P R O C E E D I N G S

CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments next in Schneider against Robbins and Prosser against Robbins.

Mr. Yates, I think you may proceed whenever you are ready.

ORAL ARGUMENT OF DAVID F. YATES, ESQ.,
ON BEHALF OF SCHNEIDER MOVING AND STORAGE COMPANY

MR. YATES: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the Court, the cases before the Court today, which are consolidated, arise out of a collective bargaining relationship. Schneider and Prosser are two independent moving companies located in St. Louis, Missouri.

Over a number of years, they entered into a series of collective bargaining agreements with a teamster's local in St. Louis. In accordance with these agreements, they agreed that they would make contributions to the respondent trustee funds on behalf of regular employees.

The labor agreements further provided that contributions would not be made on behalf of non-regular employees, who are variously referred to in the agreements as part-time, extras, casuals, temporary, and seasonals.

1 I would like to emphasize at the outset that 2 this particular dispute arises out of the terms of the 3 collective bargaining agreements. It does not involve 4 the interpretation or construction of statutory rights.
5 In the collective bargaining agreements, Schneider and 6 Prosser and the unions expressly reserved to themselves 7 the right to resolve differences regarding the meaning 8 or application of the agreements through the grievance 9 and arbitration procedure in the contracts. They did 10 not provide the trustees would have the right to resolve 11 those questions of coverage, as they are referred to, in 12 litigation in federal court. I will address --

13 QUESTION: What if the collective bargaining
14 agreement says there will be a trust agreement, and uses 15 certain words in describing the coverage, and then there 16 is a trust agreement, and it uses the same words about 17 coverage?

18 MR. YATES: If there is no question regarding 19 the coverage, then I think that the --

20 QUESTION: Well, there is a question about 21 what the words mean.

22 MR. YATES: Oh, if there is a question about 23 what the words mean in the collective bargaining
24 agreement --

25 QUESTION: Well, and the same words are in the 1 trust agreement.

2 MR. YATES: With respect to the collective 3 bargaining agreement, if the employer and the union have 4 reserved to themselves the right to resolve the coverage
5 question under the contract, I believe that is resolving 6 of the contract. Under the trust agreement, I believe 7 the trustees of the funds would have the right to 8 resolve that question.

9 QUESTION: Well, what is the case in this -- 10 what is the situation in this case?

11 MR. YATES: In this situation, the collective 12 bargaining agreements provided that the employers would 13 make contributions on behalf of the regular employees --

14 QUESTION: Right.

15 MR. YATES: -- and not on behalf of extras, 16 casuals, part-times, seasonal, and temporary.

17 QUESTION: Yes.

18 MR. YATES: The trust agreements, on the other 19 hand, conditioned eligibility for benefits on employees 20 for whom contributions were required under the 21 collective bargaining agreement, so it goes back to what 22 the collective bargaining agreement expressly provides.

23 QUESTION: But it is just as though the trust 24 agreement had used the very same language as the 25 collective bargaining agreement.

1 MR. YATES: Correct. It is our position that 2 in effect the trustees have said, we will be bound by 3 the terms of the collective bargaining agreement with 4 respect to the employer's obligation to make 5 contributions.

6 QUESTION: Mr. Yates, in this particular case
7 involving the Schneider company, as I understand it, the 8 union was decertified --

9 MR. YATES: That's correct.

10 QUESTION: -- at the time the District Court
11 dismissed. Now, in that situation, the union wouldn't 12 be available for any arbitration, apparently.

13 MR. YATES: At the point in time when this 14 case arose, which was 1978 and '79, the union was 15 around. It still is around today. And under the 16 decisions of this Court, including Nolde Brothers, which 17 is a fairly recent decision, and Republic versus Maddox, 18 the obligation on the part of the employer and the union 19 to handle this matter through the grievance and 20 arbitration procedure would continue beyond the 21 expiration of the contract. I believe that's fairly 22 clear.

23 QUESTION: May I ask you another question? If 24 you were correct in your position that there is some 25 duty to arbitrate, does the union have a right if it got

1 into a dispute with the employer about what employees
2 were covered and what contributions had to be made, does 3 the union have the right to waive the payment of some of 4 those moneys, to enter into an agreement some way during 5 the course of the collective bargaining period, saying, 6 well, we understand there is a dispute, we will just 7 give up the right to the payment of some particular 8 moneys?

9 MR. YATES: I believe they do, provided they 10 do it openly and not in a sinister fashion, and I would 11 like to take it back to these --

12 QUESTION: Is there any authority for that? I 13 mean, what do you rely on?

14 MR. YATES: Okay. I am relying on their 15 status as the statutory exclusive bargaining
16 representative. When the collective bargaining 17 agreement is first negotiated, the union at that time is 18 doing precisely what you are addressing now. The union 19 at that time is deciding with the employer through 20 collective bargaining how to divide the employer's 21 financial pot. In this case, for example, it was agreed 22 that the employer would make contributions to the funds
23 on behalf of only regular employees, and not on behalf 24 of other non-regular employees.

25 So, at that point the union is in effect

1 saying, we are waiving, if you may, our claim that the 2 employer should make contributions on behalf of --

3 QUESTION: Well, they obviously have the right 4 to enter into the collective bargaining agreement in the 5 first instance.

6 MR. YATES: Yes.

7 QUESTION: But really the question is then, is 8 that fixed, so to speak, because of the interplay with 9 ERISA, and so the union can't tinker around with it 10 after that, or waive some portion of the claim, or 11 something like that.

12 QUESTION: I believe that there are some 13 distinctions that could be made, and the clearest 14 distinction would be between vested pension benefits of 15 employees which cannot be tinkered with. I think ERISA
16 is fairly clear there, that if the union or the employer
17 attempt to tinker with vested pension benefits, then I 18 think they are interfering with ERISA's statutory rights.

19 But here we are not talking about employee
20 benefits. We are talking about the funding obligation, 21 what is the measure of the employer's obligation to make 22 contributions to the fund? The determination of 23 employee benefits is reserved exclusively to the 24 trustees. That is up to them to decide.

25 Here, the employer and the union thought they

1 had a fixed agreement as to what the measure of the 2 funding obligation would be. During the course of their 3 history, the issue never arose as to whether the 4 employer was complying with that until the trustees
5 conducted an audit. They believed that contributions 6 were due on behalf of employees who the employer thought 7 were non-regular employees. That has raised the issue.

8 It is our position that that goes to the very 9 heart of the bargain between the employer and the 10 union. The employer and the union reserved the right to 11 resolve those differences between themselves. Once 12 those issues are resolved, then the trustees have a 13 right to contribute whatever the fixed obligation is.
14 We are not arguing that.

15 QUESTION: Mr. Yates, is it not possible that 16 in some situations, at least, that the question of 17 coverage would be identical to the question of 18 contribution? In other words, if the particular 19 temporary employee is covered, it may be in time the 20 trustees would have to decide whether his rights are 21 vested or not.

22 MR. YATES: I agree with that, yes.

23 QUESTION: And if they decided there was 24 vesting there, they then would -- you still say they 25 would not have the right to say, well, therefore there

1 must be contributions made on behalf of -- on account of 2 that employee.

3 MR. YATES: I believe that once again there is 4 a distinction between the funding obligation and the 5 determination of employee benefits, and I believe it is 6 within the discretion of the trustees to say that they 7 will continue to provide benefits for an employee even 8 if the union and the employer agree that contributions 9 will not be made for that employee, just as in Kaiser 10 the measure of the funding obligation was the number of 11 tons of non-union coal produced.

12 It is simply a measure of -- upon the plan.

13 QUESTION: So you could end up with a 14 situation in which the union and the company would agree 15 that we don't have to make contributions on behalf of 16 Employees A, B, and C, but yet the trustees might be 17 convinced they had a duty to pay pensions to those 18 employees.

19 MR. YATES: That's correct. Now, it's very 20 likely that the pension fund or the health and welfare 21 fund might say, we will not permit participation on that 22 basis, and that is within their right, too. The 23 employer and the union must strike a bargain which the 24 trustees then accept, but once having accepted it, they 25 are bound by that bargain. They are, after all, the 1 product of the collective bargaining process in the 2 first place.

3 QUESTION: May I ask just one other question?
4 Does the company have the right to have the issue 5 arbitrated?

6 MR. YATES: Under this contract, the contract 7 did not expressly provide that the company has the right
8 to submit grievances to arbitration. That's correct.

9 QUESTION: The procedures I read, it has to be 10 initiated by the employee, and then go through the --

11 MR. YATES: That's correct. That raises a 12 question which troubled the court below, and that is, 13 can the trustees submit a claim to the grievance and 14 arbitration procedure under this contract? It is 15 submitted that the trustees in this situation raised the 16 issue and are standing in the shoes of exactly the 17 employees who they are claiming contributions are due on 18 behalf of. That is the casuals and extras. And it 19 appears -- it would seem that the trustees, if they are 20 acting at the partial or -- I'm sorry, the part-time 21 employees' behest is -- are in fact standing in their 22 shoes.

23 I am reserving five minutes for rebuttal, so I
24 will sit down -

25 QUESTION: Well, would they have to go to the 1 union to get the arbitration going, I assume?

2 MR. YATES: Yes. I -- Yes.

3 QUESTION: And what if the union won't do it?

4 MR. YATES: I believe that the union has an 5 affirmative duty to review why, and that goes to the 6 heart of the entire issue here. We think it is 7 appropriate for the union to state why it has not made 8 this claim prior to the trustees raising it. We believe 9 that the union has an affirmative duty to raise issues
10 and to police the contract, and if there are questions 11 of coverage, they should have been raising them a long 12 time ago. We believe that we are entitled to our 13 bargain to have the co-author of the agreement involved 14 in this proceeding.

15 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Robinette.

16 ORAL ARGUMENT OF CHARLES W. ROBINETTE, ESQ., 17 ON BEHALF OF PROSSER'S MOVING AND STORAGE COMPANY

18 MR. ROBINETTE: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it 19 please the Court, the rule of the Eighth Circuit has 20 adopted a position of a presumption against arbitration, 21 and allows the trustees to independently sue the 22 employer and litigation the meaning and the intent of 23 the collective bargaining agreement.

24 Further, it is to the exclusion of the union, 25 and will not be binding on the union nor its

1 membership. The effects on the typical labor management 2 relationships as a result of this rule seem obvious.
3 First of all, it violates the intents of the parties to 4 the collective bargaining agreement, the union and the 5 employer.

6 Secondly, it invades the traditional province
7 of the union and the employer to collectively bargain 8 and settle their disputes as to what the meaning of that 9 collective bargaining agreement is.

10 Third, it subjects the employer to 11 inconsistent obligations, and possibly very heavy 12 expenses for having to litigate this particular issue in 13 a multiplicity of forums, and last but not least, it 14 serves a disservice to the judiciary by forcing the 15 courts to hear traditional labor disputes which are well 16 suited for an arbitrator to decide, and which 17 additionally are neither binding on the co-signatories 18 to the collective bargaining agreement, the union in 19 this particular case.

20 QUESTION: Mr. Bobinette, in these particular 21 cases, it appeared that both the collective bargaining 22 agreement and the trust indenture referred to a right of 23 the trustees to file suit for purposes of enforcing the 24 collection proceedings and so forth. That is a little 25 different than if the agreements had provided, perhaps,

1 that arbitration was required, and they are silent on 2 that. Does that make a difference?

3 MR. BOBINETTE: Well, it comes down to a
4 question of determining what the intents of the parties
5 are. If you look at the collective bargaining agreement 6 as the wishes and the desires of the settlers to the 7 trust, you look at the intents of the settlers in 8 establishing that particular trust. What were the 9 intents of the union and the employer at the time they 10 entered into the collective bargaining agreement?

11 It has been some bother, particularly to the 12 Eighth Circuit, that the trustees have no direct access 13 to the arbitration clause. That is, they can not flip 14 it on and then proceed into arbitration. I would 15 suggest the fact that they are specifically not 16 mentioned as parties who can trigger the arbitration
17 provision is an indication that the parties, the union 18 and the employer, never intended to allow them to 19 involve themselves in interpretive disputes.

20 Given that, and then comparing it to the 21 language contained within the trust indentures, the 22 language in the trust indentures I believe presupposes 23 that the debt or the obligation under the collective 24 bargaining agreement is already established, and that 25 really what is being allowed under the trust indenture

1 is the right to collect delinquencies, and nothing more 2 than that.

3 And for that reason, I would suggest that that 4 is reasonable to determine, that it was the intent of 5 the parties to the collective bargaining agreement to 6 resolve all interpretive disputes under the -- or 7 through the grievance and the arbitration provisions.

8 These risks that I have mentioned are neither 9 mandated nor warranted by the legislative history, nor 10 by the language or the structure of those federal 11 statutes dealing with the regulation of employee
12 benefits.

13 QUESTION: Could I ask you --

14 MR. BOBINETTE: Yes, Your Honor.

15 QUESTION: Perhaps I misunderstood you.

16 Suppose that the trustees lose this coverage issue in 17 litigating with the employer.

18 MR. BOBINETTE: Yes.

19 QUESTION: Do you think that finishes the 20 issue? Or will the employer have to litigate it in a 21 possible arbitration procedure, too?

22 MR. BOBINETTE: It is very well possible. I
23 think that by allowing the trustees to litigate 24 independently of the union -- We had a motion to add the 25 union in on this case, and we never got to that point.

1 Certainly they never --

2 QUESTION: What do you mean, you never got to 3 it? Was it denied?

4 MR. BOBINETTE: No, no, the District Court
5 never ruled on that. It deferred to arbitration before 6 getting to that particular issue that we raised. But to 7 answer your question, it is very, very possible that --

8 QUESTION: Then you lost in the Court of 9 Appeals?

10 MR. BOBINETTE: Well, that issue was -- yes, 11 we did --

12 QUESTION: So what if it goes back now? Can 13 you add the union?

14 MR. BOBINETTE: Well, if --

15 QUESTION: Can you bring the union in?

16 MR. BOBINETTE: It would be our position that 17 they are a necessary party to this action, and that would 18 certainly begin to take care of some of these 19 possibilities of inconsistencies and multiplicity of 20 forums.

21 QUESTION: So that is down the line. You are 22 back in the District Court now, aren't you, supposedly?

23 MR. BOBINETTE: Yes.

24 QUESTION: And doing what? Litigating with 25 the trustees.

1 MR. BOBINETTE: Well, waiting for the decision
2 first, but ultimately, right.

3 QUESTION: Exactly, yes, but if you lose 4 here, you are back in District Court litigating with the 5 trustees.

6 MR. BOBINETTE: Yes.

7 QUESTION: And then the question is, can you
8 bring in the union.

9 MR. BOBINETTE: That will be the next 10 question. But to answer the first question that you 11 had, it is very, very conceivable that allowing the 12 union -- excuse me, the trustees to independently 13 litigate simply encourages the union to sit back and to 14 wait to see what happens. They will incur no costs.
15 They will incur no risk. All they have to do is see how 16 the action turned out. If they don't like it, then they 17 can arbitrate it, or maybe they can strike.

18 QUESTION: I know, but you think -- what do 19 you think would happen if the union sits back, they 20 aren't made a party to this suit, you lose here, go back 21 to the District Court, and suppose that you win in the 22 District Court and the trustees lose?

23 MR. BOBINETTE: Yes.

24 QUESTION: Now, then the union wants to 25 arbitrate, and it says, we don't agree with the District

1 Court. Do you think they can arbitrate then?

2 MR. BOBINETTE: Under the Court's decision in 3 W.R. Grace versus Local 759, I would think that --

4 QUESTION: What is the arbitrator supposed to 5 do?

6 MR. BOBINETTE: The arbitrator will take 7 evidence, and listen to it, and attempt to --

8 QUESTION: And say, I am construing the 9 collective bargaining agreement according to the intent 10 of the parties, and if the federal court decided 11 otherwise, it was just wrong. Is that what it --

12 MR. BOBINETTE: Well, just as the federal 13 court judge has no right to substitute his judgment for 14 that of the arbitrator, I think that we just get into 15 the flip-flop of that. If the federal court has no 16 right to substitute its judgment for that of the 17 arbitrator, then I think the arbitrator could say, I may 18 make whatever decision I wish to as long as I draw it 19 from the essence of the contract.

20 QUESTION: Well, they both can't be right, can 21 they?

22 MR. BOBINETTE: No, Your Honor. A serious
23 question does arise, though, that if the trustees do
24 lose in this particular case, what in fact happens? It 25 is very conceivable that certainly that does not bar the

1 interest of the union or of the employer in this 2 particular -- excuse me, the union or the employees in 3 this particular case.

4 Some ten years down the line it may well be 5 that an individual who has determined through that 6 litigation not to be covered will file a claim for 7 benefits. At that point in time, the trustees will be 8 foreclosed from coming back against the employer because 9 that issue would already have been litigated. Any 10 opportunity for recoupment of those benefits will have 11 been lost at that time.

12 QUESTION: Well, but that would be an argument
13 for making the union a necessary party, I suppose.

14 MR. BOBINETTE: Yes, Your Honor. Making them
15 a necessary party only gets halfway there, though. That 16 protects the questions of multiplicity. The question 17 that comes back to it is when you've got the union and 18 the employer involved, don't the union and employer have 19 a right to have their bargain honored, and could then 20 the union and the employer --

21 QUESTION: But when the union and the employer
22 have written up these agreements, and there's a trust
23 indenture and it expressly says the trustees can sue, I
24 think it makes your argument much tougher. It is not a 25 case where they said expressly arbitration is required

1 by the trustees.

2 MR. BOBINETTE: The question of whether or not 3 they could have specifically provided for the trustees
4 being able to arbitrate I think is a question.

5 QUESTION: Well, but maybe that is not 6 necessary to answer here, because --

7 MR. BOBINETTE: I'm sorry?

8 QUESTION: Maybe we don't have to answer that 9 in this case, because the agreements don't provide for 10 it here.

11 MR. BOBINETTE: Correct. Correct. I
12 understand what you're saying, but I'm just saying that 13 had they included that opportunity to arbitrate, which 14 would in your mind make it much more clear that they 15 wanted them to arbitrate, I doubt seriously whether or 16 not that would be permissible.

17 QUESTION: Mr. Bobinette, can I just ask you 18 one question?

19 MR. BOBINETTE: Yes, Your Honor.

20 QUESTION: Is there anything in the law that 21 would prevent the companies and the union in future 22 collective bargaining agreements from spelling out what 23 procedure they think would be appropriate in this kind 24 of situation?

25 MR. BOBINETTE: I know of none. The only

1 limitation that might be imposed is that which I infer 2 from the court's decision in NLRB versus Amex Coal, and 3 that is whether or not these trustees should be involved 4 at all in the question of settlement of grievances, and 5 in answering the question of Justice O'Connor, what I 6 was attempting to allude to is, I don't think that they 7 should have the right to trigger the arbitration clause, 8 because I think that --

9 QUESTION: You do not think the trustees could 10 be given the right to seek arbitration of a dispute of 11 this kind?

12 MR. BOBINETTE: I think there are some serious 13 questions as to whether or not involvement in the 14 settlement of these types of disputes is alien to their 15 fiduciary duties, and the way in which they conduct 16 themselves.

17 QUESTION: I thought you were arguing that 18 they should have asked for arbitration.

19 MR. BOBINETTE: Pardon me?

20 QUESTION: I thought you were arguing in this 21 case that they should have sought arbitration.

22 MR. BOBINETTE: They should have asked the 23 company to arbitrate the issue, and that the company 24 would trigger the -- excuse me. They should have 25 asked --

1 QUESTION: The union.

2 QUESTION: The union.

3 MR. BOBINETTE: -- the union to arbitrate, and 4 the union would go in and arbitrate those particular 5 issues if they felt as though the interpretation of the 6 trustees was meritorious.

7 The basis on which the Eighth Circuit has made 8 its decision, this is an interpretation of the intent of 9 Congress to not -- to separate the trustees from the 10 dependents of the union. This is drawn from 302(c)(5).
11 A review of the history, of the legislative history 12 indicates the concerns of Congress were with bribery and 13 extortion and illegal activities. To the contrary, the 14 Eighth Circuit was concerned with the idea that the 15 union in good faith would not decide to otherwise 16 arbitrate a meritorious dispute.

17 I don't think that the concerns of Congress
18 were the same concerns that the Eighth Circuit had.
19 Specifically, I think the construction is supported by 20 looking at the text of Section 302(c)(5) and indicating 21 that there is nothing in the conditions for setting up
22 these trusts which in any way indicates that Congress 23 intended to alter the relationship between the union and 24 the employer in terms of settling its own disputes.

25 Most recently, in 1980, Congress adopted the

1 Multiemployer Pension Plan Amendments Act specifically 2 under Section 515, and under that section it allows the 3 trustees to institute suit for delinquent
4 contributions. We have submitted that these underlying 5 contract disputes are not the kind of delinquency
6 actions that Congress had in mind, nor are they simple 7 collection actions that was discussed in the legislative 8 history.

9 Arbitration is integrally related to 10 determining the extent of the promise provided for in 11 the collective bargaining agreement, and therefore they 12 are defenses which are in fact very much related to the 13 question of the obligation of the employer to pay
14 benefits.

15 Lastly, the question that has to come up in a 16 person's mind is whether or not Congress intended to 17 allow trustees to involve itself in interpretive
18 disputes under Section 515 of ERISA. Given the fact 19 that under this section it is mandatory that a judge 20 impose penalties, damages, double interest payments, as 21 well as attorneys' fees, and given the fact that 22 Congress never addressed the question of whether or not 23 trustees can involve themselves in interpretive 24 disputes, it raises a serious question as to whether or 25 not Congress intended employers to suffer the penalties

1 provided for under this section if they in good faith
2 involved themselves in interpretive dispute.

3 Thank you.

4 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Luplow.

5 ORAL ARGUMENT OF RUSSELL N. LUPLOW, ESQ.,

6 ON BEHAIF OF THE RESPONDENTS

7 MR. LUPLOW: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
8 please the Court, the respondent's Central States
9 Pension Fund is the largest Taft-Hartley multiemployer
10 fund in the United States. It has approximately half a 11 million participants and beneficiaries. It has over 12 12,000 contributing employers spread out over 40 states, 13 and it distributes hundreds of millions of dollars to 14 retirees and their dependents in the form of benefit 15 payments.

16 I think it is important for the Court to 17 understand that who the responsibilities are -- what the 18 responsibilities are of the respondents in its relation 19 to -- as compared to the union. The trustees are 20 charged under the statute, under ERISA, to represent in 21 a fiduciary capacity retirees, of which we have 22 approximately 116,000. Also in our constituency we have 23 active union participants and non-active union 24 participants, the state right to workers.

25 We also have beneficiaries of the retirees and

1 the participants which includes their spouses and their 2 children. Now, under ERISA, as we perceive the statute, 3 they are our responsibility. We have an unwavering, 4 uncompromising duty to protect their interests within 5 the law.

6 What the petitioners seek here is the 7 imposition of compulsory arbitration upon the 8 respondent's board of trustees. They seek this 9 notwithstanding the fact that the trustees have not 10 agreed to the imposition of arbitration, notwithstanding 11 the fact that the trustees have no access to nor can 12 they participate in the arbitration process that is 13 submitted by the petitioners, and notwithstanding the 14 fact that ERISA, enacted in 1975, specifically provides, 15 pursuant to MEPA, as it was revised in 1980, that the 16 trustees may sue under a federal specific cause of 17 action, Section 515, which Congress gave us under MEPA, 18 that Congress provided for us a specific forum under 19 ERISA, that they provided for us federal mandatory 20 remedies in delinquent contribution cases where we are 21 successful that are mandatory, including attorney fees 22 and statutory liquidated damages, and nowhere, Your 23 Honors, in the statute or the legislative history is 24 there any mention about Congress intending at any point 25 to insert arbitration as a condition precedent.

1 QUESTION: Well, it sounds to me as though you
2 would say that this collective bargaining agreement 3 could not have expressly agreed or that the dispute in 4 this case would be submitted to arbitration. Suppose 5 the collective bargaining agreement had said that the 6 trust agreement itself will say that if there are 7 arguments about coverage, that is arbitrable between the 8 employer and the union. Suppose it was just as clear as 9 it could be what the parties intended. Would you say 10 the law would forbid that?

11 MR. LUPLOW: That, Your Honor -- I am not 12 going to dodge your question. I will answer it very 13 quickly. It's an open question as the Third Circuit 14 said.

15 QUESTION: Yes?

16 MR. LUPLOW: But it is not an open question.
17 The Third Circuit indicated in the Seamans case that 18 they doubted that the parties to a collective bargaining 19 agreement could force the trustees to amend their trust 20 agreement.

21 QUESTION: Your argument, the way you were 22 putting it, sounded as though you agreed with the Third 23 Circuit.

24 MR. LUPLOW: Yes, I do.

25 QUESTION: Yes.

1 QUESTION: Well, let me take it one step
2 farther. Supposing both the collective bargaining 3 agreement and the trust agreement -- say that was 4 properly amended by whatever procedure you amend the 5 trust agreement -- provided that a dispute such as this 6 should be submitted by the trustees to an arbitration in 7 which all three parties might be heard.

8 MR. LUPLOW: Yes, I would --

9 QUESTION: Would that violate any federal 10 statute in your opinion?

11 MR. LUPLOW: No, because it is something that 12 the trustees under 404, which we believe is the heart of 13 ERISA, the prudent man rule, is something that the 14 trustees would be empowered to do, because in the final 15 analysis, as we perceive the statute, we are being held 16 accountable, that the legislative history supports the 17 fact that Congress wanted the buck to stop somewhere, 18 and not to have it passing back between unions, 19 employers, and so on, and that we think that the statute
20 therefore enacting 404 gave us some broad discretion 21 within the confines of the common law fiduciary duties, 22 which ERISA codified.

23 QUESTION: Mr. Luplow --

24 MR. LUPLOW: Yes?

25 QUESTION: -- could the trustees on their own

1 decide that they want to delegate their responsibility
2 for determining these questions to the union?

3 MR. LUPLOW: My answer to that, Your Honor, is 4 that we cannot delegate away core fiduciary 5 responsibilities under ERISA, that ERISA has a specific 6 provision that the fiduciary duties, the ultimate 7 accountability, if you will, cannot be delegated to 8 anyone else. There is one exception under asset 9 management, but beyond that we cannot delegate that 10 authority away. We can't pass the buck to someone 11 else.

12 QUESTION: All right. Well, let me ask you 13 another but somewhat related question. Suppose the 14 union decided regardless of what the trustees thought 15 that there was a question here about coverage, and they 16 initiated on their own an arbitration under the 17 collective bargaining agreement about the coverage
18 question and got a resolution of it.

19 Is it your position that the trustees could 20 say, well, we don't agree with that, and we don't think 21 the arbitrator was right, and we're going to file suit 22 and get a different result?

23 MR. LUPLOW: Yes.

24 QUESTION: You think you can do that?

25 MR. LUPLOW: We think that if the result of

1 the arbitration is such that it -- as prudent men we 2 think that the procedure or the process itself is 3 infirm --

4 QUESTION: Or the result was wrong?

5 MR. LUPLOW: Or the result was wrong.

6 QUESTION: You base that on ERISA?

7 MR. LUPLOW: Yes, we do, Your Honor.

8 QUESTION: Well, it is really, then, just 9 wholly transformed situation where the trustee's rights
10 are derivative under the collective bargaining agreement 11 and under large parts of that trust agreement to where 12 the trustees are in the driver's seat then. They are no 13 longer bound by the -- they are no longer just third 14 party beneficiaries.

15 MR. LUPLOW: Your Honor, we think that this is 16 where the tension comes in between ERISA and 17 Taft-Hartley. We have in effect, as we view the 18 statute, an unwavering obligation to do as prudent men 19 what we think is to protect the participants and 20 beneficiaries, and if we see that a situation has arisen 21 that in good faith and as intelligent, prudent men under 22 the federal fiduciary standard we think is wrong, that 23 we think we have a duty to seek to repair that problem.

24 QUESTION: Of course, you don't need -- to win 25 this case you don't need -- we don't -- you don't need

1 to prevail on some of these more difficult issues, I 2 take it. I take it if you -- if the collective 3 bargaining agreement really fairly read doesn't preclude 4 your kind of a suit, you win.

5 MR. LUPLOW: Yes.

6 QUESTION: And we don't need to hassle about 7 what the result would be if the collective bargaining 8 agreement purported to interfere with your access to 9 court.

10 MR. LUPLOW: Really, we are talking, Your 11 Honor, about the forum here, and I know that the 12 petitioners have suggested that this is going to open up 13 the floodgates, but the fact of the matter is, 14 Taft-Hartley has been around since 1947, and so have 15 Taft-Hartley trust funds, and so have trustee lawsuits 16 been filed since 1947, and this doctrine, which 17 originated originally under Days Electric, is of recent 18 vintage.

19 It is 1974. And not until 1974 has the 20 exhaustion doctrine gained any prominence at all in the 21 federal system, and in that case, Days Electric, decide 22 in 1974 in the Middle District of Florida, the judge
23 there characterized the decision of this Court in Louis 24 v. Benedict as one that this Court ruled in that case, 25 the ruling in that case about unions not being able --

1 or employers not being able to set off against trustees 2 for the transgressions of unions, he said that that was 3 a matter of substantive law, and that to require 4 trustees under a Taft-Hartley collection action to defer 5 to the arbitration process was a rule of procedure, and 6 it did not subvert their rights at all to switch them 7 from court into that forum.

8 That case was picked up -- I'm sorry. That's 9 not correct. That case was followed by a District Court 10 in the Howard Martin case in Indiana Federal Court, and 11 it was affirmed by the Seventh Circuit in Howard Martin, 12 and it is interesting to point out in that case that the 13 Seventh Circuit suggested that the trustees' argument 14 that they didn't have access to the tribunal fell of its 15 own weight. Merely ask the union to file the grievance, 16 the party of primary interest, and that will resolve the 17 problem.

18 The problem is that we did that, and there was 19 no arbitration. It was not done, and the Howard Martin 20 Company went into bankruptcy. I think that one of the 21 main problems that we see is the fact that in our 22 constituency we represent retirees as well as active 23 union participants. To delegate a basic core fiduciary 24 duty of collecting contributions which is, after all the 25 life's blood of any pension or health and welfare fund,

1 we have to collect the money, and we think that asking 2 the union to handle that phase of our collection work is 3 -- creates a problem, because we think that the unions, 4 not for sinister reasons, but for legitimate reasons,
5 often have a dilemma or problems of their own. We think 6 that there are basic built-in conflicts of interest.

7 For example, the retirees that we represent 8 the union owes no duty of fair representation to.
9 Typically what can happen is that the fund will do an 10 audit with its auditors of a company and turn up 11 evidence that employees maybe four or five years ago 12 were not reported properly. The employer asserts that.
13 It's a coverage question. We go to the union and say, 14 would you please -- this dispute, we are trying to 15 collect on employees who are no longer around. They 16 don't belong to the union any more. They don't even 17 work for the employer any more.

18 A union as a practical matter may have 19 difficulty trying to do that or even wanting to do it.
20 There are cost factors involved, and it is sometimes 21 very difficult, and we can't force them to do it.

22 QUESTION: Well, suppose the union does do it, 23 and steps in, and it is a dispute, and they reach an 24 agreement with the employer that says no payments were 25 due, there's no coverage, and you don't like that

1 result, you think it's wrong under the agreement. Are 2 you going to live with it, or can you file suit?

3 MR. LUPLOW: We think that we could file
4 suit. We also think that the practical effect of it is, 5 first off, the arbitration under Taft-Hartley as it has 6 been developed by this Court and as enunciated by 7 Congress is still, after all, a matter of contract, and 8 the basic -- the bottom line here is that we never 9 agreed to this. As a matter of fact, the petitioners in 10 their collective bargaining agreements agreed in the 11 pension and health and welfare articles which are cited 12 in the appendix to allow the parties who founded the 13 trust to appoint trustees and to be bound by the trust 14 agreement that is put together by the trustees.

15 In addition to that, they agreed to be bound 16 by all of the provisions of the trust agreement as part 17 of the collective bargaining agreement. In other words, 18 the trust agreement is incorporated by reference into 19 the collective bargaining agreement, and in the trust 20 agreement itself, as is set forth in the appendix, there 21 is a specific provision that the trustees have a right 22 to file suit in court independent of and not to the 23 detriment of the union. The union has its own rights.
24 We think that's fairly clear, and relating to the 25 trilogy and Justice White's opinion in Atkinson versus

1 Sinclair, it is still a matter of contract.

2 As to the Congressional intent that 3 petitioners alluded to about Congress and arbitration, 4 Congress is no stranger to arbitration. When it has 5 addressed, it has spoken directly about it, for example, 6 in the Railway Labor Act. In the Railway Labor Act, it
7 is set forth in our brief, in the Northwest Airlines 8 case, arbitration is mandatory. It is mandatory under 9 302(c)(5)(D), deadlock situations. Congress said 10 arbitration is mandatory.

11 They said that it is required under the 12 Withdrawal Liability Act of ERISA, but even there 13 Congress said that the arbitrator in that situation is 14 not to act like the typical arbitrator in the collective 15 bargaining sense. He is to serve more of a judge. You 16 are either right or your're wrong. And finally, the 17 desirability of private agreements under 209(d) of 18 Taft-Hartley, which is Congress's expression, says it is 19 the desire, it is the preferred policy, and as this 20 Court has developed through the Steelworkers Trilogy and 21 the Atkinson case, that is the preference, and 22 arbitration is a wonderful thing where the parties have 23 agreed to it and it serves a great purpose in this 24 nation under the labor law.

25 However, it is still a matter of contract, and

1 we didn't agree to it.

2 QUESTION: Mr. Luplow, do you think the union
3 is a necessary party in the lawsuit below?

4 MR. LUPLOW: If we -- I do not think so. As 5 indicated, I think, in the amicus brief filed by the 6 American Federation of Labor in this case, which, while 7 their point of view was relying principally on contract
8 trust agreements, I don't think that they are. I think 9 that the Ninth Circuit suggested or -- and also the 10 Seamens case in the Third Circuit, that if the employer
11 is concerned that the union is going to get another bite
12 at the -- to get a shot at him later, or to take him
13 into court later, that the employer can join the union 14 in the lawsuit, or if arbitration is proceeding, as the 15 Ninth Circuit said in the Amarc versus Continental Can 16 case, which we expressed to this Court last week, the 17 court may to avoid the double forum and double exposure 18 grant a stay of the proceedings and defer to the 19 arbitrator.

20 QUESTION: How does the employer get the union 21 in?

22 MR. LUPLOW: He can join him as a third party
23 defendant, which was done in -- which the counsel here --

24 QUESTION: Third party defendant? That means 25 that there's a right over, doesn't it?

1 MR. LUPLOW: I don't know the answer to that.

2 QUESTION: Well, if they are not a necessary 3 party, they can't get them in, and you are saying they 4 are not necessary, and I -- you know, I just wonder 5 whether a party shouldn't have a little something to say
6 about the meaning of their agreement and the coverage
7 question. They are the people who wrote the agreement, 8 and your position is so extreme that you are just 9 letting the -- you are saying the parties don't have 10 anything to say about coverage.

11 QUESTION: The trust tail wags the whole dog
12 in your view.

13 MR. LUPLOW: Your Honor, the parties -- We 14 don't think it's any different than a situation under 15 301, for example, where federal courts have interpreted 16 contracts, where the parties haven't agreed to a 17 grievance procedure, and the parties in this case and in 18 other cases have agreed to a bargain, but there are some 19 ambiguities in the bargain.

20 QUESTION: Well, the employer is going to have 21 plenty to say in this lawsuit about --

22 MR. LUPLOW: Yes, he is.

23 QUESTION: -- if you win, and you wouldn't -- 24 what if the union -- What if you win this lawsuit and 25 then the union moves to intervene, just to have its say

1 so in the District Court at trial? Would you oppose the 2 intervention of the union?

3 MR. LUPLOW: No.

4 QUESTION: So you think it's a proper party, 5 at least.

6 MR. LUPLOW: Sure.

7 QUESTION: But not a third party in the 8 technical sense, where one of the parties is claiming a 9 right over against the third party.

10 QUESTION: No.

11 MR. LUPLOW: Okay --

12 QUESTION: They just intervene. They just 13 intervene on one side or the other.

14 MR. LUPLOW: The union could intervene --

15 QUESTION: Probably they are going to 16 intervene on your side.

17 MR. LUPLOW: Also, of course, the --

18 QUESTION: Which I wouldn't suppose you would 19 oppose.

20 MR. LUPLOW: No. No, I would not.

21 QUESTION: I suppose there would be cases in 22 which the employees might want to intervene by parity of 23 reasoning, and I take it they are not necessarily 24 represented by the union insofar as they are making 25 claims against the fund, are they?

1 MR. LUPLOW: I am sorry, Your Honor.

2 QUESTION: Would the individual employees 3 necessarily be represented by the union insofar as they 4 might assert a claim to vested rights in the fund? You 5 can have non-member employees --

6 MR. LUPLOW: Yes, they can file.

7 QUESTION: -- or employees of -- defunct 8 employers, and all sorts of --

9 MR. LUPLOW: Sure. I mean, anyone that we 10 mentioned at the top of our argument would have status 11 to sue us under 502.

12 As we said before, the unions do not have a 13 duty of fair representation to the retirees. They don't 14 have any duty to the beneficiaries, and they don't have 15 a duty to the trustees, and it is the retirees and the 16 beneficiaries who rely on the trustees. I mean, we are 17 their representatives. We are the ones designated by 18 Congress to protect the funding of that fund and their 19 assets and their financial future.

20 QUESTION: Well, what kind of a suit -- what 21 is the tenor of your suit in the District -- You are 22 taking a position on the meaning there, aren't you?

23 MR. LUPLOW: Yes, the --

24 QUESTION: You are not just saying like the 25 executor of a will bringing an action to construe a

1 will, are you?

2 MR. LUPLOW: No.

3 QUESTION: Well, why -- why shouldn't your 4 suit be more of that kind, where you say, here, we want 5 you to tell us what this language means, judge, and then 6 you take all the evidence and the judge decides?

7 MR. LUPLOW: Well, in some of the cases --

8 QUESTION: Why should you be taking a position 9 on it, if you are such fiduciaries?

10 MR. LUPLOW: Well, if -- our position is that 11 if there is -- if it is not clear, and we have potential 12 liability, which we do under ERISA to anybody, a 13 determination has to be made and it has to be done in 14 good faith.

15 QUESTION: Well, that's right, but why should 16 you have -- why should you take one side or the other?

17 QUESTION: A decision of the court would 18 relieve you of the responsibility, would it not?

19 MR. LUPLOW: Yes.

20 QUESTION: Just as a trustee would normally 21 ask for instructions on the construction of a trust, as 22 Justice White suggested.

23 MR. LUPLOW: Yes, Your Honor. That is very 24 correct. That is very true.

25 QUESTION: I thought you said that ERISA gave

1 you that responsibility. Is that true?

2 MR. LUPLOW: To get an instruction.

3 QUESTION: Can I get an answer to my question?

4 MR. LUPLOW: Yes. ERISA gives us the 5 authority to bring an action in federal court, yes.

6 QUESTION: And does it give you the 7 responsibility to take care and dispose of that money 8 and be responsible for it?

9 MR. LUPLOW: Yes, it does.

10 QUESTION: You also have a duty to collect it, 11 don't you?

12 MR. LUPLOW: Yes.

13 QUESTION: When you think of it -- you've got 14 a duty to collect.

15 MR. LUPLOW: In order -- we have, as one 16 reviews the Congressional purposes, 1029(a), (b), and 17 (c), the responsibilities of trustees under the statute 18 are enormous, and as it should be. We view it almost as 19 a -- we don't know of any higher responsibility that the 20 Congress could place on other citizens than to safeguard 21 the assets of people for their retirement years.

22 QUESTION: But the discharge of that 23 responsibility doesn't always require that you come down
24 on the side of aggrandisement of the trust, does it? I 25 mean, just getting an instruction from a court one way

1 or the other would discharge the responsibility.

2 MR. LUPLOW: Yes. Another aspect of the case, 3 and there are really two issues, in a sense, although 4 they are interrelated, and that is in the Prosser case, 5 where Prosser has indicated that audits, the scope of an 6 audit is also subject to arbitration. Our trust 7 agreement -- in other words, when we went in to perform
8 an audit on Prosser, they said, wait a minute, you know, 9 you can't audit, because the scope of your audit is also 10 arbitrable, and that -- and I wanted to bring that to 11 the Court's attention, that in the trust agreement we 12 have two provisions that address that. One is 13 production of pertinent records, and also the trustees' 14 power to construe the trust agreement.

15 Basically, the Central States' funds with half 16 a million people, 12,000 employers over 40 states, some 17 people are surprised when we say this, but the fact of 18 the matter is that we have an honor system of 19 reporting. There is no other practical way for us to do 20 it. Monthly the employers fill out a report form and 21 send us a check, and so it is based on an honor system, 22 and the only checks and balances we have, we perform 23 random audits, and we do that through our audit 24 department.

25 We also know that, under ERISA and also under

1 Department of Labor advisory opinions that have been 2 issued, that the funds must provide coverage and grant 3 pension credits regardless of whether or not the 4 employer makes contributions if he was obligated in the 5 first instance.

6 We lock upon audits as a matter of pure trust 7 administration, and subject only to a federal court's 8 review as to whether or not the scope of our audit was 9 arbitrary and capricious. Since we have literally 10 thousands of employers and thousands of collective 11 bargaining agreements that range in grievance resolving 12 mechanisms from one arbitrator to a panel of three to 13 joint committees, that it would be absolutely chaotic 14 for a centralized fund of our size to be bound by an 15 arbitrator's decision in Iowa that you have a right to 16 audit for three years, someone in Indiana for one year, 17 the joint committee says five years.

18 We think that that is particularly a matter of 19 pure trust administration, and that the scope of our 20 audits are really something that should be subject to a 21 court's review as to arbitrary and capricious scope of 22 conduct of it.

23 In concluding -- I see the light is on -- I 24 would say this, that the entire statutory scheme of 25 ERISA is to, Number One, to safeguard the assets for

1 retirees and their dependents, and it is to make sure 2 that there is accountability. We think that the 3 petitioner's position allows for a dilution of the 4 fixing of that responsibility by requiring us to rely on 5 the union who is not our agent under Amex Coal, whom we 6 cannot tell what to do, who itself may have for 7 legitimate reasons a conflict of interest as to the 8 constituents that we represent as opposed to the ones 9 that they represent.

10 We think that that together with the statutory 11 history makes it clear that the responsibility to 12 collect money that we are entitled to under a collective 13 bargaining agreement is strictly with the trustees, and 14 that any dilution or any rule of law that starts to 15 split that responsibility is not in the best interest of 16 the participants and beneficiaries, and contrary to 17 Congressional intent.

18 Thank you very much.

19 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Do you have anything
20 further, Mr. Yates?

21 ORAL ARGUMENT OF DAVID F. YATES, ESQ.,
22 ON BEHALF OF SCHNEIDER MOVING AND STORAGE COMPANY

23 REUBTAL

24 MR. YATES: Yes, I do.

25 Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the

1 Court, with respect to the alluding to the statutory 2 rights here, I think that we are ahead of ourselves in 3 terms of the collective bargaining agreement. When the 4 union and the employer sit down in collective bargaining
5 negotiations, they at that time in this case negotiated 6 the funding obligation of the employer to the trustees.
7 They limited that funding obligation to less than all 8 employees covered by the collective bargaining
9 agreement.

10 At that time they were in fact acting to a 11 certain extent as agent of the trustees. They were 12 negotiating what the obligation would be. What the 13 respondents are suggesting here would result in the, as 14 Justice Rehnquist suggested, the trust becoming the tail 15 that wags the dog here. They would have the right to 16 come in during the term of the contract, state that they 17 don't think that that bargain that was reached in 18 collective bargaining is agreeable to them, is 19 reasonable, and they are going to attempt to upset it.

20 The same principles --

21 QUESTION: I don't think that's a fair
22 statement of their position. They are saying that they 23 don't read the agreement the way -- they don't say they 24 have a right to amend the collective bargaining
25 agreement, or ask a court to do that, as I understood

1 the argument.

2 MR. YATES: By taking an adversary position as 3 to how the contract should be construed --

4 QUESTION: They can take the position that 5 this particular employee is in fact covered even though 6 the union has said otherwise, but that is based on how 7 they read the agreement, not a right to amend the 8 agreement, isn't it?

9 MR. YATES: Well, yes, that's correct. I 10 don't think they're saying to amend the words, but that 11 operates as a de facto amendment to the contract if they 12 take the contract and interpret it differently than the 13 employer and the union understood the contract to mean 14 when they negotiated. After all, this Court has 15 recognized that collective bargaining contracts are 16 based on a history of practices between the employer and 17 the union. They are not negotiated in a vacuum. They 18 are based on what the practices have been between the 19 parties.

20 It seems to me that what is happening here is 21 that the trustees are taking the position that they have 22 the right to come in and question the interpretation 23 given to the collective bargaining agreement by the 24 employer and the union, and if that happens, I think you 25 are going to be removing the entire question of the

1 funding obligation --

2 QUESTION: How do you know in this case that 3 the union disagrees with the position taken by the 4 trustees?

5 MR. YATES: We don't. I wish we knew what the 6 position --

7 QUESTION: Well, then you shouldn't say that 8 the trustees are attempting to take a position contrary 9 to the understanding of both parties. After all, what 10 their suit is going to end up, if you lose this case, 11 there is going to be a trial, and the question is going 12 to turn about what did the parties intend by the 13 collective bargaining agreement.

14 MR. YATES: That is correct.

15 QUESTION: So you are going to really find out 16 just in a different forum what your client and the union 17 meant.

18 MR. YATES: Our position is, the union has 19 never raised the issue, and that, we think, is 20 important.

21 QUESTION: I understand that.

22 MR. YATES: With respect to the inconsistent 23 results, I think there is a legitimate concern of the 24 trustees that there not be inconsistent results. We 25 believe that using the arbitration process to interpret

1 the contract, and that is what we are talking about, we 2 are just talking about an interpretation problem, that 3 will go further in preventing inconsistent results. If 4 the trustees lose in the District Court, there is 5 nothing to prevent the union from filing a grievance and 6 proceeding to arbitration or to prevent the union from 7 striking and attempting to obtain something the trustees 8 could not obtain in federal court. There is nothing to 9 prevent the union and the employer from negotiating an 10 amendment to their agreement.

11 QUESTION: Mr. Yates, is there anything to 12 prevent you from calling up the union and saying, do you 13 agree with the trustees' reading of this contract?

14 MR. YATES: Nothing at all.

15 QUESTION: And if you did that, you told the 16 judge you both agreed, that might be a pretty good 17 defense.

18 MR. YATES: The respondents have just stated
19 that if they disagree with that interpretation --

20 QUESTION: I understand. They would litigate
21 it, but you would then let the judge know how the union 22 felt.

23 MR. YATES: Absolutely. Most certainly.

24 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will resume at 1:00
25 o'clock.

1 Thank you, gentlemen. The case is submitted.
2 (Whereupon, at 11:59 o'clock a.m., the cases
3 in the above-entitled matter were submitted.)
