mean, does the average law judge in 3 Vermont have 200 cases?

4 MR. MC GRATH: The average caseloads are roughly 5 comparable from state to state and from region to region.
6 We have lodged with the Court the workload statistics of 7 the Secretary.

8 QUESTION: Well, let's put it another way. You 9 characterize the 90-day rule as being arbitrary, right?

10 MR. MC GRATH: Yes.

11 QUESTION: How do you characterize the present 12 rule which, as I understand it, allows the law judge to 13 take the rest of his life on a case.

14 MR. MC GRATH: Well, the --

15 QUESTION: How would you characterize that as to 16 whether it is arbitrary or not?

17 MR. MC GRATH: Justice Marshall, I would not 18 characterize the present situation as arbitrary for this 19 reason. What the Secretary has done over the last ten 20 years in the face of the tremendous increase in claims is 21 to do a number of things which has resulted in a much more 22 efficient system. Despite a five-fold increase in claims, 23 today claims are heard as quickly as they were ten years 24 ago, and, indeed, over the last five or six years, the 25 average processing time has gone down substantially and

1 this hasn't happened by accident. It has happened through 2 the addition of new judges. It has happened through 3 management improvements, through computer techniques,
4 systems, goals, and putting pressure on the ALJs to hear 5 cases more quickly. And, the fact is ten years ago the 6 average ALJ was issuing only 14 opinions per month. By 7 last year, the average number of opinions per month was in 8 the high 30s. That is an enormous number of judicial 9 decisions per decider of cases I would submit.

10 QUESTION: Could it go high enough that it would 11 take 20 years?

12 MR. MC GRATH: Well, the --

13 QUESTION: And, if so, would that be considered 14 arbitrary?

15 MR. MC GRATH: I think if it were 20 years it 16 would be considered arbitrary. But, if you --

17 QUESTION: I am not going to ask you what you 18 would consider.

19 MR. MC GRATH: I think the significant thing --

20 QUESTION: May I ask you a question about the 21 government's theory, because I must confess I think -- I 22 tend to confuse two issues as I read -- The first issue is 23 whether the statute was violated. Secondly, assuming 24 there was a violation, was the remedy appropriate? It 25 doesn't seem to me we reach the second question, we even

1 reach mandatory time limits unless we decide the statute
2 was violated. What is your position on whether the statute 3 was violated?

4 MR. MC GRATH: Our position is that the statute
5 was not violated.

6 QUESTION: Then we don't have to talk about 7 mandatory time limits, do we?

8 MR. MC GRATH: But, the problem is that in 9 looking at whether the statute was violated, you can't 10 really separate that from what the Secretary was doing.
11 And, in our view, what the Secretary was doing was 12 appropriate because the Secretary has broad discretion 13 under this statute to decide how to manage it and 14 obviously whether to impose mandatory time limits --

15 QUESTION: And, what you are saying -- I guess 16 your position then is even if it takes 200 or 250 days to 17 dispose of a case, that is not a statutory violation.
18 Judges are busy. We take a long time some times.

19 MR. MC GRATH: No. What we would say is this.
20 It may be that in an individual case, an individual 21 claimant, because of the way he or she was treated by the 22 agency, might be able to make out a claim that his or her 23 rights were violated under the statute.

24 QUESTION: But, none of these plaintiffs did.

25 MR. MC GRATH: What happened here was the 1 findings of the Court was on a broad class basis.

2 QUESTION: Right.

3 MR. MC GRATH: By the time the District Court
4 issued the order here, the claims of the individual 5 plaintiffs had been taken care of. The whole point of 6 this case is that it was a class-wide order in which the 7 judge made a decision based on the whole operation of the 8 statute in Vermont. And, what the Court was addressing 9 was not whether individual Claimant "A" has not gotten 10 relief from the agency. Two hundred and fifty days has 11 gone by and you can see under the facts of that case that 12 that was unreasonable because no additional medical 13 evidence was needed, no additional vocational evidence was 14 needed, and there was no excuse.

15 That wasn't what the District Court did. What 16 the District Court did was to look at the length of time
17 that ALJ hearings were taking, found that in roughly 40
18 some percent of the cases they were taking more than 90 19 days and from that fact alone issued relief. At the 20 reconsideration stage, the Court looked at some docket
21 entries type information about 70 some odd cases, 22 concluded that the docket entries did not explain why 23 there were periods of time between different events and 24 also noted that roughly 40 percent of cases took more than 25 90 days and concluded from those facts alone that the

1 statute was violated and that mandatory time limits were 2 necessary.

3 QUESTION: And, your view is that even as to 4 those 40 percent there is no statutory violation.

5 MR. MC GRATH: There is no statutory --

6 QUESTION: If that is true, we don't really have 7 to address all this other stuff.

8 MR. MC GRATH: Well, that is our view; that as 9 to the 40 -- the statute is not violated and that that is 10 the clear --

11 QUESTION: What if we concluded that there was 12 sufficient evidence to support the conclusion that there 13 was a violation? Then what would the appropriate remedy 14 be?

15 MR. MC GRATH: The appropriate remedy would 16 depend on --

17 QUESTION: Could there be class-wide relief?

18 MR. MC GRATH: The appropriate thing here would 19 be whether it was appropriate for the District Court to 20 issue the kind of management order that it did --

21 QUESTION: Well, I understand. You object to 22 this remedy. I am asking you, if we concluded there was a 23 violation, what would the appropriate relief be in your 24 view?

25 MR. MC GRATH: The appropriate relief in our

1 view would be to consider cases on a case-by-case basis.

2 QUESTION: In other words, there should be no
3 class-wide relief.

4 MR. MC GRATH: There should be no class-wide 5 relief.

6 QUESTION: Even if there is a class-wide 7 violation?

8 MR. MC GRATH: Even if there were a class-wide 9 violation which obviously we don't concede.

10 QUESTION: Is the Administrative Procedure Act
11 relevant here at all?

12 MR. MC GRATH: The Administrative Procedure Act
13 was raised in the complaint here. It was not a basis of 14 either the District Court or the Court of Appeals 15 decision.

16 QUESTION: Well, it may not be, but that has 17 some reasonable requirements, doesn't it?

18 MR. MC GRATH: It does. And, our position on 19 that is basically this, that the reasonableness 20 requirement in the Administrative Procedure Act is 21 essentially, for purposes of this case, no different from 22 the reasonableness requirement in the Social Security Act;
23 that the Administrative Procedure Act talks about 24 reasonable times given the status of the parties and that 25 really you have to look at the same --

1 QUESTION: What kind of remedies have been 2 issued in individual cases under the Administrative 3 Procedure Act or do you know of any?

4 MR. MC GRATH: Typcially, under the 5 Administrative Procedure Act, the individual remedy is 6 either an order to the agency to proceed more quickly or, 7 if the individual actually has been found to be eligible, 8 an order requiring whatever the benefits are.

9 QUESTION: Are there -- Did you say the 10 plaintiffs have been paid or are their cases over?

11 MR. MC GRATH: Their cases have long since been 12 dealt with. The only live issue here is as to the class, 13 that is correct.

14 QUESTION: Well, as to the class, but is there 15 any problem of mootness?

16 MR. MC GRATH: Although the government has 17 argued in a number of these cases in the lower courts that 18 the case was moot or raised mootness issues, the courts 19 have held the case is not moot for this reason. At the 20 time the class was certified, the claims of the class 21 plaintiffs were still live and it was held, since 22 basically what is being decided here is not the merits of 23 individual claims, but rather the ancillary question of 24 how those claims should be dealt with as a procedural 25 matter, that it was appropriate under various decisions of 1 this Court for the Court to consider the case.

2 QUESTION: That is quite contrary to that Jacobs
3 versus Indianapolis case that we decided in '74 or '75.

4 MR. MC GRATH: And, that is the reason why the 5 government below did argue that the case was moot. We do 6 not raise that here because of the findings of --

7 QUESTION: Well, it is a jurisdictional case.

8 QUESTION: No party has to raise it. It is here 9 if there is any substantial claim of it at all.

10 MR. MC GRATH: Well, the on-going part of this 11 case is that -- is solely as to class members who in the 12 future will be able to say I did not have my claim 13 processed within 90 days. The issue is whether they 14 receive interim benefits or not.

15 QUESTION: And, they have not presently been 16 denied anything.

17 MR. MC GRATH: Well, of course, this order now 18 has been in effect for several years and what has been 19 happening is that on a few occasions where the processing 20 went beyond 90 days interim benefits were permitted. So 21 that it is now kind of an on-going thing. There is 22 probably nobody whose claim is now being considered in 23 Vermont where it was the same claim that was pending back 24 when the District Court was considering this claim. There 25 may be some of the same individuals because claims can be

1 denied, disabilities can disappear. But, as an on-going 2 matter, none of the people who are now affected by the 3 order, at least none of the claims now affected by the 4 order were live at that time.

5 QUESTION: Going back to the situation of what 6 remedy the Court could impose in a class action situation, 7 if it determined on the basis of the facts that the delays 8 were unreasonable, in the Sixth Circuit, I think it was, 9 the Court there, as a matter of relief, said, well, we 10 won't impose arbitrary timeliness, we will just order that 11 the Secretary develop some reasonable time limits to take 12 care of these cases and the government opposed that as 13 well, is that right?

14 MR. MC GRATH: The government did oppose that.

15 QUESTION: Now why?

16 MR. MC GRATH: That was the Blankenship case.
17 At the same time as the Court there ordered that the 18 government impose mandatory time limits in regulations, 19 virtually the same month, Congress, by statute, required
20 the Secretary to submit a report as to what time limits 21 might be appropriate and ordered the Secretary to take 22 into account such considerations as timeliness on the one 23 hand and the need to consider claims thoroughly on the 24 other hand. The Secretary, at the same time as he was 25 considering what to submit to Congress, was considering

1 what to do in the Blankenship case, the Sixth Circuit 2 case.

3 The Secretary concluded in both instances to 4 urge that time limits were not appropriate, because after 5 the extensive rule-making process that had concluded, the 6 Secretary concluded that the imposition of mandatory time
7 limits would be inconsistent with the effective operation
8 of the statute, submitted that report to Congress.

9 Congress, in 1982, did not adopted mandatory
10 time limits. Instead, it is clear from the committee
11 reports that accompanied other legislation which Congress
12 did adopt that Congress concluded that mandatory time 13 limits would be inappropriate because -- And the main 14 thing they emphasized is that individual cases may vary 15 greatly and that in many cases you do need additional 16 information and mandatory time limits are arbitrary in the 17 sense that the tend to ignore that consideration.

18 The congressional reports also indicated, and 19 this, I think, is perhaps even more important, that 20 mandatory time limits can result in more incorrect
21 determinations. And, the problem with incorrect 22 determinations is not just that people will be paid that 23 shouldn't be paid. The perhaps greater problem is that 24 people won't be paid who should be paid and that creates a 25 severe problem, because in these cases many of the

1 claimants really are not capable of effectively presenting 2 their claims. Most of them, the vast bulk of them, are 3 not represented by counsel and the burden, however, is on 4 them to establish their claim. And, if they can't do it, 5 the claim is denied.

6 If an arbitrary time limit is imposed and at 7 that point the Secretary has to act, the claim will get 8 denied and then the problem is they have to go to court 9 and even though they may get a reversal in court, the 10 statistics show that the federal courts today are taking 11 two to three times as long as the Secretary is at the ALJ 12 stage to hear these cases.

13 So that imposing mandatory time limits -- I
14 think the biggest problem with the District Court's order 15 is that it may, in fact, result in many claims being 16 denied that should have been granted and then many of 17 those claimants going to court and even if they win in 18 court, it will have taken a much longer time for them to 19 receive benefits.

20 QUESTION: So, you would just leave this whole 21 question to mandamus?

22 MR. MC GRATH: I would say leave it to mandamus 23 in individual cases because here both Congress and the 24 Secretary have looked at this question so carefully. So 25 many administrative improvements have been made under the

1 statute. There are serious problems with the kind of 2 order issued by the District Court and since, under those 3 circumstances, I do not believe it could be held that the 4 Secretary's decision not to impose mandatory time limits 5 was arbitrary.

6 Since the Secretary has such broad statutory 7 responsibilities under the statute, we urge that the order
8 of the District Court should be reversed and the case 9 dismissed.

10 QUESTION: Can you think of other examples where 11 we may have held that class action relief simply isn't 12 possible and that we have to order individual claimants to 13 resort to mandamus?

14 MR. MC GRATH: I cannot --

15 QUESTION: Because the Court has no inherent 16 power or it would be an abuse of discretion to grant any 17 class action.

18 MR. MC GRATH: I do not offhand know of another 19 situation.

20 We are not saying here that there would be no
21 conceivable factual situation here in which a class-wide 22 order would have been appropriate. What we are saying 23 here is that given the history, the close congressional 24 consideration, the careful scrutiny by the Secretary, and 25 the fact that the Secretary over the years has done a wide

1 variety of things to make this whole process more 2 efficient, that in this context class-wide relief is 3 inappropriate because the Court was wrong in deciding that 4 the Act was violated.

5 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Munzing?

6 ORAL ARGUMENT OF RICHARD H. MUNZING

7 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENT

8 MR. MUNZING: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
9 please the Court:

10 As the record and results of this case show, 11 entrenched, unnecessary delays do not need to be apart of 12 the disability insurance appeal system.

13 The District Court, as affirmed by the Court of 14 Appeals in this case, engaged in the most basic of 15 judicial functions.

16 As counsel for the Secretary admitted, the Court 17 viewed the facts of the case and determined that 18 disability insurance claimants in Vermont were routinely 19 being deprived of the right to reasonably expeditious 20 administrative appellate action that the Secretary is 21 mandated to provide, together with other statutory goals, 22 by 205(b) of the Social Security Act.

23 As a consequence, the District Court, pursuant 24 to its traditional, flexible, remedial, equitable powers 25 fashioned a balanced, meaningful remedy that compelled

1 expeditious processing that was within the Secretary's
2 capacity, that did not cause extra cost to the Secretary, 3 and that did not harm other statutory goals such as 4 quality and accuracy in decision making.

5 QUESTION: How significant do you think it is,
6 Mr. Munzing, that Congress addressed this problem on a 7 number of occasions and decided that arbitrary time limits 8 were not feasible?

9 MR. MUNZING: Your Honor, I think that in 10 virtually every instance where Congress has amended the 11 Social Security Act in recent years in the disability 12 programs, in SSI and in disability insurance, virtually the 13 primary factor prompting Congress' interest has been the 14 problem of lengthy, unnecessary delay. Virtually every 15 action Congress has taken has been, at least in part, in 16 the hopes of getting the Secretary to be able to deal with 17 and eliminate this problem.

18 Indeed, on many occasions, the Secretary has 19 represented to Congress that the disability delay problem 20 is well in hand and would shortly be resolved.

21 So, I hardly think we can say that either
22 Congress has not been interested in curing the delay 23 problem or that Congress has been made fully aware that 24 the Secretary does not have the capacity alone to deal 25 with the problem.

1 QUESTION: But, the one remedy that Congress
2 didn't impose in the disability field was a flat time 3 limit.

4 MR. MUNZING: We don't dispute that, Justice
5 Rehnquist, but what the Court did here, in the absence of 6 fixed time limits, but with the mandate to provide 7 hearings within a reasonable time, was to engage in a 8 fact-specific analysis of the circumstances it found in 9 Vermont.

10 As this Court noted in Fusari v. Steinberg, the 11 Connecticut unemployment delay case from 1975, any 12 statutory requirement embodying notions of timeliness, 13 accuracy, and administrative feasibility will inevitably 14 generate fact specific applications.

15 QUESTION: Well, supposing, in fact, the system
16 of processing disabilities is running pretty much the same 17 all through the country; that the delays in Vermont are 18 no different than anywhere else, then I suppose the people 19 who go to court in Vermont and perhaps people who go to 20 court in Oregon are going to get this kind of relief, but 21 people who don't go to court in other states are going to 22 be left off the band wagon.

23 MR. MUNZING: Well, that is where the fact-
24 specific analysis, the analysis of the factual record
25 developed before it by the District Court lead the Court

1 to find that there were differences in Vermont from 2 elsewhere. And, indeed, there was nothing put into the 3 record by the Secretary to show that the causes of delays 4 elsewhere or the circumstances of delays elsewhere -- What 5 the Court found in Vermont, first of all, was that the 6 Secretary, since January of 1978, had a goal of processing
7 all cases within 90 days. That was almost a year before 8 this case was even filed.

9 The record also showed the District Court that 10 since 1977 the Secretary was processing SSI cases and 11 Title II cases, or it was supposed to be processing them 12 within this 90-day goal.

13 In other words, the Secretary herself provided
14 the District Court in Vermont with an objective criterion 15 against which the plaintiffs' allegations of unreasonable 16 delay could be measured.

17 QUESTION: But, the fact that the Secretary set 18 the goals that are not, in fact, conformed to by the ALJs 19 doesn't make that kind of objective factor, at least so 20 far as I can see, automatically translate into mandatory
21 time limits.

22 MR. MUNZING: But, it wasn't just the fact that 23 the Secretary, through these goals, supplied the Court
24 with this objective criterion against which to measure
25 unreasonableness. The Court also found in the factual

1 record that even though she had the goals she was not 2 complying with them in nearly one out of every two cases.

3 The Court found that of all the claimants who 4 perservered to reach the fair hearing level, fully 56
5 percent of them turned out to have been disabled all 6 along.

7 QUESTION: Well, the Court found the Secretary 8 wasn't complying with a goal. Really the Court found the 9 Secretary wasn't meeting the goals. I mean, there wasn't 10 an arbitrary or kind of willful failure to comply, was it?

11 MR. MUNZING: No, I don't believe so. But, the 12 interesting thing is that with the impetus of the Court's 13 remedial order the Secretary discovered a capacity to 14 achieve the goals that previously she had articulated but 15 had not been able to achieve without having to move 16 additional resources into Vermont from elsewhere, without 17 harm to claimants elsewhere, without harm to other 18 statutory goals by fashioning a flexible, balanced, 19 effective, injunctive remedy.

20 QUESTION: Mr. Munzing, my problem is that the 21 90-day limit applies equally to the sparsely populated 22 district of Alaska and a rather heavy populated southern 23 district of New York. They are a little different.

24 MR. MUNZING: I thnk -- They are a little 25 different and that is why we say that to address these

1 problems with a state-wide class a District Court judge is 2 bound to analyze the specific facts within that district
3 to ascertain whether the general reasonableness
4 requirement is violated. We maintain that --

5 QUESTION: They can do that now if we uphold the 6 order in this case? Can the district judge in Alaska say 7 I will give you 91 days?

8 MR. MUNZING: I think in --

9 QUESTION: Yes or no?

10 MR. MUNZING: Yes. I think inherent in the 11 notion that the facts determine unreasonableness --

12 QUESTION: So, this order does not have 13 nationwide repercussions?

14 MR. MUNZING: I don't believe so, Your Honor.

15 QUESTION: You don't? Okay.

16 QUESTION: Let me ask you a hypothetical 17 question that might shed some light or might not. You are 18 familiar with the Speedy Trial Act that was passed by 19 Congress in relation to criminal prosecution in recent 20 years? You are generally familiar that Congress did that?
21 Suppose a district judge, becoming impatient with cases 22 not being brought to trial and disposed of rapidly entered 23 an order, all criminal cases must be brought to trial 24 within 90 days. In other words, entered an order that 25 essentially what the Speedy Trial act is now and said any

1 indictment not pursued with trial in that 90-day period
2 would be dismissed. Does the district judge have the 3 power to do that?

4 MR. MUNZING: Your Honor, I guess I am not 5 familiar enough with the Speedy Trial Act to -- I suspect 6 the answer is not, but I think that situation could be 7 distinguished from what happened in Vermont.

8 For one thing, the 90-day time frames that are 9 in place in Vermont now have been for about three years
10 and have resulted in virtually uniform compliance. There 11 has been one violation in the entire three --

12 QUESTION: That doesn't go to the question of 13 the power and authority of the court. It may be a very 14 good thing.

15 My question is addressed to the question of 16 whether or not a court had the power to establish time
17 limits which Congress expressly rejected.

18 MR. MUNZING: I think if Congress expressly 19 rejected time limits and the court imposed them, it would 20 be acting inconsistent with Congress. But, we do not -- 21 We maintain that there is nothing inconsistent with the 22 failure of fixed time limits to exist within the Social 23 Security Act with the actions of the court below.

24 For one thing, the time limits are not written 25 in stone. They were, in the words of the Second Circuit,

1 crafted with an eye to the Secretary's concerns. There 2 are exceptions.

3 Again, from the factual record, the District
4 Court learned that the Secretary's major concern at the 5 reconsideration level was that her disability 6 determination people would have sufficient time to be able 7 to develop enough medical evidence to do accurate 8 decisions.

9 At the hearing level, the Secretary's major 10 concern, as articulated to the District Court, was that 11 ALJs would have sufficient time to be able to deliberate 12 to ensure accurate decisions and, if necessary, to 13 schedule new consultative examinations if the ALJ 14 perceived that new evidence needed to be generated.

15 The District Court order excepted both of those 16 circumstances from the time frames, thus responding 17 directly to the Secretary's concern that time limits might 18 have some adverse impact on the quality of decision 19 making.

20 QUESTION: Mr. Munzing, Mr. McGrath has told us
21 that these arbitrary time limits are going to cause claims 22 to be denied that are meritorious. There is not enough 23 time to process them properly. Has that been 24 demonstrated?

25 MR. MUNZING: I respectfully disagree, Justice

1 Stevens. The exceptions ensure, in fact, that that 2 exactly does not occur.

3 QUESTION: Well, he just made it up out of the 4 blue in other words?

5 MR. MUNZING: Well --

6 QUESTION: At least there is no record support
7 for it, I guess.

8 MR. MUNZING: I don't find any. That is exactly 9 what -- That concern is exactly what the exceptions are 10 designed to address and, in fact, that is exactly what 11 they do address in practice.

12 QUESTION: And, we have had how much experience, 13 about three years' experience?

14 MR. MUNZING: The Court's preliminary injunction
15 as to the hearing phase delays issued in December of 1980 16 through the end of the first quarter in 1983, as the 17 appendix to our brief indicates, there had been but one 18 violation in that two and a quarter year period.

19 QUESTION: But, I mean, what is the evidence on 20 his suggestion that when they are hard pressed the ALJs 21 will simply deny meritorious claims?

22 MR. MUNZING: The order merely requires that 23 ALJs schedule hearings within 90 days which the Secretary 24 told the District Court she had the capacity to do without 25 moving resources into Vermont to the detriment of 1 claimants elsewhere. The ALJ is left unlimited time post 2 hearing to develop a case, to deliberate upon a case to 3 ensure an accurate decision. All it is is a docketing 4 order, not a decision order.

5 QUESTION: As I look at the record, the case of 6 the case of Leon Day, the particular case, would appear to 7 be the sixth time the matter was considered when the 8 District Court acted finally. Now, can that be correct?

9 MR. MUNZING: Yes, Your Honor. Mr. Day went 10 through the process, exhausted the entire administrative 11 appeals process, went to District Court in an individual 12 claim, had it remanded back down for a second hearing 13 which ultimately was approved by the Appeals Council. The 14 case took three years, which, I submit, hardly says 15 anything about accurate and quality decision making by the 16 Secretary.

17 QUESTION: But, very many of the people in Mr.
18 Day's situation take six hearings. That probably has some 19 bearing on the fact that these hearings take more than 90 20 days.

21 MR. MUNZING: Well --

22 QUESTION: If everybody in Vermont who has got a 23 claim gets six shots at this target, I can understand why 24 they have a lot of delay up there.

25 MR. MUNZING: The interesting thing about that

1 though is that the first five bites of the apple he had 2 the Secretary erred, because it ultimately turned out that 3 he was disabled all along.

4 The facts of his case illustrate the point that 5 delay in Vermont, as the District Court found it, was 6 unnecessarily lengthy and thereby unreasonable and in 7 violation of the statute.

8 As the Court probably knows, there is a 9 reconsideration level that a claimant must exhaust before 10 he can even go to hearing which is solely a regulatory 11 creature that the Secretary, in her administrative wisdom, 12 has imposed. We don't dispute the right of her to do 13 that.

14 It took Mr. Day six months just to get a 15 reconsideration determination through no fault of his own, 16 through agency error, and then after he finally got an 17 adverse reconsideration determination in error as it 18 turned out, and he requested his hearing, another six 19 months went by before he got his hearing, again, through 20 no fault of his own, through agency error only.

21 It is our position that these kinds of facts, 22 and they are typical of the facts endured by the class,
23 justified the District Court, in a fact-specific analysis 24 situation, interpreting a statute, to find that that 25 statute was violated.

1 QUESTION: Mr. Munzing, could the District Court
2 have certified a national class? Would it have had 3 authority to do so?

4 MR. MUNZING: The government's argument almost 5 makes it seem like the government would have preferred 6 that in some ways. But, I think if this had been the 7 first case to come along, as the Court's decision in 8 Califano v. Yamasaki shows, a nationwide class would have 9 been within the discretion of the District Court.

10 In point of fact, it would not have been a 11 practical consideration in this case, because there 12 already existed --

13 QUESTION: My question was as a matter of power, 14 would the District Court have had the authority to certify 15 a national class?

16 MR. MUNZING: But -- I guess by excluding those 17 districts where orders were already in effect, it would 18 have had the power to do so. And, of course, ultimately 19 the factual record would have been far more massive than 20 the factual record that needed to be addressed relating to 21 the Vermont class in this case.

22 QUESTION: How long was this case before the 23 District Court? When did you file this suit?

24 MR. MUNZING: The action began in 1978 and the 25 District Court's final judgment order was in 1981.

1 QUESTION: Two years?

2 MR. MUNZING: Two to three years, yes, Your 3 Honor.

4 QUESTION: Did the district judge think that was 5 unduly long?

6 MR. MUNZING: The reason it took unduly long, if 7 that is what it was, was because the Court wanted to make 8 sure that it took sufficient time to understand the 9 process, not rushing to judgment before it issued a 10 remedial order in favor of the wrong claimants.

11 QUESTION: Do you think a new administrative law 12 judge would have a similar problem?

13 MR. MUNZING: I believe the Secretary actually 14 have procedures to ease new administrative law judges into 15 the process at less a rate of productivity than 16 experienced administrative law judges.

17 QUESTION: Could the Court of Appeals have, in 18 its judgment, ordered all District Courts in the 19 jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals, to decide these 20 cases in 90 days?

21 MR. MUNZING: I think that would have been an 22 abuse of its power reviewing the District --

23 QUESTION: Why would that have been abuse of 24 power?

25 MR. MUNZING: I think the Court of Appeals would

1 have been limited to reviewing the record of the case that 2 came up before it.

3 In point of fact, the Second Circuit has 4 reviewed a number of other cases from New York and 5 Connecticut.

6 QUESTION: Impose arbitrary limitations on 7 District Courts with respect to deciding cases?

8 MR. MUNZING: The Second Circuit has affirmed
9 other District Courts that have found the Secretary to be 10 in violation of the Act elsewhere.

11 QUESTION: That is quite different from the 12 question I asked though, isn't it?

13 MR. MUNZING: I am sorry, could you repeat it?

14 QUESTION: My question was whether, in view of 15 the problems of delay that properly concern you, and I 16 don't denigrate the importance of the issue at all, but in 17 order to accelerate the process, as a matter of power, 18 could the Court of Appeals have said that this is such a 19 wholesome order, according to the Vermont issue, that we 20 are going to make it circuit wide applying it to New York,
21 Vermont --

22 MR. MUNZING: I don't think it could have in 23 light of the fact that it was reviewing a Vermont record 24 and it didn't, in that review, have knowledge that the 25 delays were unnecessary and thereby unreasonable

1 elsewhere. If it did have that knowledge, perhaps it 2 could.

3 QUESTION: So, this has to be done on a
4 state-by-state basis.?

5 MR. MUNZING: It doesn't have to be, but in this 6 case it was and the test for whether a District Court's 7 injunctive discretion, equitable discretion, should be 8 limited is whether there exists a valid legislative 9 command. We submit that there is no valid legislative 10 command that precludes courts from protecting claimants in 11 implementing the timeliness provision inherent in Section 12 205(b) of the Act.

13 Absent such a command, the test for this Court 14 on Review should be whether the District Court abused its 15 discretion. Clearly, I submit, it did not because it
16 balanced all of the Secretary's concerns against the needs 17 of the claimants that this remedial statute is designed to 18 protect and it achieved compliance with the Act in a 19 timely fashion without injury to other statutory goals and 20 without harm to claimants elsewhere.

21 I also want to emphasize from the factual record 22 that the District Court -- The Secretary specifically told 23 the District Court that she had the capacity to comply 24 with its order in Vermont without the need to adversely 25 impact on other statutory goals or on the rights of 1 claimants elsewhere.

2 QUESTION: Is the order -- is the report that 3 the Court ordered to be filed as to how the remedy was to 4 be implemented, is that in the record?

5 MR. MUNZING: Yes, it is, Your Honor.

6 QUESTION: And, has that report ever been 7 modified at all?

8 MR. MUNZING: Well, what is in the record --

9 QUESTION: The implementation of the plan.

10 MR. MUNZING: No, it has not been changed at 11 all.

12 We submit that if the Secretary finds that 13 changed circumstances -- and they would have to be 14 changed, because she had the capacity to comply at the 15 time the District Court order issued -- if change --

16 QUESTION: Where do we find that statement that 17 she had the capacity?

18 MR. MUNZING: In the initial interrogatories in 19 the Joint Appendix you will find that the plaintiffs asked 20 the Secretary how many ALJs she had working in Vermont?
21 The answer was three. How many ALJs are needed in Vermont 22 to comply with your own 90-day goal? The answer was 23 three. And other materials in the Joint Appendix will 24 show that, will support that.

25 As to the --

1 QUESTION: Well, is there in the record any 2 explanation as to why those goals, those 90-days goals
3 were not being met even though there were three 4 administrative law judges that the Secretary apparently 5 thought were adequate?

6 MR. MUNZING: I submit to you, Your Honor,
7 that --

8 QUESTION: Did the Court identify any reason, 9 the District Court?

10 MR. MUNZING: Also in the record you will find a 11 report from the Secretary's own quality assurance review 12 people and they found that in almost every case lengthy 13 cases to process were caused by lack of basic adherence to 14 sound development practices and lack of timely follow-ups 15 to request for medical information.

16 It it unfortunate, but what happened in Vermont 17 was that it took the impetus of a judicial order to enable 18 to the Secretary to discover the capacity to process cases 19 within a reasonably prompt time frame that she had 20 articulated that she had the capacity all the time and, in 21 fact, she did have the capacity all the time.

22 QUESTION: Mr. Munzing, am I correct that all 23 the order requires is that a hearing be held?

24 MR. MUNZING: That is correct.

25 QUESTION: It doesn't say it has to be decided

1 within 90 days.

2 MR. MUNZING: That is correct. Let me
3 differentiate though, the reconsideration phase --

4 QUESTION: You are going to differentiate plain 5 English? That is what it says.

6 MR. MUNZING: Hearings are required to be 7 scheduled only within 90 days, correct.

8 QUESTION: Right.

9 MR. MUNZING: Reconsideration --

10 QUESTION: And, what is the limit on how long he 11 can hold it sub judice?

12 MR. MUNZING: There is no limit. The Secretary 13 can take as much time as she needs to render an 14 accurate --

15 QUESTION: Twenty years?

16 MR. MUNZING: I think a claimant who had to wait 17 20 years would probably have a good presumption working 18 that the processing was not proceeding in the normal and 19 proper fashion.

20 I think good faith is at issue in that kind of 21 circumstance. What the District Court did was simply left 22 to the Secretary, in her administrative capacity, the 23 right to make cases to ensure thoroughness and accuracy of 24 decision making.

25 QUESTION: Well, who decides -- When there is a

1 request for reconsideration, who decides that request?

2 MR. MUNZING: The Secretary contracts in the 3 individual states or most of them anyway --

4 QUESTION: Those are not ALJs.

5 MR. MUNZING: No.

6 QUESTION: So, there are two parts to this case, 7 I take it. One is the reconsideration stage and the other 8 is the hearing stage, is that right?

9 MR. MUNZING: That is correct.

10 QUESTION: Now, did the Secretary admit or 11 represent that she had the capacity to comply with the 12 Court's 90-day order on reconsideration?

13 MR. MUNZING: No. But, what the Secretary -- 14 That is why the District Court, although it issued its 15 preliminary injunction as to hearing delays in 1980, it 16 waited another year before issuing its final judgment 17 order and also finding that reconsideration delays were 18 unreasonable, because it conducted additional factual
19 development. It denied summary judgment a couple of times
20 and required additional factual development to find out 21 the reasons why the reconsideration delays were occurring.
22 And, it found that they were not being done within a 23 reasonably prompt time because of such factors as I have 24 already enumerated, lack of adherence to sound development 25 practices, lack of --

1 QUESTION: Then I understand that the order here
2 is not the order that is here.

3 MR. MUNZING: No. There is just two aspects of 4 it.

5 QUESTION: Then why isn't it in the record?

6 MR. MUNZING: No, it is in the record. There 7 are two aspects of the order. One enjoining delays at the 8 reconsideration phase, one enjoining unreasonable delays 9 at the hearing phase of the process.

10 QUESTION: We have got to go to the record to 11 look for them?

12 MR. MUNZING: They are in the judgment order 13 itself which is listed --

14 QUESTION: The judgment order only applies to 15 the hearing.

16 MR. MUNZING: The judgment order applies to both 17 hearings and reconsiderations.

18 QUESTION: On what page?

19 (Pause)

20 MR. MUNZING: I am sorry, I can't direct you 21 to this immediately.

22 QUESTION: That is all right, I will find it.

23 QUESTION: It is on page 32A, 32A of the 24 petition.

25 MR. MUNZING: That would be the appendix to the

1 petition.

2 QUESTION: That is right.

3 QUESTION: 32A is it?

4 QUESTION: I notice that the district judge took 5 three years, something over three years to decide this 6 case himself. I suppose we can assume that he had other 7 cases to decide in the meantime too.

8 MR. MUNZING: Yes, I think that is a good 9 assumption, Justice Brennan.

10 QUESTION: Does the record show anything about 11 other cases, what the number of cases that were decided in 12 a way that you would regard as prompt or does the record 13 concentrate just on the cases that took an undue length of 14 time in your view?

15 MR. MUNZING: Well, I would submit that average 16 delay certainly -- average delay that might seem somewhat 17 expeditious. It certainly is no solace to those persons 18 on the high end of the mean who suffer unreasonable 19 lengthy delay.

20 Mr. Day, from the time he initiated his 21 reconsideration, waited 340 days just to get his hearing 22 scheduled.

23 In a remedial scheme like the Social Security
24 Act Disability Insurance Benefit Program, I think Congress 25 intends that all claimants should get expeditious action,

1 not just half of them.

2 As the undisputed record and the results of this 3 case show, successful results were achievable in this 4 case. Unnecessary delay was eliminated and did not need 5 to be an entrenched aspect of the system. And, the 6 statutory purpose could be furthered without additional 7 cost to the agency, without impact on the needs of 8 claimants elsewhere and without harm to other statutory 9 goals.

10 In Vermont at least the Secretary's
11 administrative appeal system now runs smoothly, the way it 12 should, and justice is no longer denied through 13 unnecessary delay.

14 QUESTION: What was the remedy, if any, that was 15 issued in those prior cases in the Court of Appeals like 16 the White case?

17 MR. MUNZING: The White case required hearing 18 decisions within 120 days of request.

19 QUESTION: And, how about the other one? What 20 was that, Barnett?

21 MR. MUNZING: Barnett, 90 days to hearing, 22 similar to this one.

23 QUESTION: And, that was -- Those cases
24 purported to be implementing the reasonable time 25 requirement in the statute?

1 MR. MUNZING: Correct, Your Honor.

2 QUESTION: Now, had those cases been decided 3 when Congress was amending the Social Security Act?

4 MR. MUNZING: Well, those cases were decided 5 before --

6 QUESTION: I see the Court of Appeals says that 7 Congress must have been aware of these cases, and when 8 they turned down specific time limits, they were aware of 9 these cases. And, hence, Congress is going to leave it to 10 the Courts.

11 MR. MUNZING: That is our position, Your Honor.
12 Congress was, in fact, aware of the time limitations that 13 certian courts had imposed and took no action to repudiate
14 them. There was no clear and valid legislative command 15 saying that courts could not do that.

16 MR. MUNZING: And, your position is Congress 17 must have thought that these cases represented and 18 acceptable implementation of the reasonableness
19 requirement?

20 MR. MUNZING: Drawing inferences from 21 congressional silence is always treacherous, but, yes, I 22 think that is a reasonable inference.

23 QUESTION: You are as entitled to be as 24 treacherous as the government.

25 (Laughter)

1 MR. MUNZING: Certainly there is nothing at the 2 level of a clear, valid legislative command precluding
3 that kind of traditional, flexible, equitable relief.
4 The interim payment device as well shows the 5 same kind of accommodation toward the Secretary's 6 concerns. In the first place, the interim payments, which 7 we submit are not benefits but merely another aspect of 8 the court's flexible equitable powers, ensure compliance.
9 They are a yardstick to measure compliance. They give the 10 Secretary an undeniable financial incentive to comply and, 11 in fact, they have worked in Vermont, because there has 12 only been on violation in the -- 13 QUESTION: I gather intermim payments apply only 14 in terminated cases?
15 MR. MUNZING: No, Your Honor, that -- 16 QUESTION: Also in initial -- 17 MR. MUNZING: Yes.
18 QUESTION: When one initiates a claim may there 19 be immediate interim payment?
20 MR. MUNZING: Well, only after unnecessary -- 21 unreasonable delay where none of the exceptions apply.
22 That could conceivably happen. In practice, it does not, 23 because the Secretary does comply because of that 24 incentive device.
25 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Your time has expired,

1 Mr. Munzing.

2 MR. MUNZING: Thank you.

3 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Do you have anything the 4 further, Mr. McGrath?

5 MR. MC GRATH: Yes, I do, Mr. Chief Justice.

6 ORAL ARGUMENT OF J. PAUL MC GRATH, ESQ.

7 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER -- REBUTTAL

8 MR. MC GRATH: I believe -- I wanted to make one 9 principal point. As I said at the outset, the question
10 here is what did Congress intend? And, I think if you
11 look at the legislative history of the last few years, you
12 cannot come away with the conclusion that Congress
13 intended mandatory time limits. To the contrary, I think 14 you --

15 QUESTION: Well, the certainly didn't intend 16 themselves impose it, but it is another question of 17 whether they were willing to put up with what the courts 18 were then doing to implement the reasonableness
19 requirement.

20 MR. MC GRATH: It is another question except 21 that I think the congressional record answers that 22 question also, Justice White, because Congress over and 23 over again said in their reports, things like the report 24 we quoted at pages 29 to 30 of our brief which was that 25 they were very concerned that mandatory time limits would

1 ignore the fact that Social Security disability cases tend 2 to vary greatly from case to case.

3 QUESTION: In answer to my first question at the 4 start of your argument you conceded that the Secretary had 5 the ability to impose mandatory time limits.

6 MR. MC GRATH: Yes, Justice Blackmun.

7 QUESTION: How does that tie in with your 8 statement just now that Congress was otherwise inclined?

9 MR. MC GRATH: The Congress was very concerned
10 about mandatory time limits and I think that indicates 11 what Congress meant by the reasonableness requirement 12 under the statute and whether a court could read into the 13 statute more of a requirement of expedition than Congress 14 intended to put there. That is not to say, however, that 15 the Secretary, in her discretion, could not conclude that 16 time limits of some sort were appropriate, perhaps 17 different time limits for different parts of the country.
18 The Secretary, however, independently, operating under the 19 authority in Section 205(a) of the statute, concluded that 20 such time limits were not appropriate.

21 And, what we have here, however, is the worst of 22 all possible worlds. We have different courts issuing 23 different kinds of orders, different time limits, 24 different requirements. As we have shown in our reply 25 brief, this has required in some states the allocation of 1 resources from other states.

2 QUESTION: Mr. McGrath, may I interrupt you for 3 just one question? Has your oponent fairly characterized 4 the experience in Vermont under the particular order we 5 are reviewing?

6 MR. MC GRATH: Absolutely. The Secretary has 7 been able to comply with the time limits, probably would 8 be able to comply with any time limits, because all the 9 Secretary has to do at the reconsideration stage is make a 10 decision. Decisions would be made. There will just be 11 many more wrong decisions and that really is a part of our 12 point.

13 QUESTION: Do you submit that your experience 14 during the last three years supports your suggestion that 15 there have been a lot of wrong decisions in Vermont?

16 MR. MC GRATH: We cannot, on the basis of the 17 experience in Vermont, state a factual conclusion one way 18 or another as to that.

19 QUESTION: Why should we assume they would make 20 wrong decisions? I don't quite understand that.

21 MR. MC GRATH: Well, we assume it for this 22 reason.

23 QUESTION: If you have got the time -- If you 24 only need 90 days and you can do it in 90 days, why won't 25 they decide these things -- Most of them are not all that

1 difficult.

2 MR. MC GRATH: Many of them are not. In fact,
3 of the two million claims a year, the vast bulk of them
4 are decided even before they get to the reconsideration
5 stage. It is only a declining fraction of cases that take 6 more than the mean 68 days that, indeed, was the 7 experience in Vermont. And, the reason we conclude as to 8 those case there is a problem is that based both on the 9 lengthy hearings and reports in Congress and on the 10 findings of the Secretary based on all of past 11 Secretaries' experiences, they concluded that there was a 12 problem with mandatory time limits, which problem is 13 essentially that it would undercut the overall goal of 14 thoroughness and accuracy. And that really is the record 15 basis that we rely on.

16 Thank you very much.

17 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, Gentlemen, the 18 case is submitted.

19 We will hear arguments next in Heckler against 20 Mathews.

21 (Whereupon, at 11:02 a.m., the case in the 22 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
