2 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments
3 next in Michigan Cannery Association against 4 Agricultural Marketing Board.

5 Mr. Scoville, I think you may proceed whenever 6 you are ready.

7 ORAL ARGUMENT OF JOSEPH G. SCOVILLE, ESQ., 8 ON BEHALF OF THE APPELLANTS

9 MR. SCOVILLE: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice,
10 and may it please the Court.

11 This is an appeal from the Supreme Court of 12 Michigan. The issue in this case is whether a Michigan 13 statute conflicts with and therefore is preempted by an 14 Act of Congress.

15 The Act of Congress is the Agricultural Fair 16 Practices Act of 1967. It was designed by Congress to 17 safeguard an individual farmer's right to join or not to 18 join a cooperative association. It was also designed by 19 Congress to strengthen the competitive marketing system 20 for commodities in this country.

21 The Michigan state statute is the Agricultural 22 Marketing and Bargaining Act of 1972. In contrast to 23 the federal Act, the Michigan Act imposes a union model
24 on agriculture in the state. It compels unwilling 25 farmers to adhere to the prices, terms, and service fees

1 of a cooperative association. It compels unwilling
2 purchasers to negotiate with cooperative associations.

3 Appellants do not contend that the federal Act
4 has occupied this field of regulation. We contend 5 instead that the Michigan Act and the specific 6 provisions of the Michigan Act stand as an obstacle to 7 the full purposes of the federal Act by destroying 8 rights created or protected in the federal Act.

9 QUESTION: Mr. Scoville, the same might be 10 said of the legislation in California. I am curious to 11 know whether you think that portions of the California
12 Act are also invalid under your view.

13 MR. SCOVILLE: The California Act, Your Honor,
14 is well distinguishable from the Michigan Act in two 15 very important respects. The California Act does not 16 purport to bind unwilling farmers by the decisions of 17 the cooperative.

18 QUESTION: Well, they all have to contribute a 19 certain amount of the produce, and they are bound by 20 certain determinations of the group, are they not?

21 MR. SCOVILLE: Perhaps, Your Honor --

22 QUESTION: Whether they have joined or not.

23 MR. SCOVILLE: Perhaps we are not talking
24 about the same California Act. There are two California 25 Acts. One is the California pro rate Act, and the other

1 is the California bargaining one. I am confused as to 2 which one Your Honor is talking about.

3 QUESTION: Well, you can address both.

4 MR. SCOVILLE: The California bargaining Act,
5 which is the one that is analogous to the Michigan Act,
6 the one that directly regulates agricultural marketing 7 and bargainng, is not at all like the Michigan Act in 8 the two particulars that I mentioned. First, unwilling 9 farmers are not affected at all. Unwilling farmers are 10 free to market their products free from the 11 cooperative. They need not support the cooperative, and 12 the cooperative's decisions have nothing to do with the 13 unwilling farmer.

14 Furthermore, Your Honor, although there is a 15 duty to bargain to impasse under the California
16 bargaining law, the duty to bargain between cooperatives 17 and purchasers is not so draconian as it is under the 18 Michigan Act. Under the Michigan Act, if a purchaser 19 and a cooperative do not agree a certain time before the 20 marketing season begins, the purchaser must either 21 submit to compulsory arbitration, in which the price and 22 other terms and conditions of trade will be fixed for 23 him, arbitration, or he must buy nothing from any member 24 of the bargaining unit in the state. He is, in other 25 words, thrown out of the state of Michigan for that

1 particular crop.

2 In those two important respects, the Michigan
3 Act is much different from the California Act.

4 The California pro rate law, Your Honor, is a 5 marketing order Act. It is very analogous to the 6 federal Act, the Federal Marketing Agreements Act of 7 1937. It has nothing to do with cooperatives. A
8 marketing order Act like the federal or California Act 9 tries to control the supply of an agricultural 10 commodity, and the marketing orders, although approved
11 by a majority of farmers, are also approved by an agency
12 of the state of California, and that is the big 13 difference between the Michigan Act here under attack
14 and the federal law in which federal marketing orders 15 are issued by the Secretary of Agriculture and the 16 California state Act.

17 QUESTION: Have you identified any other state
18 agricultural marketing Acts which you feel have the same 19 problems as Michigan's?

20 MR. SCOVILLE: No, Your Honor. As we say in 21 our reply brief, none of the other state bargaining Acts 22 impinges on the rights of non-consenting farmers to the 23 extent the Michigan Act does. For instance, in 24 Minnesota, the Act expressly says that the cooperative 25 may not bargain on behalf of or assess fees against any

1 unwilling farmer. That is a distinction of great
2 magnitude between the Minnesota Act and the Michigan
3 Act, because the Michigan Act makes unwilling farmers a 4 part of the cooperative in every important economic 5 respect.

6 I will turn, if I may, to the facts of this 7 controversy, because I think they show the interest of 8 the appellants very clearly. In December of 1973, the 9 appellee board, acting pursuant to the Michigan Act, 10 certified a bargaining unit for processing asparagus in 11 the state of Michigan. The board defined that unit to 12 include all Michigan farmers who grew a certain minimum 13 quantity of asparagus for sale --

14 QUESTION: Is asparagus raising in Michigan
15 concentrated in any one geographic area?

16 MR. SCOVILLE: Yes, Your Honor. It has 17 traditionally been concentrated in the western side of 18 the state.

19 QUESTION: Like the deciduous fruits? Like 20 cherries and apples?

21 MR. SCOVILLE: Yes, Your Honor. The same is 22 true.

23 The board determined that 433 asparagus
24 farmers in the state of Michigan fit into the certified
25 bargaining unit. Thereafter, FLE MACMA, which is a

1 cooperative, entered into signed exclusive agency
2 agreements with 236 of those 433 farmers, or 55 percent
3 of the bargaining unit.

4 MACMA then petitioned the appellee board for 5 accredited status under the Act, and MACMA was entitled 6 to a credited status because it had signed exclusive 7 agency agreements with over 50 percent of the farmers in 8 the bargaining unit who themselves produced over 50
9 percent of the crop in that unit.

10 In January of 1974, the board accredited MACMA
11 under the Act. Now, under the Act, accredited status 12 has two major consequences. First, MACMA became the 13 exclusive bargaining agent for all 433 farmers in the 14 bargaining unit, whether or not those farmers 15 consented. Second, all purchasers were required to 16 negotiate with MACMA, and were forbidden from negotiating 17 with any individual farmer, including the 197 farmers 18 who did not consent to MACMA representation.

19 Thereafter, the appellees as plaintiffs -- I 20 am sorry, the appellants, plaintiffs below, began this 21 action in the state Circuit Court to declare the 22 Michigan Act unconstitutional.

23 Ferris Pierson and Dukesherer Farms, two of 24 the appellants, were two of the 197 Michigan asparagus 25 farmers who did not want to be represented by MACMA and

1 did not want to pay the 1 and a half percent compulsory 2 service fee on their gross produce. They initiated this 3 action in order to vindicate their right, protected by 4 the federal Act, not to join a cooperative.

5 The other appellants are purchasers of 6 agricultural commodities in the state of Michigan. They 7 began this action to vindicate their right protected by 8 Section 2304 of the federal Act not to be compelled to 9 negotiate or deal with a cooperative. The Michigan 10 courts rejected appellant's claim of repugnancy between 11 the state and federal Acts, and this appeal followed.

12 In order to decide this appeal, this Court
13 will have to answer basic questions about the objectives 14 of the federal law. Is one of the objectives of the 15 federal Act to safeguard the right of an individual
16 farmer not to join a cooperative? Is another objective
17 of the federal Act to safeguard the right of a purchaser
18 not to deal with cooperatives? If so, the Michigan Act 19 must fall.

20 The Michigan Supreme Court admitted as much.
21 It admitted that the existence of such federal rights
22 would be fatal to the Michigan Act. The Michigan court 23 stated in its opinion, which is reproduced in our 24 jurisdictional statement appendix, and I am reading now 25 from Page A-8, "Were we to agree that Section 2304 or

1 any provision in the federal Act was meant to 2 affirmatively create or protect rights of private 3 dealings between individual producers and processors, we 4 would agree that the state Act must fall, because 5 plainly the state Act conflicts with that result."

6 The Michigan Supreme Court avoided a conflict
7 between the two Acts by holding that the federal Act did 8 not create an absolute right in a farmer to join or not 9 to join a cooperative, and created no rights in 10 processors. We submit that the Michigan Supreme Court 11 was clearly wrong. The federal Act was expressly 12 designed by Congress to create and preserve federal 13 rights.

14 I turn first to the rights of farmers under 15 the federal Act. That Congress intended to preserve an 16 individual farmer's right to join or not join a 17 cooperative is plain from the face of the federal Act.
18 Section 2301 is a statement of Congressional policy. It 19 emphasizes the rights of individual farmers, not the 20 rights of cooperatives. Section 2301 says that the 21 welfare of "individual farmers will be adversely
22 affected unless they are free to join together 23 voluntarily in cooperative."

24 Section 2301 goes on to say, "Interference 25 with this right is contrary to the public interest."

1 To safeguard this right, Section 2303(a) of 2 the federal Act creates certain unfair practices. The 3 first unfair practice is this. A handler is forbidden 4 to do the following: to coerce any producer in the 5 exercise of his right to join and belong to or refrain
6 from joining and belonging to a cooperative. I
7 emphasize that Congress used the words "right to join 8 and belong to or to refrain from joining and belonging 9 to."

10 Section 2303(c) likewise prohibits a handler
11 from coercing farmers into or out of membership
12 agreements or contracts of a cooperative or a 13 processor.

14 It is critical for the Court to realize that 15 the statutory definition of handler includes 16 agricultural cooperatives. In this way, Congress 17 expressly regulated the relationship between 18 cooperatives and unwilling farmers. In Section 2303, 19 Congress prohibited cooperatives from coercing any 20 unwilling farmer to join them.

21 The Supreme Court of Michigan ignored this 22 important fact. In interpreting the federal Act, it 23 equated the terms "handler" and "processor," thereby 24 excluding cooperatives from the federal statutory 25 definition, and this is at Footnote 7 of the Michigan

1 Supreme Court opinion.

2 It was only by making this basic error that 3 the Michigan Supreme Court was able to say that the 4 federal Act affects cooperatives only indirectly. It was 5 only by making this basic error that the Michigan
6 Supreme Court was able to say that the relationship
7 between cooperatives and unwilling farmers was federally 8 unregulated. The Michigan Supreme Court was wrong.

9 Congress directly regulated the relationship
10 between cooperatives and unwilling farmers. It directly 11 forbade --

12 QUESTION: Mr. Scoville, I thought their 13 answer to that argument was, it is not the handler, even 14 when you define it broadly, but rather the state of 15 Michigan that has applied the coercion when they talk 16 about that specifically.

17 MR. SCOVILLE: Your Honor, the Supreme Court
18 of Michigan went further than that. The Supreme Court 19 said that the federal Act was not designed to create any 20 federal right to join or not join a cooperative. It 21 said that the federal Act was designed only to prohibit 22 certain bad acts, certain acts of handler coercion and 23 intimidation, and that Congress was not concerned with 24 the underlying economic right of a farmer to join or not 25 join a cooperative.

1 In other words, Congress was concerned only
2 that farmers lead tranquil lives, free of coercion, 3 fraud, and intimidation, but that Congress somehow was 4 unconcerned about the basic core economic right of how a 5 farmer may market his or her product, and the 6 legislative history, Your Honor, is replete with 7 discussion and consideration of the economic right to 8 market through a cooperative or market individually, and 9 to limit the scope of the federal Act prohibiting bad 10 acts, and not give protection to the basic economic 11 right protected in the federal Act really renders the 12 Act negatory.

13 QUESTION: Mr. Scoville, will you state again
14 what you think the definitional mistake that the Supreme 15 Court of Michigan made was and where that occurs in its 16 opinion?

17 MR. SCOVILLE: Footnote Number 7, Your Honor.

18 QUESTION: And their error in Footnote Number
19 7 at Page A-5 of the jurisdictional statement was to use 20 the term "handler" and "processor" interchangeably?

21 MR. SCOVILLE: Yes, sir, without also 22 recognizing there and then throughout the opinion that 23 "handler" also means "cooperative." For instance, Your 24 Honor, at Page A-14 of the Michigan Supreme Court's 25 opinion, it says FAFDA's producer protections only

1 indirectly affect cooperative associations as 2 associations. The only way to make that statement is to 3 ignore the fact that cooperatives are handlers and are 4 subject to direct federal restraint in Section 2303.

5 Elsewhere in the opinion, the Michigan Supreme 6 Court says that the Michigan legislature took a step 7 into a federally unregulated area in restructuring the 8 arrangements between cooperatives and unwilling 9 farmers. The only way to say that is -- the only way to 10 conclude that is to say that the relationship between 11 cooperatives and unwilling farmers is not regulated in 12 the federal Act, and that stems from their basic 13 definitional mistake in failing to realize that 14 cooperatives are handlers under the federal law, and 15 expressly so.

16 The Michigan Act has a destructive effect on 17 the federal rights that we have just been talking 18 about. The Michigan Act imposes a majority rule on 19 Michigan farmers. Once 50 percent of farmers in a 20 bargaining unit who represent 50 percent of the crop in 21 that unit have signed up with a cooperative, all 22 unwilling farmers are then swept into the cooperative 23 sphere of influence.

24 Those farmers must adhere to the price and 25 other terms negotiated by the cooperative. Those

1 farmers must pay the service fee on everything they 2 sell. Those farmers may not negotiate on their own 3 behalf with purchasers, and worst of all, if the 4 cooperative that is representing these people against 5 their will fails for any reason to come to an agreement
6 with a particular purchaser, and that purchaser does not 7 want to go to bargaining arbitration, that unwilling 8 farmer may not sell to that purchaser. In other words,
9 the Michigan law allows cooperatives to totally dominate 10 unwilling farmers.

11 In summary, if the Court please, the Michigan
12 legislature and the Congress of the United States
13 responded to the same question with different answers.
14 Congress took a careful look at a very narrow question:
15 what shall the relationship be among cooperatives,
16 unwilling farmers, and purchasers, and Congress 17 determined that unwilling farmers would have a federal 18 right to stay free of cooperatives, that willing farmers 19 would have a federal right to join cooperatives.

20 Congress also determined that purchasers could 21 not discriminate against a farmer because of that 22 farmer's membership in a cooperative, but by the same
23 token, that purchasers could not be compelled to bargain
24 with a cooperative, and I have not had time this morning 25 to talk about the compulsory bargaining provisions of

1 the Michigan Act in any detail. I refer the Court to 2 our brief and reply brief on that.

3 The Michigan Act upsets this careful balance.
4 Michigan answers the question differently. Michigan 5 says that the individual right of a farmer must be 6 subsumed by the majority. That is to say, Michigan 7 takes the decision on whether to join a coop away from 8 the individual farmer and puts it in the hand of a 9 majority of farmers in his unit and in the hands of the 10 cooperative association that represents that majority.

11 The two approaches cannot be reconciled. For 12 that reason, we ask this Court to reverse the Michigan 13 Supreme Court judgment, and to declare that the 14 challenged sections of the Michigan Act are 15 unconstitutional. Thank you.

16 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Garvey.

17 ORAL ARGUMENT OF JOHN H. GARVEY, ESQ.,

18 ON BEHALF OF THE UNITED STATES AS AMICUS CURIAE

19 MR. GARVEY: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
20 please the Court, let me begin by saying a word about 21 Justice Stevens' concern. Appellees have contended that 22 the Michigan Act is not preempted by the federal Act in 23 this case because the federal Act only applies to 24 handlers, and Michigan is not a handler.

25 That observation might be more pertinent if

1 the claim in this case were that Michigan had violated
2 the federal Act, but that is not the claim. The claim is 3 that the Michigan Act is preempted by the federal Act.
4 For example, Michigan surely could not pass a law 5 consistent with the federal Act forbidding farmers to 6 join cooperatives. That would be inconsistent with the 7 purposes of Section 2303(a) and (c).

8 For the same reason, Michigan cannot pass a 9 law requiring farmers to join cooperatives, because in 10 Sections 2303(a) and (c) the right not to join a 11 cooperative is guaranteed in the same language as the 12 right to join a cooperative.

13 Appellees also raise a number of other points
14 about how Michigan's Act doesn't actually require 15 membership in an association, and about how Michigan's 16 Act is somehow not preempted because it involves state 17 action. If the Court is troubled by those, I will be 18 happy to respond to them. Otherwise, I propose to spend 19 a few minutes talking about what the purposes of the 20 federal Act are, and how Michigan's Act is inconsistent 21 with them.

22 The government contends that Michigan's Act is 23 preempted by the Agricultural Fair Practices Act insofar 24 as it requires that unwilling farmers be represented by 25 the accredited cooperative, and requires unwilling

1 farmers to pay financial support to cooperatives. The 2 federal Act says that cooperatives may not control 3 unwilling farmers in their relations with handlers, and 4 may not force unwilling farmers to join.

5 The Michigan Act makes a cooperative the 6 exclusive representative of an unwilling farmer in his 7 dealing with handlers, and requires the unwilling farmer
8 to pay financial support. The reason that Congress
9 insisted in the federal Act that cooperative membership
10 be voluntary and the cooperatives not control unwilling 11 farmers dealing with handlers were several. In the 12 first place, that had long been a requirement of the 13 antitrust laws, even before the Agricultural Fair 14 Practices Act was passed.

15 For example, a cooperative could violate
16 Section 2 of the Sherman Act by engaging in predatory 17 practices against farmers who refused to join. That is 18 the holding of the Maryland and Virginia Milk Producers 19 case cited in our brief. Or, to take a case that is 20 maybe even closer to this case, a cooperative could 21 violate Section 1 of the Sherman Act by agreeing with 22 buyers about the price they would pay to non-members of 23 the cooperative. That is the holding of the Borden 24 case, cited in the reply brief.

25 The second reason Congress was concerned --

1 Congress insisted that cooperative membership remain
2 voluntary was that there were some independent farmers
3 who simply were unhappy about paying fees to cooperative
4 associations. Representative Latta said on the House 5 floor, "The fees being charged by these associations are 6 no small matter to the farmer. Some of these 7 associations are assessing members 1 percent of their 8 gross."

9 So, I think it is important that with the 10 House amendments the farmer still has the right to say 11 no to an association.

12 QUESTION: Mr. Garvey, is the federal statute
13 here kind of a branch of the antitrust laws?

14 MR. GARVEY: No, it is not. As I said, one of 15 Congress's concerns in insisting -- the basic purpose of 16 the Agricultural Fair Practices Act is to make it easier 17 for farmers to join cooperatives if they wish by 18 protecting them against coercion to keep them out, but a 19 corresponding purpose of the federal Act is to assure 20 that they don't have to join if they don't want to, 21 and --

22 QUESTION: And you say Parker against Brown
23 analysis just doesn't apply to this sort of thing?

24 MR. GARVEY: It has very little to do with 25 this case.

1 QUESTION: Well, you say it has very little to 2 do with it. Does it have anything to do with it?

3 MR. GARVEY: I perhaps overstate it. What I
4 mean to say is that because the Agricultural Fair 5 Practices Act has a number of purposes that are 6 unrelated to the purposes of the antitrust laws, that 7 the fact that it is also consistent with the antitrust
8 laws doesn't make Parker against Brown decisive.

9 QUESTION: Well, you say it is not decisive, 10 but does it have some role to play in deciding whether 11 or not the Michigan law is preempted?

12 MR. GARVEY: Well, let me try and explain it
13 this way. What the appellees say is, the Michigan
14 statute is not preempted by the federal Act because it 15 involves state action. The very purpose of the 16 supremacy clause is to forbid state action which is 17 inconsistent with federal law. What Parker against 18 Brown says is that there are some kinds of state actions 19 that are not preempted by the Sherman Act, and those 20 have come to be called state action cases, where the 21 state gets involved in fixing prices, but that is not -- 22 To say that this case involves state action only sets up 23 the question about whether what Congress was trying to 24 do is frustrated by what Michigan has done.

25 In addition to the consistency of the Ag Fair

1 Practices Act with the antitrust laws, I was about to 2 suggest that there are a number of other purposes that 3 underlie it. For example, the protection of farmers who 4 don't want to pay fees to an association. Another
5 example might be that in the course of the passage there 6 was considerable concern expressed that if farmers had 7 to join cooperatives, buyers of agricultural products 8 couldn't shop around for quality or price terms that 9 were different from those offered by the cooperative.

10 There was also some sense that competition
11 among cooperatives was beneficial to the farmer,
12 competition among cooperatives for farmers' membership,
13 but that if membership in cooperatives were not 14 voluntary, the decision about what one to join mightn't 15 be made on the merits.

16 So, because Michigan's Act is inconsistent 17 with those purposes as well as the antitrust theme that 18 underlies the voluntariness requirement, it is preempted
19 by the federal statute even if it might be state action
20 under some Parker against Brown analysis, although I 21 might suggest that it is not. I was about to say that 22 what Michigan's Act does is to authorize private 23 parties, that is to say, farmers and handlers, to set 24 the price in their private dealings at which other 25 farmers may buy and sell their goods.

1 That is quite similar to the private action -- 2 the non-signer provision in Louisiana's statute that 3 this Court held invalid in Stregman Brothers. It is 4 also quite similar to the California statute which 5 required private parties to set prices in Midcal 6 Aluminum. This Court said that that sort of leaving to 7 private parties about the price at which people should 8 buy and sell was inconsistent with Section 1 of the 9 Sherman Act.

10 So even if state action were relevant, this 11 wouldn't qualify as state action, but as I say, the Ag
12 Fair Practices Act, while consistent with the purposes
13 of the antitrust laws, also has a number of other 14 purposes which are frustrated by the Michigan Act.

15 QUESTION: Mr. Garvey, what about a state 16 requirement that the farmers even if they haven't joined 17 the co-op have to contribute a certain percentage of 18 their crop, or a requirement that there is a floor on 19 prices that will affect even those who haven't joined?

20 MR. GARVEY: Well, you are talking about a 21 different sort of state arrangement. What you are 22 describing is similar to California's pro rate Act to 23 which they draw an analogy. The state is free if it 24 wants to set up a marketing order system for asparagus 25 by which the state would control the collection of

1 asparagus and maybe even fix the price at which 2 asparagus would be sold, but that is quite a different 3 thing from what is happening in here.

4 QUESTION: Well, would that pose problems, in 5 your view, under the Federal Act?

6 MR. GARVEY: I think not, so long as it is the 7 state that is doing it and not a cooperative 8 association.

9 QUESTION: Well, then you are back to the 10 state action argument, aren't you, that you just said I 11 thought we didn't need to consider?

12 MR. GARVEY: Well, it's not simply the fact
13 that the state has passed -- simply because the state 14 has passed this law does not immunize it from 15 preemption. What I was saying is that there is a 16 difference between making farmers do what a cooperative 17 association wants them to do on the one hand and making
18 them do what state law directs through a prorate 19 program.

20 As Mr. Scoville suggested, the closer analogy
21 to what Michigan has done is not California's pro rate 22 law, with which this Court dealt in Parker against 23 Brown, but California's Cooperative Bargaining
24 Association Act, which only last year was amended to 25 provide for collective bargaining between cooperative

1 associations and handlers.

2 That California bargaining law, which deals
3 with cooperative associations, unlike the pro rate law,
4 that California bargaining law does not require 5 representation of unwilling farmers by the bargaining
6 association. The Michigan statute does.

7 Thank you.

8 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. White.

9 ORAL ARGUMENT OF JAMES A. WHITE, ESQ.,

10 ON BEHALF OF THE APPELLEES

11 MR. WHITE: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice, and 12 may it please the Court.

13 The issue in this case, generally stated, is 14 whether the Federal Agricultural Fair Practices Act of 15 1967 preempts the Michigan Agricultural Marketing and 16 Bargaining Law of 1972.

17 Section 2305(d) of the federal Act states that 18 the provisions of this chapter shall not be construed to 19 change or modify existing state law, nor to deny the 20 proper state courts of jurisdiction, clear Congressional 21 intent not to occupy the field of farm bargaining, and 22 hence we are presented in this case --

23 QUESTION: Well, at least to the extent of 24 existing state law.

25 MR. WHITE: That's right.

1 QUESTION: And the Michigan Act was not
2 existing at the time.

3 MR. WHITE: That's right, Justice Blackmun.
4 It was not in existence, but I believe that in reading 5 the Congressional intent from that statement, it was 6 that certainly the existing state law or certainly 7 anything that would not be in contravention of it or 8 contrary to it.

9 QUESTION: Why do you think the Congress used 10 the word "existing" then?

11 MR. WHITE: I think it looked at the statute 12 certainly that existed, and found nothing in those 13 statutes that was contrary certainly to the statute, or 14 they would have built in their own contradiction. But I
15 do not read from that further Congressional limitations 16 upon the state to an otherwise act of legislation which 17 was indeed a fulfillment of the overall objectives of 18 the Congress in passing the Agricultural Fair Practices
19 Act.

20 I think the general purposes of both the 21 federal and the state Act are in the end the same. That 22 was to improve farmers' bargaining power at the 23 bargaining table with processors.

24 The appellants claim that there are 25 essentially three aspects of the Michigan Act which are

1 repugnant to the federal Act. Those are essentially the 2 concepts of exclusive bargaining representative, duty to 3 bargain, and the fair share fee. Let's first talk about 4 the fair share fee.

5 They argue that because under the Michigan 6 statute all growers and farmers that are affected by 7 that or come within the purview of the bargaining unit
8 must pay to the sole exclusive bargaining representative 9 a fee, that this is coercive of their right not to 10 join. We do not believe that the payment of a fair
11 share bargaining fee as part of a collective bargaining
12 system set up by a state is coercive of a farmer's right 13 not to join that organization that may be their sole
14 exclusive bargaining representative.

15 This Court implicitly seemed to recognize in 16 the recent decision that we have handed down within this 17 past month in Minnesota Community College Faculty
18 Association versus Knight that the payment of a fair 19 share bargaining fee was not coercive of a person's 20 associational right, and although I simply -- I do not 21 cite the Knight case for its decision. That was 22 certainly a First Amendment case.

23 I do not cite that case for its decision, but 24 I cite it because it seems to me that implicit in the 25 decision of that case is the understanding that insofar

1 as collective bargaining is concerned, the payment of 2 that fee is not destructive of any associational right,
3 and it seems to me that to some extent even the dissent
4 in that --

5 QUESTION: Mr. White, certainly there is some 6 analogy, I suppose, to the Section 14(b) of the 7 Taft-Hartley Act and the right to work states versus the 8 non-right to work states. Now, courts in those states 9 have differed, have they not, as to whether the 10 requirement of payment of any agency shop fee by workers 11 who don't want to join the union is or is not prohibited 12 under the --

13 MR. WHITE: As I understand what you are 14 talking about there, Justice Rehnquist, is the -- I 15 guess the argument of the Solicitor General that under 16 NLRB versus General Motors, that that somehow indicates 17 that there was a Congressional intent somehow not to 18 require anyone to join or not to join when he states 19 that there was -- one was the financial equivalent of 20 the other.

21 But I do not think that that analogy is 22 appropriate here, because I think that what we were 23 dealing there with was the interpretation of a federal 24 statute which expressly permitted -- first of all, there 25 was pervasive and comprehensive legislation establishing

1 a collective bargaining plan for workers in interstate 2 commerce, and the question that was raised in that case
3 was whether or not when Congress indicated in Section 8 4 that they could have a union shop, that they could 5 negotiate -- the union could negotiate the union shop, 6 did that in and of itself preclude the negotiation then 7 of so-called lesser item of agency shop.

8 And what the Court said in essence as I read
9 NLRB versus General Motors and the Shemerhorn case, 10 cases, is that they will let each state interpret its 11 own right to work law. That is up on each individual 12 state.

13 QUESTION: Yes, but then certainly the result
14 of that holding is that Section 14(b) does permit states
15 to include within the proscription of a right to work 16 law not only an actual union shop but an agency or 17 agency fee state. Now, I think there is some analogy
18 there to say -- you know, you are saying in effect you 19 are not forced to join the cooperative. All you have to 20 do is pay the same dues as you would have to if you did 21 join.

22 MR. WHITE: That's right.

23 QUESTION: Well, that's really why most people
24 don't want to join the cooperative, isn't it? It isn't 25 some highminded belief that they don't want to be

1 compelled to be a member of something they don't -- they 2 just don't want to pay the fee.

3 MR. WHITE: I think that even -- that may be,
4 although Justice Stewart pointed out in NLRB v. General
5 Motors that there may be some valid reasons for a person 6 not wanting to join, and he was only talking in the 7 financial sense of them being the equivalent, but it 8 seems to me that this case -- or this Court in the 9 Knight case made it clear in the case that the mere 10 payment of a fee to a sole and exclusive bargaining
11 representative is not coercive of the right to not join 12 or not to be a member.

13 QUESTION: What is the fee that is paid here?
14 Is there a standard fee for being a member?

15 MR. WHITE: Yes, it is -- at the current time 16 it is 1 and a half percent.

17 QUESTION: But is that what members pay?

18 MR. WHITE: That's right.

19 QUESTION: So these people who don't want to 20 become members, they just have -- but they pay the same 21 amount as other members.

22 MR. WHITE: Not necessarily, Justice White.
23 There is a rebate provision under the Michigan Act, and 24 under the Michigan Act the fee has to be solely that 25 which is connected with the bargaining services, and at

1 the end of the year, the cooperative does and in fact 2 has under this Act rebated amounts to both members and 3 non-members, and indeed the amount going to non -- being 4 rebated to non-members is greater than the amount being 5 rebated to non-members.

6 QUESTION: What is excluded from the charge to 7 them? What are you rebating? Political activities, or 8 newspapers?

9 MR. WHITE: Well, our particular organization 10 is not particularly involved in a lot of those types of 11 activities, but other types of activities that would --

12 QUESTION: Litigation like this?

13 (General laughter.)

14 MR. WHITE: Possibly. Possibly. There are 15 other activities vis-a-vis the pure running of the 16 cooperative which are not connected with that bargaining
17 fee, and in fact under the Act the cooperative makes a
18 report to the Agriculture Marketing and Bargaining Board 19 each year, which is again a board appointed by the 20 Governor of the state, and a part of that report must 21 show that amount which has been used for bargaining 22 services and the amount of the rebates to members and 23 non-members, and that is -- must be done pursuant to the 24 express rules of the Agricultural Marketing and 25 Bargaining Board.

1 QUESTION: May I ask just a curiosity? Do you
2 have any members that are not Michigan farmers? Do they 3 grow asparagus in Indiana, for example?

4 MR. WHITE: No, this is strictly a Michigan
5 Act. And it does not --

6 QUESTION: I know the Act is, but I was asking 7 about the co-op.

8 MR. WHITE: It does not. It does not to my 9 knowledge, and I believe it does not.

10 QUESTION: But if there were a Michigan farmer 11 who wanted to sell to an Indiana buyer, he couldn't? He 12 would have to go through the co-op and sell only to --

13 MR. WHITE: No, that would not -- this is not 14 affected by this. It is not affected by this.

15 QUESTION: I thought --

16 MR. WHITE: It is only affected by sales in 17 Michigan between Michigan growers who are determined to 18 be within the bargaining unit and a processor doing
19 business in Michigan. It would not affect a Michigan
20 grower selling to someone in Indiana.

21 QUESTION: So the Michigan statute would not 22 prohibit an individual farmer from selling in Indiana if 23 he wanted?

24 MR. WHITE: That's right. The bulk of this 25 asparagus is grown down in the southwestern --

1 QUESTION: But it would prevent him from 2 selling to any processor in Michigan other than the one 3 the bargaining agent made the deal with.

4 MR. WHITE: Justice White, that has -- our Act
5 has never worked that way, and indeed, under the 6 Michigan Act --

7 QUESTION: Well, it would prevent him from 8 selling to that processor at a price different from what 9 you negotiated.

10 MR. WHITE: That is right. That is right. We 11 negotiate a price, but as a practical matter, the way
12 the Michigan Act has worked, in nearly all instances 13 what we do is negotiate --

14 QUESTION: Are the members --

15 MR. WHITE: -- a minimum --

16 QUESTION: Are the members' production
17 controlled by the co-op? Are there allocations?

18 MR. WHITE: No, there have never been any 19 allocations. There have never been any allocations
20 amongst growers, and we do not under this Act indicate,
21 Grower A, you must deal with Processor X; Grower B, you 22 must deal with Processor Y, something like that. That 23 has not been negotiated. And there may be -- It may 24 raise interesting questions indeed if the Act went that 25 far as to say that indeed you, Farmer A, must deal with

1 Farmer B. That isn't to say we don't have the right
2 under the Act to negotiate --

3 QUESTION: Well, you make him pay. What else
4 do you make him do that he wouldn't do if it weren't for 5 this Act?

6 MR. WHITE: Make him pay the Act, and --

7 QUESTION: You make him pay the money.

8 MR. WHITE: Right, and make him abide by the 9 minimum fee that -- we have up to this point --

10 QUESTION: Yes.

11 MR. WHITE: -- made him abide by the minimum 12 price for, say, asparagus that we have negotiated with 13 the processors.

14 QUESTION: Is that all? What other --

15 MR. WHITE: That is essentially it.

16 QUESTION: What other pressure on them is 17 there?

18 QUESTION: What if he could get a higher 19 price?

20 MR. WHITE: Well, the way the Michigan Act has 21 worked, and this has exactly happened several years, we 22 negotiate a minimum price, and then because of the 23 vagaries of the market or weather or such, the farmer
24 hauls his asparagus to the processor, and they can pay 25 more, and they have paid more.

1 QUESTION: But could you not in your contract
2 specify a specific price? Legally you could.

3 MR. WHITE: I think --

4 QUESTION: As I read the statute, you could.

5 MR. WHITE: In my opinion, legally we could,
6 and I do not think that that offends any concept set 7 forth in the federal Act. I think this is what we have 8 to look at. Whatever one may think of collective 9 bargaining in general, the question here is, is there
10 anything in the Federal Agricultural Fair Practices Act
11 that is intended to preempt the states from passing a 12 collective bargaining scheme which entails the concepts 13 of fair share fee, duty to bargain, and having an 14 exclusive bargaining representative.

15 We do not find that. Now, the appellants 16 argue that the disclaimer language found at 2304 which 17 is denominated by the Congress as a disclaimer of intent 18 to prohibit normal dealing somehow establishes a federal 19 right on the part of processors not to have to deal with 20 any, and I think that what the appellants consistently 21 ignore is the first four words of that disclaimer, which 22 says, "Nothing in this chapter shall prevent."

23 QUESTION: Of course, the Solicitor General
24 doesn't take that position, does he, that the federal 25 Act was designed to confer a right on the part of the

1 processors to be --

2 MR. WHITE: The Solicitor General does not 3 accept that argument, that particular argument, but the 4 appellants strongly claim that that is some kind of 5 right. And I think the important thing as I see it is 6 those words, "Nothing in this chapter shall prevent."
7 What they are saying is that within this legislation, 8 Congress is not doing this, is not setting up a federal 9 bargaining Act, not requiring this. It does not say that 10 the states may not do that.

11 QUESTION: Well, Mr. White, do you agree that 12 one purpose of the federal Act was to protect the right
13 of an individual farmer not to join a cooperative 14 marketing association?

15 MR. WHITE: It was intended to prevent any 16 improper pressures on behalf of handlers.

17 QUESTION: Well, yes or no to my question.
18 Was one purpose of the Act as reflected in the 19 legislative history and the language of the Act to 20 protect the right of an individual farmer not to join an 21 agricultural co-op?

22 MR. WHITE: Answering yes or no, I would have 23 to say that was one of their intentions, yes.

24 QUESTION: All right. Then do we have to look 25 at the Michigan Act as a whole to determine whether it

1 provides what amounts to coercion to farmers to join the 2 co-op?

3 MR. WHITE: I think we can --

4 QUESTION: Is that what we really have to 5 focus on?

6 MR. WHITE: I don't think that the Michigan
7 Act does that certainly insofar as the requirement to 8 pay the fair share.

9 QUESTION: But you agree we have to answer
10 that question.

11 MR. WHITE: I think you do in light of what 12 the -- the plain wording of the --

13 QUESTION: All right, and then in answering 14 the question, don't we have to look at the whole package 15 of what the Michigan Act does to the farmers to 16 determine whether it is coercion, not just break it
17 down, well, does the fee alone do it, or does this alone 18 do it? Don't we have to look at the whole thing and 19 answer whether that amounts to coercion?

20 MR. WHITE: It seems to me that you have to 21 look as to whether anything in the Michigan Act amounts 22 to handler coercion, and I think that important from our 23 standpoint is the fact --

24 QUESTION: And the co-op is defined as a
25 handler under the terms of the federal Act.

1 MR. WHITE: That's right.

2 QUESTION: Although the court in Michigan
3 didn't acknowledge that in its opinion.

4 MR. WHITE: With that, I guess I would have to 5 respectfully disagree with the appellants that the 6 Michigan Supreme Court did not recognize that. For 7 example, at A-10 of the jurisdictional statement, there 8 is a statement by the Michigan Supreme Court within 9 their opinion. It says, "While 2303 makes it unlawful 10 for a handler to coerce a producer to join and belong to 11 association, it does not forbid the state from requiring 12 exclusive representation of individual producers where a 13 producer majority sees fit."

14 Now, the first words of that, where it says, 15 "2303 makes it unlawful for a handler to coerce a 16 producer to join or belong," there was a tacit -- there 17 was a recognition that they understood that the federal 18 Act included a definition of handler -- they wouldn't 19 have made that statement, because they can assume the 20 processors weren't going to coerce them not to join.

21 The other thing is, I disagree with Mr.
22 Scoville's statement that Section 7 is any type of a 23 clear indication that the Michigan Supreme Court did not 24 understand that the federal Act --

25 QUESTION: You mean Footnote 7?

1 MR. WHITE: Excuse me, Footnote 7 at A-5.. The 2 statement -- Footnote 7 reads, "For ease of reference, 3 we use the term 'handler' and 'processor'
4 interchangeably in this opinion. Although in a way not 5 germane to our disposition of the issues, there is a 6 technical difference between the two."

7 I think they absolutely -- they recognized the 8 difference between the Michigan and the state Act in 9 that the federal Act stated that a cooperative was also 10 a handler for the purposes of that Act, but they were 11 saying insofar as our determination is concerned, we do 12 not think that that is determinative of our decision.

13 So I believe that they did recognize the 14 difference. I think that what the state of Michigan -- 15 the Supreme Court of the state of Michigan was 16 recognizing is the same thing that Congress recognized
17 in the passage of this Act, and that is the vulnerable 18 position that the individual grower finds himself in 19 dealing with the process.

20 It seems to me that the appellants' argument,
21 to accept the appellants' argument that this federal Act
22 intended to prevent the states from enacting in effect a 23 collective bargaining model for growers just stands on 24 its head 70 years of Congressional history in doing 25 whatever they could to encourage collective action by

1. farmers.

2 Going back to the Clayton Act, exempted 3 provisions of the --

4 QUESTION: Mr. White, is it not true that the 5 Michigan statute is unique? It is the first one that 6 has had this particular feature.

7 MR. WHITE: I think it is, in that regard,
8 Justice Stevens, the Michigan Act is unique. It is the 9 only one of its kind in the country at this time.
10 That's right. But starting back with the Clayton Act of 11 1914, where farm organizations along with unions are 12 exempted from the operation of the Sherman Act. The 13 Capper-Volstead Act of 1922 further clarified that 14 agricultural cooperatives were free from the restraints 15 of the antitrust laws. The Agricultural Farm Credit Act 16 of 1933 established banks for cooperatives.

17 Then we have, of course, the Agricultural Fair
18 Practices Act --

19 QUESTION: Don't you agree, Mr. White, that 20 FATHPA, if I may use that term, did also ensure some 21 rights for the individual farmers as against the 22 cooperatives, the freedom from coercion?

23 MR. WHITE: Yes. I think that 2303(a)
24 protects the farmer against coercion by a handler, which 25 includes -- which under the federal Act includes both

1 the cooperative and a processor, from coercion to join 2 or not to join, but I think it is important -- look at 3 -- we talk about legislative history, if I could for 4 just a second here. Looking at the Senate Agricultural 5 Committee report, they make it absolutely clear what was 6 intended to do.

7 When the state -- in the report of the Senate
8 Agricultural Committee in suggesting passage of this 9 Act, the federal Act, says, "The fact is clear that an 10 association of producers which has obtained the 11 voluntary membership of a large number of farmers 12 deserves the respect and recognition by handlers of 13 agricultural products."

14 The House Committee report stated, "This 15 legislation is necessary in order to give farmers and 16 their marketing associations new and greater market 17 power." It seems to me that we have years of 18 Congressional encouragement of farmers to enter into 19 collective action so as to protect themselves.

20 This Court certainly was not unaware of the 21 plight of the farmer. For example, in the National 22 Broilers case, this Court clearly recognized the plight 23 of the individual farmer. Justice Blackmun indicated in 24 that decision, "Farmers were seen as being caught in the 25 hands of processors and distributors who because of

1 their position in the market and their relative economic 2 strength were able to take from the farmer a good share 3 of whatever profits might be available from agricultural 4 production. By allowing farmers to join together in 5 cooperatives, Congress hoped to bolster their market
6 strength and to improve their ability to weather adverse 7 economic periods, and to deal with processors and 8 distributors."

9 Now, there again, this isn't determinative.
10 That was a Capper-Volstead case, and the extent to which 11 the Court would permit the extension of the 12 Capper-Volstead protection to cooperatives. But I think 13 throughout this we have recognition by the courts and by 14 Congress of the vulnerability of the farmer, and I 15 understand that the National Food Processors and 16 American Food Institute very well may not want to deal 17 with cooperatives, but to say this federal Act which was 18 in effect very narrow in scope and was intended to 19 protect farmers had as its intention to divest the 20 states of their right to pass meaningful collective 21 bargaining things for farmers is just --

22 QUESTION: You are saying it was intended to 23 protect groups of farmers, not individual farmers.

24 MR. WHITE: I think it intended -- the federal 25 Act intended to protect both farmers and farmers working

1 through their cooperatives. It seems to me that any way 2 you look at it, what the appellants are arguing here is 3 that they intend to take an Act which was intended to be 4 a shield against improper processor --

5 QUESTION: Mr. White, you have already said, 6 though, that if the Michigan law required the farmer to 7 join the cooperative, become a member, that would be 8 contrary to the federal Act. You have already said that 9 in answering Justice O'Connor, but you say if all you do
10 is make him pay everything, almost everything a member
11 would, and also be bound by the collective bargaining
12 result, like a member would, the mere fact that you
13 don't issue him a membership card protects the state
14 Act.

15 MR. WHITE: That is not --

16 QUESTION: Don't you think it's --

17 MR. WHITE: That is not coercive evidence.
18 Coercion is coercion by the state, and it is not 19 coercion by a handler.

20 QUESTION: But you do concede then that that 21 is coercion, the kind of coercion which if done by a 22 handler would be contrary to the federal Act?

23 MR. WHITE: No.

24 QUESTION: I didn't think so.

25 MR. WHITE: No, I do not -- I certainly in no

1 way would concede that that would be the case, but it
2 seems to me that what they have taken here is an Act
3 which was intended to be a shield against improper
4 conduct and turned it into a sword with which to divest
5 the farmers of their right to collective action.

6 QUESTION: Well, they can have it if they 7 wanted it. Any farmer can be part of this collective 8 action if he wants to.

9 MR. WHITE: That's right, but in order to make 10 a collective scheme meaningful --

11 QUESTION: Work, you have to have coercion.

12 MR. WHITE: The duty of -- the duty to 13 bargain, fair share membership fees are --

14 QUESTION: If you won't do it voluntarily, you 15 are going to do it under the hammer.

16 MR. WHITE: Otherwise you get the sweetheart 17 deals that -- the types of sweetheart deals that the 18 testimony brought forth in this trial and in the 19 legislative hearings both before Congress and in 20 Michigan, the House of Representatives and the Senate, 21 in passing these two Acts.

22 Thank you.

23 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.
