2 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Baliles, I think
3 you may proceed whenever you are ready.

4 ORAL ARGUMENT OF GERALD L. BALILES, ESQ.

5 ON BEHALF OF PETITIONER

6 MR. BALILES: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
7 please the Court:

8 The issue in this case is whether the doctrine
9 of judicial immunity bars the award of attorneys' fees 10 pursuant to 42 U.S.C. Section 1988 against a member of 11 the judiciary acting in his judicial capacity.

12 The facts of this case arose in 1980 in 13 Culpeper County, Virginia. The Petitioner is a 14 magistrate for that jurisdiction. The Respondents were 15 arrested in Culpeper on misdemeanor charges for which no 16 incarceration was authorized by statute upon 17 conviction.

18 When the Respondents were unable to post bond 19 after arrest, they were ordered by a petitioner to be 20 held in jail pending trial. Respondents thereafter 21 challenged their pretrial detention by filing in the 22 U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of 23 Virginia, a Section 1983 action against the Petitioner
24 seeking declaratory and injunctive relief.

25 The District Court declared the Virginia

1 statutes to be unconstitutional as applied, granted
2 injunctive relief, and ordered the petitioner to pay
3 attorneys' fees to the Respondents. The Circuit Court
4 of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit affirmed that decision
5 and held that members of the judiciary are not immune 6 from suit, are not immune from payment of attorneys'
7 fees in cases involving equitable or prospective 8 relief.

9 In this case, we are seeking and asking this 10 Court to hold that awards of attorneys' fees against 11 judges are not authorized because, one, judicial 12 immunity bars such an award, and two --

13 QUESTION: Even if it doesn't bar the 14 injunction?

15 MR. BALILES: That is correct. The Court does 16 not have to reach that point, as I will elaborate in the 17 argument.

18 The second point, Justice White, is that 19 Congress has not abrogated the doctrine of judicial 20 immunity in enacting Section 1988.

21 QUESTION: Well, is it your submission or do 22 you take a position as to whether the injunction is 23 permissible?

24 MR. BALILES: We would argue that the 25 injunctive relief provisions are not permitted by the

1 doctrine of judicial relief, but as we have pointed out 2 in our --

3 QUESTION: The judge is immune from suit for 4 an injunction as well as damages?

5 MR. BALILES: That is correct.

6 QUESTION: Absolutely.

7 MR. BALILES: That is the position we maintain 8 although, as we pointed out in our brief, this Court 9 does not have to reach that question in order to dispose 10 of the question of whether attorneys' fees may be 11 authorized and ordered to be paid by the judge.

12 QUESTION: I understand that, but you have to 13 reach one or the other of them.

14 MR. BALILES: Justice White, this Court --

15 QUESTION: It might be easier to reach the 16 other, I mean --

17 MR. BALILES: This Court does not have to 18 reach --

19 QUESTION: If you are right on it.

20 MR. BALILES: This Court does not have to 21 reach that question. The injunctive relief provision 22 was not appealed in this case because of certain changes
23 that were made in the statutes by the General Assembly 24 of Virginia in 1980 and 1981, so that question of 25 injunctive relief is not before the Court.

1 The remaining question is one of the validity 2 of the award of attorneys' fees which was raised, which 3 was preserved on appeal to the Fourth Circuit and made a 4 part of our petition for certiorari.

5 So the attorneys' fees question is really the 6 only issue brought to this Court.

7 QUESTION: Mr. Attorney General, you do have 8 to assume, I suppose, that in some situations 9 prospective relief will be valid. Otherwise you never 10 get to the attorneys' fee issue, do you?

11 MR. BALILES: That is correct. If this Court 12 holds that judges are liable under 1988, implicit in 13 such a holding is that prospective relief may be ordered 14 against the judge.

15 QUESTION: Well, couldn't we assume it without 16 deciding it since the only question presented in your 17 petition is the 1988 one?

18 MR. BALILES: That is correct, Justice
19 Powell. This Court can reach the question of attorneys' 20 fees, the validity of attorneys' fees being awarded 21 without determining the question of whether prospective 22 relief is proper when sought against members of the 23 judiciary.

24 QUESTION: We would say if prospective relief 25 is available, attorneys' fees may be awarded.

1 MR. BALILES: Justice White, I would not --

2 QUESTION: If we happened to disagree with 3 you, that's what we would say.

4 MR. BALILES: That is one position the Court
5 could take. But this Court can take the position that 6 attorneys' fees are not permissible because the doctrine 7 of judicial immunity bars such an award and because 8 Congress has not authorized it, even if this Court finds 9 that prospective relief is appropriate.

10 QUESTION: Would that also apply to mandamus?

11 MR. BALILES: Justice Marshall, in the case of 12 mandamus and writs of prohibition, the legislature has 13 taken the position not only in Virginia but in certain 14 other states that those are writs that are rarely 15 sought, are seldom granted, and are applicable only 16 under very strict conditions. Those provisions, those 17 remedies that are available under certain circumstances 18 would not be applicable here. They do not raise the 19 same questions that are presented to this Court.

20 QUESTION: Well, do you think that a judge 21 could award attorneys' fees for a mandamus against a 22 state magistrate?

23 MR. BALILES: Justice Marshall, I am not aware 24 of any such authority for that proposition. It is not 25 possible --

1 QUESTION: Do you know of any authority
2 against it?

3 MR. BALILES: Yes, sir. The ruling of this 4 Court in the Alyeska Pipeline case said specifically 5 that the American rule that barred fee shifting would 6 not permit the award of attorneys' fees in certain civil 7 rights cases unless Congress specifically authorized
8 such an award. Congress did that in enacting --

9 QUESTION: My mandamus actually wasn't a civil 10 rights action but just mandamus.

11 MR. BALILES: That's correct, Your Honor.

12 QUESTION: And you can't get attorneys' fees.

13 MR. BALILES: That is correct. I am not aware 14 of any authority for the awarding of attorneys' fees in 15 that type of action that you have just suggested.

16 QUESTION: And you don't know of any against 17 it.

18 MR. BALILES: That is correct.

19 Now, the reason why we are here asking the 20 Court to rule that attorneys' fees are barred by the 21 doctrine of judicial immunity is this: this Court has 22 said in damage cases that judges are immune from such 23 liability, and it has set forth certain policy reasons.
24 We submit that those policy reasons apply with equal and 25 compelling force in barring attorneys' fees to be paid by

1 judges because attorneys' fees are the functional
2 equivalent of damages. This Court has barred attorneys'
3 fees for the policy reason that judges should be free 4 from influence or the intimidation of monetary awards
5 that may be issued against their decision.

6 QUESTION: General Baliles, you said this 7 Court has barred attorneys' fees. You mean to say this 8 Court has barred damages, don't you?

9 MR. BALILES: I stand corrected. You are 10 correct, damages.

11 And here's --

12 QUESTION: Isn't there this possible
13 difference? Is it not correct that under 1988, doesn't 14 the statute expressly provide that the public body shall 15 pay the fee?

16 MR. BALILES: That is what the language says, 17 Justice Stevens, but that is not --

18 QUESTION: In other words, the damages have to 19 be paid by the judge himself.

20 MR. BALILES: That doesn't dispose of the 21 problem here. The question of who pays really should 22 not be a factor in determining whether attorneys' --

23 QUESTION: Well, it would be a factor to me if 24 I was sued, I'll tell you.

25 MR. BALILES: I beg your pardon?

1 QUESTION: I said it would be a big factor to 2 me if I was the defendant. If I knew I didn't have to 3 pay, I might not be quite as concerned.

4 MR. BALILES: The suggestion that government
5 or some insurance program would pay a fee award really 6 is not helpful here. If that were the case, Justice
7 Stevens, then there wouldn't be a problem in awarding 8 damages against a judge because of that source of 9 payment.

10 QUESTION: Yes, but the -- but with respect to 11 damages, it's voluntary on the part of the state, as I 12 understand. They don't have to indemnify the person who 13 may be held liable for damages. But as I understand the 14 federal statute, they must pay the fee if the fee is 15 awarded.

16 MR. BALILES: Justice Stevens, many states
17 have reimbursement or indemnification statutes.
18 Virginia does not. Some states qualify 19 indemnification. Some attach qualification. Some 20 require review by the Attorney General and the 21 Governor. The result is there is no certainty, no 22 guarantee that there will be indemnification in that 23 event. The result is that you face the prospect of a 24 judge going hat in hand to a legislative body or some 25 other agency of government seeking a special

1 appropriation, and what that does for the doctrine of 2 separation of powers staggers the imagination.

3 QUESTION: Well, but if the federal statute 4 provides that the fee should be collected from the 5 public agency, can't -- won't the judgment run against 6 the government agency so he doesn't have to go hat in 7 hand. He takes the judgment and says you people have to 8 pay this.

9 MR. BALILES: Well, there is nothing, Justice
10 Stevens, in Section 1988 that requires a state to pay.
11 It just simply says that the Court in its discretion may 12 award attorneys' fees to be paid to the prevailing 13 party. And --

14 QUESTION: Well, was the judgment secured
15 against the Commonwealth?

16 MR. BALILES: The judgment was against the 17 magistrate, Gladys Pulliam.

18 QUESTION: For fees, for fees, the fee
19 judgment.

20 MR. BALILES: Yes, the fees.

21 QUESTION: The Commonwealth wasn't a party,
22 was it?

23 MR. BALILES: The Commonwealth was not an 24 official party to this proceeding.

25 QUESTION: I was trying to clarify what

1 Justice Stevens suggested that the statute requires that 2 the Commonwealth pay, but there is no judgment here
3 against the Commonwealth.

4 MR. BALILES: That is correct. It is against 5 the --

6 QUESTION: So the narrow question we are 7 confronted with is whether or not there can be a fee 8 against the individual judicial officer.

9 MR. BALILES: That is correct.

10 QUESTION: My recollection must have been 11 incorrect.

12 Is it in the legislative history? Doesn't the 13 committee report say that it shall be collected from the 14 public agency?

15 MR. BALILES: Justice Stevens, I am not aware 16 of any --

17 QUESTION: Or did I just pick this out of thin 18 air?

19 MR. BALILES: -- reference in the legislative 20 history that judges or some government agency should pay 21 attorneys' fees awarded against a judge, and I say that 22 for this reason. There is nothing in the legislative 23 history that refers to the authority of a judge to order 24 another judge to pay attorneys' fees. It is not 25 mentioned once in the report, not mentioned by the chief

1 patrons of the legislation, Senator Tunney in the 2 Senate, Congressman Drinan in the House; not referred to 3 by the floor manager, Senator Kennedy in the Senate, 4 Congressmen Railsback and Kastenmeyer in the House. Not 5 once was there a reference even in the House and Senate 6 reports to the doctrine of judicial immunity being 7 considered by the Congress or being repealed by either 8 body.

9 The policy reasons that this Court has stated 10 on asserting judicial immunity applies to judges in 11 damage actions, we submit apply equally to actions 12 against judges in which attorney's fees are sought, and 13 it is for this reason, the consequences of monetary 14 awards are not lessened by the label attached to them.
15 A rose by any other name is still a rose, and whether 16 you call that monetary award damages or attorneys' fees, 17 you still have the same compelling, coercive effect upon 18 a judge during the course of judicial decisionmaking.

19 QUESTION: Mr. Attorney General, would you
20 make the same argument for the normal costs of suit?

21 MR. BALILES: With respect to the judge?

22 QUESTION: Yes.

23 MR. BALILES: I would, Justice O'Connor.

24 QUESTION: Is that in this case?

25 MR. BALILES: That is not the issue before

1 this case although costs were assessed along with 2 attorneys' fees.

3 QUESTION: Well, costs, $300 some in costs
4 were assessed.

5 MR. BALILES: Yes, sir.

6 QUESTION: Is that out of the case?

7 MR. BALILES: No, sir. Costs as well as 8 attorneys' fees are involved in this particular case.

9 QUESTION: Well, indeed, Congress tried to 10 treat attorneys' fees as costs, didn't it?

11 MR. BALILES: Congress in this particular
12 case, Justice O'Connor, did not deal with the question 13 of costs or attorneys' fees with respect to judges being 14 the subject of monetary awards.

15 QUESTION: But under the statute, did it not 16 attempt to treat attorneys' fees as costs?

17 MR. BALILES: It mentions attorneys' fees and 18 costs being available for award by the Court in its 19 discretion to the prevailing party, that is correct.

20 QUESTION: Am I correct in my impression that 21 the Commonwealth did pay these fees?

22 MR. BALILES: It is not reflected in the 23 record as such, but the magistrate in this case sought a 24 special appropriation from the Executive Secretary of 25 the Supreme Court of Virginia's office, and it was

1 paid.

2 In damage cases against judges, this Court has 3 said repeatedly that the doctrine of judicial immunity 4 is essential. It is required for the vitality of the 5 judiciary, and it is essential and necessary in order to 6 promote fearless, principled decisionmaking. And yet 7 the purpose of immunity is not served by protecting 8 judges from damage actions and exposing them to 9 attorneys' fees and awards in prospective relief cases.
10 The financial impact of attorneys' fees in today's 11 litigation can be just as chilling, just as intimidating 12 as those that may be included in an award for damages.

13 Now, the issue before this Court is critical 14 because if the Court sanctions the award of attorneys' 15 fees in this case, it will have implicitly limited the 16 doctrine of judicial immunity and approved the suing of 17 justice in prospective relief cases and subjecting them 18 to the payment of attorneys' fees. And the impact of 19 such a step would be staggering.

20 For example, this Court has said in dealing 21 with damage cases that judges should not be subjected to 22 the distraction, to the diversion from work in order to 23 prepare for trial, to attend depositions, to answer 24 interrogatories and to otherwise assist in the 25 preparation of a defense, but those same types of

1 distractions and diversions are available and would be 2 required in equitable relief cases.

3 Equitable relief cases can have the same 4 chilling effect on judges as damage actions because 5 sanctions inherent in the injunctive relief process also 6 include fines and imprisonment which are just as 7 intimidating and pernicious as money damages.

8 At the very heart of the judicial immunity 9 doctrine is the concern that there be no chilling effect 10 on independent judicial decisionmaking caused by the 11 threat of lawsuits. But the chill arises regardless of 12 the type of relief sought in a suit. The chill occurs 13 not simply because a judge may be subject to some 14 pecuniary loss, but because the threat of a lawsuit is 15 intimidating, and that is not in the interest of the 16 public.

17 In short, what you have is the possibility 18 that a judge would pull his punches instead of 19 exercising the independence of judgment required by 20 one's public responsibilities, and that is the threat to 21 the integrity of the judicial system, regardless of 22 whether the suit is one for damages or whether it is 23 seeking injunctive or declaratory relief.

24 And if this court sanctions injunctive relief 25 and declaratory suits against judges, the courts of this

1 country will be flooded with a new wave of litigation 2 brought against judicial officers all across this 3 country, and it should not be overlooked that those 4 cases would be aimed at federal judges as well as state 5 jurists. The impact upon the calendars of the courts of 6 this country and the quality of justice would simply be 7 staggering. And the Court should not allow those types 8 of awards of attorneys fees against judicial officers 9 because of the impact it would have not only on the 10 operation of justice in this country, but upon the 11 doctrine of judicial immunity itself.

12 Now, may it please the Court, there is another 13 compelling reason why judges should not be liable for 14 attorneys' fees and subject to equitable relief cases, 15 and that is this: Congress simply has not authorized 16 it. The court below, the Fourth Circuit, declared that 17 when the 1976 Civil Rights Attorneys' Fees Award Act was 18 passed, Congress had intended to repeal the common law 19 doctrine of judicial immunity and to require judges to 20 pay attorneys' fees to prevailing parties. But the 21 court below was wrong because the legislative history of 22 that act simply does not support that conclusion.

23 This Court has said in the case of Pierson v.
24 Ray that the standard to be employed in determining 25 whether Congress has abrogated a well-settled rule of

1 common law is to determine whether Congress made a clear 2 indication that it intended to abrogate that 3 well-settled rule of common law. There must be a 4 specific provision.

5 Well, in the Pierson case, this Court found
6 there was no clear indication by Congress when it
7 enacted Section 1983, and therefore the language in 1983
8 that says every person did not mean every judge.

9 Similarly, in the case of Tenney v. Brandhove,
10 this Court found that when Congress passed Section 1983, 11 there was no clear indication that it intended to repeal 12 the doctrine of legislative immunity, and therefore the 13 language in 1983 that says every person did not mean 14 every legislator.

15 And similarly in this case, if the legislative 16 history does not show a clear indication by Congress 17 that the doctrine of judicial immunity is abrogated, 18 then every person, every judge should not be subjected 19 to an award of attorneys' fees in civil actions brought 20 against them.

21 I mentioned a moment ago the legislative 22 history when I referred to the floor leaders and the 23 chief patrons of the legislation. The proponents and 24 the opponents of Section 1988 both agree that that bill 25 was a limited and cautious step, creating no new remedy,

1 overturning no prior practice or policy except to 2 provide the authority that this Court said in the 3 Alyeska pipeline case was required.

4 QUESTION: General Baliles, what do you make 5 of the reference to the House report relied on by the 6 Fourth Circuit that is contained at page 30 and 31 of 7 the petition?

8 MR. BALILES: Justice Rehnquist, the Court of 9 Appeals below referred to a paragraph containing two 10 sentences and a footnote as the basis for its conclusion 11 that Congress had abrogated the common law doctrine of 12 judicial immunity. The court below was wrong. The 13 House report doesn't simply support that conclusion.
14 Indeed, there is no reference in that report itself to 15 the doctrine of judicial immunity. It is not found in 16 the Senate report. In fact, what the House passed was 17 the Senate bill, and so the Senate bill and the Senate
18 report were really before the House, not the House bill 19 and the House report.

20 But notwithstanding that, the House report 21 cited by the court below is an ambiguous reference at 22 best, and this is ironic. That footnote referred to 23 this Court's decision in Pierson v. Ray where the 24 standard said there must be a clear indication by 25 Congress.

1 So the fact that that case is cited in the 2 footnote at least should suggest that Congress had to be 3 aware of the standards set by this Court in Pierson, 4 that there must be a clear indication, a specific 5 provision, and you won't find it in that report.

6 I suspect that the reference to the Pierson
7 case in that footnote, Justice Rehnquist, is simply a 8 reference to the case because that case also involved 9 not only judicial immunity but the qualified or good 10 faith immunity of police officers who were also subject 11 to that lawsuit.

12 In light of the standards that have been set 13 by this Court in the Pierson case for determining what 14 Congress intended, this Court should find that Congress 15 did not intend for Section 1988 legislation to authorize 16 the award of attorneys' fees against a member of the 17 judiciary for acts undertaken in his judicial capacity.

18 Now, there is precedent for this Court to hold 19 that the judicial immunity doctrine embraces both damage 20 cases and actions for equitable relief. This Court held 21 that both federal and state legislators are absolutely 22 immune from civil actions, regardless of whether the 23 actions are for damages or whether they are seeking 24 prospective relief. And here is the interesting part:
25 the policy reasons for legislative immunity are

1 identical to the policy reasons for judicial immunity.
2 The common law origins are similar, and that is the 3 purpose being to protect the integrity and the 4 independence of the decisionmaker, to protect the 5 independence and the integrity of the judicial system, 6 and to prevent the distraction of attention from one's 7 public responsibility.

8 And because the policies underlying the 9 doctrines of legislative and judicial immunity are 10 identical and the common law origins are similar, common 11 sense would dictate that the rules also should be 12 similar.

13 May it please the Court, this is the bottom
14 line in this case. If the Respondents win, this Court 15 will have decided more than just the question of 16 attorneys' fees. It will have limited the doctrine of 17 judicial immunity and authorized the filing of lawsuits 18 against judges in prospective relief cases. But if the 19 Petitioner prevails, this Court can dispose of the 1988
20 attorneys' fee issue without deciding the 1983 question
21 of whether judges can be sued in prospective relief 22 cases, and here is how.

23 A, this Court can decide that attorneys' fees 24 are barred by the doctrine of judicial immunity because 25 attorneys' fees are the functional equivalent of damages

1 and thus barred by that doctrine; and B, this Court can 2 find that Congress did not intend to abrogate the common
3 law doctrine of judicial immunity when it enacted
4 Section 1988.

5 And the Petitioner thinks that this Court can 6 and should reach the larger issue, the broader question 7 and rule that the doctrine of judicial immunity, like 8 legislative immunity, bars actions, whether for damages 9 or for equitable relief.

10 And so this is what we ask of this court, 11 reverse the lower court's decision and find the 12 following:

13 There is no clear indication that Congress
14 intended for Section 1988 to repeal the common law 15 doctrine of judicial immunity and to authorize 16 attorneys' fees to be awarded against judges for actions
17 taken in their judicial capacity; and two, attorneys' 18 fees against judges are barred by the doctrine of 19 judicial immunity.

20 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, Mr. Attorney 21 General.

22 Ms. Wyatt?

23 ORAL ARGUMENT OF MS. DEBORAH C. WYATT, ESQ.,

24 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENTS

25 MS. WYATT: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it

1 please the Court:

2 At issue in this case is a $7000 award of 3 attorneys' fees which has been paid by the state, an 4 award which was entered following the correction of a 5 glaring constitutional violation, a violation of the 6 rights of my indigent clients. The question before this 7 Court is whether judicial immunity is going to defeat 8 such an award, defeat such vindication.

9 As Petitioner described, this case stems from 10 a practice by a local county magistrate of incarcerating 11 persons for nonincarcerable offenses when they could not 12 post bond. It was a practice which in a five month 13 period affected approximately 50 people, 34 of whom were 14 incarcerated, including my two clients. One of my 15 clients was incarcerated for 14 days when he couldn't 16 post a $250 bond for a nonincarcerable offense. The 17 other client was incarcerated four times in a two-month 18 period for nonincarcerable offenses, for charges of 19 nonincarcerable offenses.

20 QUESTION: What other remedies would your 21 client have had to solve this problem in Virginia?
22 Could he have sought habeas corpus release?

23 MS. WYATT: Justice O'Connor, I think that is 24 a very important question to this case because they 25 could not have sought any other remedy because along

1 with the practice of incarcerating persons for 2 nonincarcerable offenses, they were being appointed no 3 counsel, they were being given no advice of rights, they 4 were being locked away. For them there was no appeal.

5 Now, there is a provision for appealing bail.

6 QUESTION: There was no habeas corpus relief
7 possible in Virginia?

8 MS. WYATT: There is habeas corpus relief 9 available, as there are appeals, but not for my clients; 10 not when they had no counsel and no advice of rights.
11 They had no ability to make use of those provisions, and 12 moreover --

13 QUESTION: They could have filed pro se for 14 habeas.

15 MS. WYATT: Had they known how, perhaps, and 16 had time permitted, because these incarcerations were as 17 long as 14 days and as short as 2 days, and I think as 18 this Court has recognized in Gerstein v. Pugh, often 19 these issues will not be heard in time to make them -- 20 to make these remedies meaningful.

21 QUESTION: There is some provision in Virginia
22 law by which pretrial detention orders can be taken up 23 to the next highest court, is there not?

24 MS. WYATT: That is correct, there are 25 appeal --

1 QUESTION: Was that available?

2 MS. WYATT: That was available to them had 3 they had the ability and the time to pursue them. They 4 did not.

5 Furthermore, we are not dealing with isolated 6 incidents. We are dealing with a practice. Even if 7 they had cured one after the other, it was a continuing 8 practice. Respondent Nicholson, as soon as he got out, 9 he was being reincarcerated, sometimes again for as 10 short as two days, and whether he could have effected an 11 appeal in that period of time I think is doubtful. And 12 again, I think it is very similar to what was recognized 13 in Gerstein v. Pugh along those lines.

14 Petitioner was sued only in her official 15 capacity, and at that level judicial immunity was really 16 not truly raised. It was never raised at all with 17 regard to declaratory judgment. The only issue 18 appealed, moreover, was the attorney fee award, and that 19 is really the only issue that is properly before this 20 court, and it was the only issue addressed by the Fourth 21 Circuit.

22 The attorney fee award, when prospective 23 relief has been granted, whatever the validity of 24 judicial immunity, whatever validity it might have had 25 on the merits, had it been properly raised and had it

1 been considered, that is not before the Court.

2 QUESTION: May I interrupt?

3 MS. WYATT: Certainly.

4 QUESTION: Did I understand you to say the 5 immunity issue wasn't raised?

6 MS. WYATT: The judicial immunity issue on 7 prospective relief was not raised in the lower court.
8 If I said --

9 QUESTION: They filed a motion on February 11, 10 1981, Point D, Defendant is immune from liability.

11 Doesn't that cover it?

12 MS. WYATT: Your Honor, I believe if you will 13 review the record, you will see that they raised 14 judicial immunity as to attorneys' fees, as to 15 injunctive relief, but --

16 QUESTION: Well, they say immune from 17 liability. That is pretty broad.

18 MS. WYATT: Are you referring to --

19 QUESTION: I am referring to Appendix 15, page 20 15. They filed that on February 11, 1981, a few days 21 after you filed your lawsuit.

22 MS. WYATT: Immune from liability, Your Honor, 23 if you continue and read the memorandum, they make clear 24 they mean liability from damages and attorneys' fees, 25 and they elucidate. They never challenged on judicial

1 immunity grounds the declaratory judgment. This 2 memorandum that is accompanying that and that follows
3 the motion in that case, I don't believe anywhere in the 4 pleadings you will find any assertion that declaratory 5 judgment is barred by judicial immunity.

6 Again, when they say liability, they elucidate 7 in the memorandum they mean liability from damages.

8 QUESTION: Well, the next sentence in their 9 memorandum says the injunction may be appropriate in 10 some actions, but in the case of a judicial officer, 11 there is a real question whether it is permissible.

12 MS. WYATT: I understand that, Your Honor.
13 Again, I do not believe the record will ever show any 14 judicial immunity with regard to declaratory judgment
15 ever raised. But even if it had been, of course --

16 QUESTION: But you didn't claim anything
17 except prospective relief. You claimed no damages, did 18 you?

19 MS. WYATT: That's correct, Your Honor, we did 20 not, but we did ask for attorneys' fees, and they did at 21 that point raise an objection to attorney fee awards, 22 and that is all that is before this court because that 23 is all that they appealed.

24 And the fact of the matter is that Congress
25 passed 1988 --

1 QUESTION: Did the Petitioner at any time
2 waive immunity?

3 MS. WYATT: I am sorry, Your Honor.

4 QUESTION: Did your -- the judge at any time
5 waive immunity?

6 MS. WYATT: Only insofar as it was not 7 raised. They did raise judicial immunity with regard to 8 injunctive relief.

9 QUESTION: Did they at any place "waive" the 10 immunity?

11 MS. WYATT: I believe under Gomez v. Toledo it 12 is a defense to be raised as a defense, and to the 13 extent it wasn't raised with declaratory judgment, it 14 might be considered so. I --

15 QUESTION: Then the answer to my question is 16 what?

17 MS. WYATT: It may be considered waived as to 18 declaratory judgment.

19 QUESTION: Did she ever say "waive?"

20 MS. WYATT: Never said waive.

21 QUESTION: Thank you.

22 MS. WYATT: The only issue, however, the only 23 issue that was appealed, whatever happened at the 24 District Court level, was the attorney fee award.

25 Congress made clear in its language and in the 1 legislative history that it intended these attorney fee 2 awards to be entered not only against defendants for 3 whom prospective relief is entered, but most 4 particularly in cases in which defendants are immune 5 from damages.

6 The language on its face is very clear, there
7 was nothing whatsoever for Congress to have abrogated, 8 as Petitioner discusses. First of all, damages do not 9 equal attorneys' fees. To say that damages equal 10 attorneys' fees is like saying interest equal principal 11 or rent equals purchase money: they spend alike, they 12 look alike, but to anyone who has ever borrowed or 13 rented, the difference is a complete one; and to 14 Congress the difference was complete. Congress intended 15 the attorney fee awards to step in most particularly 16 where damages could not be. And this court has 17 recognized that, in Hutto v. Finney and in Consumers
18 Union, Supreme Court of Virginia v. Consumers Union, 19 there this Court recognized that prosecutors immune from 20 damage awards are natural targets for prospective 21 relief, are therefore appropriate defendants for 22 attorney fee awards. Moreover, even if this Court were 23 to consider abrogation necessary, even though Congress
24 intended these to be costs ancillary to prospective 25 relief, which has always been against judicial officers,

1 abrogation there is.

2 This case is an easier one than Hutto v.
3 Finney. In Hutto v. Finney we were dealing with the 4 Eleventh Amendment, and the main concerns expressed in 5 dissent in that case were that in the area of 6 conflicting interest of constitutional dimension, the 7 Eleventh and Fourteenth Amendments, that is a very 8 sensitive area; extra, explicit language for abrogation 9 is necessary, and we didn't even have states as persons 10 under 1983.

11 In the present case, we are not dealing with 12 conflicting interests of constitutional dimensions, not 13 conflicting interests of statutory dimension. We are 14 not conflicting with really anything but an enactment
15 under the Fourteenth Amendment and a judge-made policy.
16 That is certainly not as sensitive an area as two 17 conflicting constitutional provisions. Yet we have more 18 explicit indication.

19 Judges are persons under 1983. States are 20 not. And moreover, Congress made very clear that one of 21 the purposes in fact in enacting 1988 was to make these 22 remedies available, available against officials who are 23 immune from damages awards. This Court said that in 24 Consumers Union where this Court stated, and I quote, 25 "The House Committee report on the act indicates that

1 Congress intended to permit attorneys' fees awards 2 against, when prospective relief is entered against 3 defendants immune from damages awards." This Court 4 recognizes, Congress recognizes, everywhere in 5 Congress', in the Senate and House reports, reference is 6 made to Newman v. Piggie Park which, of course, was a 7 case where it was recognized that when damages are not 8 available, that is when injunctive relief is all that's 9 available, and it is so much more important then to have 10 attorney fees available, and this case exemplifies 11 that.

12 My clients are indigent. They had no money 13 with which to hire a lawyer. They could not sue for 14 damages to which an attorney might look for a contingent 15 fee. They were dependent on the incentive provided by 16 1988, and it served that purpose.

17 QUESTION: Ms. Wyatt, may I ask you this 18 question?

19 How long did this injunction extend?

20 MS. WYATT: Your Honor, the way it was framed, 21 it was indefinite.

22 QUESTION: Indefinite.

23 MS. WYATT: That's correct.

24 QUESTION: So if this magistrate made this 25 mistake again ten years from now, she would be guilty of 1 contempt.

2 MS. WYATT: She would be, Your Honor.

3 QUESTION: Do you think that has no influence 4 on the independence of the judiciary, that sort of 5 situation?

6 MS. WYATT: Your Honor, of course, is reaching 7 the issue of the underlying relief, the prospective 8 relief. I think it may have, but I think this Court has 9 recognized the difference in prospective and retroactive 10 relief as in the Eleventh Amendment cases, and I think 11 in this case it was the only way that this could have 12 been stopped. She was the natural defendant; she was 13 engaged in a practice. There might have been some other 14 people that could have been sued, and in fact, before 15 this case was filed, suit was filed in the same court on 16 behalf of the same person, the same practice, but 17 challenging, suing the sheriff and the Commonwealth 18 Attorney.

19 QUESTION: May I ask this question also?

20 You sued this particular magistrate only in 21 the official capacity.

22 MS. WYATT: That's right.

23 QUESTION: Suppose you had sued individually
24 as well as officially and the jury had, or the judge, 25 whoever tried the case, had brought in a judgment only

1 against the individual? Who would have paid those 2 fees?

3 MS. WYATT: Your Honor, it is my reading of 4 1988 that it really is only applicable in cases in which 5 you are suing someone in an official capacity, the 6 specific language in either the House or Senate report
7 indicating that. So I don't think we had 1988.

8 Now, we may have a bad faith situation, but I 9 think this Court has recognized that that is a totally 10 different analysis.

11 QUESTION: In your view, there is no situation
12 in which an individual judge would be required to pay 13 fees?

14 Suppose the legislature or the Attorney
15 General's office or whoever just said, said we have no
16 authority under the laws of Virginia to pay anybody's 17 fees if they have misbehaved.

18 MS. WYATT: Your Honor, it would be my 19 position that 1988, if it applies, applies regardless of 20 the indemnification statutes. It's --

21 QUESTION: Do you think a federal judge could 22 compel the legislature of Virginia to provide funds?

23 MS. WYATT: No, I do not believe it could, but 24 I think that the state probably, if it cares, if it 25 really does think that this is going to be such an

1 inhibitory effect on its state judges, will, and it has 2 been my understanding that most if not all states had 3 those, and in fact, I thought Virginia had, and again, 4 this has been paid by the state.

5 But if they didn't, I think that's a 6 determination for the state to make.

7 QUESTION: Well, may I ask this question
8 also? We see a good many cases that involve no question 9 as to the appropriateness of attorneys' fees but a very 10 long litigation as to the correctness or reasonableness 11 of the amount. No problem in this case, but suppose the 12 fees allowed had been $25,000 instead of $7500? What 13 about those?

14 MS. WYATT: Your Honor, I would find 15 absolutely no distinction --

16 QUESTION: Right, but --

17 MS. WYATT: -- if the District Court --

18 QUESTION: But my next question is, who would 19 pay the lawyers who represented the Petitioner in this 20 case in the long litigation as to the reasonableness of 21 the attorneys' fees?

22 MS. WYATT: Your Honor, I think that is a 23 question which is going to vary perhaps from the state.
24 Again, in Virginia, the Attorney General's office from 25 the beginning has defended Petitioner, but that is for

1 Congress to decide.

2 QUESTION: You think Congress has decided that 3 the attorneys' fees involved in a case that is litigated 4 with respect to the reasonableness of the fees also 5 would have to be paid? Do you think Congress intended 6 that?

7 MS. WYATT: That's my understanding of 8 Congress' intent, yes.

9 QUESTION: Is there anything in the 10 legislative history that supports your view?

11 MS. WYATT: Nothing right off hand, Your 12 Honor, that comes to mind. I am aware of the fact that 13 they intended these to be, and that I believe this court 14 has recognized that attorney fees are not supposed to be 15 a second major source of litigation. They are in this 16 case because we are now coming in through the back door 17 and challenging the merits. Normally it would be the 18 merits alone.

19 But I think it also points out the fact that 20 at this stage we are not talking about judicial 21 officers. Maybe somewhere a judicial officer is going 22 to be left with the proverbial hat-in-hand approach. I 23 think it is most unlikely. Again, it is my 24 understanding that almost all states, if not all 25 states --

1 QUESTION: Let's assume that you are correct, 2 that Congress has the power to tell the State of 3 Virginia or Commonwealth of Virginia to pay some fees, 4 how would that be enforced?

5 MS. WYATT: Your Honor, if I said that, I
6 misstated myself. I do not believe that Congress would 7 have that power to say that they would have to indemnify 8 them. I think that is something that -- I think if the 9 order were against the state, we would have Hutto v.
10 Finney. I think that they can say that judicial 11 officers can be sued. We have already recognized that 12 in Pierson v. Ray. What they have done instead is said 13 we are going to assess the cost of litigation when 14 injunctive relief is all that can be available for just 15 a case s this. Congress can do that. Congress has done 16 that. Congress intended this. If in some instance some 17 judge is -- finds himself in a situation where he is 18 responsible for his own fees, he is certainly not in a 19 different position than all the other officials, 20 including the President of the United States who is not 21 immune from prospective relief and therefore 22 presumptively from attorneys' fees if they applied, of 23 course, to federal officials.

24 We have --

25 QUESTION: Is there anything in the statutcry,

1 in the Congress that says that we are waiving immunity
2 for all judicial officers?

3 MS. WYATT: Not in that language, absolutely 4 not, Your Honor.

5 QUESTION: If you sued this Petitioner here
6 for $7,300, would that stand up?

7 MS. WYATT: If I sued for damages, for 8 retroactive, prelitigation damages?

9 QUESTION: I don't care for any, just damages
10 of $7,300.

11 MS. WYATT: I think it would make a difference 12 if it were for --

13 QUESTION: Would you have been able to 14 maintain that suit?

15 MS. WYATT: Not for damages, no, Your Honor.

16 QUESTION: But you can maintain a suit for 17 $7,300 in attorneys' fees.

18 MS. WYATT: In fact, in this case we 19 maintained --

20 QUESTION: Is that right?

21 MS. WYATT: Maintain a suit for attorneys'
22 fees?

23 QUESTION: Well, how are you --

24 MS. WYATT: Possibly so, possibly so. There 25 have been decisions which --

1 QUESTION: And now you will tell me the 2 difference between the two.

3 MS. WYATT: There is one case of which I am 4 aware in which prelitigation settlement incurred 5 attorneys' fees, and that is the only situation in which 6 I could even see it characterized as suing for 7 attorneys' fees. But the difference there is this: it 8 does not focus for one moment on the judge's 9 prelitigation conduct. It doesn't even deal with bad 10 faith.

11 1988 is only going to be between lawyers 12 deciding how much the state pays, in fact. Furthermore, 13 if you, a --

14 QUESTION: Do you think that answers my 15 question, really?

16 MS. WYATT: It was my understanding, yes, Your 17 Honor.

18 QUESTION: Okay.

19 MS. WYATT: If Your Honor believes that 20 attorney fees equal damages, however, Congress made 21 clear its intent, and this Court has recognized that 22 Congress can do that. Congress can take away the entire 23 immunity under Pierson v. Ray. It didn't do that.
24 Instead, it simply assessed attorneys' fees.

25 But Congress made clear, it is mentioned all

1 through the House and Senate reports, the fact that the 2 purpose was to make prospective relief available in 3 theory also available in fact by removing the financial 4 obstacles. It does cite to Pierson v. Ray, but that is 5 not the only indication in these reports that that is 6 what Congress intended.

7 QUESTION: Well, Ms. Wyatt, is the citation by 8 the Court of Appeals to that provision two sentences 9 from the House one, is that as substantial a thing as 10 there is in the legislative report indicating that the 11 judges should be liable for prospective relief and 12 attorneys' fees?

13 MS. WYATT: I'm sorry, as you saying is that 14 one citation as --

15 QUESTION: Well, I mean, is that as persuasive 16 as any other item of the many that you feel are there?

17 MS. WYATT: I think it is certainly more
18 persuasive than what was available in Hutto v. Finney.
19 As I note in my brief, they refer to preclusive 20 immunities, and the only preclusive immunity referred to 21 was in Pierson v. Ray, which is immunity from damages of 22 judges.

23 But there are many, many citations. I note 24 that in the House report there are five references to 25 Newman v. Piggie Park. In the Senate report there are 1 two.

2 QUESTION: How about, take Tenney v.
3 Brandhove, the legislative immunity. Now, there you
4 have immunity from equitable as well as damage relief, I 5 take it.

6 MS. WYATT: That's correct.

7 QUESTION: Now, do you think that nonetheless, 8 if this paragraph that the Court of Appeals made, should 9 be read to allow attorneys' fees against legislators?

10 MS. WYATT: Absolutely not, Your Honor, 11 because that is not -- because a legislator is not going 12 to be a defendant in a suit in 1983 at all. There is no 13 prospective relief, there is no damage relief, there is 14 no suit that can be sustained.

15 QUESTION: Well, Senator Tenney was certainly 16 a defendant in a -- Senator Tenney, the original party
17 in Tenney v. Brandhove, was certainly a defendant in a 18 1983 action.

19 MS. WYATT: But he won upon this Court's 20 enunciation that legislators are absolutely immune in 21 the absolute sense; the legislative process is immune 22 from being examined by the judiciary, and you will not 23 have a legislator, therefore, against whom prospective 24 relief is entered, or damages, for that matter, and 25 therefore you will never have 1988 come into play.

1 If you did, if a legislator acted in some 2 other capacity and was an appropriate defendant, yes, 3 1988 would apply to him.

4 QUESTION: And then he could -- attorneys'
5 fees could be recovered even though neither prospective 6 equitable relief nor damages could be had against him.

7 MS. WYATT: No. 1988 is confined to the 8 situation in which relief is given. There is a 9 prevailing party in a 1983 action, and I think that was 10 the point this Court made in Consumers Union.
11 Legislators cannot be sued at all. Therefore, there's 12 never going to be attorneys' fees. Prosecutors can be 13 sued, if only for prospective relief, and therefore 14 there are going to be attorneys' fees. That's what 15 Congress intended.

16 Judges, because their immunities are so like 17 prosecutors', are immune from damages but are not 18 appropriate candidates for prospective relief, and 19 consequently, prospective -- for immunity from 20 prospective relief, and therefore, will be sued for 21 prospective relief, should be able --

22 QUESTION: Of course, we have never decided 23 that, have we, whether judges are or are not immune from 24 prospective relief.

25 MS. WYATT: That's correct, and you need not

1 do so in this case because presumptively it was 2 correct. We don't even know. We don't even know what 3 the District Court found or why because the merits were 4 not appealed.

5 I would like to add, though, that if this 6 Court were to reach that issue, it is a very dangerous 7 one in a case such as this. There really is not any 8 alternative remedy, as we were discussing previously.

9 Furthermore, I would like to also point out
10 that Pierson --

11 QUESTION: May I ask you, is there anything in 12 the legislative history of 1988 that indicates anything 13 about the Congress' assumption about the immunity of 14 judges from prospective relief? Is there any discussion 15 of judges at all?

16 MS. WYATT: Not -- not the word judges, no.

17 QUESTION: Judicial officers?

18 MS. WYATT: The people who are immune from 19 damages, or the unavailability of damage remedies, yes, 20 and judges by implication in the citation of Pierson v.
21 Ray. That's the only official they could have been 22 referring to when they talked about preclusive
23 immunities in cite to Pierson v. Ray.

24 QUESTION: Might they have been talking about 25 prosecutors?

1 MS. WYATT: Pierson v. Ray dealt with police
2 officers and judges. Police officers were not entitled 3 to preclusive immunity. There were three cases cited.
4 The only one that had a preclusive immunity was Pierson
5 v. Ray, and that was for judges. But no, they didn't 6 use the term judges.

7 Throughout, however, 1988, there are 8 references to the principle enunciated in Newman v.
9 Piggie Park, which is where you can't get damages, the 10 private attorney general enforcement is all the more 11 important, and in fact, this case exemplifies that as 12 well, if I may. The public attorney general vigorously 13 defended the conduct in this case, making the private 14 enforcement all the more important.

15 Now, there has been some discussion about this 16 application of 1988 expanding the use of 1983. I think 17 Justice Harlan concurring in Bivens, had an appropriate
18 perspective to that, that is really Congress' concern 19 and should not cut back on constitutional rights. But 20 certainly, to apply that principle to this case would be 21 to throw the baby out with the bath water. This was a 22 correct application of 1988. It served the vindication
23 purpose. It served the purpose of allowing prospective 24 relief to be had by persons who were indigent, could not 25 have gotten it otherwise. It served the private

1 attorney general purpose, and this Court has already 2 recognized in Hutto, in White v. New Hampshire, in 3 Consumers Union, that attorneys' fees do not equal 4 damages. Again, they are both money, but they are 5 different. One, Congress said, is to be ancillary -- 6 they said this in the House and Senate reports -- is to 7 be treated as ancillary, which of course ties in with 8 this Court's language regarding the Eleventh Amendment, 9 ancillary to prospective relief, whether we like it or 10 not.

11 QUESTION: Going back to the Attorney
12 General's point that judges might be just as 13 apprehensive or nearly as apprehensive about the 14 prospect of attorneys' fees being awarded against them 15 as damages, have you given any thought to the fact that 16 in quite a number of cases, under 1988, judges, 17 including federal judges, have awarded costs against the 18 nonprevailing party, and the judge, if he has been doing 19 his homework, would note that even if he won the case, 20 in a situation like yours, he might be charged with some 21 attorneys' fees on the ground that the plaintiff had 22 done something useful?

23 MS. WYATT: Your Honor, I believe that that 24 principle was killed in Alyeska. What was resurrected 25 in its place was 1988, which does not -- really does not

1 give any provision for such an award as you were just 2 describing short of bad faith, and if a judge has been 3 vexatious, delaying the litigation, I believe this Court 4 has recognized in furtherance of the Court's docket and 5 its control of its courts, a federal court could give a 6 bad faith award to a judge.

7 These concerns, let me add, are equally 8 applicable with equal or more force to all other 9 officials who are available to be sued. To the extent 10 that this applies to federal judges, as Petitioner has 11 indicated, it can apply to the President of the United 12 States as well, which this Court has held is not immune 13 from prospective relief. He can be stopped. A local 14 magistrate should be able to be stopped, always has 15 been. And there is no more chilling, inhibiting effect 16 on a local magistrate than on anyone else against whom 17 1988 attorneys' fees can be assessed, and then paid, in 18 most cases, all cases of which I am aware, by the 19 state.

20 I would like to make one final point on the 21 prospective relief, if I can. In addition to the fact 22 there was no alternative remedy, there is no sound
23 justification for this extension. Moreover, Pierson,
24 Imbler, Tenney all rested, all rested on the proposition
25 that these immunities there were so firmly entrenched,

1 so well grounded in history and reason that it had to be 2 assumed Congress took them into account in passing 3 1983. And because it made no mention of it, they 4 survived 1983.

5 What can be said about immunity from 6 prospective relief? Judges have never been considered 7 immune from prospective relief, as this Court as 8 recognized as recently as 1981, and therefore, I think 9 it --

10 QUESTION: No, but is there a history of suing 11 judges for prospective relief?

12 MS. WYATT: There certainly is, Your Honor, or 13 we would not have had an anti-injunction act almost from 14 the time this country began, and we certainly have cases 15 such as Mitchum v. Foster, Boddie v. Connecticut which 16 really would be thrown out into the twilight zone if 17 this Court were to hold that there was now, for the 18 first time, immunity from prospective relief.

19 QUESTION: Well, to violate the 20 anti-injunction act, you don't have to sue the judge.
21 You sue the party that is the beneficiary of the state 22 court ruling.

23 MS. WYATT: Your Honor, I believe the 24 anti-injunction act is aimed at the courts, but this 25 Court has recognized if you sue the party such as the

1 prosecutor, that that still can come under the 2 anti-injunction act. That is a device that was used and 3 which was criticized, but it is the Court's, and this 4 Court has had cases before it reaching the merits where 5 judges have been defendants for prospective relief.

6 I think it is very important that when you 7 have -- and it's going to be rare -- a defendant who is 8 a judge who is the natural defendant in a case, who is 9 denying indigents the right of appeal, throwing out all 10 cases brought by blacks, ordering women sterilized on ex 11 parte hearings, incarcerating persons for 12 nonincarcerable offenses --

13 QUESTION: Do you want our ruling to be 14 limited to judges who do things like that?

15 MS. WYATT: I think it could be, Your Honor.

16 QUESTION: Do you think so?

17 MS. WYATT: For my case it could be. I don't 18 think there's any sound reason for doing so, but in 19 those cases, the federal court must retain the ability 20 to stop them, and Congress has said with that 21 prospective relief, to encourage that prospective 22 relief, to make possible in a case such as mine where my 23 clients are poor, we are providing 1988 attorney fees.

24 Accordingly, the decision below should be 25 affirmed.

1 Thank you.

2 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Do you have anything
3 further, Mr. Attorney General?

4 MR. BALILES: Mr. Chief Justice, unless the 5 Court has further questions, Petitioner waives 6 rebuttal.

7 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, Counsel.
8 The case is submitted.

9 (Whereupon, at 2:53 p.m., the case in the 10 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
