P R O C E E D I N G S

CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments first this morning in Tower against Glover.

Mr. Frohnmayer, you may proceed whenever you're ready.

ORAL ARGUMENT OF DAVID B. FROHNMAYER, ESQ.,

ON BEHALF OF THE PETITICNERS

MR. FROHNMAYER: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the Court, the narrow subject presented by this case is whether public defenders are immune from their clients' Section 1983 claims when they are cast as conspiracies.

But the broader question directly implicated is whether the Civil Rights Act of 1871 in this Court must countenance conspiracy claims which act to undermine effectively the independence and functioning of the state in judicial processes.

This Court has previously recognized the integrity of the judicial system by granting absolute immunity to three of its four vital participants: judges, witnesses, and prosecutors.

This case presents an opportunity to close the fourth side of an iron rectangle of protection for the judicial process by acknowledging the immunity of the public defender.

1           Extension of this protection obviously goes 2 beyond the mere desire for geometric symmetry, because 3 it enhances, rather than endangers, the capacity of 4 states to provide indigent defense counsel in accordance 5 with the command of this Court in the Sixth and 6 Fourteenth Amendments in Gideon v. Wainwright.

7           In urging reversal of the Ninth Circuit, below
8 we submit four propositions this morning.

9           First is that public defender immunity from 10 Section 1983 conspiracy claims is, in fact, necessary to 11 protect against destructive suits which themselves 12 threaten the integrity and finality of the judicial 13 process itself.

14           Second, that public defender immunity is 15 necessary to protect the institution of public defender
16 as one of the most effective methods of meeting Sixth 17 Amendment mandates.

18           Our third contention and proposition is that 19 public defender immunity, in fact, best serves the 20 interests of indigent clients.

21           And, finally, we submit to the Court that 22 there exist alternative remedies for those few abuses 23 which might exist which amply justify the grant of 24 absolute immunity.

25           The facts giving rise to this case are simple

1 and have been exhaustively reviewed in the briefs of 2 counsel. We note simply that respondent Glover, a 3 convicted burglar, brought a pro se 1983 claim against 4 his state and county public defenders.

5 QUESTION: You limit your argument to public
6 defenders, not to privately-retained defenders.

7 MR. FROHNMAYER: Mr. Chief Justice, the facts 8 of this case, of course, just present the issue of 9 public defender. Some of the policies which we urge and 10 favor, obviously, would extend to the whole gamut of 11 counsel, although we do not argue their case precisely 12 because we believe that the most forceful case for 13 immunity, if immunity is to be granted, does in fact lie 14 with the public defender institution.

15 QUESTION: Well, what of the private lawyer
16 who is just appointed to represent an accused or a 17 particular case? He's in between the privately-retained 18 counsel and public defender.

19 MR. FROHNMAYER: Yes. And the difference,
20 Justice Brennan, is this -- and whether the difference
21 would cause any difference in result, of course, is open 22 to question. The difference is that the appointed 23 counsel does have the option as to whether or not to 24 accept a particular appointment, whereas those cases 25 which come to the public defender office are ones which

1 the public defender has no capacity to refuse.

2 The intake of that office is fixed; the risks 3 may be high; and the public defender has no way of 4 minimizing the risks of a highly litigious group of 5 people.

6 QUESTION: But, nevertheless, do not some of 7 the suggestions you made in your initial summation apply 8 as much to the appointed counsel as they do to the 9 public defender?

10 MR. FROHNMAYER: Yes, they could.

11 We are simply suggesting to the Court that 12 absolute immunity did apply to all counsel at common law 13 with respect to defamation proceedings, and that if one 14 looks at the contemporary policy and the contemporary 15 structure of indigent defense, there is a continuum on 16 which the strongest case, then, can be made for the 17 public defender; a slightly less strong case made for 18 the appointed counsel; and perhaps the weakest, but 19 perhaps still an acceptable case, made be made for 20 privately-retained defense counsel.

21 That's our position.

22 QUESTION: On the one point you made, I'm not 23 sure it's consistent with history. The public defender 24 is not drafted for the assignment. He volunteers, or 25 she volunteers to become a member of the staff of a

1 public defender; whereas, certainly, the tradition was 2 that when a court called a private practitioner and 3 asked that private practitioner to appear and defend a 4 person charged, certainly the tradition was that the 5 lawyer should not refuse but should accept.

6 MR. FROHNMAYER: I think that that is the 7 tradition, Chief Justice Burger, but I think that the 8 common practice in some jurisdictions, obviously, gives 9 counsel who wish to be appointed some flexibility in 10 determining whether they wish to be on the list for a 11 particular court or for a particular time.

12 And with reference to history, there is an 13 interesting point which is raised by the Kaus citation 14 on page 28 of the respondent's briefs, the UCLA study of 15 the English practice at common law for at least 200 16 years.

17 And the import of that common law immunity 18 from malpractice actions in criminal defense proceedings 19 for English barristers was, in part, grounded on the 20 fact that the English barrister at common law has no 21 discretion to refuse a client and does not have the 22 contractual relationship with the client, but must 23 instead take whatever accused criminal walks in the door 24 as his client on behalf of the solicitor who offers the 25 brief to the barrister.

1                   So, in that respect, there is a strong 2 comparison between the policy reasons underlying the 3 English common law immunity from malpractice actions or 4 barristers, and that which obtains most strongly, we 5 believe, in the case of the public defender with respect 6 to immunity that we're arguing in this case.

7                   QUESTION: What about private legal aid 8 societies?

9                   MR. FROHNMAYER: With respect to --

10                  QUESTION: Your point. Like, for example, in 11 New York.

12                  MR. FROHNMAYER: Well, in the State of Oregon, 13 the private legal aid society does not provide for 14 criminal defense.

15                  QUESTION: I'm not talking about -- I'm saying 16 what about states other than Oregon that have private 17 public assistance programs for lawyers defending 18 indigent clients?

19                  QUESTION: Would they be immune?

20                  MR. FROHNMAYER: We would submit that many of 21 the common law arguments for immunity and many of the 22 policy arguments for immunity would apply equally to the 23 private legal aid organization, at least to the extent 24 that it could not control its intake.

25                  QUESTION: Well, what makes you think they can

1 control their intake?

2 MR. FROHNMAYER: It may well be that they 3 cannot, and if they cannot --

4 QUESTION: Well, if they can, but they take 99
5 percent of the cases, would they be immune?

6 MR. FROHNMAYER: Yes. Under the reasoning
7 that we advance, they would be immune.

8 QUESTION: Why?

9 MR. FROHNMAYER: Because of the nature of the 10 risk which they accept. If 99 percent of the client 11 population that they have is a client population that 12 they are not, in effect, practically free to refuse, 13 then the same degree of risk affects the operation of 14 their criminal defense activities.

15 QUESTION: Then I get back to the Chief 16 Justice.

17 What about a private lawyer who gets a $50,000
18 fee? Is he immune?

19 MR. FROHNMAYER: Under some of the policies
20 that we urge, yes. Under the most --

21 QUESTION: You mean he collects a $50,000 fee, 22 and he doesn't have to account for what he does?

23 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Frohnmayer; It might 24 help an awful lot if you got to your very last point now.

25 You weren't arguing that they're immune from

1 malpractice suits, are you?

2 MR. FROHNMAYER: Your Honor, this is a very 3 interesting point because --

4 QUESTION: Well, are you or not?

5 MR. FROHNMAYER: We find --

6 QUESTION: This is the 1983 action. Are your 7 remarks limited to 1983 suits, or are you saying that 8 these people are immune from malpractice suits?

9 MR. FROHNMAYER: Justice White, we have found 10 in the authority cited by respondent on page 28 of its 11 brief, that there are only eight reported criminal 12 defense malpractice cases in the history of the United 13 States up until the year 1984.

14 And it may very well be that there is --

15 QUESTION: Criminal? What about just a -- how 16 about just a malpractice suit?

17 MR. FROHNMAYER: Well, a malpractice suit
18 which arises from the conduct of a criminal defense.
19 There are eight. And that is all. None of them prior 20 to 1871.

21 QUESTION: That may be, but would -- you
22 wouldn't say that a private lawyer who earned the fee
23 that Justice Marshall mentioned is immune from a 24 malpractice suit, would you?

25 MR. FROHNMAYER: Not from a malpractice suit,

1 but --

2 QUESTION: Well, is he different from the 3 legal aid society or from the public defender?

4 MR. FROHNMAYER: He's different in two 5 respects, Justice White, and those two respects are, 6 first of all, that the client does have an independent 7 contract remedy against the attorney; and, secondly, the 8 client has an economic incentive not to urge the 9 pressing of frivolous claims on behalf of his case.

10 QUESTION: Well, we haven't held that the 11 appointed counsel is not immune from malpractice suits?

12 MR. FROHNMAYER: I don't believe that you
13 have. If you're referring to the Ferri v. Ackerman
14 case, all this Court held was that the Criminal Justice 15 Act did not, by itself, import an immunity which would 16 apply in a state malpractice proceeding.

17 It is not, in our judgment, a holding to any 18 degree that the federal common law under 1983 justifies 19 a malpractice action against lawyers, and, in fact, 20 quite the contrary.

21 QUESTION: Well, I wasn't asking that. I'm 22 asking whether, in your view, the legal aid clinic or 23 the public defender is immune from a state law 24 malpractice suit, in your view.

25 MR. FROHNMAYER: That depends on the state.

1 QUESTION: Well, how about the great State of 2 Oregon?

3 MR. FROHNMAYER: That issue has never been 4 litigated by the Oregon Supreme Court. It has 5 recognized, in the case of Watt v. Gurkey, which this 6 Court cited in Imbler v. Pachtman, the prosecutorial
7 immunity exists as in absolute manner, and it may well
8 be that the Oregon Supreme Court would follow that case 9 in --

10 QUESTION: Well, do you think the public 11 defender is wielding state authority in the State of 12 Oregon?

13 MR. FROHNMAYER: We must look at the Oregon
14 statutes cast against the rationale of this Court's 15 analysis in Polk County v. Eadsen.

17 What if he isn't? What if he is not?

18 MR. FROHNMAYER: What if he is not exerting 19 state authority?

20 QUESTION: There isn't any basis for immunity 21 then, is there?

22 MR. FROHNMAYER: Well, unless there is 23 conspiratorial -- unless there is the allegation of 24 conspiratorial liability, which is the issue that we 25 have before us.

1                   QUESTION: Mr. Frohnmayer, none of our 2 immunity cases, whether judicial immunity, prosecutorial 3 immunity, suggest that there is immunity as a matter of 4 federal law from state actions, do they?

5                   MR. FROHNMAYER: From state actions at common 6 law or statutorily based?

7                   QUESTION: Whichever.

8                   MR. FROHNMAYER: No, there's not, and we're 9 not contending that's the case.

10                  QUESTION: So, whether or not the petitioner
11 here would be liable under an Oregon malpractice 12 statute, is something we certainly don't have to decide.

13                  MR. FROHNMAYER: That's correct, and we have 14 not suggested to the Court that it need decide that.

15                  QUESTION: Well, I thought you were kind of 16 weaving together kind of malpractice arguments, together 17 with 1983 arguments.

18                  MR. FROHNMAYER: No, no. I was simply 19 suggesting a continuum of different forms of legal 20 representation.

21                  QUESTION: I attempted to get him to weave 22 them together, but he refused.

23                  QUESTION: General Frohnmayer, isn't the fact
24 that there are so few malpractice actions against public 25 defenders an argument against your position that finding

1 1983 liability would open floodgates of suits?

2 MR. FROHNMAYER: I think not. I think not,
3 for several reasons: First of all, it was not until 4 this Court's decisions in Ferri v. Ackerman and Polk 5 County v. Dodson, that any of the lower circuit or 6 district courts in this country believed that there was 7 any question but that the public defender was immune.

8 Secondly, one has to recognize that with all 9 of the other actors in the criminal justice process 10 which convicts a particular defendant possessing 11 immunity, the last and perhaps only target for the 12 person who feels unjustifiably dissatisfied at his or her 13 conviction will look to the public defender as a way of 14 reopening the validity of the entire criminal justice 15 process that convicted that person.

16 And so in that -- and beyond that point, I 17 think there's quite a difference, and I believe that the 18 Turner study that we cited in our brief would at least 19 partially bear this out.

20 There is a difference in the mind of many 21 persons who are incarcerated, between the availability 22 of a federal remedy and the availability of a state 23 remedy.

24 QUESTION: May I get back to the -- we're 25 talking about a different guy.

1                   What about a private lawyer who volunteers his 2 services for free? Would he be subject to a suit, or 3 would he have immunity?

4                   MR. FROHNMAYER: In the situation in which he 5 is alleged to have conspired, as the facts would have 6 indicated here, yes. We --

7                   QUESTION: Would have immunity?

8                   MR. FROHNMAYER: yes. We believe that a case
9 can be made for immunity there.

10                  QUESTION: Why? How in the world does he get 11 immunity?

12                  MR. FROHNMAYER: Because that leads, really, 13 to one --

14                  QUESTION: What has the government done to 15 bring this about? Except to let him be born.

16                  MR. FROHNMAYER: Well, the allegation is that 17 there exists state action under the Dennis v. Sparks 18 theory, because --

19                  QUESTION: Well, how is it state action?

20                  MR. FROHNMAYER: Well, for the same reason
21 that --

22                  QUESTION: The man volunteered to defend him, 23 and they came to complete agreement as to that. And he 24 spent his money out of his own pocket. But still, he's 25 subject to liability, isn't he?

1                   MR. FROHNMAYER: Under Section 1983, under a 2 conspiracy claim of this kind, yes.

3                   QUESTION: I don't see how you get 1983 on him.

4                   MR. FROHNMAYER: Well, for the same reason
5 that 1983 is alleged to be present in this case. And 6 that is that the public defender --

7                   QUESTION: Is operating pursuant to an Oregon 8 statute.

9                   MR. FROHNMAYER: That is correct.

10                  QUESTION: Now, what statute is my man 11 operating under?

12                  MR. FROHNMAYER: If I may submit this, Justice
13 Marshall, under this Court's holding in Polk County v.
14 Dodson, the fact that a statute authorizes the operation 15 of the public defender was not sufficient, in this 16 Court's judgment in that case, to add the color of law 17 requirement for 1983 jurisdiction.

18                  It was -- and the only reason that this case
19 is different than this Court's holding in Polk County v.
20 Dodson is the additional allegation of a conspiracy 21 between state court judges and state administrative 22 officials with which the public defender --

23                  QUESTION: Well, what did the state court 24 judge do in my case?

25                  MR. FROHNMAYER: I'm sorry?

1                   QUESTION: Where the man volunteered his 2 services, what did the state court judge do to bring 3 that about?

4                   MR. FROHNMAYER: Well, I thought that you were 5 saying, Justice Marshall, that you were simply changing 6 the facts in the hypothetical you gave me so that it
7 would be a volunteer attorney instead of a public 8 defender.

9                   In the facts that you get me, there is no
10 color of state law at all. There's no 1983
11 jurisdiction. That's a different issue.

12                  QUESTION: So you don't need to --

13                  MR. FROHNMAYER: You don't need to reach the 14 immunity issue because there's no 19 --

15                  QUESTION: Well, couldn't he bring a 16 malpractice suit?

17                  MR. FROHNMAYER: It may be that he could. Our 18 suggestion is that, based upon --

19                  QUESTION: Will he have immunity?

20                  MR. FROHNMAYER: No, because there's no 21 federal cause of action under which he can claim the 22 immunity.

23                  QUESTION: Oh, yours is limited to 1983
24 actions..

25                  MR. FROHNMAYER: That is correct. We are

1 arguing a Section 1983 case.

2 QUESTION: And you get immunity on a 1983
3 action, but under no other action?

4 MR. FROHNMAYER: That is correct. And if --

5 QUESTION: What statute or constitutional 6 vision says that?

7 MR. FROHNMAYER: That's correct. If there's 8 any --

9 QUESTION: What constitutional or statutory 10 provision says that you are immune under 1983, but under 11 nothing else?

12 MR. FROHNMAYER: That's right. We are not 13 asking this Court to extend the reason --

14 QUESTION: Well, give me the case that says 15 that.

16 MR. FROHNMAYER: I think this is the case in 17 which the Court has the opportunity to say it.

18 QUESTION: I see. I see.

19 MR. FROHNMAYER: And that is the issue that we 20 believe this Court reserved in Footnote 4 of its 21 decision in Polk County v. Dodson.

22 If there is anything that I have said in 23 response to the Court's questioning to this time that 24 indicates that we wish to have an immunity to extend to 25 other actions not arising under color of state law under

1 1983, that was a mistaken apprehension, and that is not 2 our contention before this Court. It is not part of the 3 case that we have before us.

4 QUESTION: General Frohnmayer, I take it, 5 then, that you are perfectly willing to accept the 6 Dennis view that the conspiracy allegation clothes 7 everybody with the undercolor of state law.

8 MR. FROHNMAYER: Yes. We believe --

9 QUESTION: And you don't -- you don't disagree 10 with that.

11 MR. FROHNMAYER: We find it very difficult to 12 give a principle distinction from the Dennis conclusion 13 in this case. We believe that that's one of the 14 inescapable problems with the Dennis analysis, but it
15 follows so soundly on this Court's earlier decisions, 16 that we do not urge you today to reconsider the Dennis 17 case.

18 The only possible distinction between the 19 Dennis case and this one is that in the Dennis case, it 20 was the immune state official himself who took the 21 action; that is, the judge took the action to take the 22 bribe or be subject to undue influence and change his 23 decision; whereas in this case, it might be argued that 24 the public defender who is not acting under color of 25 state law under your Polk County decisions was the 1 ultimate actor who is alleged to have the fault.

2 But that is a method of distinguishing the 3 Dennis case. But if that method is not accepted as an 4 appropriate distinction, then this Court, we believe, 5 must squarely face the question.

6 QUESTION: Well, what is the conspiracy
7 allegation here?

8 MR. FROHNMAYER: The conspiracy allegation, as 9 the Ninth Circuit acknowledged, Justice Brennan, is 10 somewhat vague. The allegation is that the state court 11 judges and administrative officials conspired or 12 colluded with the trial and appellate public defenders
13 to cause or persuade the public defenders not to perform 14 their duties in urging certain arguments at trial and in 15 excising certain key arguments from the brief that the 16 defendant wished to pursue.

17 QUESTION: And, of course, we accept that 18 allegation as the premise for your argument, do we?

19 MR. FROHNMAYER: That is correct. All we have 20 is the face of the pleadings. This comes on a Motion to 21 Dismiss. There has been no discovery. In fact, there's 22 been no clarification of the complaint.

23 QUESTION: General, at the time the district
24 court acted in this case, had Polk County come down?

25 MR. FROHNMAYER: I believe that it had not.

1                   QUESTION: I think it had not. It had, of 2 course, when the court of appeals acted. But I wonder 3 whether the district court wouldn't have dismissed the 4 complaint in view of the vague allegations of conspiracy 5 if Polk County had come down, no state action on the 6 part of the defender?

7                   MR. FROHNMAYER: Well, Justice Powell, we 8 don't know, of course, and the Ninth Circuit decision
9 was rendered after this Court's decision, both in Ferri
10 v. Ackerman and Polk County. And the Ninth Circuit did 11 note, in Footnote 1 concluding its opinion, that 12 although vaguely put, the allegations of conspiracy were 13 probably adequate on their face, however much we might 14 differ with that view.

15                   QUESTION: They did allege that Judge Woodrich 16 and the judge of the court of appeals had joined in the 17 conspiracy. I suppose, as long as Dennis v. Sparks is 18 on the books, that's sufficient to bring in the state 19 action.

20                   MR. FROHNMAYER: That's our problem, Justice
21 Rehnquist and, in fact, that's the anomaly that this 22 case creates after this Polk County v. Dodson. There is 23 only one species of Section 1983 liability to which a 24 public defender is subject, and that is the species of 25 1983 claim that says there is a conspiracy.

1           And that, we find not only anomalous, but we 2 find, indeed, deeply harmful to the criminal justice
3 process. We find it harmful to the judicial process
4 itself.

5           The first of our arguments was that, in fact, 6 immunity is accepted for those participants in the 7 judicial process.

8           QUESTION: Suppose, Mr. Attorney General, 9 though, that this public defender under Oregon law was 10 subject to suit for conspiring with the prosecution.

11          MR. FROHNMAYER: Well, if the public --

12          QUESTION: Let's just assume that he could be 13 sued under Oregon law, and Oregon states for having 14 conspired with the public officials in derogation of his 15 duty.

16          MR. FROHNMAYER: We would hope that he would.
17 And under Oregon --

18          QUESTION: Suppose he is subject to that kind 19 of a suit. Wouldn't that have the same impact on the 20 judicial system?

21          MR. FROHNMAYER: Absolutely not, for a very 22 important reason, and it's the same reason that applies 23 to the distinction that this court has drawn between the 24 use of 18 United States Code 242, the criminal color of 25 law provisions, and the civil rights provisions under

1 1983; that is, that you have a prosecutor who has the 2 responsibility, under a set of professional ethics, to 3 screen complaints, to make sure that they are not the 4 vindictive or frivolous complaint that comes.

5 And so the prosecutor and the Grand Jury act
6 as essential guards to the floodgate of litigation, 7 because they are able to screen the frivolous from the 8 well-taken claim.

9 And in that respect, we think that there is a 10 very significant difference.

11 QUESTION: But I'm talking about the public 12 defender, if he subject to suit for conspiring with the 13 prosecution in derogation of his duty, the public 14 defender's duty, under Oregon law.

15 Now, isn't he then -- he is subject to a 16 serious risk, then, of being sued in the state courts.

17 MR. FROHNMAYER: Yes, but he's not subject to 18 a serious risk of being sued frivolously. And the point 19 that we make is this: We do not believe that the 20 problem with Section 1983 lawsuits is that they will 21 succeed; our contention is that the cost of vindication 22 of the public defender in these suits is too high in the 23 process.

24 QUESTION: Well, what makes you think that -- 25 what makes you think that there wouldn't be frivolous

1 litigation in the state courts?

2 MR. FROHNMAYER: Because there exist the 3 prosecutorial control and the Grand Jury control.

4 QUESTION: I know. But that's just the 5 allegation. The allegation is that there has been a 6 conspiracy in derogation of -- I suppose if there's a 7 conspiracy, it's in derogation of the prosecutor's duty, 8 as well as the public defender's.

9 MR. FROHNMAYER: Well, but the point, Justice 10 White, is that there clearly are screening devices which 11 do not cause such a massive diversion of the public 12 defender's time from the duty for which the public
13 defender is hired, and that is to fulfill the Sixth 14 Amendment mandate and represent defenseless indigents.

15 QUESTION: And that's the rationale for the 16 exemption the prosecutor, isn't it?

17 MR. FROHNMAYER: Absolutely, it is. It's the 18 diversion of time from the duties.

19 QUESTION: Couldn't he file a malpractice case 20 in the state court?

21 MR. FROHNMAYER: I'm sorry, Justice --

22 QUESTION: Couldn't he file a malpractice
23 lawsuit in the state court?

24 MR. FROHNMAYER: It is possible that he could.

25 QUESTION: Well, you just said he couldn't do

1 anything in the state court.

2 So he could flood the state court with 3 malpractice suits, couldn't they?

4 MR. FROHNMAYER: Well, we don't know from the 5 Oregon, Justice --

6 QUESTION: Well, you don't know what they are 7 going to do in the federal court either.

8 MR. FROHNMAYER: No, sir. But we certainly 9 don't believe that a duplication of spurious litigation 10 is any --

11 QUESTION: Well, don't you think that cuts
12 down on your flood argument?

13 MR. FROHNMAYER: We're not certain, but what 14 we believe is that any diversion of the public 15 defender's time to answer frivolous litigation is a 16 diversion which deprives the public defender and the 17 states of the responsibility to meet a Sixth Amendment
18 mandate. And that is a stronger reason for immunity 19 than this Court recognized in the Briscoe case, where 20 the police officer's time was diverted by virtue of 21 being a witness and then having to testify in 1983
22 proceedings.

23 But the police officer did not have a 24 constitutional mandate to fulfill in the time that was 25 taken away by defending frivolous court actions, and 1 that is the case in this instance.

2 And it's beyond that point It goes to the 3 question of the vulnerability of the public defender or 4 perhaps, indeed, of any defense counsel in a judicial 5 proceeding where all of the other participants in that 6 proceeding are immune from suit. It makes the public 7 defender uniquely vulnerable to the vindictive litigant, 8 because that is the last and only place that the 9 integrity of the judicial fact finding process, in fact, 10 can be undermined. And that is --

11 QUESTION: Do you have malpractice insurance
12 in Washington?

13 MR. FROHNMAYER: Malpractice insurance exists 14 in Oregon, Justice Marshall, for -- 15 QUESTION: I mean Oregon.

16 MR. FROHNMAYER: It exists for members of the 17 private bar. For the public defender and for public 18 employees, the state has a torque liability fund which 19 is established under Chapter 30.

20 QUESTION: Couldn't they -- they could get 21 insurance if they wanted to, if they wanted to pay for 22 it.

23 MR. FROHNMAYER: The state public defender is 24 insured by the state for his defense, as long as it does 25 not involve willful or wanton misconduct.

1           We advance to the Court one other proposition 2 in connection with the protection of the judicial 3 process, and it's one that we think is extremely 4 important. These claims, sounding in conspiracy as they 5 do, will be extraordinarily difficult to defeat in some 6 proceedings, even when they are frivolous.

7           That point has been examined in great detail 8 in this Court's past decisions, and it's an extremely 9 telling one as it applies to the public defender here; 10 because, in fact, it is very difficult to imagine, for 11 example, as Justice Stevens' opinion pointed out earlier 12 this last term, a good faith defense conspiracy.

13           In virtually every case, we believe a defense 14 will be required on the merits, because what's alleged 15 is conspiracy, what's alleged is the allegation that a 16 state of mind was a certain way, and the controversion of 17 those points simply would not, we believe, be 18 significant enough to allow the summary judgment 19 procedure to be utilized to dispose of these kinds of 20 claims in summary proceedings.

21           So, for that reason, we think it's extremely 22 important that the Court recognize that the large burden 23 on the public defender office, the diversion from 24 attending to clients when there is a fixed pool of 25 resources to deal with them, is, we think, extremely 1 important.

2 We also submit to the Court this proposition:
3 The public defender's office, the public defender 4 concept, by every study we have come across, is the most 5 widely-utilized, the most cost-effective, and the most 6 efficient in delivering indigent legal services as part 7 of the Sixth Amendment mandate.

8 If states such as Oregon or others who sponsor 9 public indigent defense programs are subject to 10 liability for the defense of an increasing burden of 11 suits, then that kind of experimentation, which is the 12 most effective way of realizing the Gideon v. Wainwright 13 mandate, we believe, will not be effectively fulfilled.

14 Mr. Chief Justice, I wish to reserve the 15 balance of my time.

16 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well.

17 Mr. Edwards.

18 ORAL ARGUMENT OF CRAIG K. EDWARDS, ESQ.,

19 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENT

20 MR. EDWARDS: Mr. Chief Justice and may it
21 please the Court, Glover's allegations in this matter, 22 if true, present a classic situation that the 42nd
23 Congress intended to remedy by the enactment of the 1871
24 Civil Rights Act, where it's alleged that state trial
25 judges, state appellate judges, and state officials

1 engaged in a conspiracy to deprive a citizen of 2 constitutional rights, a federal avenue of redress must 3 remain open to ensure the protection of those 4 constitutional rights and to ensure that a citizen has 5 an adequate avenue to obtain redress for that derivation.

6 QUESTION: How about the jury? Did they join 7 the jury her?

8 MR. EDWARDS: Members of the jury may not have 9 been joined under the legislation, but members of the 10 jury would perform a greater public interest.

11 We maintain that a public defender does not 12 perform in the interest of the public. The public
13 defender's duty is to represent the clients, the indigent 14 accused's interests, and to oppose the government in 15 adversary litigation.

16 That's the

17 QUESTION: When this Court decided the 18 Agersinger case and the earlier case, certainly there 19 was some thought that there was a public concern about 20 having a person who was charged with crime by the 21 government be provided with counsel.

22 MR. EDWARDS: Your Honor, where counsel is 23 appointed or is a public defender to represent the 24 accused's best interest, that counselor, whether 25 retained, appointed, or a public defender, has not other

1 duty but to represent and to advance the interests of 2 the accused.

3 In this case --

4 QUESTION: You say no other duty?

5 MR. EDWARDS: There may be --

6 QUESTION: What about his duties as an officer 7 of the court?

8 MR. EDWARDS: Well, certainly, there are 9 obligations to the court and --

10 QUESTION: You suggest he could advance 11 perjured testimony?

12 MR. EDWARDS: No. In fact, we don't, Your 13 Honor, and that's one of the arguments that we believe 14 goes in our favor; that a public defender, even though a 15 public defender may not be able to refuse a case, the 16 public defender certainly has an obligation not to 17 advance frivolous claims, the floodgates of frivolous 18 claims and such, that Mr. Frchnmayer suggested may be 19 advanced. The public defender has that obligation not 20 to do that.

21 There is also the general public interest in 22 the effective assistance of counsel for all accused, 23 whether they have money or whether they don't. But the 24 primary emphasis or the primary reason for that, and one 25 of the things that the Court has always looked at, is

1 the interest in making sure that the adversarial process
2 is a strong one. And at any time where we have the 3 interests of the government which say that a public 4 defender should be immune because the government has to 5 spend its resources more economically and such, we're 6 subverting that adversarial process.

7 We're not maintaining a strong separation 8 between the person who is supposed to represent the 9 accused's best interest.

10 QUESTION: There is a practical observation
11 that I think the Court is bound to have in mind when it 12 considers claims like this. And we see thousands of 13 petitions for certiorari year-in, year-out, in which 14 some disgruntled citizen complains that the judges and 15 all the lawyers and all the administrators who've ever 16 been involved in his case or her case have all joined in 17 a massive conspiracy against him.

18 Here, the charge is that the circuit judge and 19 the prosecutor and the defense lawyer and judges of the 20 Oregon Court of Appeals, one of whom was a former 21 attorney general -- now, we all know that you have to 22 believe what's taken on the pleadings at the dismissal
23 stage and so forth, but we're also concerned, I think, 24 with, you know, how much resources ought to be allocated 25 to defend against this sort of thing to bring it to 1 trial.

2 And, you know my idea, frankly, is that the 3 chances of your ever proving what you allege are about 4 one in a thousand.

5 Now, I realize that doesn't affect it legally, 6 but I think that's bound to be in people's minds as they 7 decide whether there is immunity or not.

8 MR. EDWARDS: Your Honor, certainly there is 9 no way to stop a frivolous complaint from being filed 10 under Section 1983. And we don't maintain that there 11 will not be frivolous complaints filed.

12 It's our point that that one case in a 13 thousand which has merit to it, and the attorney general 14 has suggested that there are cases that do have some 15 merit to them, that one case in a thousand, to deprive a 16 citizen of constitutional rights without any federal 17 avenue of redress is too great, considering that the 18 only public interest is in the efficient expenditure of 19 resources.

20 QUESTION: Fiat justitia ruat coelum. Let 21 there be justice, though the heavens fall. That's your 22 position.

23 MR. EDWARDS: Your Honor, the constitutional 24 rights are precious.

25 QUESTION: Well, that's not a bad position.

1 That's engraved in stone in the civil court's building
2 in St. Louis, Missouri.

3 (Laughter.)

4 MR. EDWARDS: Your Honor, my point is that 5 these rights are precious, and that at any time that 6 government acts to deprive a citizen of those rights, 7 the purpose behind the 1871 Civil Rights Act should be 8 available to a citizen to utilize that independent 9 avenue of redress.

10 QUESTION: Well, do you have a malpractice
11 suit in state courts against the, I guess, the public 12 defender?

13 MR. EDWARDS: It's my position that there 14 certainly could be a malpractice in state courts against 15 the public defender. Where the only allegations are 16 that a public defender was negligent in the 17 representation of a case, a malpractice case should vie 18 against the public defender.

19 QUESTION: Would it differ substantially from 20 what you're suing for in the federal court, or not?

21 MR. EDWARDS: It certainly would, because if 22 we were suing in the federal court for just a 23 malpractice claim, we couldn't get to the color of law 24 requirement under 1983.

25 QUESTION: And you -- but you can't get to --

1 the only person you can get to in the federal court is 2 the public defender.

3 MR. EDWARDS: Is the public defender, because 4 the defense attorney who is --

5 QUESTION: And you have to prove a conspiracy.

6 MR. EDWARDS: That's right.

7 QUESTION: Which is in agreement with the 8 judge. Why isn't your -- why isn't your remedy, your 9 malpractice remedy, a much more useful remedy to bring 10 justice to bear on this situation?

11 MR. EDWARDS: In many cases, Your Honor, where 12 a malpractice remedy is available, it's very difficult 13 for an indigent accused to be able to retain an 14 attorney. Now, that's not to say that there are not 15 members of the bar who --

16 QUESTION: And why is it so -- it isn't hard 17 to retain an attorney for a 1983 suit because in 1988?

18 MR. EDWARDS: No. Most of these claims, as 19 Mr. Frohnmayer has suggested, are brought pro se, where 20 the indigent accused has an avenue of redress.

21 QUESTION: Well, why can't he -- why doesn't 22 he just sue for malpractice pro se?

23 MR. EDWARDS: Well, the pleading requirements 24 are difficult to meet in the state court. There may also 25 be the burden that the defendant has to show --

1 QUESTION: Well, could he have brought this 2 1983 suit in the state court in Oregon?

3 MR. EDWARDS: Not -- he could have brought,
4 alleging conspiracy.

5 QUESTION: Well, this very suit. Could he not 6 have brought this very 1983 action in the state court?

7 MR. EDWARDS: Yes, he could have. But the 8 court has made clear, since Monroe v. Pape, that there 9 is no requirement that the state remedies the address, 10 or that you have to go to the state court.

11 We have the Congress, which in this situation 12 where it's alleged that state officials have engaged in 13 conspiracy --

14 QUESTION: No, but if he had brought this 1983 15 suit in state court, would not the very issue we are 16 dealing with today have been raised?

17 MR. EDWARDS: Yes, it would, Your Honor, but 18 this fellow doesn't have much confidence in the state 19 courts.

20 QUESTION: He was convicted?

21 MR. EDWARDS: He was convicted, and he says as 22 a result of the conspiracy.

23 (Laughter.)

24 QUESTION: Yes. But, Mr. Edwards, isn't it 25 also true that in a malpractice case, the plaintiff must

1 allege that he was innocent?

2 MR. EDWARDS: That's what I was driving at 3 before. That's right. But for the --

4 QUESTION: And so that's pretty -- sometimes a 5 pretty heavy burden.

6 MR. EDWARDS: That certainly is a heavy burden.

7 QUESTION: What would be wrong with a federal 8 rule in the 1983 area that said that in this kind of 9 case, you have to allege innocence?

10 MR. EDWARDS: That may be a way to address the 11 floodgates problem, Your Honor.

12 QUESTION: It would be pretty hard for him to 13 prove damages if he would have been convicted, you know, 14 if he's really guilty and would have been convicted 15 anyway.

16 MR. EDWARDS: Well, frankly, I think he would 17 have a difficult time in proving the amount of damages 18 that he's alleged, and that even though there is the 19 state malpractice "but for" proposition, that he may 20 have a difficult time obtaining damages if he could not 21 prove that this conviction was a result of conspiracy.

22 QUESTION: In this case, did this man allege 23 he was innocent?

24 MR. EDWARDS: He believe that he was deprived 25 of his constitutional right to --

1                   QUESTION: I know, but that's not my 2 question. My question is did he allege that he was 3 innocent of the crime for which he was convicted?

4                   MR. EDWARDS: Yes. He believed that he was 5 innocent. He was obtaining to obtain psychiatric 6 records. He had been hospitalized, and he alleged that 7 part of the conspiracy was that his -- that state 8 officials persuaded his public defender to fail to 9 obtain those defense records. And, as part of that 10 conspiracy, he was not able, then, to raise the defense 11 that he wanted to raise, and that's the problem.

12                  QUESTION: So you're saying he was illegally 13 convicted.

14                  MR. EDWARDS: He was convicted without due 15 process of law. He was --

16                  QUESTION: Well, I take it he's the -- it 17 would sound like that if you win, if you prove up your 18 case, what you've really done is you're really 19 collaterally attacking his conviction. I would suppose 20 you're supposed to do that in habeas corpus.

21                  MR. EDWARDS: Well, Your Honor, at this time
22 this fellow is out of prison, and a petition of habeas 23 corpus does him no good. Also, for the general purposes 24 of these cases where --

25                  QUESTION: Is he on parole, or --

1           MR. EDWARDS: He may be. He's -- he served 36 2 months, 35 to 38 months out a ten-year sentence.

3           QUESTION: Do you think he's still technically 4 in custody or not?

5           MR. EDWARDS: I do not know. He probably is 6 on some sort of probation.

7           QUESTION: Counsel, is there anything in the 8 legislative history of 1983 which, by any stretch of the 9 imagination, thought about this case?

10          MR. EDWARDS: Your Honor, I would suggest that 11 the legislative history of 1983, just in the enactment
12 itself, where this Court has interpreted 1983 and Polk
13 County v. Dodson, that a public defender is immune --

14          QUESTION: I didn't say one word about Polk
15 County. I talked about the legislative history of 1983, 16 which was a little before Polk County case.

17          MR. EDWARDS: There is nothing, other than the 18 Act itself, the language of the Act itself.

19          QUESTION: Well, that's all I wanted to know.

20          MR. EDWARDS: I would suggest that that 21 language holds that -- or would dictate that public 22 defenders, during the course of traditional defense 23 functions, would be immune, would be effectively immune 24 from a lawsuit brought by a dissatisfied client.

25          It's important to note that the defense

1 attorney does not perform a quasi-judicial function, 2 regardless of the funding that is afforded to the 3 defense attorney, regardless of the fact that the state
4 is the source of the funds. The defense attorney 5 doesn't perform the quasi-judicial function.

6 As I've said before, the defense attorney
7 performs the private function. The defense attorney 8 does not consider the public interest in this case, and 9 in every other case that the Court's looked at, it's 10 been -- it's determined whether or not a quasi-judicial 11 function has been performed.

12 QUESTION: How about Briscoe v. the 13 witnesses?. Would you say that's a public --

14 MR. EDWARDS: That's the only case where a 15 private party has been afforded immunity without 16 performing a quasi-judicial function. But in that case, 17 what the Court was very impressed with was that the 18 witness performs, in essence, a public interest and it 19 aids the judicial system in that it helps us get to the 20 truth. The more that a witness is able to speak without 21 the threat of subsequent intimidation, subsequent 22 lawsuits, we get to the truth of the matter.

23 In this case, where we're saying that a 24 defense attorney should be allowed to conspire with no 25 liability under 1983, that policy that underlies the 1 witness immunity is not advanced by a holding of 2 immunity in this case.

3 We injure the judicial process to the extent 4 that we don't preserve the adversarial process, which in 5 itself --

6 QUESTION: Well, you could say the same thing, 7 apply that same analysis to Briscoe, I think, that 8 you're allowing witnesses to perjure themselves.

9 Obviously, witness perjury doesn't help the 10 judicial process any more than conspiracy between public 11 defenders and judges help the judicial process.

12 The question is, you know, under what 13 circumstances, if ever, shall people who participate in 14 the judicial process be called to account under a 15 separate 1983 action for the role they played in the 16 judicial process.

17 MR. EDWARDS: Your Honor, I would believe that 18 a witness who testifies and perjures him or herself 19 should be liable.

20 Now, under Briscoe, where the police officer, 21 where it was alleged that the police officer perjured
22 himself, that was held to be within the functions that a 23 witness performs, and at least there's a trier of fact 24 to sort out the truth from a lie.

25 Where you have a defense attorney as the last

1 hope for an indigent accused who is granted immunity,
2 then there is no way at all to find the truth in a 3 matter. There's no way at all where the defense
4 attorney, the prosecutor, the judge, witnesses, all 5 would conspire or all would act outside traditional 6 defense functions; there's no last -- there's no other 7 hope.

8 QUESTION: How often would you estimate this 9 sort of a conspiracy takes place in Oregon?

10 MR. EDWARDS: I would submit that it probably 11 does not occur very often, Your Honor, and I would hope 12 that it does not occur very often.

13 I would also suggest that, to the extent that 14 there have only been eight malpractice claims against 15 criminal defense attorneys over the reported history, 16 that Justice O'Connor's point, that there are not a 17 whole lot -- there just aren't a whole lot of these 18 claims that have merit to them. To the extent that 19 there are some, they should be addressed.

20 QUESTION: But we don't know at this stage
21 whether any claims have merit to them, I guess.

22 QUESTION: And the system that you're 23 advocating requires the application of public resources
24 to even the most frivolous claims. That's the whole 25 point made by the Attorney General.

1                   MR. EDWARDS: I understand that, Your Honor, 2 but to the extent that a public defender performs in the 3 interest of the public in providing efficient and 4 economic assistance to indigent accused, we should not 5 take that liability away.

6                   I think that it would be the, perhaps, the 7 Congress which should, or the state legislatures which 8 should provide additional funding for the provision of 9 indigent defense services; that it's up to the 10 legislature to fund those principles which this Court
11 believes are very important, and obviously this Court 12 believes that effective assistance to indigent accused 13 is important.

14                  Amicus professional criminal lawyers' defense 15 associations, both state and national, who have joined 16 us in saying there should be no immunity for the public 17 defender, both understand and both have advanced the 18 argument that a finding of immunity does nothing at all 19 to advance the effective representation of accused.

20                  It's also clear that the common law immunity, 21 which under -- common law immunity from defamation -- 22 was also advanced to see that attorneys did not fear 23 subsequent litigation in the defense attorney's role in 24 judicial proceedings.

25                  Again, this was to make sure that all the

1 facts were out onto the table, and so that the courts
2 could get to the truth of the matter.

3           To the extent that we're asked at this point 4 to advance a policy from 1983 liability to -- to the 5 extent that we're asked to see that immunity from 1983 6 claims should lie, we're not asked to accept that 7 because that policy advances the truth. The only thing 8 we're asked to do that is based upon the fact that there 9 is a more efficient expenditure of state resources. And 10 that's why, I think, that the legislature would be the 11 proper authority to see that there are sufficient funds 12 to protect constitutional rights and to provide 13 effective assistance to the accused.

14           I would also point out that, although there is 15 a speculative burden that the courts may be -- there is 16 a speculative overburden argument. It is speculative.
17 In addition to that, police officers, who are the most 18 likely target of 1983 litigation, members of the 19 Executive Branch, are only afforded a qualified 20 immunity, not an absolute immunity.

21           We're asked to provide an absolute immunity 22 for the -- this Court's been asked to provide absolute 23 immunity, based on the fact that there will be an 24 overburdening of the courts and an overburdening of the 25 public defender's office itself.

1           QUESTION: Well, you make a tangential
2 argument for qualified immunity for public defenders.

3           MR. EDWARDS: Well, to the extent that --

4           QUESTION: The policeman has it, and the 5 prosecutor has it, and the judge has it, and the 6 witnesses have it.

7           MR. EDWARDS: Okay. I don't think that a 8 qualified immunity would be very helpful in this case 9 for two reasons: one, the public defender is not a 10 public official. Qualified immunity is designed to aid 11 public officials in seeing that their duties are 12 performed. There's a public interest in seeing that 13 they perform their duties without subsequent fear of 14 litigation.

15           Also, in regard to the qualified immunity, 16 there's a good faith test, and at any time a defense
17 attorney conspires with a state appellate or a state 18 trial judge or the prosecutor, that there can't be good 19 faith.

20           And so the qualified immunity wouldn't work in 21 this situation. Glover would still win under a 22 qualified immunity, but I don't think that it's the best 23 rule that this Court could come up with.

24           QUESTION: Mr. Edwards, your position, then, 25 is that the public defender is not a public official,

1 but he nonetheless acts under color of state law.

2 MR. EDWARDS: He's acting under color of state
3 law here, only because he has conspired with state 4 officials.

5 QUESTION: And that's the Dennis holding.

6 MR. EDWARDS: That's right. For those 7 traditional defense functions, obviously, he or she does 8 not act under color of law. But when there's a 9 conspiracy with state officials, yes, the color of law 10 holds.

11 QUESTION: Why, logically, should that be?

12 MR. EDWARDS: Well --

13 QUESTION: I mean why, logically, should 14 someone who is not ordinarily acting under color of 15 state in law in performing the functions allotted to 16 him, when he conspires with a state official, why should 17 that person's action be transformed into --

18 MR. EDWARDS: Well, it's clear that private 19 parties who conspire with state officials obtain color 20 of law, act under color of law.

21 QUESTION: Well, why is it clear? I mean, 22 logically?

23 MR. EDWARDS: Well, if you act in concurrence
24 with the state official to further the state's purpose, 25 you are acting under color of law.

1                   QUESTION: Even if the purpose is an illegal 2 purpose?

3                   MR. EDWARDS: Even if the purpose is illegal, 4 especially if the purpose is illegal. You're acting 5 under color of law. You're conspiring, you're working 6 with the state.

7                   QUESTION: Well, I suppose you could say that 8 state action is certainly involved in a conviction, and 9 that this person is accused of subverting the proper 10 conduct of public officials.

11                  MR. EDWARDS: I think that I would argue that 12 the public officials --

13                  QUESTION: You're really accusing of 14 conspiracy, aren't you?

15                  MR. EDWARDS: I think that the public 16 officials have subverted his defense attorney. I would 17 argue that.

18                  QUESTION: Aren't you saying you're action is 19 really -- has to be a claim of conspiracy?

20                  MR. EDWARDS: Yes, it does. It has to be a 21 claim of conspiracy to get under color of law.

22                  Now, for other, I would --

23                  QUESTION: Well, if you prove an agreement, 24 why you've subverted -- there's a subversion of the 25 prosecutor's function, too.

1           MR. EDWARDS: That's right, but there is a 2 public interest --

3           QUESTION: So his liability could be for doing 4 that, not acting for the state, but acting against the 5 state by subverting its proper conduct.

6           MR. EDWARDS: Well, to the extent, though, 7 under 1983 that he has acted under color of law, and 8 that the state is involved here or the government is 9 involved with the private citizen to deprive another of 10 constitutional rights, he should have an avenue of 11 redress, a federal avenue of redress under 1983.

12          I would submit that the Court --

13          QUESTION: Mr. Edwards, how is it that you 14 distinguish the Briscoe v. Lahue approach, which 15 indicated that all people, governmental or otherwise, 16 who are integral parts of the judicial process, are 17 covered by immunity?

18          Why isn't the public defender part of the 19 judicial process?

20          MR. EDWARDS: Because the public defender 21 performs such a unique role, the public defender is the 22 representative of the accused and, necessarily, to 23 maintain the adversarial tradition that is paramount in 24 ascertaining truth, the public defender should not be -- 25 the public defender may perform a critical role in the

1 judicial process, but that alone is not enough to make 2 it the quasi-judicial role, or to --

3 QUESTION: Well, I don't think that Briscoe 4 turned on making witnesses quasi-judicial. It simply 5 brought them in under the umbrella of the judicial 6 process. And the judicial process in our country 7 requires counsel for the defendant as well as the 8 prosecutor and the judge and the witnesses.

9 MR. EDWARDS: Your Honor, I understand that, 10 but I think, again, that the mere location as part of 11 the judicial function is not enough to avoid immunity.
12 We have to look at the role that each person plays in 13 the judicial proceeding and, to the extent that a public 14 defender performs only in the accused's behalf and that 15 that adversarial process is designed to seek the truth, 16 to get the truth out, which --

17 QUESTION: Of course. But the public has an 18 interest in the production of truth by virtue of the 19 adversarial process. The public has an interest in all 20 aspects of this judicial proceeding, and maybe that 21 interest is so great that it requires immunity for all 22 participants.

23 That's the question, I suppose.

24 MR. EDWARDS: I think that the greater public 25 interest is in maintaining a strong adversarial process.

1 QUESTION: Do you have anything further, Mr.
2 Attorney General? You have five minutes remaining.

3 MR. FROHNMAYER: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice.

4 CRAL ARGUMENT OF DAVID B. FROHNMAYER, ESQ., 5 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONERS -- REBUTTAL

6 MR. FROHNMAYER: Chief Justice, members of the 7 Court, we take strong issue with the contentions just 8 advanced by respondent. The public defender does play a 9 critical role in the judicial process. That's the basis 10 of the common law immunity in defamation, which extends 11 to all participants in the adversary process.

12 This Court has recognized that vital role in 13 its decision in the Butz case, where, without question, 14 those participants who were advocates, irrespective of 15 the side they occupied, even in an administrative agency
16 proceeding were accorded absolute immunity by this Court.

17 It's the same statement that is made by this 18 Court in Imbler v. Pachtman.

19 There is a public purpose that is served that 20 is not merely of policy importance. It has 21 constitutional dimension, and that is because the public 22 defender or any advocate for the defense is serving a 23 Sixth Amendment purpose. We suggest that that is one of 24 the reasons why fearless advocacy ought to be furthered 25 by the grant of absolute immunity, and we suggest one of

1 the other policy bases that has also always underlain
2 this Court's decisions, and that is the undesirability 3 of having further federal court reexamination of the 4 entire trial process at the state level through this kind 5 of subversion.

6 QUESTION: May I ask a question right there?
7 It kind of relates to the burden problem.

8 Just reflecting on this case -- of course,
9 this man, I understand, is out of jail now, but wouldn't 10 it be true that in most cases of this kind, that the 11 allegations would be made by way of a habeas corpus 12 petition asking -- seeking release while the man's -- 13 you're going to have the burden. If the man wants to 14 make these charges, you're going to have to try him out 15 once.

16 MR. FROHNMAYER: That's true, and there is a 17 state proceeding, a post-conviction proceeding in 18 Oregon, which would allow --

19 QUESTION: And if you've gone through all that 20 machinery and, say, the state prevailed and said there 21 was no merit to these charges, wouldn't you be able to 22 get rid of it on a summary judgment, in most cases?

23 MR. FROHNMAYER: It may well be, if that were 24 an exhaustion requirement or a preclusion requirement 25 that either the state or the --

1                   QUESTION: But I just think, realistically, 2 most of these allegations would produce that kind of 3 litigation, wouldn't it?

4                   MR. FROHNMAYER: Yes, although the issues that 5 one brings up in habeas corpus proceeding would be 6 directed to the underlying constitutional violation --

7                   QUESTION: Yeah. But, clearly, if these facts 8 are true, the conviction's no good.

9                   MR. FROHNMAYER: That's correct. That's 10 correct. But at least --

11                  QUESTION: I just have trouble -- I'm just 12 trying to wrestle with the notion of whether there 13 really is a mountain of litigation of this kind out 14 there, or just a few isolated cases.

15                  MR. FROHNMAYER: Well, we believe that there 16 is likely to be an increasing caseload, simply because 17 it was not until recent years that there was even 18 thought to be any question about the public defender's 19 immunity or the immunity of defense counsel.

20                  So we believe that simply looking to a 21 preclusive or some other method of achieving collateral 22 estoppel through a state or federal habeas remedy, while 23 one way of dealing with this problem, is not as 24 symmetrical as we think is desirable to deal with the 25 protection of the judicial process itself, for the

1 independent reasons that we have just suggested, Justice
2 Stevens.

3 QUESTION: To what extent do you think the 4 availability of attorneys' fees to a successful
5 plaintiff under 1983 is an incentive to use that as a 6 cause of action?

7 MR. FROHNMAYER: To use Section 198 -- I think 8 that still hangs in the balance, Justice O'Connor. It's 9 not clear even now how much success a plaintiff has to 10 enjoy in a Section 1988 -- 83 action before 11 attorneys' fees are awarded, even in light of last 12 court's decisions.

13 It certainly is some incentive, but bear in 14 mind that counsel can be appointed in habeas corpus 15 proceedings, and counsel can be appointed in state 16 post-conviction proceedings, whereby these issues can be 17 dealt with in a logical manner without involving, ab 18 initio, the state -- the federal court jurisdiction
19 under Section 1983.

20 We submit also that when learned counsel for 21 the respondent says that the public defender has no 22 obligation to urge the frivolous, that the obvious 23 retort is, yes, but he doesn't have any obligation not 24 to be sued either.

25 And here, the public defenders are asked for

1 $10 million and the State of Oregon must provide their 2 defense, probably beyond a summary judgment proceeding, 3 and the cost can be catastrophic; catastrophic, not 4 merely for the system because it diverts from a fixed 5 class of indigent defendants whose defense will no 6 longer be adequately prepared because of the loss of 7 that person from an office, but it will cause advocates
8 to make a paper trail, a stream of consciousness paper
9 trail about every trial tactical decision; it will force 10 them to explain why every piece of the brief ended up on 11 the cutting room floor instead of before the court.

12 That's not the kind of advocacy which this 13 Court's decisions have encouraged, and that's not what 14 is in the interest of the public.

15 Thank you.

16 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.
17 The case is submitted.

18 We'll hear arguments next in Palmore against 19 Sidoti.

20 (Whereupon, at 11:10 p.m., the case in the 21 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
