CRAL ARGUMENT OF EDWIN S. KNEEDIER, ESC.,
ON BEHALF OF PETITIONER

This case and the companion case of Strickland versus Washington concern the circumstances under which an otherwise valid judgment of conviction may be set aside on the basis of asserted defects in district court by defense counsel.

All too often, in our view, the courts engaged in a somewhat detached inquiry into the litigating judgments and performance of counsel in the abstract, rather than focusing on what we submit should be the central concern, that is, whether any errors by counsel in turn prejudiced the accused by causing a fundamental 1 defect in the proceedings.

2 In order to obtain relief on a claim of 3 ineffective assistance of counsel, it is our position 4 that the accused must show errors that fall below the 5 minimum level of competence of counsel; and second, that 6 any such errors in turn had a probable effect on the 7 outcome of the case or otherwise undermine the 8 fundamental fairness of the proceedings.

9 In this case, the Court of Appeals did not 10 make any such findings in reversing the Respondent's 11 conviction on the ground of ineffective assistance of 12 counsel. In fact, it did not --

13 QUESTION: Mr. Kneedler, I'm troubled in this 14 case by the fact that there are two different types of 15 ineffective assistance of counsel claims: one where the 16 state itself impairs the effective assistance of 17 counsel, either by not appointing counsel at all or by 18 taking some action that would impair the right; a second 19 time is, assuming there's no interference by the court
20 or the state as such with counsel, counsel simply fails 21 to meet whatever standard it is that the court might 22 adopt.

23 Now, which type of claim was litigated here?

24 MR. KNEEDLER: Well, the principal basis of 25 the claim and the one that the Court of Appeals decided

1 was of the first type that you mentioned. The Court of 2 Appeals held that, in effect, that it must be 3 conclusively presumed that Respondent's attorney Cclston 4 did not have -- it was impossible for him to prepare for 5 trial within the 25 days allowed.

6 QUESTION: So that it was an impairment by the 7 state itself, in effect, of --

8 MR. KNEEDLER: That's correct.

9 QUESTION: -- the right to counsel. Now, is 10 that the presentation that was made by the Defendant in 11 this case, the Respondent? Or did the Respondent argue 12 some other kind?

13 MR. KNEEDLER: That was the principal claim.
14 There were passing allegations of inadequacies in the 15 actual performance of counsel as well. There were some 16 general assertions that counsel never objected to any 17 evidence, without identifying particular objections.

18 QUESTION: In your view, did the Court of 19 Appeals resolve only the first type of claim?

20 MR. KNEEDLER: The Court of Appeals plainly 21 resolved only the first, because the Court noted the 22 Government's objection that in fact Respondent had not 23 identified any specific failings by counsel.

24 QUESTION: Is the other issue here?

25 MR. KNEEDLER: I believe it's not here in its

1 entirety, largely because most of the specific failings
2 of trial counsel that Respondent points to were never 3 identified in the Court of Appeals, even though there 4 was a claim that counsel in fact had performed
5 inadequately. The specificity with which Respondent now 6 claims was just not reflected in the record.

7 QUESTION: Well, if we dealt only with the 8 part type, do we have to remand as to the second type?

9 MR. KNEEDLER: No, as to the second type it's 10 our position that the appropriate procedure would be for 11 Respondent to raise any claims about specific defects in 12 counsel's performance in a motion under 2255, because 13 this was --

14 QUESTION: That's on the assumption that we 15 reversed.

16 MR. KNEEDLER: Yes. That was, I think, the 17 premise of the question.

18 QUESTION: That was the assumption, yes.

19 MR. KNEEDLER: That allegations of specific 20 defects be raised under 2255, largely because they are 21 often thought, and usually do, arise from things outside 22 the record, so it would often be necessary to make a 23 record, and in any event to have the trial court in the 24 first instance to make an assessment of the impact of 25 any errors by counsel.

1 QUESTION: I don't see how he could do that,
2 Mr. Kneedler, unless we're to adopt a flat rule that 3 assistance of counsel claims can't be raised on direct 4 appeal.

5 MR. KNEEDLER: Well, if the claim can be 6 raised on direct appeal and resolved on the basis of the 7 record created, then there would be an appropriate 8 occasion to dispose of the case in that instance. But 9 if it would require an extensive hearing, that's not the 10 sort of thing that would ordinarily be part of a direct 11 appeal.

12 QUESTION: But in this particular case, 13 supposing that the Respondent argued in the Court of 14 Appeals specific failings and the Court of Appeals just 15 felt they didn't have to get to that because of the 16 shortness of time which counsel had and his lack of 17 experience. Then if we decided that was wrong, why 18 wouldn't we send it back to the Court of Appeals, if we 19 didn't decide the other issues ourselves, to let them 20 consider things that had been properly raised before 21 them in the first instance?

22 MR. KNEEDLER: Well, if there were specific 23 errors that the Court of Appeals could dispose of by 24 assessing the record, then that would be appropriate.
25 Part of this ties into our submission on the merits,

1 though, as well, and that is that the essential part of 2 a claim of ineffective assistance of counsel is not 3 counsel's performance in the abstract, but how it 4 affects the conduct of the trial and the rights of the 5 accused.

6 And so what the court would be doing on direct 7 appeal, what we submit it should be doing, is 8 determining whether the errors by counsel amounted to 9 plain error of the type that would warrant relief on the 10 basis of those errors themselves, without regard to 11 whether counsel had caused them or not.

12 So on direct appeal, if counsel is said to 13 have committed a plain -- or caused a plain error to 14 result --

15 QUESTION: I thought the major objection of 16 Respondent was not the actions of the lawyer, but the 17 non-actions.

18 MR. KNEEDLER: Well, in either event they --

19 QUESTION: I mean, you said that he had to 20 show that he did some wrong. He said he didn't do 21 anything.

22 MR. KNEEDLER: Well, if the error is one of 23 omission the record may provide a basis for disposing of 24 that and it may not. But in either event, whether it's 25 an act of commission or omission, the result is a defect

1 in the proceedings, which we submit is where the focus 2 should be.

3 QUESTION: But the burden is not on the 4 lawyer, is it?

5 MR. KNEEDLER: The burden on the defense 6 counsel?

7 QUESTION: Yes.

8 MR. KNEEDLER: Yes, we submit that the burden 9 --

10 QUESTION: The burden is on him to show that 11 he is inefficient?

12 MR. KNEEDLER: Oh, no. I'm sorry, I
13 misunderstood. No, the burden is on the convicted 14 Defendant to establish that his counsel committed errors 15 of sufficient seriousness to warrant setting aside the 16 conviction.

17 QUESTION: Well, he starts off with one that -- 18 he always asserts, which is that he was convicted; ergo, 19 counsel must have been ineffective.

20 MR. KNEEDLER: Well, we are concerned that --

21 QUESTION: You don't need that, do you?

22 MR. KNEEDLER: No. We are concerned that 23 there is often a tendency for a person who is convicted 24 to blame the conviction on the lawyer, and we think that 25 and a variety of other considerations support our

1 position that there should be a showing of a substantial 2 defect in the proceedings in order to get relief on the 3 basis of the lawyer's performance.

4 QUESTION: But there is one exception, the 5 Powell case.

6 MR. KNEEDLER: The Powell case, that's 7 correct.

8 QUESTION: That's an exception?

9 MR. KNEEDLER: That's correct, and this comes 10 back to Justice O'Connor's position. Respondent in 11 effect tries to put this case into the category of 12 Powell. In Powell the Court did set aside a conviction
13 on the ground that the Defendant did not have effective 14 assistance of counsel, arising out of the circumstances 15 of the appointment of counsel, without bothering to 16 inquire into how counsel actually performed.

17 But the circumstances of Powell are quite 18 different from those here. In Powell the lawyer 19 effectively assumed responsibility for the case on the 20 day of trial, and the Court pointed out that counsel was 21 precluded from consulting with his clients absolutely 22 and was precluded from conducting an investigation of 23 the case.

24 QUESTION: There was one other one: They 25 appointed the whole bar.

1 MR. KNEEDLER: That's right, initially.

2 QUESTION: They didn't make an appointment.

3 MR. KNEEDLER: And then when counsel finally 4 did assume responsibility, it was too late and he had no 5 opportunity.

6 And the Court reiterated this point in Avery
7 versus Alabama, in which the Court said that the 8 principle of Powell is whether the attorney had an 9 opportunity to consult and prepare. And yet, in Avery
10 the Court rejected a Powell-type claim, even though 11 defense counsel had only three days to prepare a capital 12 case.

13 QUESTION: But it was in a small town.

14 MR. KNEEDLER: It was.

15 QUESTION: And it was limited to a small town, 16 the Avery case.

17 MR. KNEEDLER: The Court did take into account 18 the need for conducting the trial promptly, but that is 19 an interest that exists today. Congress' judgment under 20 the Speedy Trial Act reflects the importance of bringing 21 cases to trial promptly. Now, granted the time limits 22 are much longer under the Speedy Trial Act. 30 days is 23 the rule between arraignment or appearance through 24 counsel and trial, to allow counsel to prepare.

25 But in this case, this case does not even

1 remotely resemble Powell versus Alabama. Attorney
2 Colston was tentatively appointed in this case on June 3 12th and finally assumed responsibility for the case on 4 June 19th, 1980. At that point the trial was scheduled
5 to be held eleven days later. He requested a 6 continuance to allow himself 30 days to prepare for the 7 trial.

8 The court granted that request for 9 continuance, but cut it, what the court said, a few days 10 short, five days short, to 25 days, in order to fit the 11 scheduling of the case into the court's docket.

12 QUESTION: Does that mean, Mr. Kneedler, we're 13 down to the difference between 30 and the 25 days?

14 MR. KNEEDLER: As I understand Respondent's 15 complaint, that's essentially what the case boils down
16 to. Now, he also argues that perhaps even more than 30 17 days was required, but there's no indication in the 18 record that that's so and neither Respondent himself nor 19 Colston renewed a request for continuance. And at the 20 close of the trial the trial judge commended Colston on 21 the quality of his performance.

22 So there's just no basis for believing that 23 the difference between 25 and 30 was of constitutional 24 significance, let alone that more than 30 was required.

25 QUESTION: Does the record show how long Mr.

1 Colston had been admitted to the bar?

2 MR. KNEEDLER: The record does not show.

3 Martindale Hubbell indicates, I think, that he had been 4 admitted to the bar five years previously, if I'm not 5 mistaken.

6 QUESTION: Did the Defendant argue that his 7 experience as a real estate lawyer fell below any 8 required standing? Is that an argument made?

9 MR. KNEEDLER: That he knew that he was not a 10 competent real estate lawyer?

11 QUESTION: Well, no, that he was not a 12 criminal lawyer.

13 MR. KNEEDLER: Because he was a real estate
14 lawyer --

15 QUESTION: He was a real estate lawyer.

16 MR. KNEEDLER: Yes.

17 QUESTION: And that somehow fell below a 18 constitutional standard?

19 MR. KNEEDLER: He did argue that, because his 20 lawyer did not have prior experience in criminal cases, 21 that that was a factor to be considered under what the 22 Tenth Circuit in this case devised to be a five-part 23 balancing test in which experience is one. But even in 24 this Court, Respondent doesn't contend that he was 25 entitled absolutely to a lawyer with more experience,

1 and we submit that that concession is well founded.

2 The Constitution speaks of the assistance of 3 counsel, and there's no reason to believe that the 4 framers of the Sixth Amendment had anything in mind in 5 using the term "counsel" other than a person admitted to 6 the bar and admitted to practice before the Court, as 7 Colston was.

8 QUESTION: On the day when the case was called 9 for trial, did he ask for more time, defense counsel ask 10 for more time?

11 MR. KNEEDLER: No, he did not, and when the 12 trial court made the inquiry as to whether counsel was 13 prepared to proceed defense counsel pronounced 14 themselves ready.

15 I would also point out that Colston was not 16 alone in this case. There was another attorney, Mr.
17 Rivas, who appeared with him, and according to an 18 affidavit filed by the Government in the Court of 19 Appeals Mr. Rivas had extensive prior experience in 20 criminal cases. So that even assuming that an 21 inexperienced counsel standing alone might be a 22 substantial factor, here, to the extent you recognize 23 that it might be good to get some assistance, he in fact 24 got it here.

25 Now, one other factor Respondent does mention

1 in this Powell-type argument suggests or asserts broadly
2 that mail fraud, which is what we had here, is an arcane
3 and complex area of the law. But that generalization 4 simply won't stand up. There are simply two elements to 5 the offense: one is the existence of a scheme to 6 defraud; and the other is the use of the mails to 7 accomplish the scheme.

8 Here there is no dispute about the use of the 9 mails in the scheme, and the scheme itself was a simple 10 one. It involved check-kiting, which this Court
11 described in simple terms just two terms ago in Williams 12 versus United States. It involves the Defendant taking 13 advantage of the float created when checks are sent back 14 and forth from one bank to another. The mechanics of 15 that sort of scheme would not be difficult for any 16 attorney or anyone who maintains a checking account to 17 figure out.

18 There were a number of transactions in this 19 case, but they were part of one overall similar course 20 of conduct, and the defense counsel had available to him
21 the full records in the case and in fact a 22 reconciliation of the accounts of the banks by his 23 company's own CPA that disclosed that the bank in 24 Oklahoma had lost a half a million dollars or that there 25 was a net overdraft of a half million dollars.

1 Respondent does not dispute any of those facts 2 regarding the sending of checks back and forth or the 3 net overdraft that resulted, and he concedes in his 4 brief that there was overwhelming evidence of his 5 control of the company involved and that he directed the 6 check-cashing activities.

7 QUESTION: Mr. Kneedler, what do you say about 8 his argument that the best defense was the absence of 9 criminal intent, and that the lawyer didn't raise that 10 defense?

11 MR. KNEEDLER: Well, with all respect, Justice 12 Stevens, I believe that defense would be quite 13 far-fetched in these circumstances, largely because of 14 -- or in part because of the overwhelming nature of the 15 Government's case. But the business involved here -- 16 there was testimony at trial that there was just 17 $150,000 a year annual sales. Respondent's Co-Defendant 18 testified to that. She was his secretary. And yet, 19 there were $5 million deposited in the two accounts over 20 a period of four months, the checks going back and forth 21 without any, even to this day, explanation of what sort 22 of legitimate banking practice would have been going 23 on.

24 I think in these circumstances for Respondent 25 to suggest that if there was a swindler it was the

1 Norman Bank is unfair. And in fact, although Respondent
2 contends that the bank ultimately recovered the proceeds 3 and that there was no fraud, that's also beside the 4 point.

5 First of all, it's not necessary that a scheme
6 to defraud be successful under the mail fraud statute.
7 But in any event, the facts here just do not establish 8 that the bank was repaid, much less that it was repaid 9 voluntarily by Respondent in a way that could refute the 10 existence of criminal intent.

11 QUESTION: Well, it would be repaid, would it 12 not, if the two directors who signed the note made good 13 on the note?

14 MR. KNEEDLER: Well, that's true, although 15 unless they in turn recovered somebody was defrauded, 16 unless the assets --

17 QUESTION: Well, we don't know.

18 MR. KNEEDLER: We don't know. All I'm saying 19 is that it can't be said on the face of this record that 20 there was in our view anything approaching an argument 21 that this was a substantial avenue of defense in the 22 case.

23 QUESTION: In your experience, do you know of 24 many real estate lawyers that have experience in federal 25 courts?

1 MR. KNEEDLER: Speaking from personal
2 experience, I simply couldn't say.

3 QUESTION: Well, doesn't real estate law
4 involve state law?

5 MR. KNEEDLER: That's correct, although a real 6 estate lawyer could have litigation experience. It's 7 not clear from this record whether Colston had prior 8 trial experience.

9 QUESTION: Did he know anything about the 10 Jencks Act?

11 MR. KNEEDLER: The record simply doesn't show 12 what Colston knew or what he didn't know. It may have 13 been in this case unnecessary to require the statements
14 -- or to request the statements under the Jencks Act, 15 because he already had them. We simply don't know.
16 There's certainly no basis in this record for concluding 17 that Colston made a Jencks Act error or any other. And 18 I should reiterate: He had the assistance of another 19 attorney who in fact was experienced.

20 Another point that I would like to make in 21 this regard is that an attorney who does not have 22 extensive prior experience in a criminal case will often 23 compensate for that lack of experience by unusual or 24 atypical zeal in preparing the case and doing perhaps 25 more research and more preparation than another lawyer

1 might do. Perhaps he would have more time to do so.

2 But in any event, we submit that it would be 3 illogical under the Sixth Amendment to set aside a 4 conviction on the basis of ineffective assistance of 5 counsel solely on the basis of counsel's experience when 6 -- or if that attorney performed in exactly the same way
7 an experienced lawyer would do. In those circumstances
8 there could be no claim that the right to effective 9 assistance of counsel had been abridged.

10 The last point I'd like to make on this, the 11 first prong of Respondent's argument in this case under 12 Powell, is that the Court of Appeals' approach in this 13 case seems to us to be directly contrary to the Court's 14 decision last term in Morris versus Slappy, in which the 15 Court recognized that the scheduling of trials presents 16 a considerable problem for district courts and that the 17 court's scheduling of a trial will not be set aside 18 except in the face of an arbitrary action.

19 And in these circumstances, where the court in 20 fact granted the continuance rather than denying it, as 21 in Morris versus Slappy, we think it follows clearly 22 that there is no basis for setting aside the 23 conviction. Basically what the Tenth Circuit has done 24 in this case, then, is simply to second-guess the 25 district court's ruling on a continuance under the guise

1 of adopting a five-part balancing test on the 2 ineffective assistance of ccounsel, and we think that 3 that's inconsistent with the approach in Morris.

4 I would also like to briefly address
5 Respondent's second argument in this case, going to 6 allegations of specific defects in attorney Colston's 7 performance at trial. As I mentioned before, most of 8 these specific claims were not raised in the Court of 9 Appeals, including the claim of a lack of criminal 10 intent, and we therefore don't think it would be 11 necessary for this Court to review the record and go 12 through all of the myriad claims that Respondent has 13 raised for the first time to determine whether there has 14 actually been a specific error. We have addressed 15 several of those claims in our brief.

16 But we do think in this case that the nature 17 of the claims Respondent is making is instructive and in - 18 fact vividly illustrates the problems that will be 19 created if this Court does not adopt a test as to 20 reviewing claims of ineffective assistance of counsel 21 that requires a look to see whether there was a 22 fundamental defect in the proceedings that resulted from 23 the attorney's actions, rather than looking at the 24 attorney's actions in their own right.

25 What Respondent has done is to comb the record

1 to second-guess the counsel's performance as if the 2 purpose were to grade the lawyer, rather than to see 3 what happened to the client. And I think it's important 4 to stress that there are a number of difficulties with 5 this approach, a number of things that should give a 6 court pause before it engages in this sort of post hoc 7 review of counsel's litigating strategy.

8 First, it requires an unseemly probing in many 9 cases of the lawyer's thought processes and 10 communications with his client. In the long term, this 11 could have a very disheartening effect for defense 12 counsel, knowing that they would be routinely exposed in 13 their litigating judgments to scrutiny after the trial, 14 and this could have the effect of deferring people from 15 accepting appointments in criminal cases.

16 Secondly, the nature of the inquiry is in some 17 respects as perversion of the adversary process. A 18 hearing such as that required to determine why the 19 lawyer did what when has the effect of putting the 20 lawyer in the awkward position of defending himself, 21 while not wanting to undermine his client's claim for 22 relief. And at the same time it puts the prosecutor in 23 the position of defending his former adversary's 24 actions, to say that they were reasonable and 25 effective.

1 Third, it's often a highly subjective inquiry, 2 because it requires predictions about the state of the 3 law, what the attorney perceived in the case at the 4 time.

5 Fourth, it undermines the independence of 6 defense counsel, independence that this Court held just 7 two terms ago in Polk County is constitutionally 8 mandated; that once the lawyer is freed of the external 9 restraints that Justice O'Connor referred to, that is 10 effectively the assistance of counsel to which the Sixth 11 Amendment refers.

12 But under a rule that did not require a 13 substantial showing, the result could be to have courts 14 and prosecutors oversee defense counsel's actions at 15 trial in order to prevent the conviction from later 16 being set aside.

17 And also, under our adversary system, the 18 heart of it, the premise of it, is that the attorney, 19 either retained or appointed, who assumes responsibility
20 in a criminal case, is, as the Court said in Polk 21 County, performing an essentially private function, and 22 the integrity of the adversary process depends on the 23 presumption that the attorney will perceive his duties 24 and will conscientiously perform them according to his 25 ethical responsibilities. So the Court should give

1 effect to that presumption.

2 And last, to have too quick an inquiry into 3 counsel's actual performance would detract from the 4 trial itself, because our adversary system attaches
5 finality to a judgment of conviction and it presupposes
6 that a trial of the Defendant himself will not 7 automatically be followed by a trial of the attorney, as 8 Justice Brennan observed in his dissenting opinion in 9 Wainright versus Sykes.

10 Therefore, we believe a substantial showing 11 should be made before these sorts of inquiries are made, 12 and in our view the appropriate objective criterion for 13 this is whether there is a substantial defect in the 14 proceedings that resulted from counsel's action. This 15 is an anchor, something rooted in the proceedings 16 themselves, rather than in counsel's actions, to be 17 guided by the Court -- to guide the Court.

18 It must be remembered that a party in 19 litigation cannot ordinarily get a valid judgment set 20 aside by saying his attorney made a mistake. The usual 21 relief that a client has in those circumstances is 22 against his attorney for malpractice, not to set aside a 23 conviction and impose the burdens on his opponent. And 24 we suggest -- and in that malpractice action, the client 25 would have to show more than that the lawyer didn't

1 perform reasonably; he'd have to show that there was 2 some prejudice as a result and in fact, under 3 malpractice law, that the client would have prevailed.

4 We suggest that a similar showing of prejudice 5 is appropriate where what the lawyer seeks is to -- or 6 what the Defendant seeks is to have his conviction set 7 aside. This follows also from the text of the Sixth 8 Amendment and the decision in Gideon. The text of the 9 Sixth Amendment refers to the assistance of counsel. If 10 counsel is denied or effectively denied, as in Powell, 11 then a conviction is set aside.

12 But where the claim is that the lawyer 13 committed specific errors, it's our submission that 14 those errors must be of comparable severity, comparable 15 seriousness or gravity to an outright denial of counsel 16 in order for relief to be granted. And because the 17 purpose of the Sixth Amendment, as stated in Gideon and 18 other cases, is to guarantee the fairness of the 19 proceedings, the fundamental fairness of the 20 proceedings, we suggest that the inquiry therefore is 21 whether counsel's errors affected the fairness of the 22 proceedings.

23 This is reflected in this Court's decision in 24 McMann versus Richardson 13 years ago, which addresses 25 this area, in which the focus of the Court's concern was

1 not simply on how the lawyer performed, but what effect
2 it had on the client. Did it render his guilty plea an 3 unintelligent act? If so, then few would dispute that 4 the conviction resting on that sort of guilty plea would 5 be unfair.

6 It also directly corresponds to this Court's 7 decision in Agurs, where the Court said that the purpose
8 of the inquiry is not to find fault or to award relief 9 on the basis of fault of the prosecutor, the other 10 attorney in the case, but to guarantee fairness to the 11 accused. By the same token, we think where the defense 12 counsel's conduct has fallen into question that same 13 parallel applies.

14 I'd like to reserve the balance of my time.

15 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well.

16 Mr. Duke.

17 ORAL ARGUMENT OF STEVEN B. DUKE, ESQ.,

18 ON BEHALF OF RESPONDENT

19 MR. DUKE: Mr. Chief Justice and may it please 20 the Court:

21 In its main brief in this case, the Government 22 argues that this was a case of unimpaired counsel and 23 that the issue before the Court is the appropriate test
24 for relief of an unimpaired counsel. Now Mr. Kneedler 25 concedes the decision below was based on quite different

1 considerations, namely judicial impairments in counsel's 2 ability to prepare and present the case, and that is the 3 case, that is the decision below, and that is the case
4 before this Court.

5 Of course, Powell against Alabama is 6 distinguishable. But the basic principle of Powell 7 against Alabama applies in this case. The Court in 8 Powell said that the court's obligation to appoint 9 counsel is not discharged by a formal appointment, but 10 the appointment must be made at such time and under such 11 circumstances as will enable the giving of effective aid 12 in the preparation and the trial of the case.

13 That obligation was not discharged by the 14 trial judge. Mr. Colston --

15 QUESTION: Do you mean by that that 25 days
16 was not enough time to prepare for trial?

17 MR. DUKE: 25 days under the circumstances of 18 this case was manifestly not enough.

19 QUESTION: But 30 were?

20 MR. DUKE: 30 were? No, I think clearly not.

21 QUESTION: He didn't ask for any more.

22 MR. DUKE: At the time Mr. Colston asked for a 23 minimum of 30, he knew nothing, virtually nothing about 24 the case. That was the day he was being appointed and 25 entering his appearance, and at that time he said: Your

1 Honor, I need a minimum of 30 days. And in fact he was 2 cut off by the judge. He was attempting to explain his 3 need and the judge cut him off.

4 QUESTION: Well then, 25 days later, however, 5 he -- we must presume he knew something more about the 6 case, and he didn't ask for more time.

7 MR. DUKE: That's correct, Mr. Chief Justice, 8 he did not ask for more time.

9 QUESTION: It must be your position that 10 that's incompetent also.

11 MR. DUKE: Yes, I think -- well, either that 12 or that he was not incompetent in concluding that the 13 judge had made a final ruling and that he was not going 14 to reconsider. It seems to me, particularly in the case 15 of an inexperienced lawyer, Mr. Colston might well have 16 concluded that the judgment, the final judgment on the 17 question of a trial date, had been made. And indeed, I
18 would think many lawyers would, or many judges, trial 19 judges, would be surprised if on the day of trial 20 counsel came in and said, Your Honor, I need a week more 21 to prepare. I think most judges would be incensed if 22 counsel came in on the day of trial and said --

23 QUESTION: Do you think that does not happen
24 regularly in the courtrooms, trial courtrooms, Mr.
25 Duke?

1 MR. DUKE: I think it is --

2 QUESTION: And that frequently continuances

3 are granted under precisely those circumstances?

4 MR. DUKE: I don't think it's common where a

5 firm date has been set and it is in a district or in a

6 courthouse where dates mean something and a jury pool is

7 gathered for that case. For example, in most federal

8 courts I think it is most unusual for counsel to come in 9 on the day set for trial and get a continuance.

10 Certainly, I've never found that to be a successful

11 motion.

12 Now, what in effect the trial judge did was 13 impose upon the defense and on Mr. Colston particularly 14 the obligation of in 25 days learning the Rules of 15 Evidence, learning the Rules of Criminal Procedure,

16 learning the principles of criminal law, learning how to 17 try a case, understanding thousands of documents,

18 fitting those documents into the framework of a defense,

19 and interviewing or attempting to interview two dozen

20 witnesses that were scattered throughout the southern

21 states. And to do that --

22 QUESTION: Mr. Duke, I guess there was a

23 second experienced criminal lawyer also appointed to 24 assist, was there not?

25 MR. DUKE: Justice O'Connor, that is partially

1 correct. Mr. Rivas was appointed as an investigator,
2 for which he received -- submitted an invoice for $300,
3 for which he was paid. That was the nature of Mr.
4 Rivas' obligation to the court.

5 QUESTION: But he was an experienced criminal 6 lawyer who remained available?

7 MR. DUKE: I have no reason to dispute what is 8 in his affidavit, that he had substantial criminal 9 experience. There is nothing in his affidavit to 10 suggest that he ever tried a federal case, civil or 11 criminal. All of the experience that he mentions is 12 state court experience.

13 QUESTION: Mr. Duke, is there anything in the 14 record that shows how much federal experience Colston
15 had? I mean, had he ever been in a federal courtroom 16 before? Is it in the record?

17 MR. DUKE: The only thing in the record is the 18 Respondent's statement on June 19th to the court
19 saying: Your Honor, I've just been informed by Mr.
20 Colston that this is his second experience in a federal 21 case. And then Mr. Colston when he read his opening 22 argument to the jury said, this is my first trial. If 23 he was telling the truth, that means it was his first 24 trial of any kind in any court.

25 So Mr. Colston had these burdens, which I

1 submit were impossible even if a fact which --

2 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Duke, every lawyer is 3 going to have his first trial. Are you suggesting that 4 that trial must necessarily be a civil trial, so that 5 one never tries a criminal case having to admit that 6 this is your first criminal case?

7 MR. DUKE: No, Justice Rehnquist. What I'm 8 suggesting is that a lawyer who has never tried a case 9 doesn't try a complicated mail fraud case involving 10 thousands of documents, a 15-page indictment, 24
11 witnesses, and do all of that in 25 days. That's all 12 I'm suggesting.

13 A lawyer -- certainly a lawyer has to try his 14 first case, and I would think trying misdemeanors would 15 be the appropriate place to start if the beginning is in 16 the criminal process. But prosecutors don't turn -- 17 don't hire a lawyer and put them in a complicated mail 18 fraud prosecution.

19 QUESTION: You were in Arizona in the late 20 fifties, weren't you?

21 MR. DUKE: Yes.

22 QUESTION: Do you remember the practice of the 23 district courts there? The federal district judges 24 appointed fairly newly admitted lawyers, and that's 25 where a lot of people got their experience. Now, some

1 of them were said to have a whole cell block at 2 Leavenworth named after them --

3 (Laughter.)

4 QUESTION: -- because perhaps they didn't 5 render absolutely first-rate assistance. But do you 6 think that system is just patently unacceptable under 7 today's standards?

8 MR. DUKE: I think that we do not contend that 9 it is unconstitutional to appoint inexperienced lawyers, 10 even in felony cases. But if a judge -- I think that is 11 undesirable. It's a bad practice.

12 If a judge is going to do that, it is possible
13 to bring an inexperienced lawyer along, to supervise 14 that lawyer, and in a relatively simple case obtain a 15 reasonably competent presentation. One thing that may 16 be important, that is important, is look at the lawyer's 17 training. A lawyer doesn't have to take evidence, a 18 lawyer doesn't have to take criminal law, a lawyer 19 doesn't have to take criminal procedure in order to be a 20 lawyer. He doesn't have to attend any training 21 courses.

22 So in determining the appropriate lawyer to 23 appoint on a case, the court should take into account 24 precisely the factors that the court below said should 25 be taken into account. And incidentally --

1 QUESTION: Do you know of any law schools, Mr.
2 Duke, that do not teach criminal law?

3 MR. DUKE: No.

4 QUESTION: Of the 180 law schools in the 5 country?

6 MR. DUKE: I think most of them, probably all 7 of them, are required to teach it. But no student is 8 required by the American Bar Association to take the 9 course.

10 QUESTION: Are you saying that criminal law is 11 not a required course in law schools today?

12 MR. DUKE: In some law schools it is not a 13 required course, not in my law school. Evidence is not 14 required in my law school.

15 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Duke, is it your position 16 that the Defendant has a constitutional right to an 17 attorney with more experience than Mr. Colston had?

18 MR. DUKE: Not a defendant. This Defendant, 19 under the peculiar circumstances of this case, had a 20 constitutional right to a more experienced attorney or 21 more time to prepare and such supervision as was 22 necessary to make a real lawyer out of a real estate
23 lawyer.

24 I don't know exactly how that could have been 25 done. I'm just saying that there is no -- we're not

1 asking for any absolute ruling. The court below said, 2 we're not holding that inexperience is necessarily 3 ineffective, even in a mail fraud case. But when you 4 combine the inexperience, the complexity of the case, 5 the seriousness of the case, and the total lack of 6 supervision, you have something that is fundamentally 7 unfair. You have a virtual guarantee of inadequate 8 preparation and presentation.

9 QUESTION: Are you suggesting by that by 10 analogy that this Court's holding in Faretta has created 11 an inherently unfair situation, where the Defendant may 12 waive the lawyer and try the case himself, even though 13 he has never seen a courthouse?

14 MR. DUKE: Well, I do think I rather preferred
15 the dissent in that case, but the distinguishing factor 16 about Faretta is free choice.

17 QUESTION: Flattery will get you nowhere, Mr.
18 Duke.

19 (Laughter.)

20 MR. DUKE: There was no free choice in this 21 case.

22 Now, incidentally, I'd like to focus a little 23 bit on what the trial judge did wrong, because that 24 ultimately is the basis of the decision below. The 25 Government concedes in its brief: "A trial court should

1 assure itself that the attorney assigned to represent a
2 Defendant is capable of doing so."

3 QUESTION: Mr. Duke, you said you want to 4 focus on what the trial judge did wrong, was what you 5 said. Is that what you meant?

6 MR. DUKE: Yes.

7 QUESTION: Well, if there are a number of 8 things that the trial judge did wrong, why wouldn't that 9 be reversed by the Court of Appeals without getting to 10 the ineffective assistance of counsel issue, just on the 11 grounds of errors of the trial judge?

12 MR. DUKE: Well, I think that is the fair 13 reading of this opinion, is that this was judicial 14 error. This is not a case of finding ineffective 15 assistance in the usual sense.

16 QUESTION: Well, you agree that that was the 17 basis on which it was litigated below and that that was 18 the Court of Appeals' holding, do you not? And that's 19 apparently what Mr. Kneeder agrees today. So we don't 20 even have to talk about the actual effective assistance 21 or lack thereof of Mr. Colston. We just have to look at 22 what the trial court did, right?

23 MR. DUKE: On my first point, point one of my 24 brief, yes. However, both issues were argued below.
25 They were divided into two arguments: one, that the

1 defense should have had more time to prepare; and two, 2 that counsel was ineffective, and the essence of the 3 argument about ineffectiveness was that counsel was 4 pervasively incompetent.

5 What the court below apparently did is combine
6 these two, and it presumably read the record. It heard 7 the arguments on both sides on both issues and concluded 8 there was inadequate representation.

9 But my point is that the inadequate 10 representation that the court found was the result of 11 impairments imposed on the defense by the trial judge.

12 QUESTION: You do have to end up finding that 13 counsel was ineffective, don't you?

14 MR. DUKE: Ineffective in the Powell against 15 Alabama sense.

16 QUESTION: Well, let's assume that a lawyer
17 had had only three or four days time to prepare a case, 18 and that the record were reviewed by experienced counsel 19 who said he conducted the trial flawlessly. Now, the 20 judge probably made a mistake in appointing some novice 21 to try a case on five days notice, but if he tries the 22 case well do we have to reverse? Is it a per se rule?

23 MR. DUKE: The wisdom of the approach of the 24 court below is the Holloway against Arkansas wisdom, 25 that where a defense is substantially impaired, as in

1 your example appointing an inexperienced attorney in a 2 complex case and giving him four days, it doesn't answer 3 the question of ineffective assistance to look at the 4 trial record and conclude, boy, he really looked good,
5 he knew how to ask questions and he knew how to object
6 to questions. That doesn't tell you much.

7 QUESTION: So we really try the judge first?

8 MR. DUKE: Where the judge has created, as in 9 this case over numerous objections, the impairments, 10 then the question before the court is: Did these 11 impairments unfairly undermine the defense's opportunity 12 to prepare and present the defense?

13 QUESTION: Even though the record shows he 14 tried the case flawlessly?

15 MR. DUKE: The record cannot show that he 16 tried the case flawlessly.

17 QUESTION: You mean if he loses there's a per 18 se rule?

19 MR. DUKE: No. The record can show that he 20 knew how to ask questions, and that he knew some of the 21 Rules of Evidence, and that he was articulate. It can't 22 show whether he presented the right defense. It can't 23 show whether he ignored a much better defense. It can't 24 show his failures to prepare, as in the conflict of 25 interest case.

1 The burdens if inadequate time and inadequate
2 experience and knowledge force the lawyer not to do a 3 lot of things that a lawyer ought to do. And a look at 4 the trial record will not tell you whether he did them 5 or he didn't do them.

6 A look at this record establishes quite 7 conclusively, I submit, that many of the basic functions 8 that are expected of a lawyer could not have been 9 performed by Mr. Colston under the conditions that he 10 faced, including his own inexperience. And therefore, 11 some fundamental obligations of an attorney, that we 12 expect of an attorney, were not performed by Mr.
13 Colston.

14 Now, the court below had the trial record. It 15 had the argument on both sides as to the performance of 16 Mr. Colston, and it apparently thought that what it saw 17 in Mr. Colston's performance either confirmed the 18 inferences that it drew from the circumstantial 19 evidence, the pretrial burdens, or in any event did not 20 refute it. It didn't explain which of those particular 21 positions it took.

22 QUESTION: Mr. Duke, one of my problems is 23 what you just mentioned, going over the record. In your 24 own experience, have you gone over a record and read it 25 and said, oh, my goodness, I couldn't have done that?

1 Haven't you?

2 MR. DUKE: I couldn't have done such a stupid
3 thing?

4 QUESTION: Yes, haven't you said that?

5 MR. DUKE: Yes.

6 QUESTION: We all have.

7 MR. DUKE: Yes.

8 QUESTION: So is that ineffective assistance
9 of counsel?

10 MR. DUKE: A mistake is not ineffective 11 assistance of counsel.

12 QUESTION: I see.

13 MR. DUKE: But this case -- first of all.

14 QUESTION: Let me ask another question similar 15 to the same sort of problem that Justice Marshall
16 identified. I'm not suggesting this is true of this 17 case, but suppose defense counsel interviews his client 18 and, with the privilege attaching, the client says to 19 his lawyer: Well, I did it. I don't know, there's just 20 no doubt about it. I guess they caught me, or I'm 21 guilty. He makes it perfectly clear.

22 And so the lawyer then makes a judgment there 23 really isn't any point in going out and interviewing a 24 lot of witnesses. And later on the man is convicted, 25 and he later files a post-conviction proceeding

1 attacking the competence of counsel for failure to 2 interview witnesses. There might be 18 people he 3 names.

4 And the lawyer says, I didn't. You ask him
5 why. What's he going to say?

6 MR. DUKE: You ask the lawyer why?

7 QUESTION: Yes. I don't think he can reveal 8 what the client told him, do you?

9 MR. DUKE: Well, he can if his client is 10 attacking his competence. Certainly the privilege is 11 gone.

12 QUESTION: Is it gone?

13 MR. DUKE: Yes.

14 QUESTION: I see.

15 MR. DUKE: And he can say, I didn't do it 16 because he said I'm guilty.

17 I don't think that should satisfy the court, 18 and the ABA is quite clear that what your client tells 19 you about his or her guilt or innocence doesn't 20 discharge your obligation to investigate the case.

21 QUESTION: No, but it may give you some idea 22 of what is, you know, a useful way to allocate your 23 time.

24 MR. DUKE: It certainly will do that.

25 QUESTION: You normally don't have 25 full

1 days to prepare for any trial.

2 MR. DUKE: That's true.

3 QUESTION: What your client tells you can have 4 a crucial role to play, could it not, in your duty to 5 investigate and the extent of it?

6 MR. DUKE: Yes, it certainly could.

7 QUESTION: In what way? He tells you he's 8 guilty and there are 14 possible witnesses you might 9 interview. You mean, can he just then not interview the 10 witnesses?

11 MR. DUKE: Well, no. But suppose he says, I'm 12 guilty, he did it, but there are three witnesses that 13 will say I was elsewhere.

14 QUESTION: -Yes.

15 MR. DUKE: I would think a lawyer could say, 16 I'm not going to bother with those witnesses unless --

17 QUESTION: Why couldn't he dispense with any 18 witness then, because the fellow says, I'm guilty? I 19 mean, what good will any witnesses do?

20 MR. DUKE: Well --

21 QUESTION: They can only testify, they'd only 22 testify, maybe not as clearly as in your alibi case, but 23 nevertheless they will be attempting to establish a 24 non-fact.

25 MR. DUKE: Well, if it's a case of identity,

1 perhaps. But in many cases Defendants don't know
2 whether they're guilty or not. There are questions of 3 mens rea, there are mitigating factors, there are 4 questions of their possible defenses that can be 5 raised.

6 QUESTION: And they also may be crazy.

7 MR. DUKE: Yes.

8 QUESTION: But in a complicated scheme such as 9 is involved in a massive check-kiting case, ignorance of 10 the consequences would hardly be something suggested by 11 the Defendant here, do you think? This arrangement had 12 to take a great deal of planning and timing.

13 MR. DUKE: It did indeed, Mr. Chief Justice.
14 But as I have tried to point out in my brief, what was 15 done in this case is not that different from what major 16 corporations and banks do. The arrangement was slightly 17 different, but what the Respondent attempted to do was 18 to take advantage of the float. He wanted some free 19 credit, like -- in other words, a big company on the 20 East Coast and the West Coast will write an East Coast
21 check for West Coast services.

22 The Respondent had expenses in Florida and,
23 instead of writing an Oklahoma check for those expenses,
24 he accomplished the same thing by writing a Florida
25 check, but drawing against the Oklahoma bank,

1 essentially accomplishing the same thing.

2 I very much disagree with the Government in 3 its suggestion that there was not a viable defense in 4 this case. There was no dispute about the basic facts.
5 Interestingly enough, the two Co-Defendants in this case
6 testified for the prosecution and they testified to all 7 these banking transactions and they testified to the 8 fact that the Respondent gave the orders and decided 9 what was going to be done and so forth.

10 Neither of them suggested that they had any 11 criminal intent, and nothing in their testimony 12 suggested the Respondent had any criminal intent. And 13 the Respondent's behavior after the overdraft was 14 entirely consistent with a mistake.

15 QUESTION: Well, were there some guilty pleas 16 here?

17 MR. DUKE: There was one guilty plea, yes, and 18 one dismissal, a guilty plea following probation.

19 QUESTION: What specific intent do you think 20 the statute requires?

21 MR. DUKE: An intent at least to deceive in a 22 material way, at least that much. And there was no 23 deceit concerning the floating of checks. It was quite 24 obvious that the Tampa bank and the Oklahoma bank were 25 being used to float checks, quite obvious to any banker

1 that looked at those checks.

2 The only real question, the only possible
3 deception, could have been Respondent's deception in his 4 intention to make good on these checks, and on that 5 issue everything he did following the overdraft was 6 consistent with his intent to make good on the checks.
7 He did make good on the checks. He turned over to the 8 bank a business, a growing business with 20 employees, 9 that the bank paid $504,000 for and turned around and 10 sold to its directors for $504,000.

11 QUESTION: Mr. Duke, you say that the banks
12 must have been aware of this. But in most check-kiting 13 schemes, doesn't it turn out that if the banks had 14 actually canvased the particular ebb and flow in a 15 particular account they would have been aware of the 16 kiting operation, but banks just generally don't do that 17 until something goes wrong?

18 MR. DUKE: Well, that may very well be, 19 Justice Rehnquist. On the other hand, the amounts of 20 the checks in this particular case were very large 21 indeed, particularly compared to the size of the bank.
22 I mean, this company was one of the bank's major 23 customers and it seems unlikely to me that the bank was 24 entirely unaware of the volume or the nature of the 25 checking transactions.

1 And what the bank probably or apparently 2 decided to do was to trust that it wouldn't get hurt, 3 because it was very much in its interests to have these 4 transactions going through the bank.

5 QUESTION: Mr. Duke, isn't it also true that 6 the amount of this flow of checks was also grossly 7 larger than the actual cash flow of the man's business?

8 MR. DUKE: That is true.

9 QUESTION: So that it's kind of hard to treat 10 it as an ordinary float, like you characterize the 11 corporations.

12 MR. DUKE: Well, it is true that it's 13 different in that obviously more checks were deposited 14 than would normally be deposited in a typical business.

15 QUESTION: But I mean, grossly so. Weren't 16 there millions of dollars worth of checks and about 17 $100,000 of gross revenues?

18 MR. DUKE: There were a total of $5 million, 19 approximately, deposited over a period of five or six 20 months, and the revenues of the business were estimated 21 to be -- one witness said $30,000 a month, another said
22 $150,000 a year. But of course, that was the one
23 business, and there were two businesses. A second 24 business was acquired during the latter part of this 25 period.

1 QUESTION: Those are kind of tough facts to 2 work with, I think.

3 MR. DUKE: Well, but it seems to me
4 Respondent's explanation is quite credible. What he was 5 doing in running all these large checks through was 6 impressing the bank and pleasing the bank, because that 7 helped the bank increase its deposit power. So he was 8 acquiring some kind of a reputation with the bank as an 9 important customer, that was very helpful to the bank.

10 The point is that none of this defense was 11 mentioned by Mr. Colston. I'm not saying this was a 12 defense as a matter of law. I'm not suggesting that the 13 victim must lose money in order for there to be mail 14 fraud. I am suggesting that there are a number of legal 15 principles and a number of favorable charges to the jury 16 that applied to the facts of this case, and that the 17 facts were very supportive of a defense of no intent to 18 defraud.

19 Instead, Mr. Colston made a defense that is a 20 non-defense, an utterly absurd defense that if Mr.
21 Cronin did not write the checks he was not responsible.
22 I don't see how any lawyer that took criminal law could 23 make that argument.

24 QUESTION: Maybe that would impress a lay 25 jury, however, even if it didn't appeal to a lawyer.

1 MR. DUKE: Well, possibly, possibly. It seems 2 to me not to give the jury very much credit.

3 But I would -- I'm not suggesting that that 4 would be incompetent behavior if there was no defense 5 available. If the lawyer wants to try to bamboozle the 6 jury and try jury nullification, that's quite 7 appropriate where there is no defense. But here there 8 was a very viable, strong defense that was apparently 9 never even recognized by Mr. Colston.

10 QUESTION: Or by his experienced colleague?

11 MR. DUKE: Or by his experienced colleague.

12 Now, the Government suggests that there ought 13 to be a hearing. They don't want a remand. They want 14 Mr. Cronin --

15 QUESTION: Was this argument made to the Court
16 of Appeals?

17 MR. DUKE: Which?

18 QUESTION: This very argument you just made.

19 MR. DUKE: About the remand?

20 QUESTION: No, about the adequate defense.

21 MR. DUKE: Inadequate defense --

22 QUESTION: Yes, that there was a perfectly 23 sound defense available that was ignored.

24 MR. DUKE: If it was made, it was made 25 mushily. I believe it was made by the Respondent in the

1 --

2 QUESTION: Obviously, then, it wasn't you who 3 argued the case?

4 MR. DUKE: That's correct, that's correct. It
5 was made -- the Respondent filed a pro se brief in which 6 he predicated upon his newly discovered evidence. He 7 claimed --

8 QUESTION: He was pro se in the Court of 9 Appeals?

10 MR. DUKE: He had court-appointed counsel and 11 he also had leave to file his own brief pro se.

12 QUESTION: Are you the first lawyer in this 13 entire case who's discovered that there was a perfectly 14 adequate defense available that was ignored?

15 MR. DUKE: I can't say. I really don't know 16 whether counsel below really focused on --

17 QUESTION: Any lawyer who didn't recognize it 18 would have been incompetent, in your view?

19 MR. DUKE: Yes. What is not clear is that the 20 record was carefully read and absorbed by 21 court-appointed counsel below.

22 QUESTION: Well, of course, the lawyer trying 23 a case doesn't have the benefit of a nice record
24 unfolding that you can look over afterwards and say, 25 well, gee, that was here all the time. I don't think

1 any lawyer who has tried a case ever figures that he 2 knows the case, even on a day by day basis, the way he 3 should.

4 So I think some things that look clear from 5 the record after the thing is over may not have been 6 quite as apparent while the case was being tried.

7 MR. DUKE: Well, that is correct. But if Mr.
8 Colston had interviewed the witnesses or seen statements
9 of the witnesses, either one, if as the Government 10 claims they had turned over essentially an open file, he 11 would have seen that it was absolutely hopeless to 12 question that the Respondent Mr. Cronic was in control 13 of these banking transactions.

14 There were at least a dozen witnesses, some of 15 them unimpeachable, that would have established that Mr.
16 Cronic was the owner of these companies and that he 17 called the shots and that Ms. Cummings, the nominal 18 president, was in fact his secretary. If he had simply 19 looked at the statements, he would have known that what 20 he set forth as a defense was tantamount to a plea of 21 guilty.

22 Thank you.

23 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Do you have anything
24 further, Mr. Kneedler?

25 REBUTTAL ARGUMENT OF EDWIN S. KNEEDLER, ESQ.,

2 MR. KNEEDLER: Yes, several points, Mr. Chief
3 Justice, thank you.

4 First with respect to the discussion during 5 Mr. Duke's argument about what the client may have told 6 the attorney, I think that issue is highly relevant, as 7 is -- and Respondent concedes this, too -- the 8 information that counsel receives from the Government.
9 In this case the investigative file is relevant as to 10 counsels' duty in the circumstances of the case, his 11 professional obligation to assess -- after all, that's 12 what counsel's for, to assess the circumstances facing 13 the Defendant and try to make some judgment as to what's 14 worth pursuing and what isn't.

15 And again, I think it's useful to draw on the 16 analogy in the Agurs decision, where the Court 17 determined the materiality of the evidence that should 18 have been turned over to the defense in terms of how it 19 would have appeared to the prosecutor, its materiality, 20 the weight of whether it was a close case or not a close 21 case.

22 We think precisely the same rule applies with 23 respect to judging defense counsel's performance, 24 including the weight of the Government's case, and 25 that's the very reason why we believe it is appropriate

1 in judging the element of prejudice in a case like this 2 to see whether in fact what the lawyer would have done 3 would have had any effect on the outcome, given all the 4 circumstances of the case.

5 And in this case, I submit that, while Mr.
6 Duke has come up with a defense that might be 7 theoretically plausible, to suggest that this sort of 8 defense in the circumstances of this case would have had 9 any effect on the jury's determination of Respondent's 10 guilt or innocence is, we submit, quite incredible.

11 QUESTION: Of course, that submission is -- it 12 seems to me really goes to counsel's actual performance, 13 rather than to this Powell-type invalidation of this 14 trial or setting aside of this conviction.

15 MR. KNEEDLER: Well, I think that's right, but 16 I understood Mr. Duke to be mixing the two of them. I 17 did not understand --

18 QUESTION: Oh, I know he is, I know he is.

19 MR. KNEEDLER: I did not understand the Court
20 of Appeals to mix the two of them.

21 QUESTION: No, they didn't, I agree. I agree 22 with that. But when he gets down to saying, here's what 23 counsel ignored, it's a performance standard.

24 MR. KNEEDLER: Yes.

25 QUESTION: And I suppose because it is, that's 1 why you're saying there wasn't a showing of prejudice.

2 MR. KNEEDLER: With respect to the performance
3 standard --

4 QUESTION: Yes.

5 MR. KNEEDLER: -- that's right. With respect 6 to the Powell versus Alabama sort of argument, where the 7 time doesn't even approach the one day, we think that 8 Respondent should at least identify something that his 9 clients were prohibited from doing that had some 10 realistic effect on counsel's preparation. But there's 11 no suggestion here.

12 QUESTION: Well, you wouldn't say that if the 13 Defendant asked for a lawyer and the judge said, sorry, 14 you don't get one, there's just nothing a lawyer could 15 do for you.

16 QUESTION: No. Under Gideon, the presence of 17 a lawyer is deemed essential to fundamental fairness, as 18 is some minimal period or opportunity to prepare. But 19 that is not this case, we submit.

20 And lastly, with respect to the question of 21 whether there's a per se rule being suggested here with 22 respect to 25 days, 30 days, it's a little hard to tell 23 precisely what rule Respondent is arguing for, what 24 amount of time would have been sufficient. But to the 25 extent there are going to be legislative-type rules as

1 to when the case is brought to trial, that would seem to 2 be appropriate for either legislation or rules, not a 3 decision by this Court on a case by case basis in the 4 Court of Appeals approach, second-guessing the trial
5 court's approach to the case.

6 The trial court acted responsibly in these 7 circumstances and there's no indication that it had any 8 effect on the lawyer's preparation.

9 QUESTION: Could this case have gone to 10 collateral relief?

11 MR. KNEEDLER: Yes.

12 QUESTION: And tried out the question of 13 counsel's actual performance?

14 MR. KNEEDLER: Yes.

15 QUESTION: Would it have done any good, for 16 example, to interview all of these witnesses and so on?

17 MR. KNEEDLER: Well, that would be the 18 purpose --

19 QUESTION: Could it still go there?

20 MR. KNEEDLER: Yes, we'd say it could still go 21 there for Defendant to make his showing that there was 22 some effect.

23 QUESTION: Well, unless there were something 24 decided here, because under the habeas statute the 25 habeas court can't review anything that's been decided

1 on the merits here.

3 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.

4 The case is submitted.

5 (Whereupon, at 11:14 a.m., argument in the 6 above-entitled case was submitted.)
