2 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments
3 next in Justices of Boston Municipal Court against 4 Michael Lydon.

5 Miss Smith, I think you may proceed whenever 6 you are ready.

7 ORAL ARGUMENT OF BARBARA A.H. SMITH, ESQ., 8 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONERS

9 MISS SMITH: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it 10 please the Court, the Justices of the Boston Municipal 11 Court seek reversal of an order and judgment of the 12 First Circuit Court of Appeals which granted pretrial 13 habeas corpus relief to a state defendant freed upon 14 personal recognizance pending a de novo trial which he 15 had requested.

16 The Court of Appeals found that the evidence 17 introduced at the initial bench trial was insufficient 18 to support conviction, and therefore held that the 19 double jeopardy clause precluded the de novo trial. The 20 court ordered that Mr. Lydon be freed from the personal 21 recognizance he was on, that he not be required to 22 answer any summons for trial, and effectively precluded
23 or enjoined the Commonwealth from providing the de novo 24 trial which he had requested.

25 Since this case arises within the context of

1 the Massachusetts de novo system, I will briefly explain
2 that system. When charged with a misdemeanor or lesser 3 felony, a defendant at his option may execute a written 4 waiver of his right to a jury trial in the first 5 instance and proceed to a bench trial. If dissatisfied 6 with the result of that bench trial, his sole remedy is 7 a de novo trial before a six-man jury or a judge and the 8 jury session if he so decides. By claim --

9 QUESTION: But there is an absolute right to 10 the jury, is there not?

11 MISS SMITH: Absolute right to the jury, Your 12 Honor.

13 By claim of the de novo trial, the bench trial 14 conviction is wiped out, vacated. All alleged errors of 15 law or fact are rendered immaterial. The defendant is 16 granted a totally fresh determination of guilt or 17 innocence without any need to demonstrate any error of 18 the law. The --

19 QUESTION: Does anything in the proceedings
20 below get into the de novo trial?

21 MISS SMITH: No, Your Honor, it is not a 22 review on the record.

23 QUESTION: No, but what I was getting at is, 24 suppose he takes the stand at the bench trial, and then 25 he takes the stand at the de novo trial. I take it his

1 testimony at the bench trial may be used to impeach
2 him.

3 MISS SMITH: That's correct, and the defense
4 counsel has the opportunity to use prior inconsistent 5 statements in cross examination of the witnesses. What 6 is wiped out are errors of law, alleged errors of fact, 7 the conviction, the judgment, and the sentencing.

8 However, a defendant may also have --

9 QUESTION: May I ask just one?

10 MISS SMITH: Yes.

11 QUESTION: Is the maximum range of sentencing 12 at the jury trial precisely the same as at the first 13 trial?

14 MISS SMITH: Yes. The District Court cannot 15 impose a sentence to a house of correction greater than 16 two and a half years or a state prison five years.

17 QUESTION: And that is at either stage?

18 MISS SMITH: That's right. Yes, Your Honor.

19 QUESTION: But suppose at the bench trial he 20 gets six months. May the -- and then he is convicted by 21 the jury at the de novo trial. May he get two and a 22 half years?

23 MISS SMITH: Yes, Your Honor, or he can get 24 less.

25 QUESTION: Yes.

1 MISS SMITH: Either way. The de novo trial,
2 as I said, represents a completely fresh determination
3 of guilt or innocence. However, the defendant can 4 initially, and he has no absolute right to, exercise his 5 right to a jury trial in the first instance, with the 6 right of appellate review if dissatisfied with the 7 outcome of that trial. The decision is solely his.

8 Mr. Lydon took the first --

9 QUESTION: Where would that appeal take place?

10 MISS SMITH: To our Massachusetts Appeals
11 Court.

12 Mr. Lydon opted for a bench trial. At the 13 close of evidence, he moved for directed verdict or 14 required finding of not guilty. That motion was denied, 15 and he was found guilty. He then claimed a de novo 16 trial. He remained free on personal recognizance as he 17 had been prior to the bench trial. The conditions of 18 personal recognizance require that he appeared when 19 summoned until a final judgment is rendered by the court 20 and he is formally discharged by the court. He is also 21 required to keep the peace.

22 Prior to the de novo trial, Mr. Lydon moved 23 for dismissal of the charges, arguing to the jury trial 24 judge that the evidence at the bench trial had been 25 insufficient to support conviction, and therefore under

1 the doctrine of Burks versus United States, the double 2 jeopardy clause prohibited the de novo trial.

3 QUESTION: Ms. Smith, what is the difference
4 in courts between the one where the bench trial takes 5 place and the one where the jury trial takes place?

6 MISS SMITH: It is all in the District Court,
7 Your Honor.

8 QUESTION: All in the --

9 MISS SMITH: There is now a six-man jury
10 session established in the Boston Municipal Court.

11 QUESTION: Different divisions of the 12 Municipal Court?

13 MISS SMITH: That's correct, Your Honor. Under 14 our prior system that this Court had upheld, the de novo 15 appeal was to the Superior Court. It now remains in the 16 District Court.

17 QUESTION: Since all of this transpired, does 18 Massachusetts now ask a defendant in this situation to 19 expressly waive any Burks right that might exist?

20 MISS SMITH: No, Your Honor, I can't say that 21 it does. There is no unified waiver system dealing with 22 this particular problem. The waiver form in the Boston 23 Municipal Court now provides that one specifically 24 acknowledge that they are waiving appellate review. It 25 does not, and I doubt that we could, require an

1 individual to waive the protections against double 2 jeopardy or waive his right to go into the federal court 3 to claim constitutional error.

4 After the trial judge denied the defendant's
5 motion for dismissal, he appealed to the single justice
6 of our State Supreme Court for exercise of the court's 7 superintendency power. The single justice reported the 8 question to the full bench, and our court held that 9 where a defendant's voluntary choice of a bench trial -- 10 where a defendant has a voluntary choice of a bench 11 trial, it does not create a situation in which the 12 double jeopardy concerns are implicated.

13 The court distinguished Burk as involving an 14 appellate determination that the evidence supporting the 15 conviction below was insufficient, and under such 16 circumstances --

17 QUESTION: Is it true that the prosecutor 18 conceded that?

19 MISS SMITH: No, Your Honor. I would say that 20 the prosecutor conceded for the purpose of reporting of 21 the legal question only that the evidence was 22 insufficient. Our Supreme Court then went on to hold 23 that the single justice did not sit as a reviewing 24 court, and there was no determination in the state court 25 as to the sufficiency of the evidence because no court

1 has jurisdiction to review on --

2 QUESTION: But there is no way for any court
3 to pass on that, is there?

4 MISS SMITH: That's correct.

5 QUESTION: Because there is no record.

6 MISS SMITH: There is no appellate review, 7 there is no reviewing court, there is no review on the 8 record of the bench trial proceeding.

9 QUESTION: Is there a record of the bench
10 trial proceeding?

11 MISS SMITH: There is a recording at the 12 bench --

13 QUESTION: There is a recording?

14 MISS SMITH: Yes.

15 QUESTION: It is not here, is it?

16 MISS SMITH: I believe part of the record is 17 not the recording, but counsel for Mr. Lydon has had 18 that recording transcribed.

19 QUESTION: And that is here?

20 MISS SMITH: Yes, Your Honor.

21 QUESTION: Thank you.

22 MISS SMITH: Burks did not address the issue
23 involved here, namely, whether a defendant has a right 24 in the de novo system to appellate review of the 25 sufficiency of the evidence question prior to a de novo

1 trial. The Supreme Judicial Court, finding no
2 constitutional requirement that such form of review be 3 granted, declined to extend Burks to the instant 4 situation. At no time was the sufficiency of the 5 evidence ruled on in the state courts.

6 Mr. Lydon then sought certiorari from this 7 Court which was denied. He then proceeded to file a 8 petition for writ of habeas corpus in the Federal 9 District Court, alleging that the de novo trial would 10 violate his double jeopardy rights. The District Court 11 denied respondent's motion to dismiss, and found that it 12 had jurisdiction, that Lydon was in sufficient custody 13 for federal habeas corpus purposes, that it had the 14 authority under Jackson versus Virginia to rule upon the 15 sufficiency of the evidence, which it did, and found it 16 to be insufficient, and then, applying Burks, ordered 17 that the writ be granted, and further ordered that Mr.
18 Lydon be released from personal recognizance, and that 19 the Commonwealth not retry him in the jury session. The 20 Court of Appeals affirmed.

21 Our appeal to this Court centers on three 22 fundamental propositions. First, that release upon 23 personal recognizance without surety prior to trial when 24 one does not stand under conviction and sentence does 25 not constitute a sufficient restraint upon one's

1 personal liberty to constitute custody within the 2 meaning of the habeas corpus statute. Neither Hensley
3 nor the Jones case relied upon by the First Circuit 4 require a different conclusion.

5 Second, we will argue that even were the 6 federal court within its jurisdiction, exercise of that 7 jurisdiction prior to trial where the petitioner is not 8 under conviction is inappropriate and violates 9 principles of comity and federalism.

10 Third, we would argue that the Massachusetts 11 system based upon a defendant's totally voluntary 12 initial choice of the trial procedures he wishes to 13 pursue does not implicate the whole jeopardy 14 considerations made manifest in Burks, nor is the 15 Commonwealth constitutionally required to provide 16 appellate review.

17 As I have indicated previously, the restraints 18 imposed by the conditions of personal recognizance are 19 minimal. The cases relied upon by the court below do 20 not support a finding of custody. In Hensley, the 21 petitioner had been convicted and sentenced to a period 22 of incarceration. Only execution of sentence had been 23 stayed pending appeal, and the petitioner released on 24 personal recognizance.

25 QUESTION: Ms. Smith, let me go back a little

1 bit. In response to the inquiry by Justice Marhsall, 2 Judge Garrity certainly says this in his opinion. "The 3 prosecution conceded and the single justice concluded 4 that the evidence had in fact been insufficient to 5 convict." And then Justice Wilkins in his opinion for 6 the Supreme Judicial Court, it seems to me, phrased that 7 a little differently. He said, "Accepting the 8 defendant's claim that the evidence at the bench trial
9 did not warrant third convictions, reserved and reported 10 two questions of the full bench."

11 I suppose it is in those observations that the 12 case centers, isn't it?

13 MISS SMITH: In -- I believe the full bench of 14 the Supreme Court, in a decision written by Justice
15 Wilkins, made quite clear that he did not sit as a 16 reviewing court sitting as a single justice, and there 17 was no finding by the state court on the sufficiency of 18 the evidence claim.

19 Now, Justice Garrity and petitioner in the 20 federal court has continued to insist in light of the 21 state court's finding that no court has jurisdiction to 22 review it, and that it was not reviewed, insist that 23 they had.

24 QUESTION: Of course, if there had been a 25 finding by the court sitting as to the insufficiency of

1 the evidence, we would never reach the --

2 MISS SMITH: We wouldn't be here, Your Honor.

3 QUESTION: We wouldn't be here, but what about 4 the concession by the prosecutor? Is that recital 5 true?

6 MISS SMITH: No --

7 QUESTION: Was there a concession?

8 MISS SMITH: I think it was conceded by the 9 prosecutor that if the complaint as written was strictly 10 construed, the evidence, I think it only fair to say, 11 would have failed, but he only conceded that for the 12 purpose of argument in the single justice session so 13 that the single justice could frame questions of law for 14 the report to the court. And I would suggest that even 15 if the prosecutor in a sense conceded it, that is not an 16 equivalent of a reviewing board making that 17 determination. Certainly our refusal --

18 QUESTION: Well, it may not be, but it may not 19 be, but it would still leave the question of whether or 20 not it is a sufficient event such as a -- the action of 21 a reviewing court in order to trigger the operation of 22 the double jeopardy clause.

23 MISS SMITH: I would say that it was not 24 conceded in that sense, that it was conceded for the 25 purpose of argument, and I believe that is the factual

1 determination made by our Supreme Judicial Court, and I
2 would suggest that that would be binding under these 3 circumstances.

4 QUESTION: Do you know of any other state or 5 commonwealth that has this single justice routine?

6 MISS SMITH: I really don't know another state 7 that does. It is an exercise of supervisory powers in 8 extraordinary cases.

9 QUESTION: Ms. Smith, are concessions such as 10 those that you have been talking about with my 11 colleagues fairly common for the sake of enabling the 12 single justice to certify a pure question of law?

13 MISS SMITH: Yes, Your Honor. There is 14 nothing uncommon about assuming for the purpose of the 15 report that the evidence is such and such.

16 QUESTION: Really, that question doesn't make 17 any difference, does it, because the federal courts 18 found an insufficiency of evidence, and you don't 19 challenge that for purposes of the cert petition.

20 MISS SMITH: No, I challenge the jurisdiction
21 to make such a --

22 QUESTION: Just the jurisdiction.

23 MISS SMITH: Right.

24 QUESTION: But we assume for purposes of our 25 problem that there was not enough evidence.

1 MISS SMITH: Yes, Your Honor. As I indicated
2 before, in Hensley, the Court focused on the fact that 3 incarceration was certain when it found that he was in 4 sufficient custody for habeas corpus. Here,
5 incarceration is only a possibility contingent upon a 6 finding of guilt by the jury, and a further 7 determination by the jury trial judge that the 8 individual should be incarcerated and not merely 9 subjected to a fine.

10 Moreover, unlike the situation in Hensley, the 11 federal court's finding of custody in this situation
12 does very seriously interfere with the Commonwealth's 13 significant interest in the efficient operation of its 14 two-tier system. Under this decision, yet a federal 15 third and fourth tier have been created before the 16 Commonwealth can conclude the proceedings in these 17 relatively minor though numerous offenses.

18 Nor does Lydon face any of the restrictions
19 upon his liberty placed upon one released on parole.
20 His movements are not restricted. He is not required, 21 as in Jones versus Cunningham, to live or work in a 22 particular place or perform a particular job. His 23 continued liberty, unlike Jones again, is not placed in 24 the hands of the lay members of a parole board. Any 25 revocation of his recognizance could only follow a

1 judicial determination that he had violated some 2 condition of that recognizance, and even then, such a 3 determination need not require his incarceration, but 4 merely an increase in terms of the recognizance or the 5 addition of a surety.

6 If this Court, I would suggest, holds that 7 personal recognizance prior to a de novo trial is 8 sufficient to involve the federal court in a state 9 criminal proceeding, it in effect establishes that 10 federal court as a court of interlocutory appeal over 11 pretrial -- denial of pretrial motions in a state 12 criminal proceeding, and this is a situation, I suggest, 13 never contemplated by the Constitution nor Congress in 14 enacting the habeas corpus statute.

15 Here, Lydon has been granted pretrial review 16 by a federal court over a denial of a motion for 17 directed verdict of acquittal, rendering the situation, 18 I submit, even more egregious because interlocutory 19 review of such motions are not permitted by a number of 20 the circuits within the unitary federal system itself.

21 For example, the Fourth, the Fifth, the Ninth, 22 and the District of Columbia Circuits do not permit 23 appeal of a denial of a motion, a defendant's motion for 24 directed verdict of acquittal based upon the 25 insufficiency of the evidence following a mistrial, and

1 this is so even though there, as here, the defendant
2 attempts to couch his claim in terms of double 3 jeopardy.

4 To permit such collateral review of a state 5 court proceeding far exceeds, I suggest, what is 6 permitted within the federal system itself.

7 Now, I am aware that this Court has granted
8 certiorari to review the District of Columbia decision 9 in the Richardson case, but I would suggest that even 10 were this Court to find such interlocutory review 11 permissible within the federal system, that would not 12 control this case, because principles of comity and 13 federalism would have to be addressed, I believe, before 14 the Court could order such review over a state criminal 15 proceeding.

16 Moreover, a decision permitting interlocutory 17 review in the federal system based on the nature of the 18 claim presented would, I suggest, have no logical effect 19 on a determination of custody.

20 The court, the federal court relied upon 21 Jackson versus Virginia for its authority to review a 22 claim that a state court conviction rests upon 23 insufficient evidence. I will not belabor the obvious 24 distinction between Jackson and the instant case, 25 namely, that Jackson was in custody pursuant to the

1 conviction he attacked under Section 2254 of the habeas
2 corpus statute, while Lydon is in custody only upon a 3 pretrial recognizance, having as a matter of state law 4 vacated the prior conviction by claim of de novo trial.

5 Jackson does not require or authorize the 6 federal court to review a claim of insufficient evidence 7 when a defendant does not stand under conviction based 8 upon that evidence. In Jackson, this Court merely 9 defined the standard of review to be applied in a 10 Section 2254 proceeding. It did not enlarge habeas 11 corpus jurisdiction to permit the federal court to 12 review the sufficiency of the evidence at a trial in 13 which the verdict and sentence have been set aside prior 14 to the petitioner ever arriving in the federal court.

15 The Federal District Court itself acknowledged 16 in the last sentence of its order that the petitioner 17 was no longer subject to verdict or sentence of the 18 bench trial judge.

19 QUESTION: Suppose after the jury trial and 20 the conviction and the sentence after the jury trial --

21 MISS SMITH: After the de novo jury trial,
22 Your Honor?

23 QUESTION: Yes. The defendant appeals in the 24 state system, and claims -- Is the sufficiency of the 25 evidence at the bench trial open?

1 MISS SMITH: I would say logically it is not,
2 Your Honor.

3 QUESTION: I would think you would have to --

4 MISS SMITH: Yes, because we --

5 QUESTION: -- or you wouldn't be here -- I
6 doubt if you would be here if it were open, would you?

7 MISS SMITH: I don't see how I could say that 8 it were, because the bench trial conviction is vacated 9 when you -- de novo.

10 QUESTION: And you would say also -- You would 11 also then say that a federal habeas corpus court after 12 conviction at the de novo jury trial could not review 13 the evidence at the bench trial, even though it could 14 under Jackson review the evidence at the de novo jury 15 trial?

16 MISS SMITH: Yes, Your Honor, because the 17 bench trial is wiped out by the claim of the de novo 18 trial. Now, there is a circumstance in which it would 19 be presented in a very different posture, and that is if 20 a defendant convicted at a bench trial did not claim the 21 de novo appeal and wipe out that conviction --

22 QUESTION: Oh, yes.

23 MISS SMITH: -- but went to the federal court 24 for review. We have such a case now pending in the 25 First Circuit Court of Appeals.

1 QUESTION: Ms. Smith, if Massachusetts had put 2 on this first hearing instead of a bench trial a 3 preliminary hearing, would there be any problem?

4 MISS SMITH: A preliminary hearing, Your
5 Honor?

6 QUESTION: Yes.

7 MISS SMITH: We only provide for two 8 possibilities. You have an absolute right to a six-man 9 jury trial. You have --

10 QUESTION: You also in most states have a 11 preliminary hearing which you can have or you can 12 waive.

13 MISS SMITH: Yes, Your Honor.

14 QUESTION: So this one they can have or they 15 can waive.

16 MISS SMITH: If --

17 QUESTION: Both are before a judge. If, as I
18 understand it, if Massachusetts adopted that system, 19 this point wouldn't be here.

20 MISS SMITH: If we had a preliminary hearing --

21 QUESTION: No, if you called --

22 MISS SMITH: -- and the court found that there 23 was insufficient evidence --

24 QUESTION: If you just changed the name of it, 25 and called it a preliminary hearing instead of a bench

1 trial.

2 MISS SMITH: Well, then if we did that, Your 3 Honor, a lot of the efficiency of the system would be 4 destroyed, because if it is only a preliminary hearing 5 we don't have any final judgment, and for those not 6 wishing to claim the de novo trial, he is left nowhere.

7 QUESTION: Well, does that help the state or 8 the defendant? Or does it confuse both?

9 MISS SMITH: I think it confuses both.

10 QUESTION: As witness this case.

11 MISS SMITH: Yes. I am not sure that is the --

12 QUESTION: So Massachusetts just doesn't want 13 to change it.

14 MISS SMITH: I don't believe that the federal 15 court or the constitution requires any change in our 16 system. It has already been upheld once by this Court, 17 and then under circumstances where the bench trial was 18 mandatory. What we now have is a totally voluntary 19 system where a defendant has two totally fresh chances 20 for a not guilty finding.

21 QUESTION: If you had a probable cause type of 22 hearing, could you inflict any penalty simply on a 23 finding that there was probable cause to believe that 24 the accused had committed the offense charged?

25 MISS SMITH: No, Your Honor, we couldn't.

1 QUESTION: Is it correct that if in this case
2 the defendant had not asked for the jury trial, say he 3 had accepted the verdict of guilty and let the time run 4 on it, then filed his petition for habeas corpus, and if 5 the record is as we now believe it to be, he would be a 6 free man?

7 MISS SMITH: If he were in sufficient custody.

8 QUESTION: Well, would he not be in custody if 9 you let the time run?

10 MISS SMITH: He would be -- if indeed he filed 11 the petition. That is the problem in the case we also 12 have in the First Circuit. If he files the petition 13 within the time he is under sentence from the bench
14 trial judge, yes. If he wants until, in the other case, 15 probation has expired prior to filing his habeas corpus 16 petition, we suggest no.

17 QUESTION: Well, what was the sentence this 18 man received?

19 MISS SMITH: Two years, Your Honor.

20 QUESTION: So if he had let the time for the 21 jury trial expire, then filed his petition for habeas 22 corpus, and if he is right about the record, he would be 23 out.

25 QUESTION: Yes.

1 MISS SMITH: I would suggest that the habeas 2 statute contemplates an avenue of relief from 3 unconstitutional custody flowing from a conviction which 4 has been obtained and is in effect at the time the 5 habeas is filed, just the situation that Justice Stevens
6 has mentioned. However, with the exception, of course, 7 that one could challenge the constitutionality of its 8 pretrial custody as violative of the Eighth Amendment.
9 But we do not have such a challenge in the instant case.

10 What we do have, I suggest, is a misuse of the 11 great writ to provide for an end run around the 12 principles of Younger versus Harris, which place strict 13 restrictions upon the federal court's ability to enjoin 14 ongoing state court proceedings. The same notions of 15 comity and federalism underlying Younger should have 16 been applied to the instant case, I suggest, and would 17 have required the federal court to forego exercise of 18 its habeas corpus power in the absence --

19 QUESTION: Well, is your position -- I don't 20 quite understand about -- You say that if he does not 21 opt for a de novo jury trial, but is convicted in the 22 bench trial, he may forego the jury trial and go right 23 into federal habeas?

24 MISS SMITH: The state -- He could, but then 25 we would have a problem of exhaustion of state remedies.

1 QUESTION: That is why I wonder why you
2 answered Justice Stevens the way you did.

3 MISS SMITH: I think the position of the 4 Federal District Court, as Mr. Lydon, of course, in this 5 case has an available remedy, a de novo trial, the 6 federal court, as I understand the opinions, got around 7 the exhaustion question by saying that that was not an 8 adequate state remedy, and therefore petitioner was not 9 required to go forward with the de novo trial.

10 QUESTION: Well, you certainly don't agree
11 with that, do you?

12 MISS SMITH: No.

13 QUESTION: Well, then, I don't see -- What is 14 your position in this other --

15 MISS SMITH: But you could, in this other 16 case --

17 QUESTION: In this additional case, what is 18 your position?

19 MISS SMITH: In this additional case, aside 20 from the fact that he was no longer in custody when he 21 filed the habeas corpus --

22 QUESTION: Yes.

23 MISS SMITH: -- he took a 211(3) in order to 24 resolve the sufficiency of the evidence case. That 25 being denied, much like Mr. Lydon's was denied, the 1 Court felt that there has been sufficient exhaustion.

2 QUESTION: I see. So your position is not 3 that a defendant convicted at the bench trial may, 4 without availing himself of a de novo jury trial or any 5 other state remedy, he may not go directly into federal 6 habeas?

7 MISS SMITH: I would, I am quite convinced, 8 make several arguments against him doing that, but at 9 least he is in the position of going into federal court, 10 where he stands under the conviction which he is 11 attempting to challenge in the federal court, and it 12 seems that habeas corpus is to release someone from the 13 unconstitutional custody.

14 QUESTION: But those are two different 15 questions. One is whether he is in custody, and the 16 second is whether he has exhausted his state remedies.

17 MISS SMITH: Yes, Your Honor, I agree with 18 you, and I would maintain, and I have maintained in the 19 federal court, that he has not exhausted his state 20 remedies until he undergoes a de novo trial.

21 QUESTION: Normally, under Younger and Harris 22 in a criminal case a person may not just go into federal 23 habeas after -- without an appeal.

24 MISS SMITH: That is correct, Your Honor, but 25 under Younger generally the case comes up as a motion

1 for a preliminary injunction and declaratory relief, and 2 if that had been the avenue of relief sought, then I
3 think the Court should have addressed the Younger 4 principles and a finding of bad faith or harassment or 5 irreparable injury would have been required before the 6 federal court could effectively enjoin the state
7 proceeding. But here, federal habeas corpus was used 8 to, I think fairly described, do an end run around the 9 Younger principles.

10 QUESTION: Yes.

11 MISS SMITH: Finally, I would submit that the 12 Massachusetts de novo system, by reason of its totally 13 voluntary nature, does not implicate double jeopardy 14 interests protected by the Burks decision. The 15 fundamental concern of the double jeopardy clause is to 16 protect against governmental oppression. There is no
17 governmental oppression involved where a defendant may 18 freely choose the particular mode of trial he wishes to 19 proceed with.

20 In this instance, Mr. Lydon waived appellate 21 review. He claimed a bench trial with de novo review 22 only.

23 Moreover, the Commonwealth is not 24 constitutionally required to provide for appellate 25 review within the de novo system.

1 QUESTION: What would be the consequences, Ms.
2 Smith, if after the bench trial and after the defendant
3 convicted in a bench trial made his election to have a 4 jury trial, if a couple of the witnesses died, and the 5 state simply didn't have any evidence to go ahead with 6 the jury trial? Would the bench trial have any effect, 7 the judgment of the bench trial have any effect, or 8 would he simply --

9 QUESTION: No, once he opts for the de novo
10 trial, and if we make the determination that we have no 11 evidence, we would have to null pross the proceedings.

12 QUESTION: Even though there had been a 13 conviction at the bench trial?

14 MISS SMITH: Yes, Your Honor.

15 I would like to just close by saying that I 16 hope the Court will consider these issues within the 17 context they arise, and that is federal habeas corpus 18 review, and the traditional function of that writ is to 19 provide an avenue for relief from fundamental 20 constitutional errors or fundamental malfunctions of the 21 state court judicial system. I suggest that there is -- 22 those conditions do not obtain in this case, and that 23 the court below has in effect devalued the great writ by 24 its overextension in this case, and therefore should be 25 reversed.

1 Thank you.

2 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Rossman?

3 ORAL ARGUMENT OF DAVID ROSSMAN, ESQ.,

4 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENT

5 MR. ROSSMAN: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice.

6 May it please the Court, the prosecution of Michael 7 Lydon at his second trial, which is pending, following 8 the Commonwealth of Massachusetts' failure to present a 9 rational basis for his conviction at his original trial 10 is exactly the type of overreaching conduct that the 11 jeopardy clause was designed to prevent.

12 It is clear that the Commonwealth of 13 Massachusetts has placed Michael Lydon once in jeopardy
14 when it charged him with a crime, presented witnesses, 15 cross examined the witnesses that Mr. Lydon put forward 16 at his original trial. The prosecutor had one full and 17 fair opportunity at that original trial to present 18 whatever evidence existed to convince the judge that 19 Michael Lydon had committed the crime with which he was 20 charged.

21 Mr. Lydon has established, Your Honor, in both 22 federal courts, and it is not contested here because it 23 is not one of the questions that the Commonwealth asked 24 this Court to consider in its certiorari petition, that 25 the evidence at that original bench trial was

1 insufficient as a matter of law, and this Court --

2 QUESTION: Wasn't it positive testimony of two 3 detectives under cross examination and no other 4 evidence? Both of them claimed to be eye witnesses.
5 And you say that is not sufficient?

6 MR. ROSSMAN: The crime with which Mr. Lydon
7 was charged, Your Honor, was possession of various items 8 that the Commonwealth alleged were burglars' tools, with 9 the intent to use those tools to break into a depository 10 in order to steal property that was secured inside the 11 depository, and Massachusetts state law clearly 12 establishes that in order to convict someone of that 13 crime, the Commonwealth must present sufficient evidence 14 to show that there was property inside of a car if a car 15 is alleged to be the depository in order to establish 16 the intent, and there was no evidence that there was any 17 property inside that car, Your Honor, just --

18 QUESTION: Well, let me put it another way.
19 Under your theory, if you voluntarily take the two-tier
20 method, and you are acquitted by the trial judge, you go 21 free, and on the other hand, if you are found guilty, 22 you cannot have a second trial under the double jeopardy 23 clause, so you go free. My third question is, how can 24 the defendant lose?

25 MR. ROSSMAN: Well, Your Honor, the defendant

1 loses if the Commonwealth establishes that any rational 2 person looking at that evidence, giving all of the 3 benefits of credibility to the prosecution, and drawing 4 every reasonable inference from the evidence, if the 5 Commonwealth can meet that bare minimum standard that 6 the defendant is guilty, and a judge finds him guilty, 7 the defendant loses.

8 What we have here, Your Honor, is a case --

9 QUESTION: You mean that evidence at the bench
10 trial?

11 MR. ROSSMAN: That's correct, Your Honor.

12 QUESTION: You are not talking about the de 13 novo trial?

14 MR. ROSSMAN: No, I am not. What we have 15 here, Your Honor, is a situation where both federal 16 courts have found that no rational person could have 17 looked at that evidence, no rational person, and 18 concluded that Michael Lydon had committed the crime
19 with which he is charged, and the situation Mr. Lydon
20 finds himself in is, if his double jeopardy claim 21 doesn't have merit after the first tier of the de novo 22 system is finished, how can he win?

23 He has been convicted without proof
24 irrationally, and his only alternatives at that point 25 which the state gives him are, on the one hand, go to

1 jail for two years; on the other hand, allow the 2 prosecutor, because that is the only remedy we will give 3 you, a second opportunity in the de novo trial.

4 QUESTION: Mr. Rossman --

5 QUESTION: Don't you agree to that in 6 advance? I thought the defendant agreed to that in 7 advance.

8 MR. ROSSMAN: Your Honor --

9 QUESTION: Is that correct?

10 MR. ROSSMAN: No, that is not correct.

11 QUESTION: He didn't agree to the two-tier
12 system?

13 MR. ROSSMAN: He didn't --

14 QUESTION: And he didn't agree to both 15 hearings?

16 MR. ROSSMAN: Mr. Lydon did not agree in 17 advance that he would give up the protection of the 18 double jeopardy clause as this Court explained it in 19 Burks, and if I may expound on that --

20 QUESTION: Well, did the lawyer explain it to 21 him?

22 MR. ROSSMAN: I think it --

23 QUESTION: Did his lawyer explain Burk to him?

24 MR. ROSSMAN: No, it was probably a decision
25 made by the lawyer, Your Honor, and I think --

1 QUESTION: And he did agree to the two-tiered
2 system?

3 MR. ROSSMAN: As it existed at the time. Yes, 4 Your Honor. And I think it worthwhile to --

5 QUESTION: Well, he used it to get rid of his 6 first sentence.

7 MR. ROSSMAN: Excuse me, Your Honor?

8 QUESTION: He used it to get rid of his first 9 sentence.

10 MR. ROSSMAN: Yes, he did, Your Honor, because 11 his only alternative at that point was to accept a 12 two-year jail sentence on a conviction.

13 QUESTION: Well, is that correct, Mr.
14 Rossman? I understood from your opposing counsel that 15 he could have appealed the bench trial decision to the 16 Massachusetts Court of Appeals.

17 MR. ROSSMAN: No, Your Honor. The only remedy
18 that Massachusetts gives someone convicted in the first 19 tier of the de novo system is to ask for a second 20 trial. State law establishes in a case called 21 Commonwealth versus Whitmarsh that you may not seek 22 extraordinarily relief or any sort of appellate review, 23 common law or statutory or otherwise, from a conviction 24 in the first tier except by giving the prosecutor a 25 second chance. To return to your question --

1 QUESTION: There is no --
2 MR. ROSSMAN: I am sorry, Your Honor.
3 QUESTION: There is no direct appeal then from 4 the bench trial to any other Massachusetts court?
5 MR. ROSSMAN: No, there isn't. The only 6 possibility would be to ask a single justice of the 7 Supreme Judicial Court to exercise his superintendent's 8 power, which Mr. Lydon did here.
10 MR. ROSSMAN: Yes, Your Honor.
11 QUESTION: If Mr. Lydon had expressly waived 12 any right to review or seek review of the sufficiency of 13 the evidence at the first trial, would that have been 14 binding on him, do you think?
15 MR. ROSSMAN: Yes, I believe it would have,
16 Your Honor, and this, I believe, goes to the heart of 17 the question that Justice --
18 QUESTION: Well, is your only complaint then 19 insufficient notice to him of what might happen?
20 MR. ROSSMAN: In a sense, Your Honor.
21 QUESTION: Is that basically your -- 22 MR. ROSSMAN: That's basically it, but it is 23 not a question of having a judge merely inform something 24 to Mr. Lydon which any judge and any lawyer in 25 Massachusetts would have known. In answering your

1 question, Justice Marshall, about what a lawyer would 2 have told Michael Lydon, I believe it appropriate to ask
3 the Court to consider what advice it would have wanted a 4 competent defense attorney to give Michael Lydon when he 5 had to make that election to participate in the de novo 6 system or not in 1980.

7 Burks, Your Honor, had been decided a little 8 bit over a year ago. There had been no decision by the 9 Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts saying whether 10 Burks applied to the de novo system or not. However, 11 although there was no opinion by the highest court in 12 Massachusetts, there was every indication elsewhere in 13 the Massachusetts system that Burks in fact did apply.
14 In particular, there were three opinions by trial judges 15 in the second tier of the de novo system.

16 Each of those three opinions said, yes, the 17 Burks interpretation of the double jeopardy clause 18 applies to the de novo system. In addition, the Supreme 19 Judicial Court of Massachusetts had decided in 1978 a 20 case, and it is cited in the amicus brief, Your Honor, 21 at Page 12, Costarelli versus Commonwealth, in which the 22 Supreme Judicial Court said that an individual who goes 23 on trial in the first tier of the system and faces a 24 judge who, when hearing insufficient evidence, dismisses 25 the case and then orders a prosecutor to bring a

1 different charge which would more closely fit the 2 evidence that the judge heard, that in those 3 circumstances a Massachusetts defendant can raise a 4 double jeopardy motion to dismiss if he is again charged 5 with a crime, and if necessary, he can go to a single 6 justice of the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court
7 prior to his second trial in order to get relief from a 8 double jeopardy claim because the state's highest court 9 recognized that double jeopardy protects individuals 10 from the risk of having to undergo a trial, not just 11 from convictions.

12 Against that background, Your Honor, I submit 13 it would have been reasonable for an attorney to 14 conclude and to advise a client who wished to have that 15 type of sophisticated advice that ordinarily if you 16 choose the de novo system, your only remedy is a second 17 trial. However, if, on the other hand, the prosecutor 18 does not present sufficient evidence to convict you, but 19 the judge for some reason irrationally convicts you, 20 that we may raise this point and this point only by way
21 of a motion to dismiss in the second tier, and apart 22 from the fact, Your Honor, that that is the most 23 reasonable conclusion that one can draw from the record, 24 and it is in fact the conclusion about Mr. Lydon's --

25 QUESTION: I have read the whole record here

1 in the last five minutes.

2 MR. ROSSMAN: Yes, Your Honor.

3 QUESTION: It is not what you normally would 4 call a record.

5 MR. ROSSMAN: Well, to the extent, Your Honor,
6 that that is all that is available for one to look at, I
7 think it goes to another point that was made by Ms.
8 Smith, and that is, the prospect that federal courts 9 would be inextricably interwoven with state criminal 10 justice system because of claims that the evidence was 11 insufficient and the brevity of the record if it is 12 relevant to any extent, I think, only goes to show, Your 13 Honor, that these questions are quite easily decided, 14 because the transcript in this case is typical of a 15 transcript that might result from any trial in the first 16 tier of the process.

17 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Rossman, supposing that 18 instead of this two-tier system which we have been 19 talking about here coming from Massachusetts, you simply 20 had a trial in the Massachusetts Superior Court of a 21 felony, and the defense lawyer makes a motion at the 22 close of the prosecutor's evidence for a directed 23 verdict. The trial court denies it, and he puts on 24 later -- the defendant later puts on evidence in his own 25 case. The case goes to the jury, and the jury hangs.

1 Now, do you think that the defendant at that 2 point can go into federal habeas corpus and say, I can't 3 be retried here because the prosecutor never put on 4 enough evidence in the case in chief to support the sort 5 of finding that you say a court has to make under 6 Jackson against Virginia?

7 MR. ROSSMAN: I believe that a federal court
8 would have jurisdiction to entertain such a petition, 9 and then I suggest a federal district court should 10 entertain the same type of analysis of the equities of 11 the situation in order to decide whether to stay its 12 hand or not, that the First Circuit demonstrated in this 13 case. The First Circuit, I submit, Your Honor, was 14 clearly cognizant of the caution it should take in 15 interfering with an ongoing state criminal trial 16 pursuant to the Younger doctrine, and the court looked 17 at various factors that were unique to this case.

18 QUESTION: Well, but does that help answer my 19 question?

20 MR. ROSSMAN: Well, to the extent that an 21 individual in the situation you posed was different from 22 Mr. Lydon because, for example, he had not fully 23 litigated the issue that he was attempting to raise in 24 the federal district court in the state system, that 25 might be a factor cautioning a federal court to stay its 1 hand.

2 QUESTION: But you say nonetheless it could 3 intervene if it wanted to.

4 MR. ROSSMAN: It would have jurisdiction, Your 5 Honor, to intervene, and it would be a question of 6 exercising restraint by giving deference to policies of 7 federalism.

8 QUESTION: Well, do you think the Court, say,
9 in Steffanelli against Manard, had jurisdiction?

10 MR. ROSSMAN: I don't have the facts of that 11 case sufficiently at mind to answer the question, Your 12 Honor.

13 The implications of the Commonwealth's failure
14 of proof at the initial trial call into question a 15 central feature of what this Court has identified as the 16 protection of the double jeopardy clause, and that is a 17 tenet that limits the prosecutor to one full and fair 18 opportunity to show that the defendant is guilty.
19 Massachusetts had that opportunity and didn't do so 20 here, and its second attempt, if it is permitted to 21 place Mr. Lydon twice in jeopardy by forcing him to 22 undergo the de novo trial, raises a concern for the 23 value that the double jeopardy clause implements in 24 protecting innocent individuals.

25 Mr. Lydon established in both federal courts

1 that the only rational view of the transcript is that 2 one faithfully applying the standard of law that the due 3 process clause embodies must conclude he deserved to go
4 free. Even Judge Campbell, who dissented in the First 5 Circuit, stated in his opinion there was probably no 6 effective way for a prosecutor to supply evidence that 7 Mr. Lydon committed the crime with which he is charged.

8 If anyone, I submit, Your Honor, deserves the 9 protection of the double jeopardy clause because it 10 protects innocent defendants, Mr. Lydon deserves that 11 protection.

12 QUESTION: Did the Court of Appeals or the 13 District Court express any view as to whether Mr. Lydon 14 on the evidence presented might have been guilty of some 15 other crime under Massachusetts law?

16 MR. ROSSMAN: Yes, Judge Briar suggested that 17 Mr. Lydon was probably guilty of some other crime, and 18 that may very well be the case. However, Your Honor, no 19 one seriously contests that a state may charge an 20 individual with one crime, fail to prove the crime with 21 which he is charged, and yet place him in jail because 22 he might have been shown to have committed a separate 23 crime.

24 QUESTION: I suppose Massachusetts, like the 25 federal government, like most other states, has some

1 doctrine of amendment of the information, amendment of 2 charge, and constructive amendment on occasion, if it is 3 consented to by allowing evidence to come in.

4 MR. ROSSMAN: Absolutely, Your Honor, and that 5 was exactly the topic of Justice Wilkins' opinion as a 6 single justice. The prosecutor went in before a single 7 justice and filed a memorandum which was part of the 8 record in the District Court, and that memorandum
9 stated, "The Commonwealth concedes that on the complaint 10 as written the evidence is insufficient," and then cited
11 in that memorandum the very case that Mr. Lydon's 12 defense attorney brought to the attention of the trial 13 judge.

14 The rest of the Commonwealth's memorandum went 15 on to say, however, at this point in the proceeds, we 16 can now either amend the complaint to conform to the 17 crime we think we proved, or ask the court to construe 18 the papers applying for the complaint as part of the 19 charging document, and Justice Wilkins, for the balance 20 of his opinion, went on to say, as a matter of state 21 law, that would be an amendment of substance. It would 22 charge a completely different crime. The prosecution
23 may not do that. The prosecution must prove Mr. Lydon 24 guilty of the crime that it alleged in the original 25 complaint.

1 QUESTION: So when you are talking about his 2 innocence, you have to define the term fairly narrowly.

3 MR. ROSSMAN: In the only sense in which I
4 believe, Your Honor, a system that protects the due 5 process rights of individuals makes relevant, and that 6 is, are you innocent of the crime with which you are 7 charged? As a defense attorney, I would hate to have to 8 get up and argue that someone was innocent of all crimes 9 for all time in order to gain an acquittal.

10 QUESTION: Mr. Rossman, may I ask you a sort
11 of a non-legal question? If you are right here, it 12 seems to me that -- and if the First Circuit is right, 13 that it would become rather standard practice for a 14 defense counsel at the conclusion of the first stage of 15 the two-tier stage immediately to seek a writ of habeas 16 corpus, and ask the Federal Court to review the District 17 Court record. Maybe that is what the law requires, but 18 if it is, it is going to really make a very significant 19 practical difference, I suppose, in the procedure in 20 Massachusetts, and I am wondering if you might address 21 the possibility of some sort of comity and federalism
22 notion of saying, well, the federal court ought to stay 23 its hand until the review has been had in the 24 Massachusetts system.

25 MR. ROSSMAN: I don't believe, Your Honor,

1 there will be a flood of habeas corpus petitions if the 2 First Circuit's decision is upheld, for several 3 reasons. First, Your Honor, as for the future,
4 Massachusetts has stated that it will require 5 individuals who opt to participate in the de novo system
6 to expressly waive their double jeopardy rights as a 7 condition of participating in the de novo system.

8 So, as for individuals who are part of the 9 Massachusetts two-tier system from now on, they won't 10 have a federal claim that they have been without their 11 knowing consent deprived of the protection of --

12 QUESTION: I thought I asked that at the 13 outset, and we got a negative answer. Maybe I 14 misunderstood.

15 MR. ROSSMAN: I believe, Your Honor, that you 16 did get a negative answer, and I would just call to the 17 Court's attention Page 68 of the Commonwealth's brief, 18 where there is a quote from a case that the 19 Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court decided after the 20 First Circuit decision, but before you granted cert, 21 Commonwealth versus Montanez, and what the Supreme 22 Judicial Court said is that upon a certain interim
23 period, 28 days, from the decision in Montanez, a waiver 24 of a claim of double jeopardy shall be obtained, at the 25 same time as the waiver that someone has to file to 1 participate in the de novo system.

2 There is, Your Honor, an example of the kind 3 of form that the Montanez court contemplates attached to 4 my opposition to a petition for certiorari, and I could 5 represent to the Court that as of today, when 6 individuals choose to participate in the de novo system 7 in Massachusetts, they sign a form, and a sentence on 8 the form says, I agree to waive any right I have under 9 the double jeopardy clause, or language to that effect.

10 So, in answer to your question, Justice
11 Stevens, I don't believe in the future it will be a 12 problem.

13 QUESTION: You are confident such a waiver 14 would create no problem. Supposing you asked them to 15 waive their right to a lawyer. Would that be valid? Or 16 suppose the state asked them, not you. Can we 17 confidently assume -- maybe we don't have to decide it 18 -- that a waiver provision would both have the practical 19 consequences you say and not present any legal question?

20 MR. ROSSMAN: I don't know, Your Honor, that 21 one can take the idea of waiver to its logical extreme.
22 There certainly must be some minimum standards of due 23 process that a state must incorporate in a de novo
24 system, even if it offers someone an alternative 25 procedure it can use to avoid the de novo trial. It is

1 not Mr. Lydon's position here today that the Burks
2 protection is one of them if someone has fair notice 3 beforehand --

4 QUESTION: How does the defendant ever have 5 fair notice that the state is not going to have any 6 evidence of guilt? Basically, he doesn't know what the 7 options are going to be until he has seen the state's 8 evidence.

9 MR. ROSSMAN: No, it is a question of 10 accepting a risk if something eventuates, Your Honor, 11 and what you need fair notice of is some position by the 12 state court saying, if in fact the trial judge 13 irrationally convicts you, you understand that as a 14 condition of the de novo system you allow the prosecutor 15 to do that which the double jeopardy clause ordinarily 16 prohibits, and that is to hone his strategy, perfect his 17 evidence, improve his position, and gain possibly a 18 sufficient case to convict an individual where you 19 didn't the first time, and I suggest that Mr. Lydon did 20 not have fair warning that that might be the case in his 21 trial, and the position this Court now confronts is the 22 prospect of a second trial where the prosecutor will 23 gain that advantage, and the Court must recognize, as it 24 has recognized in the past, that the double jeopardy
25 clause, by prohibiting that second effort, guards

1 innocent individuals against the possibility of unfair
2 or perhaps inaccurate convictions.

3 QUESTION: Mr. Rossman, suppose the waiver
4 system were already in place, or suppose it were clear
5 that there had been a waiver of any Burks right by one
6 menas or another. Do you suppose there are defendants 7 who would nevertheless opt to go to the first bench
8 trial because they have nothing to lose by previewing 9 the state's case, so to speak?

10 MR. ROSSMAN: I would suspect that a great 11 majority of defendants would opt nevertheless to go to 12 the first trial. To the extent, however, that the 13 question you pose is relevant to Mr. Lydon, I think that 14 a well advised defense attorney, if a waiver system were 15 in effect at the time, would have decided to go to the 16 second tier directly, because I think even though it may 17 take only five minutes to read the transcript, Your 18 Honor, one thing that comes across from the transcript 19 is that the defense strategy in this case was keyed from 20 the very beginning to the palpable and obvious lack of 21 any proof of one of the elements.

22 That being so, and that being the defense 23 strategy, if would not be well advised to allow the 24 state to have two opportunities to present a case, 25 because the state would have an opportunity only to

1 improve --

2 QUESTION: You mean, the state has got to 3 adopt its procedure to the defendant's procedure?

4 MR. ROSSMAN: I am sorry. I didn't understand
5 your question, Your Honor.

6 QUESTION: Well, you said the state would have 7 to adopt its procedure depending on what the defendant
8 does. Is that what you said?

9 MR. ROSSMAN: No, Your Honor. My position is 10 that if the state wants to adopt a procedure that allows 11 the prosecutor two opportunities to convict, it has got 12 to tell people in advance, this is the risk you run.

13 QUESTION: The state's language is that the 14 second hearing is an "appeal." Not trial.

15 MR. ROSSMAN: That's correct, Your Honor, 16 but --

17 QUESTION: That's correct, and so does the 18 Supreme Court of Massachusetts say the same thing.

19 MR. ROSSMAN: That's correct, Your Honor.

20 QUESTION: They consider it an appeal.

21 MR. ROSSMAN: No, they don't, Your Honor.

22 Using the word --

23 QUESTION: Well, they said so.

24 MR. ROSSMAN: The word has historical 25 understanding, Your Honor, and its custom and usage in

1 Massachusetts indicates that when you appeal for a trial 2 de novo, what you get is a second trial. I would 3 suggest, Your Honor, that the course that Massachusetts
4 has chosen to adopt in response to the double jeopardy
5 problem that it created for Mr. Lydon, in other words, 6 notifying people in advance so that they have fair 7 warning, is not the only course a court system may take 8 if it wants to continue to experiment in the area of 9 criminal justice and have a de novo system.

10 Pennsylvania, for example, solves the problem 11 that Massachusetts found itself in with Mr. Lydon by 12 allowing individuals who have been convicted on 13 insufficient evidence after an initial trial to obtain a 14 review of the record in an appellate court, through a 15 common law writ of error. The Supreme Judicial Court of 16 Massachusetts in its Lydon opinion stated that if it 17 were wrong about the application of Burks to the double 18 jeopardy -- excuse me, to the de novo system, then 19 judges in the second tier of the system should entertain 20 such motions.

21 Now, if a state chose to adopt, or as 22 Pennsylvania does, continued to have in operation that 23 type of a system, that, I believe, Justice Stevens, 24 would also answer your question in terms of federal 25 intervention in state de novo systems, because one could

1 expect that that second level of review would have two 2 effects.

3 Number One, that second level of review would 4 have the effect of discovering a lot of these mistakes,
5 as indeed the mistake was discovered in Mr. Lydon's 6 case, where the prosecutor conceded the evidence was 7 insufficient and where Justice Wilkins read the 8 transcript, and whether he was a reviewing court or was 9 not a reviewing court, he at least wrote an opinion 10 where he stated, I do not report my ruling that the 11 evidence was insufficient, so that one would expect that 12 if that type of review were incorporated into a de novo 13 system, very few cases would survive and get to a 14 federal habeas corpus court.

15 A second consequence of that type of review 16 would be to tighten up the procedure for evaluating 17 evidence on the part of a judge and the preparation and 18 presentation of evidence on the part of the prosecutor 19 in the first tier court. I suggest, Your Honor, that 20 the decision of the First Circuit can only have the 21 effect on the quality of justice in the Massachusetts de 22 novo system of improving adherence to the standards of 23 due process by both judges and prosecutors because if 24 double jeopardy does not apply to the first tier of a de 25 novo system, then prosecutors and judges lack the normal

1 incentive that prosecutors and judges have in our system
2 faithfully to adhere to the standard of proof beyond a 3 reasonable doubt.

4 And if the Court credits at all the unanimous
5 opinion of commentators, of judges from Massachusetts, 6 of scholars, going back to 1922, when Felix Frankfurter 7 and Roscoe Pound studied the lower criminal courts in 8 the city of Cleveland, that the quality of justice in 9 these courts suffers from a lack of adherence to the 10 standards of due process, I submit that a decision 11 telling these courts that double jeopardy did not apply 12 because Massachusetts had decided never to look at the 13 question of sufficiency of the evidence would be a 14 decision in the wrong direction.

15 If I can address with the amount of time I 16 have remaining the question of the appropriate nature of 17 federal relief here granting the trial which will 18 violate Mr. Lydon's constitutional rights has not yet
19 occurred, I submit that Younger versus Harris
20 considerations do apply, and I also submit, Your Honor, 21 that Younger itself expressly recognizes an exception 22 for cases where an individual establishes there will be 23 a violation of double jeopardy, because that establishes 24 that there will be an irreparable injury to his 25 constitutional interests.

1 Jeopardy protects an individual and has always 2 been understood to protect an individual from having to 3 undergo a trial itself. To my knowledge, only one other 4 provision of the Constitution provides that same
5 protection, not just against an unconstitutional 6 conviction, but from the trial itself, the speech and 7 debate clause, which hasn't much practical implication.

8 Where an individual is threatened with a trial
9 that will violate double jeopardy, unless he gets relief 10 prior to the trial, that much of the Constitution's 11 protection will be irreparably lost if he has to wait
12 until the trial is over to get relief, and Younger 13 versus Harris recognizes that pretrial intervention may 14 be appropriate where an individual can establish 15 irreparable injury plus lack of an adequate remedy.

16 Well, Massachusetts has already said, we are 17 giving you no remedy because we think there is no 18 violation. Since we wilfully won't look at the 19 predicate for determining a double jeopardy violation, 20 that is, we will never look at the sufficiency of the 21 evidence, therefore, we will never discover a double 22 jeopardy violation. Since we won't discover one, we 23 find --

24 QUESTION: It would follow from what you say, 25 Mr. Rossman, in answer to my previous hypothetical about

1 intervening at the end of a trial which has come in with 2 a mistrial, a federal court should presumably feel 3 perfectly free to intervene there if the state did not 4 allow any appeal of a -- in fact, there would be nothing 5 to appeal from, because the case would simply be 6 retried.

7 MR. ROSSMAN: If a state offered an individual 8 in the circumstance you mentioned no review, that factor 9 would weigh in favor of federal intervention. That 10 wasn't the only factor the First Circuit relied on. It 11 also mentioned the fact that the Commonwealth's position 12 before the court showed no need for a speedy retrial, 13 because the state courts had granted a stay of at least 14 eleven months and never asked the federal court to allow 15 it to go ahead with the state criminal trial pending the 16 habeas corpus proceedings.

17 I see my time has expired. Thank you.

18 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Do you have anything
19 further, Ms. Smith?

20 MISS SMITH: No, Your Honor. Thank you.

21 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, counsel.
22 The case is submitted.

23 (Whereupon, at 11:59 o'clock a.m., the case in 24 the above-entitled matter was submitted.)
