2 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments
3 next in Flanagan v. United States.

4 Mr. Rubenstone, you may proceed whenever you 5 are ready.

6 ORAL ARGUMENT OF EDWARD H. RUBENSTONE, ESQ.,

7 ON BEHALF OF PETITIONERS

8 MR. RUBENSTONE: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
9 please the Court:

10 Some 40 years ago in Adams v. United States
11 this Court cautioned that the procedural safeguards 12 provided to an accused by the Constitution must not be 13 turned into fetters and recognized that to deny a 14 criminal defendant in the exercise of his free choice
15 the right to dispense with the constitutional safeguards 16 which have been provided for his protection is to 17 imprison a man in his privileges and call it the 18 Constitution.

19 If the decisions below disqualifying
20 Petitioners' counsel of choice from presenting their 21 common defense at trial are permitted to stand, the 22 caution so perceptively expressed by Justice Frankfurter 23 will become a reality. This Court has repeatedly 24 confirmed both the propriety and the efficacy of 25 multiple representation in criminal matters.

1 This Court has never questioned the right of 2 persons accused of crimes jointly to present their 3 common defense through counsel of their choice, and this 4 Court has expressly recognized that a defendant has the 5 right to determine the manner in which his case shall be 6 conducted. If the decisions below are permitted to 7 stand these precepts will not survive in any meaningful 8 form.

9 This case presents in the clearest possible
10 terms the question of whether four police officers 11 jointly charged will be permitted to determine that they 12 wish to have their defense presented by one lawyer in 13 whom they have great trust and great confidence, that 14 they have the right to determine that the one lawyer
15 shall present a common defense, and that their decision 16 is based upon the fact that their positions are 17 completely and totally consistent and that each is 18 willing to waive their rights to separate counsel.

19 In this case four police officers learned in 20 the spring of 1981 from newspaper articles that they 21 were under investigation. They were under investigation 22 by various federal, local and police authorities.

23 They were confronted with this tangle of legal 24 complexities. Civil and criminal potential was facing 25 them, and they made the decision at that time to come to

1 the firm of Sprague and Rubenstone, in particular to 2 come to the firm because of the firm's senior partner, 3 Richard Sprague, who is a highly skilled and experienced 4 defense lawyer.

5 They came to the firm and they said to the 6 firm "We are coming to you as a group. We have common 7 interests and we want you to protect them."

8 After they came each of the defendants was 9 interviewed individually, and it was determined as a 10 result of these individual interviews that the facts 11 which they related were not inculpatory to them, were 12 not inculpatory to any other defendant and indeed were 13 consistent among themselves.

14 QUESTION: How do we know all this?

15 MR. RUBENSTONE: These facts, Your Honor, did 16 not come out during the course of the District Court 17 proceedings. They are set forth in our appeal brief.
18 They are set forth in the brief to this Court.

19 QUESTION: But they have never been found by 20 anybody.

21 MR. RUBENSTONE: They have never been found, 22 but I do not believe they are disputed by anyone.

23 QUESTION: Well, they are disputed by the 24 indictment surely.

25 MR. RUBENSTONE: Excuse me, Your Honor?

1 QUESTION: They are disputed by the 2 indictment. You say there are no inculpatory facts.
3 Your clients have been indicted.

4 MR. RUBENSTONE: But there are no inculpatory
5 facts which the clients represent. The clients profess 6 innocence, Your Honor.

7 QUESTION: I understand, but I do not think -- 8 You must assume the possibility that there is some 9 evidence of guilt that will surface sooner or later.

10 MR. RUBENSTONE: No, I must assume the 11 possibility with all due respect that there may be 12 evidence which the government believes demonstrates 13 wrongdoing, but I need not assume that there will be 14 evidence of guilt nor need I assume in making my 15 determination as to whether or not I can represent all 16 four that anything they tell me is incorrect unless I 17 have something to present me with a doubt.

18 In this entire proceeding I think it is 19 important to note since the time of the Rule 44 20 disqualification hearing right up to today there has 21 been not one shred of evidence, not one piece of 22 information presented by the government which gives any 23 claim to any assertion that they might make that there 24 is anything inconsistent as between the stories which 25 the defendants tell.

1 QUESTION: At some time are you going to 2 discuss the question of whether this order was 3 appealable?

4 MR. RUBENSTONE: I would be happy to discuss 5 that right now.

6 QUESTION: At your own time.

7 MR. RUBENSTONE: Let me turn to it very 8 quickly.

9 The decision to disqualify counsel is a final 10 and irrevocable decision. It has an immediate and an 11 intense impact upon the trial.

12 It has an immediate and intense impact upon 13 the defendants and every action which they take during 14 the entire course of the trial, and it destroys 15 ultimately and utterly the defendants' right to counsel 16 at the most critical stage of his life.

17 As a result to use the language of Cohen, the 18 decision to disqualify counsel is too important and too 19 independent to defer review. Now if we turn to the 20 specific test which was laid out in Cohen and in Cooper 21 I think it is clear that of the three-prong test for 22 appealability as a collateral order the disqualification 23 of counsel decision meets the first two.

24 It is a decision which conclusively determines 25 the question, and it is a decision which is totally

1 separate and apart from any question involving the guilt
2 or innocence of the defendant. The only area which I 3 think does raise some discussion is the question of 4 whether or not the decision to disqualify counsel is 5 effectively reviewable.

6 Seven circuits have passed on this issue both 7 in the criminal and in the civil context, and each of 8 them has rejected the argument that such a decision is 9 effectively reviewable. Basically every court including 10 the Ninth Circuit which has said that this is not an 11 order which is appealable in an interlocutory fashion
12 has said any attempt to prove prejudice by a defendant 13 who has his counsel denied to him at the inception of 14 the case would be an insurmountable burden and we cannot 15 imagine any way that he could go about showing that, 16 meeting that burden.

17 QUESTION: Well, I suppose if some per se 18 reversal rule were adopted you would not have 19 difficulty.

20 MR. RUBENSTONE: That is what the Ninth 21 Circuit said in Greger, Justice O'Connor, and I do have 22 a difficulty with per se reversal because there is too 23 much which can occur during the course of a trial which 24 is not reversable. There is too much that can occur 25 during the course of a trial which is irremediable and

1 which is denied to a defendant if he is forced to go to 2 trial with counsel other than his choice.

3 For example, at a trial, the first trial, a
4 lot of people are going to testify. Now substitute
5 counsel may be competent, but he may not be the counsel 6 that the defendant selects, and his ability to direct or 7 cross examine that witness may not be the same level as 8 the ability of counsel of choice.

9 Likewise the strategy or the tactics which he 10 might adopt in cross examining or direct examining that 11 witness may have been different and may have been 12 injurious to the interests of that defendant. Now if 13 that witness is subsequently unavailable his testimony 14 is admissible in the event of a retrial, and I submit 15 that that is prejudice.

16 The very decision as to whether or not the 17 defendant will testify may be made one way by counsel of 18 choice, may be made the exact opposite way by substitute
19 counsel. If substitute counsel decides to put that man 20 on the stand and have him testify then his testimony is 21 going to be forever etched in stone, and that will not 22 be reversible.

23 QUESTION: Mr. Rubenstone, the Cobbledick case 24 says that the policy especially in criminal cases is 25 against piecemeal appeals, and there is no doubt that an

1 appeal like this first in the court of appeals and 2 conceivably here if certiorari is granted does delay the 3 start of the criminal trial.

4 MR. RUBENSTONE: Yes, especially if, as has 5 occurred in this case, the District Court entered a 6 stay. I do not think that there is necessarily an 7 automatic stay as a result of an appeal under 1291.

8 Somebody has got to stay the proceedings, and 9 I think that at that point there is a certain degree of 10 discretion in both the district court and the court of 11 appeals as to whether or not this is a matter which does 12 require review or whether this is a matter which is 13 frivolous. We do it in the double jeopardy situation 14 all the time.

15 QUESTION: Mr. Rubenstone, are there any cases
16 to your knowledge in which a Faretta situation if a 17 defendant is denied the opportunity to represent himself 18 for whatever reason that that has been held to be 19 immediately appealable on an interlocutory basis?

20 MR. RUBENSTONE: I am not aware of any, Your 21 Honor, but I would imagine that if a state --

22 QUESTION: Would that be a similar situation?

23 MR. RUBENSTONE: I would think so. I mean if 24 the state or federal government would refuse to provide 25 counsel to an indigent in connection with his criminal

1 defense I would imagine --

2 QUESTION: No, well let's say he wanted to 3 represent himself and for whatever reason the court
4 determined, for instance, he was not capable of doing it 5 and appointed counsel and the defendant insisted on an 6 interlocutory appeal on that question.

7 MR. RUBENSTONE: Well, what I am saying is 8 really just the flip side of the Gideon situation where 9 the government does not comply with Gideon. This Court 10 has found that there is a constitutional right and that 11 that right cannot be impinged upon absent extreme 12 circumstances. So I think there would be absolutely a 13 right to take the appeal, but I am aware of no cases 14 that have raised that issue.

15 QUESTION: But you have found no case?

16 MR. RUBENSTONE: No.

17 QUESTION: But your suggestion in response to 18 Justice O'Connor that if there is a constitutional right 19 involved there must be a right to an interlocutory 20 appeal certainly is not supported by our cases.

21 MR. RUBENSTONE: No. I do not mean to suggest 22 that at all. I believe, and maybe I made an improper
23 assumption, but I believe that the denial of the right
24 to represent one's self following the Fareta decision 25 would have the same effect and would meet the same

1 criteria as are set down in Cohen and as this Court has 2 accepted for an interlocutory appeal.

3 So I think it would be appealable under 1291.
4 I do not mean to suggest that just because there is a 5 constitutional right that there is automatically a right 6 to appeal.

7 QUESTION: You do not think one of the 8 criteria for immediate appeal is that the issue would 9 not otherwise be reviewable?

10 MR. RUBENSTONE: I am sorry, Your Honor, I do 11 believe.

12 QUESTION: Well, certainly if the criminal 13 trial had gone on and there had been no appeal you could 14 still have raised the issue and had the issue reviewed 15 at the end of the -- at least the defendant could have.

16 MR. RUBENSTONE: The defendant --

17 QUESTION: The defendant could have if he had 18 been convicted in an appeal. He could have raised this 19 issue that he was denied counsel of his choice.

20 MR. RUBENSTONE: Of course, he can. But how 21 can he -- He can raise the issue --

22 QUESTION: Well, if he was right there would 23 be a new trial.

24 MR. RUBENSTONE: Well, but there has been no
25 decision that I am aware of other than the Ninth Circuit

1 decision that says that if you prove that the denial of 2 counsel of choice was erroneous you are automatically 3 entitled to a new trial. The other courts which have 4 addressed this question have all said that you have got 5 to show, we believe, in order to get a new trial you 6 have got to show some prejudice and because that showing 7 --

8 QUESTION: My question really was do you think 9 that it is one of the criteria for immediate appeal that 10 the issue that you want to appeal is not otherwise 11 reviewable?

12 MR. RUBENSTONE: It is hard to answer that 13 question directly so let me try it this way.

14 QUESTION: Well, you went quite a ways toward 15 answering just a minute ago. You said you really could 16 not get the relief you wanted.

17 MR. RUBENSTONE: The Cohen court does not say 18 otherwise reviewable. It says effectively reviewable.
19 That to me means that the defendant essentially has to 20 be in the position to be put back in the same place he 21 was if he had had the right to take that appeal and get 22 the relief immediately.

23 QUESTION: You think if there is any real 24 doubt about your ability to get a new trial even if you 25 show that your right had been denied that it is not

1 effectively reviewable?

2 MR. RUBENSTONE: Absolutely. Indeed the 3 government's position in this issue is that you do not 4 really even look at the question of whether there has 5 been an erroneous disqualification or not. That 6 question is subsumed to a much more significant question 7 according to the government of whether or not you have 8 got effective assistance. If you have got effective 9 assistance --

10 QUESTION: Is your position grounded in the 11 Constitution? I take it it is.

12 MR. RUBENSTONE: Which position, Your Honor?

13 QUESTION: The position that you should have 14 been entitled -- that your client should have been 15 entitled to joint representation?

16 MR. RUBENSTONE: Absolutely.

17 QUESTION: Is it in the Sixth Amendment?

18 MR. RUBENSTONE: I find it in the Sixth 19 Amendment, Your Honor.

20 QUESTION: Sixth. On the ground that you have 21 the right to choose the counsel of your choice?

22 MR. RUBENSTONE: I believe that the Sixth
23 Amendment --

24 QUESTION: Or just to have counsel?

25 MR. RUBENSTONE: No, I believe that the Sixth

1 Amendment -- Inherent in the Sixth Amendment if not 2 implicit and inherent in our society is the right of an 3 individual defendant to select who he wishes to 4 represent him in a criminal trial.

5 QUESTION: What did Faretta decide? What 6 constitutional issue did Faretta decide?

7 MR. RUBENSTONE: Faretta decided that the 8 individual had the right to represent himself.

9 QUESTION: Based on what provision?

10 MR. RUBENSTONE: Based upon the Sixth
11 Amendment assistance of counsel clause.

12 QUESTION: We have not given indigent
13 defendants a right to select their own lawyer have we?

14 MR. RUBENSTONE: I do not think you have to 15 give it to them, Your Honor. I think they have it.

16 QUESTION: We have not recognized the right of 17 an indigent defendant to select a nonpublic defender, 18 for example, or even in the private sector a lawyer of 19 the defendant's choice that the public will pay for. We 20 have not done that. We have provided counsel, but not 21 counsel of choice. Is that not so?

22 MR. RUBENSTONE: That is correct, but I think 23 there are different considerations, the consideration 24 being that here you are imposing upon the state and in 25 imposing upon the state your rights are going to be

1 limited. I am not suggesting that the Sixth Amendment
2 right to counsel of choice is an unlimited right, but I 3 do believe --

4 QUESTION: Well, you were speaking of it as 5 though it was a right to choose.

6 MR. RUBENSTONE: It is a right to choose. It
7 is a right to choose who you want whether you are a 8 millionaire or an indigent.

9 The fact is that it takes two to tango. The 10 fact is that if an indigent goes up to Edward Bennett 11 Williams who charges I have no idea for his services, 12 but if he can convince Edward Bennett Williams that his 13 case is interesting enough and important enough Mr.
14 Williams may take the case.

15 So I think the focus in that analysis is not 16 upon the individual's right to choose. The indigent has 17 the right to choose just as you or I do, but the 18 question is will his choice be accepted by the lawyer 19 who is going to provide him his representation.

20 QUESTION: You have not mentioned the First 21 Amendment. How about the freedom of association?

22 MR. RUBENSTONE: Well, I would be willing to 23 take any help I can get, and if freedom of association 24 fits into this, Your Honor -- I do not really see the 25 application in as clear a sense as I do the Sixth

1 Amendment.

2 I believe that courts have the right to impose 3 certain limited limitations upon the right to counsel of 4 choice, and if I, for example, decide to contract for 5 representation with a lawyer from another state or a 6 lawyer who is disbarred I do not believe that I have the 7 right to insist upon that he be permitted to represent 8 me. But within certain specified general limitations I 9 do believe that I have a Sixth Amendment right to select 10 the lawyer of my choice to present my defense.

11 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Rubenstone, getting back 12 to the interlocutory appeal question have we not normally 13 treated violations of a Sixth Amendment right or even a 14 due process right as being in criminal cases not 15 reviewable by way of interlocutory appeal?

16 MR. RUBENSTONE: Yes, but I do not believe 17 that any of those decisions, for example, the denial of 18 the jury trial or the denial of proper notice has the 19 same kind of irreversible impact that denial of counsel 20 has. Denial of counsel impacts upon the entire 21 process.

22 The denial of a jury trial does not do that.
23 It only results in a finding, for example, and if the 24 denial was improper the remedy is simple, a new trial.
25 But I think that there is a world of difference between

1 the two both as to their nature and as to their effect.

2 Moving past the facts except to emphasize that 3 the defendants all expressed both before and after the 4 indictment that it was their intention to present a 5 common defense through one lawyer, and the attorney 6 likewise made a decision in this case. He decided, our 7 firm decided that it was proper for us to represent 8 those defendants.

9 QUESTION: Would this foreclose a later claim 10 that he should not have been permitted to do what you 11 suggest by him if he wound up with a conviction?

12 MR. RUBENSTONE: Would it foreclose a 13 collateral attack on the conviction? I believe that the 14 waiver proceeding itself forecloses a subsequent attack 15 on the conviction to the extent that any matters were 16 brought to the attention of the defendants during that 17 proceeding.

18 QUESTION: Even if he came in and said that 19 his counsel did not make a complete disclosure and he 20 did not understand what he was doing and the trial judge 21 should have conducted a hearing to determine whether 22 that was a sound decision?

23 MR. RUBENSTONE: My answer, Your Honor, was 24 with regard to the fact that there was a hearing. I 25 believe that the hearing serves that effect, that the

1 hearing itself in front of the court on the record
2 effectively bars the defendant from raising at a 3 subsequent time ineffective assistance of counsel based 4 on a conflict of interest.

5 QUESTION: Without the hearing would your 6 position be the same?

7 MR. RUBENSTONE: No. No, it would not.

8 QUESTION: You mean the judge must conduct a 9 hearing before he can in effect intervene between the 10 defendant or defendants and his or their choice of 11 counsel?

12 MR. RUBENSTONE: In the federal system as I 13 read Rule 44 the judge must conduct a hearing in any 14 case of multiple representation. I do not believe it is 15 discretionary any longer.

16 QUESTION: May I ask, Mr. Rubenstone -- I take 17 it you are ready to go to the merits now?

18 MR. RUBENSTONE: Yes.

19 QUESTION: Supposing if while the trial is in 20 progress some evidence comes out that persuades you that 21 one of your clients was lying to you -- Sometimes we are 22 all disillusioned by our clients. It happened to me I
23 know -- and you come to the conviction that one of them 24 has much greater possible culpability than the remainder 25 and at the same time the government offers some kind of 1 a deal with respect to one not involved in the 2 culpability.

3 How do you handle that situation if it should 4 arise? You do not expect it, but should it.

5 MR. RUBENSTONE: I believe, Your Honor, that 6 if an actual conflict of interest arises at any point in 7 the proceeding I have an absolute obligation to withdraw 8 from representing that client. I believe that if the 9 government comes and makes an offer which the client
10 accepts that I can likewise no longer --

11 QUESTION: Let's leave out the first half of 12 my suggestion. Supposing the government merely offers a 13 separate arrangement with one of your clients on 14 condition that the others -- just that one. Has a 15 conflict developed?

16 MR. RUBENSTONE: I believe that I misspoke 17 myself just a moment ago, and I did not mean to go as 18 far as I did. Once I am advised -- Again, during the 19 trial, before the trial. It does not make any 20 difference in my analysis -- once I am approached by the 21 government and advised that they wish to speak to one of 22 my clients I believe I have an obligation to advise the 23 client of that fact, and I believe I have a duty to 24 withdraw from any discussions relating to that client 25 and that client's discussions with the government. If

1 the discussions are successful then --

2 QUESTION: On whom would the client rely for 3 advice?

4 MR. RUBENSTONE: I would have to advise the 5 client to get separate counsel to represent him, and I 6 would make myself available to him to relate to him any 7 nonprivileged information I might have. But as to the 8 discussions themselves I do believe that my involvement 9 would put me in a conflict situation.

10 Now if the discussions fail, if there was no 11 agreement reached between the government and the 12 defendant I would be available for the defendant to come 13 back in if he wishes to rejoin the common defense.

14 QUESTION: How about the first half of my 15 question? Supposing you just get information that 16 develops during the trial that persuades you that one 17 client has much greater exposure than the others?

18 MR. RUBENSTONE: Well, Your Honor, I do not 19 mean to quibble, but I am not sure what you mean by 20 greater exposure.

21 QUESTION: Well, there is a pretty good chance 22 he will be found guilty and there is a pretty good 23 chance the others would be not guilty and you can assure 24 it by taking a plea of some kind or getting the charges 25 dismissed against one if he would fill out the facts

1 with respect to --

2 MR. RUBENSTONE: I believe I would be under an 3 obligation to advise him of my analysis and to advise 4 him that he has to get separate counsel to have those 5 discussions with the government. I do not believe I 6 could represent him in that context.

7 QUESTION: So it is entirely possible that in 8 this case the facts may develop later on in which you 9 might have to withdraw?

10 MR. RUBENSTONE: There is no question. I 11 would never suggest for a moment that the potential for 12 problems -- I do not even want to use the word
13 "conflicts" because I think they used the word 14 incorrectly below -- the potential for problems are 15 always present, but the potential, the speculation --

16 QUESTION: But your answer -- The solution is 17 to meet them when they arise?

18 MR. RUBENSTONE: Absolutely.

19 If the lower court's decisions in this case
20 are upheld based as they are upon what the lower court
21 called potential conflicts -- and I will use that word 22 for the purpose of this moment -- if that decision is 23 permitted to stand then on the facts of this case there 24 can never be multiple representation because as this 25 Court has recognized in every case of multiple

1 representation inherent in it is a potential for a
2 conflict.

3 All that the lower court did was to identify 4 the potential, to ignore the waiver, to ignore the 5 defendants' professions of innocence, to ignore the 6 defendants' determination to present a common defense 7 and to focus on the potential for the conflict.

8 QUESTION: Mr. Rubenstone, why is it do you
9 suppose that the government would take such an active 10 role in trying to seek disqualification? Is it a factor 11 in part of a feeling that the defendants are less likely 12 to break up and negotiate separate pleas if they are 13 represented by one attorney?

14 Why is the government pressing?

15 MR. RUBENSTONE: It is clear to me from my 16 experience that where defendants are jointly represented 17 there is a lesser likelihood that any of them will break 18 away and plead.

19 QUESTION: And turn state's evidence?

20 MR. RUBENSTONE: Absolutely. But I think that 21 there is even a more significant aspect to the 22 government's position. If you are a prosecutor the best 23 thing to happen -- If you are a plaintiff in a civil 24 case the situation that you want to create is 25 fingerprinting.

1 If you can create fingerprinting, if you can 2 create inconsistencies, if you can create disparities
3 then you can sit back. Your job is more than halfway 4 done.

5 That is what the common defense prevents. The 6 defendants' decision to present a common defense 7 especially through one lawyer where there is not even 8 going to be inadvertent consistencies that decision 9 severely impacts the probability of the government 10 ultimately succeeding in getting a conviction.

11 I am not suggesting they will not, but I am 12 suggesting that it makes their job harder. So I do 13 think the government has an interest which may not be 14 completely objective in their approach in this case.

15 QUESTION: Let me ask you --

16 QUESTION: Mr. Rubenstone, you say that the 17 court below went off on what you call potential problems
18 and what they may have called potential conflicts.
19 Supposing that the facts here had been far more dramatic 20 than are revealed by this record where the government 21 had indicted two people and one was clearly liable as 22 perhaps an aider and abetter and another as a principle 23 but the government's witnesses could not identify which 24 was which so there was just almost a built-in conflict 25 from the beginning as to who was going to get the bigger

1 rap.

2 Would you say that the district court had no
3 authority to disqualify joint representation in that 4 situation where you would have no problems but just 5 almost a demonstrated conflict?

6 MR. RUBENSTONE: I have no problem in seeing a 7 district court enter a disqualification order where 8 there is a demonstrated conflict.

9 QUESTION: So what we are talking about here 10 is really what this record showed as respecting whether 11 there was a demonstrated conflict or whether the 12 standard is potential conflict?

13 MR. RUBENSTONE: Right. Let me just -- To be 14 very clear a lot of the actual conflict cases involving 15 disqualification of counsel have arisen involving third 16 parties and a defendant. There I do not believe that it 17 is essential that the district court disqualify.

18 In those instances I think Rule 44 tells the 19 district court to take appropriate measures, and a lot 20 of the circuits have gone around and done that. For 21 example, where there is problems of the attorney-client 22 privilege of a prior client, the Second Circuit, the 23 Eight Circuit has said "Well, let's take a look at 24 this. Let's see what this involves. Let's see if it 25 really does impair the ability of the defendant's lawyer

1 to cross examine or maybe let's see if the prior client
2 will waive." They have gone to extremes to avoid the 3 extreme action that was taken by the court in this 4 case.

5 That is not directly analogous here obviously 6 because it involves third parties, but I think it does 7 indicate that appropriate measures under Rule 44 is not 8 some kind of reflexive disqualification if you have a 9 problem.

10 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Your time has expired
11 now, counsel.

12 MR. RUBENSTONE: Thank you, Your Honor.

13 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Frey.

14 ORAL ARGUMENT OF ANDREW L. FREY, ESQ.,

15 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENT

16 MR. FREY: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
17 please the Court:

18 I would like first by way of background to ask 19 that the Court in thinking about disqualification issues
20 keep in mind that joint representation of codefendants 21 is not the only context in which this issue can arise.
22 There are other cases in which a defense lawyer can be 23 disqualified including a successive representation
24 situation where the lawyer formally represented a person 25 who is now a prosecution witness, situations where the

1 lawyer formally was a prosecutor who had some arguable 2 connection with the investigation that led to the 3 indictment of his now client, situations where the third 4 party is paying the fees and exercising some degree of 5 control over the representation of the defendant, and 6 even we've seen cases where there is the lawyer's 7 potential involvement in the underlying offense or his 8 potential role as a witness which may call for his 9 disqualification.

10 Now I would like to say just a few words now 11 about the jurisdictional issue and come back to it later 12 if I have time. I think the first thing I would like to 13 say is that if I was told that we could win only one of 14 the two issues in this case we would rather win the 15 jurisdictional issue and lose the merits issue.

16 Now the reason for this position is the 17 potentially devastating effects of delay in criminal 18 prosecutions as this Court has repeatedly recognized in 19 Cobbledick, DiBella, Hollywood Motor Cars and other 20 cases in which it has turned down interlocutory defense 21 appeals. This case illustrates the potential damage.

22 The alleged victims in this case are street 23 people who are hard to locate -- We hope we will still 24 be able to locate them -- who are hard to -- whose will 25 to testify against the police when they have to go back

1 on the street again is sometimes hard to nerve them up.
2 There are problems that are caused by the delay in this 3 and in other cases, and those problems are an important 4 part of the reason why in criminal cases it is only on 5 the strongest most compelling kind of showing that the 6 court should permit a pretrial appeal.

7 There is also I might add --

8 QUESTION: Mr. Frey, may I ask you this? If 9 we were to agree with your friend and agree with his 10 proposition would it mean that in a Faretta case after 11 the judge had conducted a hearing on the qualifications 12 of the defendant to act as his own counsel and then 13 decided that he was not qualified and appointed standby, 14 would that be appealable?

15 MR. FREY: Well, Justice O'Connor asked that 16 of my colleague, and I think the answer is clearly that 17 would not be appealable. The reason that would not be 18 appealable is I think it is quite clear that there would 19 have to be an automatic reversal for a Faretta violation.

20 That is the kind of violation that does not 21 call for an analysis of specific prejudice in the trial 22 of the case. Therefore, it would be treated as 23 effectively reviewable on appeal and, therefore, it 24 would not meet one of the requirements of interlocutory
25 appeal. So I would say that that, or we have situations

1 where a defendant seeks appointment of counsel claiming 2 that he is indigent and is denied by the district 3 court. He may be forced to proceed the trial without an 4 attorney if he is unwilling to pay himself.

5 I assume that that would be reviewed after 6 final judgment. If that determination were erroneous 7 the defendant would be entitled to a reversal of his 8 conviction and a new trial.

9 QUESTION: Do you think if there had been a 10 trial here and the trial judge denied -- if he did just 11 the reverse and held the trial and there was a 12 conviction and appeal and one of the issues was he 13 should have been entitled to joint representation and 14 the Court of Appeals decided exactly -- The Court of 15 Appeals said there should have been --

16 MR. FREY: Should not have been 17 disqualification.

18 QUESTION: Yes. Should not have been, 19 exactly.

20 MR. FREY: Well, I --

21 QUESTION: Would there have been automatically 22 a new trial?

23 MR. FREY: Our argument in this Court is that 24 there would not automatically be a new trial. This is 25 not the same as saying as my colleague suggests that the

1 appellant would have to show ineffective assistance of 2 counsel as though the disqualification --

3 QUESTION: Well, does that not mean then that 4 the issue really is not effectively appealable after --

5 MR. FREY: That is true of any pretrial ruling
6 that turns out not to have been prejudicial. It may not 7 get review. That alone cannot be enough to justify an 8 interlocutory appeal.

9 QUESTION: Well, it may not be effectively 10 reivable on appeal, Mr. Frey. I mean that is the 11 point that Judge Friendly made in his opinion that this 12 particular kind of order simply is not effectively
13 reviewable.

14 I notice the Second Circuit has adopted a 15 split rule that orders denying disqualification of 16 counsel are not immediately appealable but orders 17 granting them are. What do you think about that?

18 MR. FREY: I would I think favor the opposite, 19 the result.

20 (Laughter)

21 MR. FREY: I think the answer to this problem
22 is not to allow interlocutory appeal. You may conclude 23 and this is all tied into an assessment of how important 24 this right is which is one of the relevant factors and 25 that is why I want to get to the merits shortly.

1 QUESTION: Is the appealability not a factor
2 in part of how you decide the merits? If it is a per se
3 rule then maybe it should not be immediately reviewable
4 on appeal. If it is some other rule on the merits then 5 maybe --

6 MR. FREY: That would be true although if it 7 were a per se bar against disqualification, for 8 instance, there would be no need for an interlocutory 9 appeal. It would hardly ever come up.

10 I think the point I was going to make is that 11 the conclusion if you find that the effect of the error
12 is not reviewable because you cannot assess it on appeal 13 is that you give a reversal and a new trial. That is 14 what is done in a case like Guitierrez, for instance, 15 with the overnight continuance during which the 16 defendant was barred from consulting with his counsel.

17 Once you find that there has been a 18 substantial impairment, erroneous impairment of a right 19 and it is not possible to assess its impact on a trial 20 then you may order a reversal. Now we say that we think 21 that that is not necessary, but I must say that I would 22 prefer the conclusion that there be an automatic 23 reversal if the disqualification order is erroneous to 24 the conclusion that the defendant should be permitted to 25 take a pretrial appeal.

1 I wanted to mention in that connection that I 2 do not suggest that that is all true in this case, but 3 this business is subject to manipulation by defendants 4 who want to buy continuances and who can retain 5 attorneys who have conflicts of interest. They will get 6 disqualified and then the defendant will have six months 7 or a year extra before he goes to trial.

8 QUESTION: What is the government's motive 9 since we are talking about motives here apparently?
10 What is the government's motive in trying to disqualify 11 in a case such as this?

12 MR. FREY: That is an obvious question in this 13 situation. Our first motive in this situation, and I 14 come back to the fact that there are different kinds of 15 cases.

16 The joint representation case looks on the 17 surface at least as though the concern is with the 18 defendant's interests, and it may look somewhat 19 paternalistic, but we may want to disqualify defense
20 counsel because is going to use privileged information 21 to cross examine a prosecution witness, because he is 22 breaching his own duty to us as a former government
23 attorney. But even in the case of joint representation 24 our first and most obvious interest, the government qua 25 prosecutor qua adversary in the case, is that we must

1 have a waiver and as good a waiver as we can get in 2 order to insulate any conviction that we have from 3 collateral attack.

4 Secondly, in this case what happened
5 essentially was we brought the matter before the 6 District Court by the motion. The hearing was held, and 7 the District Court took the ball and ran.

8 I am here today I think not just representing 9 the government as adversary to these defendants in the 10 prosecution but also representing the interests of the 11 court which saw that in its view the public interest was 12 not satisfied by allowing lawyers to appear before and 13 in this joint representation situation where it found 14 there was unethical conduct or significant potential for 15 unethical conduct.

16 QUESTION: Well, it does make it easier in a 17 case of codefendants to get a plea agreement out of one 18 of them, does it not, if they are not represented by 19 just one lawyer?

20 MR. FREY: It may indeed be easier in some 21 circumstances. On the other hand, it is harder to try a 22 case against four lawyers than against one in terms of 23 the length of time it takes.

24 QUESTION: But it is a lot easier if you have 25 one of them who has confessed and testifying against the 1 other.

2 MR. FREY: Yes, but it is rather odd. It is 3 rather odd to say that it should be all right for the 4 defendants to all be represented by one lawyer in order
5 to keep the government assuming the government is acting 6 in good faith in these circumstances from offering a 7 favorable arrangement for one of the defendants. That 8 is part of the problem that is build into the joint 9 representation is that it is impossible for the lawyer 10 to plea bargain.

11 I might say that plea bargaining is not always 12 initiated only by the government. It can be initiated 13 by the defendant, and if you can imagine how somebody 14 representing four defendants in a situation like this 15 could initiate plea bargaining for one of them your 16 imagine surpasses mine.

17 QUESTION: But, of course, if there has been a 18 valid waiver what public interest is served by the 19 failure to initiate a plea bargain on behalf of one 20 defeniant when his counsel does not recommend it?

21 MR. FREY: Well, the question is whether there 22 is an interest that the courts may serve in not having 23 unethical practice occuring in their courtroom, and the 24 question is also whether the court has the power to 25 protect the defendant who is not necessarily getting

1 advice that is looking only to his interests. He is 2 certainly not getting advice from somebody who is solely 3 committed to his interests.

4 QUESTION: Yes, but I think to defend the 5 order that was entered by the District Court here you
6 would have to say that the District Court at any time it 7 wants to is going to be able to disqualify an effort at 8 joint representation because it makes plea bargaining 9 less likely. I think that --

10 MR. FREY: That was certainly not the basis of 11 the disqualification order in this case and nobody has 12 suggested that that is -- That is simply pointed to by 13 the authorities who have written on this subject as one 14 of the problems that is associated with joint 15 representation, but this case is not -- The problem that 16 the District Court saw had nothing to do with plea 17 bargaining. The problem had to do with the fact that 18 these defendants had potentially inconsistent 19 defenses.

20 QUESTION: Mr. Frey, on the other hand the 21 district judge here disqualified these lawyers from 22 representing any of the four. Do you have any comment
23 about that? They were not allowed even to represent Mr.
24 Flanagan.

25 MR. FREY: Well, assuming Flanagan was -- I

1 mean the surmise in your question was that Flanagan was 2 the person whose interests they were principally 3 protecting in this situation because he was the one who 4 was in the most exposed position.

5 QUESTION: Well, he was the one from whom the 6 others --

7 MR. FREY: Sought to divorce themselves
8 although there are also problems, for instance, with 9 Landis because some of these charges involve dog attacks 10 on the alleged victims and Landis was the officer who 11 controlled the dog. He was the one who had the 12 involvement so that he also stood out from the other 13 defendants.

14 My view on thinking about the question of the 15 total disqualification is that it would not -- It is 16 valid until such point as each defendant has an 17 opportunity to consult with a lawyer committed to him, 18 with his own lawyer.

19 At that point they may choose to waive their 20 attorney-client privilege having to validly waive it, 21 and at that point I think Sprague and Rubenstone could 22 stay in the case for one of the defendants. In any 23 event I do not view that as the principle problem in 24 this case, and we never sought disqualification for all 25 until the District Court suggested it and asked that

1 that matter be briefed. We wanted to prohibit multiple 2 representation, that is, representation of all 3 defendants by one lawyer.

4 Let me come back to this question. I would 5 like to start by what the model rules of professional 6 conduct just adopted by the ABA the comment on multiple 7 representation. It says "The potential for conflict of 8 interest in representing multiple defendants in a 9 criminal case is so grave that ordinarily a lawyer 10 should decline to represent more than one codefendant", 11 and the Code of Professional Responsibility which is 12 what is applicable here says "The lawyer should resolve 13 all doubts against the propriety of the representation.
14 A lawyer should never represent in litigation multiple 15 clients with differing interests."

16 QUESTION: Mr. Frey, let me interrupt you 17 right there if I may. Do you think that interest which 18 surely is a strong interest would be strong enough so 19 the District Court could adopt a local rule, say the 20 Northern District of Illinois, something like that, that 21 in all cases of multiple defendants we will insist on 22 separate representation for every client. We just will 23 not bother with these hearings because it is so hard to 24 get the right answer.

25 MR. FREY: That would raise a question in my

1 mind only about the rule making power of the District
2 Court.

3 QUESTION: Assume it is within the rule making 4 power of the court. Would it be a valid rule?

5 MR. FREY: Let me make this point. I have no
6 doubt that if Pennsylvania, for instance, after what 7 happened in Cuyler v. Sullivan said "We don't want these 8 problems any more. We are going to pass a law that says 9 each defendant has to be represented by a separate 10 lawyer", I cannot conceive that such a law would be 11 unconstitutional although that is I think what the 12 Petitioners' argument is forced to assert.

13 In this case we do have a law. We do not need 14 a rule for the District Court. I mean we have Rule 15 44(c).

16 QUESTION: Well, it does not go quite as far 17 as the rule I proposed. It sets up a procedure but it 18 does not say you must always answer the question -

19 MR. FREY: If my hypothetical statute is 20 constitutional then it seems to me difficult to say that 21 a statute which has the force that goes so far as to say 22 the judge shall make an inquiry but he can allow the 23 multiple representation if it is demonstrated that there 24 is no likelihood that a conflict will arise.

25 QUESTION: Is it not true that there are some

1 cases where you have four defendants and there is no
2 conflict at all?

3 MR. FREY: Well, the difficulty is that at the 4 point of time at which --

5 QUESTION: You then have to appoint four 6 lawyers.

7 MR. FREY: For instance, that is the principle 8 under the Criminal Justice Act. The problem is the 9 difficulty of prediction in this area, Justice 10 Marshall.

11 The District Court is acting prospectively at 12 a time --

13 QUESTION: I at one time represented nine
14 defendants, and I did not have any trouble.

15 MR. FREY: There are cases in which it may 16 happen. It may happen that as the matter plays out no
17 conflict ever emerges. In fact the Court of Appeals 18 said in this case that it was not saying that the 19 disqualification could be based on mere speculation, but 20 that in this case there was either an actual or a 21 sufficiently potential conflict as to support for the 22 disqualification order.

23 Obviously there are a lot of rules that 24 restrict or practices that restrict the criminal 25 defendant's right to choose his lawyer. He cannot

1 select a layman or a disbarred lawyer to represent him.
2 He cannot select a lawyer who is not willing to 3 represent him, for instance, one who believes that this 4 representation will be unethical.

5 He cannot select a lawyer who is not -- He has 6 no right to have a lawyer who is not admitted to the bar 7 of the court. He has not right to have a continuance in 8 order to be represented by a particular lawyer if the 9 court otherwise justifiably determines that the trial 10 must go forward.

11 Most importantly for this case he has no right 12 of indigent to choose his own lawyer except in this very 13 remote sense that he might persuade somebody to do it 14 for nothing. I think that was fairly clear from Morris 15 v. Slappy.

16 In my mind it is very difficult -- This would 17 be the only Sixth Amendment right I have ever heard of 18 that is available not to indigents but only to 19 nonindigents. We have said in our brief, and I am 20 convinced that the nature of the right is more of a 21 Fifth Amendment due process kind of a right to be able 22 to choose your lawyer which is subject to reasonable 23 regulation.

24 It cannot be arbitrarily interfered with. I 25 think there can be little doubt that here there is not

1 an arbitrary or unreasonable interference.

2 QUESTION: Are you going to get back to the 3 appealability matter or not?

4 MR. FREY: Well --

5 QUESTION: You hope so.

6 (Laughter)

7 MR. FREY: I hope so, but if you prefer I am 8 happy to --

9 QUESTION: You can do it on your own time. I 10 wanted to ask you a question.

11 MR. FREY: My own time may not get me to it so 12 let me get back to it now since you are interested in 13 it.

14 QUESTION: Well, what if we agreed with you on 15 nonappealability? We should vacate?

16 MR. FREY: Vacate and remand.

17 QUESTION: So there would be no decision on 18 the merits in the Court of Appeals?

19 MR. FREY: There would be no decision on the 20 merits in this case. That is correct. There is a 21 decision on the merits by the District Court. There 22 would be no review of the decision on the merits.

23 QUESTION: Until later.

24 MR. FREY: Until later, yes.

25 QUESTION: Because of conviction.

1 MR. FREY: If there is a conviction, that is 2 right.

3 QUESTION: Mr. Frey, Rule 44 refers to 4 conflict of interest without really defining it in any 5 greater length. Would it be the government's position
6 that even if the kind of specific potential for conflict
7 found by the District Court and summarized by the Court 8 of Appeals here did not exist there was a potential for 9 conflict under the provisions of Rule 44 every time you 10 have joint representation because of the difficulty of 11 individual plea bargaining?

12 MR. FREY: No, I am not sure that that factor
13 alone -- There is much more than plea bargaining. I 14 hate to have you fix your mind on that one aspect.

15 QUESTION: Because of your discussion of it.
16 It had not occurred to me until you mentioned it.

17 MR. FREY: I was asked about that by Justice
18 O'Connor which is why I discussed it.

19 (Laughter)

20 QUESTION: Don't blame it on Mr. Frey.

21 (Laughter)

22 MR. FREY: My opinion is that the rule gives 23 the District Court broad discretion in a situation of 24 joint representation and that it would be the 25 extraordinary case in which an appellate court could find

1 that disqualifying a lawyer in that circumstance would 2 be an abuse of that discretion. In fact the rule says 3 that unless it appears that there is good cause to 4 believe that no conflict of interest is likely to arise 5 the court shall take such measures as may be 6 appropriate.

7 From the advisory committee notes it is 8 absolutely clear that they contemplated that the 9 appropriate measures included disqualification, and it
10 is hard indeed in this situation to think of much else 11 that would be an alternative to deal with the problem.
12 So I do think there is broad discretion.

13 QUESTION: But that virtually rules out joint 14 representation.

15 MR. FREY: No, the District Court can permit
16 joint representation.

17 QUESTION: But if the District Court said no 18 you say the Court of Appeals should never reverse for an 19 abuse of discretion.

20 MR. FREY: Rarely.

21 QUESTION: So any district court that wanted 22 to just disqualify across the board would never 23 reverse.

24 MR. FREY: After all the ethical propriety of 25 joint representation is tenuous in the best of 1 circumstances it seems to me. We are concerned about 2 the adequacy of the waivers that we get in terms of our 3 interest as prosecutor, our selfish interest rather than 4 our broader interest in the administration of the 5 system.

6 We have a waiver here in this case, but the 7 problems with waivers -- We know that if there is a 8 conviction there will be an attack on that waiver in an 9 effort to set the conviction aside on the basis of the 10 joint representation because it happens repeatedly, and 11 there are a lot of problems with waivers.

12 Obviously it is very difficult for a lay 13 defendant to appreciate the problems that are involved 14 in multiple representation. The advice as to whether or 15 not he should go with one lawyer or multiple lawyers is 16 given by a conflict-ridden attorney who may himself have 17 a pecuniary interest in continuing the joint 18 representation.

19 It may be extremely difficult for the 20 defendant to say in open court I want my own lawyer.
21 There are tremendous pressures operating on him, and 22 this is not necessarily typical of the cases that we are 23 concerned about. We have narcotics cases frequently 24 where there are major and minor offenders being 25 represented by the same lawyer or where the lawyer is

1 being paid by someone in the background.

2 QUESTION: What about four defendants above
3 the indigency line but not too much above it? I suspect 4 there are lots of times they can affect some savings if 5 they retain a firm for joint representation. That does 6 not strike me as an ethically unworthy goal.

7 MR. FREY: Well, I do not think it is -- From 8 the standpoint of the clients they may have an interest 9 in saving money, but I do not think when weighed against 10 all of the other interests that are at stake that the 11 court can assert that they have this constitutional 12 right to conflict-ridden counsel which is the claim in 13 this case.

14 They should at least be advised at the outset 15 by their own lawyers. Now one thing I want to make 16 absolutely clear is that there is no obstacle to 17 mounting a common defense, and there is no obstacle 18 after consultation each with their own lawyer to giving 19 the lead role to one of the lawyers and accomplishing 20 many of the same efficiencies to which you refer.

21 QUESTION: Well, there is no obstacle except 22 human nature. Three lawyers do not always think alike.

23 MR. FREY: Well, human nature is, but part of 24 the problem we are dealing with here is human nature in 25 terms of what the position of these defendants is. I do

1 not mean these as individuals, but you have to consider 2 the class of defendants who are subject to multiple 3 representation.

4 It is by no means uncommon for us to have a 5 defendant come in to us and say I would like to talk to 6 you about cutting a deal but don't tell my lawyer. This 7 is no a joke because telling his lawyer could have very 8 serious consequences in some instances.

9 QUESTION: What sort of serious consequences?

10 MR. FREY: Well, it can have fatal 11 consequences because the lawyer is often nominally his 12 lawyer but actually -- As I say this is not this case at 13 all but it is a class of circumstances that we have to 14 be concerned about with he waiver.

15 QUESTION: No one is saying there should never 16 be disqualification in joint representation, but it 17 seems to me the government's position it is fair to say 18 there can never be joint representation if the district 19 court says otherwise.

20 MR. FREY: It may come close to saying that if 21 the district court -- That is I think the decision that 22 underlies Rule 44(c) which is designed not if a conflict 23 actually exists but if there is any possibility or 24 likelihood that a conflict will arise.

25 Now if you had -- There are cases in which it

1 can be imagined where the likelihood of conflict is a 2 great deal less than in this case and where joint 3 representation might be permitted, and I think the 4 district court could take into account in dealing with 5 people just above the indigency line, the kinds of 6 economies that you are concerned about in deciding when 7 it is dealing with a potential conflict in assessing how 8 serious it is. It has the discretion to do this.

9 I am not sure what the answer is except that 10 the principles of the bar are very much against this 11 kind of representation of trying to serve people who may 12 have conflicting interests at the same time.

13 QUESTION: Mr. Frey, what can the district
14 judge do in this case? Of course, he has disqualified 15 him. Assuming he let the lawyer represent one of the 16 four on the theory that you do not have to all get out
17 and the other three say "Well, I'll exercise my Faretta 18 rights" and just assume that generally that the lawyer 19 for the one defendant will keep things in hand. Is 20 there any way that the judge can prevent that so that 21 there would end up with being just one lawyer on the 22 defense side of the table?

23 MR. FREY: No, I suppose if the judge -- I 24 mean, my first reaction to that question is that the 25 judge probably could not prevent that although he would

1 then have to make special efforts to try to get them to 2 explain or make sure that they understand that at least 3 they can consult with a lawyer after which they may 4 choose to go forward with their joint defense, but it 5 would be quite strange for them to be even unwilling to 6 talk to another lawyer.

7 Now there is the problem in these cases of the 8 figure behind the arras, the third party paying the 9 fees, and that is a factor in this case. The fee is 10 being paid by a third party. There is no assurance that 11 if one of these defendants wished to cooperate with the 12 government that their fees would any longer be paid.

13 That was not the ground of the 14 disqualification in this case, but it is a source of 15 concern in many of these conflict cases. Also we have 16 another interest because my colleague said that if in 17 the course of a trial a conflict emerged, a actual 18 conflict, he would naturally have to disqualify 19 himself.

20 Well, we have an interest in not having that 21 happen in the middle of a trial, and the District Court 22 has an interest in not having that happen in the middle 23 of a trial.

24 QUESTION: It might lead to some very severe 25 problems of severance would it not?

1 MR. FREY: It might lead to severe problems of 2 severance. It might lead to having to retry a case that 3 may have gone on four or five weeks.

4 QUESTION: Or a mistrial of the entire case.

5 MR. FREY: Yes. That is probably what it
6 would lead to if you had one lawyer in this situation.
7 There is no way to prevent as you mentioned earlier the 8 claim later on that the waiver of conflict free counsel 9 was either coerced or not intelligent or the product of 10 ineffective assistance on the part of the lawyer with 11 the conflict of interest.

12 It is impossible to predict what will occur
13 during the trial, and it is very difficult for the judge 14 who knows the detail of neither the prosecution's case
15 nor the defense case to be the agency for making sure 16 that the defendants really appreciate the risks. Even 17 defense counsel cannot necessarily appreciate the risks
18 because they do not know what the government's evidence 19 is.

20 This concern about -- I mean it is said here 21 that this is nothing but a potential conflict. There is 22 no actual conflict. There is not going to be any 23 conflict.

24 Yet here we have a situation where Flanagan
25 was out on the street. According to the severance

1 motion the other three defendants were in places of 2 hiding from which they could not see what was 3 happening.

4 They responded only to Flanagan's signal and,
5 therefore, they could not be accused of having illegally
6 arrested the victims in this case. Yet I understand 7 that in other court proceedings these same people have 8 testified that they were in a position to see Flanagan 9 being mugged by the victims.

10 Now from Flanagan's standpoint that is much 11 better evidence if that could be and would be their 12 testimony. From the standpoint of the other three 13 defendants it is obviously much better that they were 14 off around the corner and could not see.

15 Now I do not know how one lawyer develops a 16 strategy that deals with this. In the charges of 17 assaults in these cases the witnesses may be able to 18 clearly identify some, poorly identify others and not at 19 all identify yet others. How does one lawyer represent 20 all these defendants fairly?

21 Now the question is -- I think part of the 22 argument is well maybe he cannot but the defendants have 23 the right to waiver their right to fair and effective 24 representation, conflict-free representation. Now this 25 question came up before. Where does this right to have

1 a lawyer come from? Where did the Faretta right come 2 from?

3 The Faretta right came from the Sixth
4 Amendment, but it did not the Court said come from the 5 assistance of counsel clause of the Sixth Amendment.
6 This situation is really like Singer.

7 You have a right to conflict-free counsel. It 8 does not mean that you have the right to insist on 9 counsel burdened with a conflict of interest.

10 I do not think in short that the right that we 11 are talking about is a right of such a magnitude that it 12 overrides the normal principles that govern the practice
13 of law. The small restriction on the eligibility -- 14 This is essentially an eligibility requirement that Rule 15 44(c) has allowed the District Court to impose upon 16 lawyers practicing in the district that they not 17 undertake representation where there is a conflict of 18 interest or a potential conflict of interest.

19 I do not see how that small additional 20 restriction can raise a serious constitutional problem.

21 Thank you.

22 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.

23 The case is submitted.

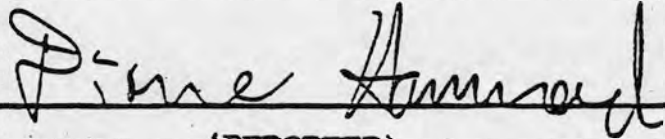

24 (Whereupon, at 2:00 p.m., the case in the 25 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
