1                                    P R O C E E D I N G S

2                    CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Garvey, I think you 3 may proceed whenever you're ready.

4                    ORAL ARGUMENT OF JOHN H. GARVEY, ESQ., 5                    ON BEHALF OF PETITIONERS

6                    MR. DUNLAVEY: Thank you. Mr. Chief Justice
7 and may it please the Court:

8                    Section 1252 of the Judicial Code provides 9 that any party may appeal to this Court from a decision
10 by a court of the United States holding unconstitutional 11 an act of Congress. The issue in this case is whether 12 the Government must appeal to this Court in a case where 13 it concedes that the statute is unconstitutional and the 14 only issue is the question of what relief should be 15 provided.

16                    The statute in this case is Section
17 211(a)(5)(A) of the Social Security Act, which deals 18 with self-employment income from a family business in 19 community property states. What that section says is 20 that if a family business is not run as a partnership
21 then for purposes of old age, survivors and disability 22 insurance all the income from the business shall be 23 attributed to the earnings account of the husband, 24 unless the wife is able to show that she exercised 25 substantially all the management and control of the

1 business.

2 In 1980 the Attorney General determined that 3 that presumption made in that section was 4 unconstitutional and informed Congress that he would not 5 defend on appeal a case called Becker against Califano, 6 which had held that section unconstitutional.

7 Three weeks later Respondent filed this action
8 on behalf of a class of affected wives in community 9 property states. The Government acknowledged in the 10 district court that the section was unconstitutional and 11 did not defend it. So the district court shortly
12 entered judgment on the uncontested issue of liability 13 and held the section unconstitutional.

14 Thereafter and until now, the only issue in 15 this case has been what relief should be provided for 16 that deficiency in the statute. The Government proposed 17 in the district court that, since the invalid provision
18 was simply an exception to Section 211(a), the general
19 rule applying in the 42 non-community property states,
20 that what the district court should do was what was done 21 throughout the rest of the country. That is to say, if 22 the family business wasn't run as a partnership then all 23 the income should be attributed to one spouse or the 24 other without the use of any presumption, after a 25 determination of which one was chiefly responsible for

1 running the business.

2           The district court disagreed and held, among 3 other things, that in community property states the 4 income should be divided between husband and wife 5 according to the amounts of their labor in the 6 business.

7           The Government appealed to the Court of 8 Appeals, which dismissed in a one-sentence order saying 9 it didn't have jurisdiction because of Section 1252, and 10 the Government then petitioned this Court for a writ of 11 certiorari.

12           Our position can be summed up briefly in two 13 points: number one, only an appeal from the 14 constitutional issue can bring a case to this Court; 15 number two, the question of relief in this case is not 16 part of the constitutional issue.

17           Let me begin with the first of those points.
18 Only an appeal from the holding of unconstitutionality
19 can bring the case to this Court under Section 1252.
20 It's important to recognize at the outset that Section 21 1252 is a unique jurisdictional provision. In that 22 section what Congress did was to pick out from the whole
23 universe of cases that customary go from the district 24 courts to the Court of Appeals a few unique cases which, 25 because of their great importance, were thought to

1 warrant extraordinary treatment and immediate review in 2 this Court.

3           The extraordinary treatment is, first of all,
4 tat they're within the mandatory appellate jurisdiction
5 of this Court; but in addition, they leapfrog over the 6 Courts of Appeals.. And unlike even cases coming to this 7 Court under Section 1253, they haven't had the benefit 8 of review even by three district judges by getting 9 here.

10           The reason Congress did this, in the words of 11 the sponsor of the bill which became Section 1252, the 12 reason was this. The sponsor of the bill said: "It is 13 ridiculous that the final determination as to the 14 constitutionality of an act of Congress be held in 15 abeyance for two or three years and nobody knows whether 16 or not it is constitutional."

17           The House report said, in similar --

18           QUESTION: Mr. Garvey, do you propose to shift 19 at some point in your argument from the statement of the 20 sponsors to the language of the statute?

21           MR. GARVEY: Indeed I do. I intend to turn 22 there briefly. Let me, if I may, just finish this 23 thought and then I'll turn to the language of the 24 section.

25           The House report on the bill said that its

1 purpose was to provide a prompt determination by the 2 court of last resort of disputed questions of 3 constitutionality of the acts of Congress. This is not 4 such a case.

5           As I will demonstrate when I get to my second 6 point, it does not even involve a constitutional issue.
7 At most what it involves is something like a question of 8 statutory intent. At worst, it involves nothing more 9 than a simple question about whether the district judge 10 properly exercised her equitable discretion in providing 11 a remedy for a conceded unconstitutional provision in 12 the statute.

13           Those are like the questions that the Courts 14 of Appeals address every day. They are not the 15 questions of extraordinary importance that Congress
16 determined should come immediately to this Court.

17           Now let me turn to the language of the 18 statute --

19           QUESTION: I suppose some issues, although not 20 constitutional ones, can be as important in other ways.

21           MR. GARVEY: That is certainly so. There are 22 many questions of statutory construction that are more 23 important than some of the kinds of questions that can 24 come to this Court under Section 1252. Nevertheless, 25 Section 1252 does not turn on the importance of the

1 question, but on whether an act of Congress has been 2 held unconstitutional.

3 Now, what the statute provides -- and we have 4 reproduced it at page 2 of our brief. What the statute 5 provides is, in the first paragraph it addresses what 6 should be done with appeals from the holding of 7 unconstitutionality. In the second paragraph it 8 addresses what should be done with other issues.

9 The first paragraph says: "Any party may 10 appeal to the Supreme Court from a judgment, decree or 11 order by a court of the United States holding an Act of 12 Congress unconstitutional in any civil action to which 13 the United States is a party."

14 Now, there are two ways in which that, in 15 which the language in that first paragraph, can be 16 read. But I would suggest that only one of them makes 17 sense in light of what Congress had in mind in providing 18 this extraordinary review mechanism.

19 One way of understanding that language is that 20 any party may appeal from any issue that is decided in a 21 judgment or order along with the issue of the 22 unconstitutionality of an Act of Congress. So one way
23 of looking at the judgment or order is that it's a kind 24 of grab bag and, provided the issue of 25 unconstitutionality is in there, a party is entitled to

1 take any other issue up to this Court, even if the 2 unconstitutional question is not brought to this Court.
3 So for example, if in this Court in the same judgment in 4 which the district court held the statute 5 unconstitutional it had also denied attorney's fees to 6 the plaintiff, this grab bag interpretation of the first 7 section would entitle the plaintiff to bring up to this 8 Court the question of her entitlement to attorney's 9 fees, even though the constitutional question is not 10 presented.

11 Or, to take another example, if in the same
12 judgment the district court had decided a pendent 13 question of state law and nobody was interested in 14 appealing the holding of unconstitutionality, this grab 15 bag way of reading the first paragraph would entitle the 16 losing party on the question of state law to bring it 17 directly to this Court.

18 QUESTION: By calling it a grab bag way of 19 reading the paragraph, are you suggesting it's not a 20 preferred or not a reasonable way of looking at the 21 paragraph?

22 MR. GARVEY: That's exactly what I'm 23 suggesting.

24 QUESTION: Well, certainly it doesn't seem 25 implausible to me, given the language you just read,

1 that you say any party may appeal to the Supreme Court
2 from a particular kind of final judgment. What kind of 3 final judgment? A final judgment holding any Act of 4 Congress unconstitutional. And if the final judgment
5 meets that definition, it may contain a number of other 6 provisions, and if you want to appeal any of them you
7 have to go to the Supreme Court.

8 MR. GARVEY: As I said, the language and the 9 syntax of that paragraph will support that reading. I 10 suggest that that reading doesn't make a lot of sense in 11 light of what Congress had in mind in adopting that 12 section, and that there is another reading which can be 13 given to it, which is that the first paragraph is 14 entitled to authorize only appeals from the holding of 15 unconstitutionality, that that is the issue which brings 16 the whole case to this Court and that's an essential 17 prerequisite for getting the case up here under the 18 first paragraph.

19 QUESTION: Mr. Garvey, did the United States
20 take a protective appeal here?

21 MR. GARVEY: No, we did not.

22 QUESTION: Was that a conscious decision?

23 MR. GARVEY: I don't know whether it was a 24 conscious decision or not.

25 That interpretation of the first paragraph of

1 Section 1252 I think is, the interpretation we propose,
2 is supported by the language of the second paragraph,
3 because what the second paragraph says is that once this 4 notice of appeal, which I think is this proper Section 5 1252 notice of appeal, is filed, the second paragraph 6 tells you what to do with the other issues in the case.

7           It says if any of those issues have been taken 8 to other courts -- that is to say, to the Court of 9 Appeals -- prior to the filing of the proper Section 10 1252 notice of appeal to this Court, they shall be 11 treated as taken directly to this Court -- that is to 12 say, they will be transferred from the Court of Appeals
13 to this Court -- when the holding of unconstitutionality 14 is brought here, so that the whole case can be decided 15 together.

16           It also says in the first paragraph that the 17 party who has received a notice of appeal under this 18 section shall take any subsequent appeal or cross-appeal 19 to the Supreme Court. Now, the reason for that 20 direction is, in the example that I gave earlier, if the 21 winning party is sitting around drafting her notice of 22 appeal on the question of attorney's fees to the Court
23 of Appeals, where it would go but for an appeal to this 24 Court on the question of unconstitutionality, the first 25 sentence says that she ought instead to file the notice

1 of appeal to this Court because the appeal on the 2 constitutional question has brought the case here.

3 QUESTION: Suppose, Mr. Garvey, that you have 4 the whole range. You have a decision on 5 constitutionality, which would clearly in your view 6 bring the case directly here, but that there were also 7 some remedial factors and some attorney's fees. Is 8 there any statute that would prevent this Court, after 9 it had decided the constitutional question, to remand 10 the case for a determination, for an examination by the 11 Court of Appeals of the other two questions that were 12 not constitutional? Or would this Court be required to 13 decide all the issues?

14 I don't believe this Court would be required 15 to decide all the issues. I think the reason why the 16 second paragraph directs the other issues to be brought 17 to this Court is that in the ordinary case the party 18 bringing them up won't yet have had a chance to have 19 them reviewed and Congress didn't want those issues 20 being decided simultaneously with the decision on the 21 constitutional question in this Court so that 22 inconsistent results might be reached.

23 But the procedure you suggest wouldn't result 24 in possible inconsistencies in the determinations.

25 QUESTION: But one way or another, the parties

1 would be entitled to review of the district court in 2 some way?

3 MR. GARVEY: Yes, they would. The second
4 paragraph, by leapfrogging over the Court of Appeals, 5 deprives those parties appealing on other issues of 6 their usual right to have at least one appeal in the 7 Court of Appeals.

8 Well, that is our first point, that only an 9 appeal from the holding of unconstitutionality can bring 10 the case, although it brings the whole case, to this 11 Court under Section 1252.

12 Our second point is that the question of 13 relief in this case is not a part of the holding of 14 unconstitutionality. Respondent has maintained that the 15 issue of relief here is an intrinsic aspect of the 16 holding of unconstitutionality. But that is not so, as 17 I think a couple of examples ought to make clear.

18 Suppose that what the district court had done
19 in this case after holding the statute unconstitutional
20 was to adopt the approach the Government suggested.
21 Suppose the district court had concluded that, because 22 this exception to the general rule in Section 211(a) was 23 invalid, that it ought to apply the basic rule in 24 Section 211(a) that applies in non-community property 25 states.

1           If Respondent, plaintiff in the district
2 court, had appealed that issue of relief to this Court, 3 Respondent would not be able to contest the holding of 4 unconstitutionality, having prevailed on it in the 5 district court. And the Government, having conceded the 6 unconstitutionality of Section 211(a)(5)(A), would have 7 no interest in contesting it in this Court, and yet the 8 appeal would be brought directly here.

9           Or to take an even more extreme example,
10 suppose the district court had gone a step further and 11 actually -- suppose this were an individual action.
12 Suppose the district court had gone a step further and 13 actually recomputed the Respondent's earnings account.
14 Suppose that on the basis of that recomputation the 15 district court had concluded that Respondent was 16 entitled to collect $200 in old age benefits under the 17 Social Security Act, and suppose that Respondent
18 believed she was entitled to collect $205 a month.

19           If relief is in fact an intrinsic part of the 20 holding of unconstitutionality, Respondent would be 21 entitled to bring to this Court her disagreement with 22 the district court about the additional $5 a month, 23 notwithstanding that again she couldn't contest the 24 holding of unconstitutionality, having prevailed on that 25 issue in the district court.

1           Or, to take just one more example, suppose the 2 district court had done what it did in this case and 3 said that the income was to be divided between husband 4 and wife, but that the district court had declined to 5 recompute earnings accounts back to 1950 because, the 6 court might say, some wives are going to be better off
7 under those earnings accounts, under the earnings 8 accounts of their husbands, than they will be under the 9 new standard, and we don't want to disturb their 10 reliance interests; and some husbands are going to be 11 deprived of benefits if we recompute. So we'll just 12 make this prospective. Once again, when the case got to 13 this Court there would be no question about the 14 unconstitutionality of Section 211(a)(5)(A).

15           Now, what those examples show, I think, are 16 two things. What they show first of all is that there 17 is involved in this case at this point no constitutional 18 question whatever. The choice among the three types of 19 relief that I suggested in those examples is not 20 determined by the Constitution. All three of them are 21 constitutionally permissible.

22           What's more, the type of relief that the 23 district court chose, the one of those three that I 24 suggested or another one, the one that it chose, the 25 type of relief that the district court chose might in

1 fact be, for all we know, precisely the one that 2 Congress would prefer it to apply, given the 3 unconstitutionality of Section 211(a)(5)(A), which 4 everybody concedes. That means that the district 5 court's decision on the question of relief, unlike its 6 decision on the question of unconstitutionality, may 7 very well be quite consistent with the wishes of 8 Congress.

9 QUESTION: But I take it it was not consistent 10 with the Government's arguments there as to what the 11 intent of Congress was.

12 MR. GARVEY: Indeed not. But whether or not 13 it is inconsistent with the wishes of Congress is 14 something that at this point we don't know, whereas its 15 holding on Section 211(a)(5)(A) we do know is 16 inconsistent with what Congress wanted, because wrote 17 that into the statute and the district court said that 18 statute is invalid.

19 So the question of relief may very well be 20 consistent with what Congress wanted to do, and in that 21 case I would suggest that there isn't the need for 22 immediate review in this Court that exists in the case 23 where the statute is actually held unconstitutional and 24 that issue is still being litigated.

25 Now, I said that those examples showed two

1 things and one of them was that the case didn't really 2 involve any question of unconstitutionality; in fact, it
3 really involves a question of what Congress would want 4 to do, or maybe what it involves is a question about 5 equitable discretion. For example, in last example that 6 I gave the district court took account of the reliance
7 interests of people who were already collecting benefits 8 under the invalid provision and said that maybe the most 9 equitable approach is to protect their interests by 10 making the judgment prospective.

11 Those kinds of decisions about what Congress
12 had in mind, about the equitable -- about the reliance
13 interests of people who are already collecting benefits,
14 are the kinds of questions that the Court of Appeals 15 decide every day in cases of statutory construction, in 16 cases where -- in other cases involving issues about the 17 proper remedy.

18 What's more, the impact of the decision on the 19 question of relief is quite unlike the impact of the 20 holding of unconstitutionality. The impact might only 21 be a difference of five dollars a month, as was shown in 22 the second example that I gave. I think --

23 QUESTION: Mr. Garvey, can I ask you this 24 question? You use hypothetical examples, which is 25 understandable because this problem doesn't exactly

1 arise every day. How often has this particular problem
2 -- has it ever arisen before where the Attorney General
3 has conceded the unconstitutionality of a statute?

4 MR. GARVEY: Yes. I think this is precisely
5 the question that arose in Montana Contractors against 6 Kreps, a case in which this Court dismissed for lack of 7 jurisdiction. The issue in Montana Contractors was 8 whether the plaintiff was entitled to collect damages
9 after the district court held the minority business
10 enterprise provision of the Public Works Employment Act
11 unconstitutional. And I presume because the Government 12 did not docket a separate appeal on the question of 13 unconstitutionality, this Court dismissed plaintiff's 14 appeal on the question of whether he was entitled to 15 damages because of the enforcement of that provision.

16 QUESTION: You say you presume. Certainly our 17 summary action doesn't explain it, does it?

18 MR. GARVEY: No, your summary action does not 19 explain it, although it does note that the dismissal is 20 for lack of jurisdiction.

21 I would also suggest, Justice Stevens, that it
22 may be, with the less frequent use of three-judge courts
23 nowadays, that the question may be one of more 24 significance in future cases than it has been in the 25 past. We suggested in our reply brief that the question

1 might come up in the wake of this Court's decision in 2 INS against Chada about questions of severability, which 3 we say are really no different from the question of 4 relief involved in this case.

5           So it is one which I think has not only arisen
6 in the past, but may reoccur with some frequency.

7           Let me make just one last point. The question
8 in this case is not whether this Court should review the 9 question of relief or not. The question in this case is 10 whether this Court should immediately review the 11 district court's decision on the issue of relief, 12 because we presume that if an appeal were taken to the 13 Court of Appeals and the impact of the relief really 14 were severe and it really was fairly clear that the 15 relief chosen was not the one that Congress would have 16 preferred, that certiorari is always available from the 17 Court of Appeals' decision on the question of relief
18 under Section 1254(1).

19           So the question is not whether this Court
20 should review it; it's whether it should review it 21 immediately, rather than after having the benefit of the 22 Court of Appeals' determination.

23           If there are no further questions, I'd like to 24 reserve the remainder of my time for rebuttal.

25           CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well.

1                   Mr. Dudovitz.

2                   ORAL ARGUMENT OF NEAL S. DUDOVITZ, ESQ.,

3                   ON BEHALF OF RESPONDENTS

4                   MR. DUDOVITZ: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice,
5 and may it please the Court:

6                   The issue before you today involves both 7 determining the parameters of the appeals to this Court
8 as well as appeals to the Court of Appeals under Section 9 1291.

10                  As the Government has acknowledged, the 11 federal district court in this case did hold a federal 12 statute, Section 211(a)(5)(A) of the Social Security
13 Act, unconstitutional. It also went forward and awarded 14 constitutionally adequate relief to the class members 15 whose rights were violated.

16                  The Government filed a notice of appeal from 17 the district court order holding the statute
18 unconstitutional. But they filed that notice of appeal 19 to the Ninth Circuit and not to this Court. There was,
20 as, Justice Blackmun, you noted by your question, no
21 protective appeal filed in this Court.

22                  Section 1291, which sets forth the 23 jurisdictional parameters for the Court of Appeals, says 24 that the Court of Appeals may not have jurisdiction if 25 it's possible for there to be an appeal to this Court.

1 The operative word in the statute is the word "may". If 2 you may appeal to this Court, then the Court of Appeals
3 loses its jurisdiction. And as this Court has 4 emphasized recently in its Donovan case, what that means 5 is is that there is only one place for you to go when 6 you're appealing from an order holding an Act of 7 Congress unconstitutional.

8           The issue here then turns on whether or not 9 this case presents a situation where the place for the 10 Government to go if they had an appeal was this Court.
11 We believe that the requirements of 1252 are pretty 12 clear right on its face. They talk about, as most of 13 the commentaries have pointed out, four basic 14 requirements, three of which -- that it be from a proper 15 court, that it be a civil action, the Government be a 16 party -- are really not controversial and certainly are 17 not in issue in this case, and the fourth requirement, 18 that the order being appealed from must be from a 19 holding that a statute is unconstitutional.

20           Well, there's no doubt that the order of the 21 district court from which the Government appealed was in 22 fact such an order. And it is important to recognize in 23 this case that their notice of appeal purports to be a 24 notice of appeal from that entire order. It simply 25 says, we're appealing from that final judgment where the

1 court, the district court, held the statute
2 unconstitutional.

3 We contend that, on the basis of that kind of 4 notice, which fits squarely within 1252 and particularly 5 so in a situation as here where the issue the Government
6 wants to contest is really the relief that the court 7 fashioned consistent with the Constitution to remedy the 8 violation.

9 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Dudovitz, I'm curious to 10 know how much of your position depends on the form of 11 the Government's notice of appeal. Supposing everything 12 were the same here except the Government's notice of 13 appeal said, the Government appeals from all of that 14 order the district court entered except that portion 15 holding such and such unconstitutional. Do you think 16 that should have gone to the Court of Appeals?

17 MR. DUDOVITZ: No, I don't think that should 18 have gone to the Court of Appeals. I think the fact 19 that the Government did that sort of highlights why this 20 case is appropriate, but in and of itself it is not 21 determinative. And that is because what it highlights 22 essentially is there was a choice.

23 And as I pointed out, under 1291 when there's 24 a possibility that seems to point us toward 1252. In 25 fact, the Government would concede that. The Government

1 would concede that they in fact could have appealed the 2 constitutional issue to this Court even though they 3 didn't contest it in the district court, similar to what 4 happened in the Clark case, where they didn't contest it
5 in the Court of Claims and then appealed it to this 6 Court. So that's something that the Government says can 7 happen.

8 QUESTION: Suppose a concession of 9 unconstitutionality was made and the Court of Appeals
10 rejected it. Would there then be a decision under 1252
11 on the constitutionality?

12 MR. DUDOVITZ: Yes, there would, because --

13 QUESTION: And then what should be done?

14 MR. DUDOVITZ: 1252 is not limited to 15 applicability in the district court. It also applies to 16 the Court of Appeals.

17 QUESTION: Oh, I didn't make myself clear. I
18 mean when it came to the Court of Appeals, the district 19 court not having passed on it but having accepted the 20 concession, the Court of Appeals said, no, we don't 21 accept concessions on constitutional issues and we're 22 going to decide it. Then could they decide it?

23 MR. DUDOVITZ: I guess your question presumes 24 that it was proper for that case to get in the Court of 25 Appeals in the first place. If it was, as I was trying

1 to say, if it was and then the Court of Appeals holds 2 the statute unconstitutional, then you're going to be 3 under 1252 and the appeal from the Court of Appeals 4 could come directly to this Court because, as I was 5 saying, 1252 is not limited to the district court.

6 QUESTION: As an appeal and not as a cert.

7 MR. DUDOVITZ: Not as a cert, that's correct.

8 With regard to the relationship of the relief 9 to the constitutional question, I would point out that 10 the Government itself agrees, as they've noted on page 3 11 of their reply brief, that the district court must 12 address the questions of relief as a consequence of 13 holding that statute unconstitutional. That is 14 something the court had to do.

15 That was part of its job once it found that 16 statute unconstitutional. And it seems to me that that 17 puts that issue as a predicate; that the predicate to 18 that issue therefore is the holding of 19 unconstitutionality, which therefore binds the 20 Government to do something. And that's the kind of 21 problem that the court -- excuse me -- that Congress 22 wanted to bring to this Court. When the Government was 23 going to be bound, when something was going to happen to 24 the Government as a result of holding the statute
25 unconstitutional, Congress wanted this Court to quickly

1 and promptly resolve that problem, to make sure that the 2 disruption to the Government was minimum.

3 Now, the Government's line here that they've 4 attempted to draw we contend just plainly doesn't fit 5 within the statute on its face. They are trying to 6 draw, in a sense here, lines which do not exist. There
7 is no phrase or statement in Section 1252 that suggests 8 that the issues to be appealed must be the question of 9 constitutionality.

10 QUESTION: Certainly there are intimations in 11 the second paragraph, aren't there?

12 MR. DUDOVITZ: There are, but it's very 13 different, Your Honor, from the kinds of language that 14 exist in the other direct appeal statutes, that talk 15 more about the kinds of issues, such as 1257 and 1254.
16 And it's also very different from the earlier 17 predecessor of 1252, which was repealed in 1925.

18 And in that earlier language, which the 19 Government cites in its cert petition at page 11, the 20 statute said that in any case that involves 21 constitutional construction or application of the 22 Constitution or in which the Constitution or the laws of 23 the U.S. are brought into question, that that's when you 24 bring a case up. Now, the Congress didn't go back and 25 bring that language back.

1           QUESTION: But now take the second sentence of 2 the second paragraph on page 2 of the brief: "All 3 appeals or cross appeals taken to other courts prior to 4 such notice shall be treated as taken directly to the 5 Supreme Court."

6           Now, that hypothesizes that appeals to the 7 Court of Appeals by some party would have been proper in 8 the case of a judgment which held an Act of Congress 9 unconstitutional, don't you think?

10          MR. DUDOVITZ: Well, I contend and we have 11 argued that what that could very well be referring to is 12 in fact other kinds of appeals, such as interlocutory 13 appeals, which may have been appropriate in the Court of 14 Appeals prior to the holding of the Act being 15 unconstitutional.

16          The real import of the entire second paragraph 17 is to make sure that when this Court gets a case where 18 an Act has been held unconstitutional, it gets all 19 aspects of the case so that it has the power to 20 determine what should be done in this situation to make 21 a final and quick decision in order, again, to avoid 22 disruption to the Government.

23          QUESTION: That's certainly part of what the 24 statute is trying to do. But another part, as your 25 opponent has suggested, is to select out a very few

1 cases that Congress felt deserved the immediate 2 attention of this Court, and certainly the focus of 3 Congress was on the declaration of unconstitutionality.

4 MR. DUDOVITZ: Well, I agree it's very few
5 cases, and I can partly, I think, try to answer Justice
6 Stevens' question about how many cases. There is a 7 statute, which of course the Government has cited, which 8 requires the Attorney General to notify Congress when 9 they're not going to appeal from a holding of 10 unconstitutionality.

11 It's my understanding that in the years '81, 12 '82 and '83, subsequent to this case, there have been 13 two times where the Attorney General has so notified the 14 Government. That's other than the one time before in 15 this case.

16 We're not -- this is one of those unique
17 cases. There aren't very many times when this happens.
18 In fact, the Government itself points out the great 19 difficulty it always has in conceding the 20 unconstitutionality, that they rarely do that. So this 21 is a unique case. I don't think it's a common case in 22 any way..

23 Let me add, Justice Rehnquist, to one other 24 major reason I believe that the kind of line that the 25 Government wants to draw here in terms of

1    constitutionality doesn't make sense, and that is 2    because it's really premised on the theory that in 3    interpreting the statute this Court ought to be trying 4    to minimize its mandatory docket.

5                Now, whether or not we all think that that's 6    something that ought to be done, the fact is that this 7    Court has held very explicitly that 1252 is not to be so
8    interpreted. In fact, the purpose of 1252, as this 9    Court has held before, is to expand the mandatory docket 10   and not restrict it. And therefore, the Court should 11   not view the language here with the idea of supporting 12   the minimizing of the mandatory docket, but rather with 13   the idea of what Congress desired.

14               QUESTION: I don't think our cases support
15   you. If I understand your contention, you're saying
16   that once Congress has decided to expand the mandatory 17   docket by passing a statute such as 1252, that statute 18   ought to be generously construed.

19               Now, I think that the whole history of the 20   three-judge court situation and appeals from three-judge 21   courts indicates that this Court recognizes when 22   Congress wants to increase our mandatory docket, but it 23   doesn't construe those statutes generously or 24   beneficently, or whatever you want to use, the term.

25               MR. DUDOVITZ: I think this Court has

1 explicitly said, going back to the McLucas case and in 2 the Grace Brethren Church case, that 1252 is not to be 3 construed in the same fashion as 1253, the three-judge
4 court. It is separate --

5           QUESTION: No, but what it said in McLucas was 6 that it shouldn't be construed in the same way that the 7 three-judge court appeal statute was, where we held that 8 in order to have the appeal the three-judge court had to 9 have jurisdiction. We said that wasn't required here.
10 But I don't think that really is the same thing as 11 saying we'll treat as broadly as possible the 12 substantive definitions of what can be appealed.

13           MR. DUDOVITZ: Well, I guess, Justice
14 Rehnquist, as I read those cases the Court has really 15 said that the basis for the 1253 cases was in fact
16 carrying out the principle of limiting the mandatory 17 docket of this Court, and as a result that 1253 was 18 going to be interpreted, if interpretation was 19 necessary, in a restrictive way.

20           On the other hand, the cases -- and they go
21 back before these three-judge court cases. The Reid 22 case, where the word "party" was interpreted; that the 23 Court specifically said, we're not going to take a 24 restrictive view of the word "party", we're going to 25 take a more broader view of the word "party".

1           Another -- let me add a final point on what I
2 think are some problems with the Government's line
3 drawing, and that is I think it's very difficult to draw
4 that line and then make it consistent with the footnote
5 in the Regan case, where it says that an appeal by a 6 party who succeeded in the lower court on an issue which 7 the lower court found to be constitutional fits within 8 the first paragraph.

9           That is not an appeal on the issue for which 10 the court held unconstitutional at all, and in fact, as 11 the Government has pointed out in its reply brief in 12 Regan, the real reason for that appeal was relief, 13 because in order for the plaintiffs to get the relief 14 they wanted they needed to try to succeed on a different 15 issue. They were really appealing relief.

16           And the Court didn't say that that issue comes 17 up under the second paragraph as a further appeal once
18 the Government made its appeal. Instead, it said it 19 comes up under the first paragraph. It comes up under 20 that more broad language. And I think that that's 21 consistent with what we're arguing here.

22           QUESTION: Mr. Dudovitz, you have referred to 23 the Grace Brethren Church case as supporting your view
24 and it seems to me it does no such thing. Jurisdiction
25 under 1252 in that case was premised on the district

1 court's implicit but necessary holding that the federal 2 statute was unconstitutional, and the Government
3 challenged that holding. That's the point which you 4 omitted.

5 MR. DUDOVITZ: Well, I understand that the 6 Government challenged the constitutional holding. But 7 it seems to me -- well, first of all, I don't believe 8 there is any case that the Court has actually handled 9 that is exactly the same as this case. Probably we 10 wouldn't all be here if that were true.

11 But what Grace Brethren does, I believe, is it 12 follows a line of cases from this Court which indicates 13 the broader interpretation of what it means to hold an 14 Act of Congress unconstitutional. We have cases like 15 Fleming, where --

16 QUESTION: But Grace Brethren was wrestling
17 with the problem of whether it was an implicit holding 18 of unconstitutionality.

19 MR. DUDOVITZ: Right.

20 QUESTION: That's all. It didn't deal with 21 this question at all.

22 MR. DUDOVITZ: What it does, I think, is it
23 follows from first the holding that you don't really 24 have to hold an Act of Congress unconstitutional; it can 25 be the Act applied, which is a much earlier line of 1 cases from the Fleming case.

2           And then -- and I do think that it's taken at 3 least somewhat of a step further to say, not only do you 4 not have to hold the Act itself unconstitutional, but in 5 fact if you held a state statute unconstitutional but it 6 effectively tied in the federal statute and affected the 7 operation of the statute program, the Federal Government
8 -- I think the language of Grace Brethren talks about 9 the Federal Government being effectively bound by that 10 decision of the lower court -- then you're also under 11 1252.

12           QUESTION: It found, of course, that 13 implicitly the federal statute was held unconstitutional
14 and the Government challenged that. So it is not this 15 case.

16           MR. DUDOVITZ: I wouldn't disagree that it was 17 not this case. All I'm trying to suggest is that its 18 view of how to interpret 1252 is consistent, I believe, 19 with our view of how you interpret 1252.

20           QUESTION: Mr. Dudovitz, while you're pausing
21 let me just be sure I'm right about one assumption.
22 Taking your opponent's hypothetical appeal on attorney's 23 fees, where you wanted to appeal because the court
24 didn't allow them, denied an allowance entirely, you 25 would agree that should come here under your reading of

1 the statute?

2 MR. DUDOVITZ: I would not. I think what 3 comes here under my reading of the statute is relief
4 that is necessary to remedy the constitutional wrong.
5 The attorney fees relief doesn't come from that. It
6 really comes from a separate statutory basis. That is,
7 if the statute wasn't there, if we didn't have the equal 8 access to justice statute --

9 QUESTION: Well, assume it's a single 10 judgment. The court says, it's hereby ordered that the 11 statute is declared unconstitutional, that's paragraph 12 one. Paragraph two is, there will be an award of 13 attorney's fees of $1,000.

14 You appeal from that judgment and you say, the 15 only relief I want is an increase. You are not 16 contending that that appeal would be to this Court?

17 MR. DUDOVITZ: Let me try to clarify that. I 18 think my view is that as the statute is set out that 19 definitely does fit within it, and I think that's how 20 this Court has to interpret the statute, that that's 21 correct that --

22 QUESTION: I'm not sure whether you're saying 23 there would be jurisdiction here or not.

24 MR. DUDOVITZ: On its face I think that there 25 would be jurisdiction. What I'm saying is that if this

1 Court feels -- and I would point out also that we're far 2 different from that --

3 QUESTION: I understand.

4 MR. DUDOVITZ: -- situation in this case. But 5 if this Court feels that it has to in a sense draw some 6 lines -- I mean, I think the statute is fairly clear on 7 its face, but if you have to draw some lines, the relief
8 aspects I think that fit within the constitutional 9 question are constitutionally required relief. And 10 attorney fees is not constitutionally required relief.

11 QUESTION: So you're in effect arguing, you're 12 challenging your opponent's second point rather than his 13 first point. In other words, he argues: one, it has to 14 be an appeal from the constitutional holding; and 15 secondly, he argues this case does not involve a 16 constitutional issue.

17 You're response to that is: No, this case 18 does involve a constitutional issue and that's why it's 19 appealable.

20 MR. DUDOVITZ: That's right.

21 QUESTION: You're not arguing that it would be 22 appealable even if it did not present a constitutional 23 question?

24 MR. DUDOVITZ: Probably partly arguing both.
25 I think that --

1 QUESTION: You're not, then, really relying on 2 your sort of plain language -- you're not resting your 3 whole --

4 MR. DUDOVITZ: I would not rest solely on the 5 plain language. I think even if you don't do the plain 6 language we're still there, because effectively this is 7 a constitutional ruling.

8 QUESTION: Right.

9 MR. DUDOVITZ: But under the plain language
10 there's no doubt. I mean, it seems to me that, as the 11 Government would concede, if the plain language were 12 correctly undoubtedly this case should have been here 13 under 1252.

14 QUESTION: Whether it's a constitutional
15 ruling or not that's being appealed?

16 MR. DUDOVITZ: Well, as long as the district
17 court held the statute unconstitutional, that's 18 correct.

19 QUESTION: Yes, but you're much less confident 20 on that argument, as I understand you. You aren't 21 taking a four-square position that the attorney fee
22 issue by itself would be appealable.

23 MR. DUDOVITZ: I'm saying that I think you can 24 set that issue aside if you want to, because of the fact 25 that the relief doesn't flow directly as a remedy for

1 the constitutional violation.

2 Let me finally turn to one other point which 3 the Government has requested here to this Court which I
4 want to address briefly, and that is they have asked
5 that, even if this Court determines that we are correct,
6 that the Court ought to vacate the district court's 7 order and remand to allow the district court to enter a 8 new judgment, from which a new notice of appeal could be 9 filed, and therefore they could then appeal to this 10 Court and have the relief issues brought here.

11 We think that that is a particularly 12 inappropriate action for this Court to take should the 13 Court decide in our favor. I think the question of 14 whether you do that or not is really an equitable kind 15 of decision and you must look at what the effects of 16 that are and what actions of the Government ought to be 17 protected here.

18 First, the effects of it could be very 19 disastrous to the class members in this case, who are 20 old and disabled women who, as the district court noted, 21 are largely living on the social security benefits, some 22 of which they receive as a result of this, the district 23 court's ruling. The district court's relief has been 24 fully put into place by now. In fact, it was required
25 to be so by August 1983.

1           The Government, while it sought a stay in the 2 district court, did not pursue the stay. They did not 3 argue that having the relief implemented while this was 4 going on was going to be necessarily particularly 5 harmful to them.

6           So it seems to me that their failure to do 7 that, the effect that this has on the class members, and 8 finally the fact that the Government didn't take any 9 action which you ought to really protect, which Justice
10 Blackmun pointed out by his question, they didn't file a 11 protective notice -- and it seems to me after the 12 Donovan case, which you remember came down three or four 13 months before the final judgment in this case, that at 14 worst from the Government's position there were some 15 questions to be asked as to where an appeal ought to 16 go.

17           The Government didn't do anything in this 18 situation to try to suggest that they were -- to protect 19 themselves. They could have filed two notices of 20 appeal, something that happens all the time. They could 21 have tried to say something in their notice of appeal.
22 They could have done something to indicate their 23 awareness of what they say is a difficult problem.

24           Given those circumstances and the effect on 25 the Plaintiffs, and finally noting that if what's left

1 here in this case is just the relief ordered by the 2 district court that also is relief that can be remedied
3 somewhere else. Congress can remedy that if the 4 Government thinks that the relief that's left by the 5 district court is particularly inappropriate. In fact,
6 Congress has acted on many occasions in these social 7 security sex discrimination cases to set forth new rules 8 and new standards.

9           So that to leave in place relief for a statute 10 we all agree is unconstitutional and then to have 11 another forum available to remedy that relief it seems 12 to me is not very onerous. In fact, it's less onerous, 13 I think, than what happened in the Donovan case, where 14 what was left in effect was the ruling a statute was 15 unconstitutional when the Government thought the statute 16 was constitutional. And so it seems to me that we are 17 not any different than that.

18           Just one other point before I close, and that 19 is the Government made the comment that the Montana
20 Contractors case was in effect on point here. And I
21 agree first with the comment of Justice White that that 22 summary affirmant should have little effect as a 23 precedent even if it were. But I don't think it really 24 is on point.

25           My understanding of reading what happened in

1 that case is the Government did in fact first appeal, 2 file a notice of appeal to this Court on the 3 constitutional question. As a result, the plaintiffs 4 had no choice under 1252 but to file their second appeal
5 to this Court. I think we all agree that once an appeal 6 is here under 1252 there is no choice.

7 The Government then decided not to perfect its 8 appeal. The Government never filed a jurisdictional 9 statement. It dropped its appeal and then moved to 10 dismiss the other party's appeal. They sort of got 11 stuck in this Court, and therefore the Court -- and then 12 the Court held lack of -- no jurisdiction.

13 It seems to me, given the extraordinary
14 circumstances of that situation, that that's really not 15 a case that ought to stand as precedent for this 16 situation, which is far different.

17 So I would again urge this Court to remember 18 the uniqueness of this kind of situation. It doesn't 19 happen very often. It happens very rarely and it does 20 present, I think, a situation where Congress wanted this 21 Court to be the determining factor of what was going to 22 happen to this kind of federal program.

23 Thank you.

24 QUESTION: Anything further, Mr. Garvey?

25 REBUTTAL ARGUMENT OF

1                   JOHN H. GARVEY, ESQ.,
2                   ON BEHALF OF PETITIONER

3                   MR. GARVEY: I just have three brief points, 4 if I may.

5                   If I understand correctly what Respondent's 6 counsel has said, essentially, unless they're able to 7 win on this unlikely point regarding the first 8 paragraph, what this case all boils down to is whether 9 the relief in this case is constitutionally mandated.
10 That, as the examples that I gave showed and as all the 11 cases cited in our reply brief at page 3 to 5 indicate, 12 is simply not the case.

13                   The second point I want to make is a rather 14 technical point in response to a concern by Justice
15 Rehnquist. You pointed out that under the second 16 paragraph of 1252 Congress at least contemplated that 17 some kinds of appeals would be filed to the Court of 18 Appeals prior to the filing of what I have been calling 19 the proper Section 1252 notice of appeal.

20                   Respondent in her reply brief indicated that 21 those prior appeals were probably appeals taken under 22 Section 1292(b) of the Judicial Code. In fact, Section 23 1292(b) was not enacted until 1958, so it's unlikely 24 that they had 1292(b) appeals in mind.

25                   There were -- there was a narrow class of

1 interlocutory appeals that could be taken before that 2 time, although they weren't even the kinds of appeals
3 that Rule 54(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure
4 contemplate, because that rule didn't exist in 1937
5 either. There was a narrow class that Congress probably 6 had in mind as well, simply a question of who beat in 7 filing the notice of appeal.

8           And the third point I want to make is that, if 9 we should lose the proper disposition of this case
10 should not be like the disposition of the Richland 11 County case. In the Richland County case, in the 12 Government's brief in this Court we conceded that we had 13 gone to the wrong court in taking our appeal to the 14 Court of Appeals and, as this Court said, the direction 15 in which we should have gone was clear under this 16 Court's precedents.

17           In this case, by contrast, I think we had very 18 good reason for believing in Montana Contractors against 19 Kreps that the proper place for us to go was to the 20 Court of Appeals and not to this Court. And so if we 21 should be wrong about where we should have gone, at 22 least the proper disposition would be to remand to the 23 district court for entry of a fresh decree from which we 24 may take a proper appeal to this Court.

25           QUESTION: May I ask you one final question?

1 It hasn't been argued, but I'm just suggesting a 2 rationale for requiring jurisdiction to be accepted by 3 this Court of Congress might have been that it did not 4 want the Attorney General to be able to concede the 5 unconstitutionality of statutes without this Court in 6 effect approving the concession, and that therefore they 7 wanted the mandatory jurisdiction here, because it's 8 certainly conceivable that the Attorney General might 9 unwisely make a concession of that kind. And that 10 perhaps underlies their requirement that you tell the 11 Congress whenever you do this.

12 MR. GARVEY: That's conceivable, although I,
13 having read the legislative history, have found no
14 indication of that. And what's more, the Attorney 15 General's choice to intervene or not in these cases is 16 discretionary, so that he may let go by a holding of 17 unconstitutionality without even getting involved. I 18 think in light of that what you suggest is not 19 probable.

20 QUESTION: Well, I suppose you would be taking 21 the same position even more strongly if you had 22 contested the constitutionality -- had attempted to 23 sustain the constitutionality of the statute in the 24 district court and you lost, and then, rather than 25 appeal that declaration, you appealed only the remedy.

1 MR. GARVEY: We would still be taking the same
2 position.

3 QUESTION: You'd go to the Court of Appeals?

4 MR. GARVEY: That's correct.

5 QUESTION: And if you were right then, you
6 should be right when you concede?

7 MR. GARVEY: A fortiori, we should be right
8 when we concede.

9 If there are no further questions, we would 10 rest.

11 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.
12 The case is submitted.

13 We'll resume at 1:00 o'clock.

14 (Whereupon, at 11:55 a.m., the argument in the 15 above-entitled matter was concluded.)
