P R O C E E D I N G S

CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Frey, you may proceed whenever you're ready.

ORAL ARGUMENT OF ANDREW L. FREY, ESQ.,
ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER

MR. FREY: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the Court:

In this case the Court has under review a judgment of the Ninth Circuit reversing respondents' convictions for brutal murders committed while they were inmates at the Federal correctional institution in Lompoc, California, and ordering dismissal of the indictments against them on the ground that they were denied their Sixth Amendment right to the assistance of counsel when they were held in administrative detention for more than 90 days after the killings, when that detention was, in the court's view, based in part on the pendency of a criminal investigation by the FBI for the murders.

Now essentially while there are differences in the case, the two groups of cases, the Gouveia group and the Mills group, followed a similar pattern. There was a murder. Either immediately after the murder or within several weeks thereafter the respondents who were inmates at the prison were confined in administrative 1 detention.

2           Within several weeks of that prison 3 disciplinary hearings were held and they were 4 adjudicated to have violated the prison regulations 5 against murder. They were then confined in the 6 administrative detention unit until the time they were 7 indicted, some months later.

8           QUESTION: Were they free to communicate with 9 the outside?

10           MR. FREY: They were free to make phone calls 11 to the outside, to lawyers or to others. In fact, two 12 of the individuals involved called the public defender 13 and asked for their assistance and were told that they 14 couldn't because they had not yet been indicted. So 15 they were free to communicate with the outside world, 16 including communicating with lawyers. They were 17 eventually indicted, and at that point they were 18 transferred for trial.

19           In the Mills case, motions to dismiss were 20 made and although the ground that is now the issue 21 before the Court was not raised by respondents Mills and 22 Pierce the District Court in granting the motion said 23 that their right to counsel had been denied and 24 dismissed the indictment on that ground, among others.
25 The government took an interlocutory appeal. A panel of

1 the Court of Appeals reversed and remanded for trial.

2 In the Gouveia case, the District Court denied 3 the motion for relief in which all the grounds that had 4 been relied on by the District Court in Mills were 5 raised by the Gouveia group of defendants.

6 And in Mills there was one trial after the 7 remand from the Court of Appeals; the defendants were 8 convicted and appealed. In Gouveia there was a trial 9 that resulted in a hung jury as to the present 10 respondents, an acquittal of co-defendant Flores, and an 11 acquittal of respondent Reynoso on one lesser count.

12 Those defendants also appealed. The two cases 13 were consolidated and heard by an en banc panel of the 14 Ninth Circuit, which held that the convictions should be 15 reversed and the indictments dismissed.

16 Now as we see it, the case presents one 17 primary and one secondary issue. The primary issue is 18 whether respondents' right to counsel under the Sixth
19 Amendment attached prior to the time of the commencement 20 of judicial proceedings against them by indictment.

21 If this Court disagrees with the Ninth Circuit 22 and finds, as we urge, that the right to counsel did not 23 attach prior to that time, that would be the end of the 24 case. If the Court agrees with the Ninth Circuit that 25 their right to counsel attached, then there would be the

1 further question as to whether there was a sufficient 2 showing of prejudice.

3 QUESTION: Excuse me, Mr. Frey. The time of 4 indictment is the time for appointment?

5 MR. FREY: In this particular case, the time 6 of indictment is the time that we say that the right of 7 appointment of counsel attaches, the right to assistance 8 of counsel and for indigents appointment of counsel.

9 Now given the time limitations, I'd like to 10 focus my attention in my opening argument on the primary 11 issue of the attachment of the Sixth Amendment right to 12 counsel.

13 Now the first and most obvious point about the 14 attachment of the Sixth Amendment right to counsel is 15 that it does derive from the Sixth Amendment, and the 16 Sixth Amendment says in any criminal prosecution the 17 accused shall enjoy the right to the assistance of 18 counsel. There must be, then, something that the Court 19 can say is a criminal prosecution before, I think, the 20 Court can legitimately say that the right defined in the 21 Sixth Amendment has attached.

22 The second obstacle to respondents' position 23 and the Court of Appeals position is that this Court has 24 a consistent line of decisions in which it has 25 recognized the significance of the need for their to be

1 a prosecution in existence, and it has in the context of 2 Miranda as against Massiah rights or in the context of 3 whether a lineup without counsel claim or presents a due 4 process or a right to counsel claim, it has consistently 5 looked at the question whether there is some kind of 6 charge against the defendant charging him with the crime 7 filed in a court somewhere.

8 Of course, in this case there is nothing 9 remotely like that. The sole exception to this line of 10 cases is the Escobedo case, which the Court has 11 subsequently held to be limited to its facts and plainly 12 rejected in its rationale in the later decisions.

13 And I would just point out about Escobedo that 14 that was a case that at least directly involved an 15 interference by the police between the defendant and his 16 retained counsel, who was down at the station house 17 trying to to get in to see him and was not permitted to 18 see him while he was being interrogated.

19 QUESTION: Out in the hallway.

20 MR. FREY: So it's understandable, perhaps, 21 that the Court thought the right to counsel would be 22 relevant there, although I think subsequently 23 doctrinally it's become quite clear that it wasn't.

24 Now, as I said, there is no dispute in this 25 case that there was nothing resembling a formal judicial

1 charge of any kind prior to indictment, and the rule has 2 been, I think, fairly clear and fairly easy to 3 administer as to when Sixth Amendment rights attach.

4           The Court of Appeals, however, has basically 5 thrown us into seas of uncertainty by developing a 6 concept of the functional equivalency of a prosecution 7 or an accusation, and stating that "whether a person 8 stands accused" -- and I'm quoting from their opinion -- 9 "can only be determined from the totality of the 10 circumstances." Now I hope this Court will decline the 11 invitation to set sail in these murky waters.

12           Now let's -- let me talk for a minute about 13 what the Court of Appeals thought would satisfy the 14 Sixth Amendment requirement that there be a prosecution 15 in being or the functional equivalent of a formal 16 accusation of the defendants for a crime.

17           It held that the retention in administrative 18 detention unit for more than 90 days, where part of the 19 reason for that detention is the pendency of a criminal 20 investigation. Now respondents Mills and Pierce, 21 perhaps fearing that the Court would find the breadth of 22 that rule somewhat difficult to accept, have proposed a 23 considerably narrower principle.

24           They assert that the rule of the Ninth Circuit
25 is only that where people are detained more than 90 days

1 with no legitimate security purpose but solely because 2 of the pendency of a criminal investigation by the FBI, 3 then they should be considered accused within the 4 meaning of the Sixth Amendment.

5 QUESTION: But fear was part of the 6 administrative detention for the security of other 7 inmates and staff of the prison?

8 MR. FREY: Well, I think our position, of 9 course, is that that is exactly what the administrative 10 detention is for, is for purposes of security, and I 11 do --

12 QUESTION: Well, wasn't that expressed in the 13 process?

14 MR. FREY: Well, there is some -- there is 15 some controversy over exactly what the record shows or 16 what the Court of Appeals could decide.

17 I might point out that the time that Mills and 18 Pierce made their motions in the District Court the only 19 Sixth Amendment right to counsel claim that they made 20 was a claim that they were entitled to have counsel 21 there the day that they were arrested, when their 22 physical wounds were examined, and when evidence was 23 seized from their person.

24 There was no claim that they were deprived of 25 their right to counsel during the period of detention,

1 and there was really no focus during the hearings on the 2 pretrial motions on the question of why they were being 3 detained, although there was considerable focus in both 4 cases on the consequences of detention in terms of the 5 difficulty of ultimately mounting a defense.

6           The result is that the record contains very 7 little as to why they were detained, but it does contain 8 forms that state that the reason that they were detained 9 was for the security of the institution and the safety
10 of inmates within the institution. Some of those forms 11 also indicate that they were -- there are boxes that can 12 be checked off and the pendency of a criminal 13 investigation was also a reason given on those forms.

14           Now, when the case went up to the panel of the 15 Court of Appeals on the government's appeal, that was 16 the first time that this question of why they were being 17 detained, whether it was for security purposes or 18 others, was brought into focus by the parties, and at 19 that point the panel simply said the evidence shows that 20 they were kept in for security purposes.

21           And, more than that -- and this is a point 22 where I think the Court of Appeals made a fundamental 23 error -- the Court of Appeals misconstrued the Bureau's 24 regulations and the regulation that's relevant is at 25 Section 541.22 of Title 28, CFR.

1           The regulation says that people can be 2 retained, placed in administrative detention when the 3 inmate's continued presence in the general population
4 poses a serious threat to life, property, self, staff, 5 other inmates, or to the security or orderly running of 6 the institution, and when the inmate -- and then it 7 lists six factors, including the pendency of an 8 investigation or trial for a criminal act, the pendency 9 of a transfer, and several other factors.

10           These regulations mean that an inmate cannot 11 be held in administrative detention except where there 12 is a finding that releasing him into the general 13 population would be inconsistent with the security of 14 the institution. The only exception for that holdover 15 is inmates who are in transit from one institution to 16 another and are being held waiting for the next bus, and 17 they can be held and customarily are in administrative 18 detention without a finding of security need.

19           So under the regulations they cannot be held 20 except on the basis of a security need. And I might say 21 that in this case it does not take a great deal of 22 imagination to see the security reasons. The prison 23 authorities had found that these people had committed 24 brutal murders.

25           To return these inmates to the general

1 population at Lompoc was, I think, totally out of the 2 question both in terms of the safety of these inmates 3 themselves, who might be subject to retaliation by 4 friends of the deceased, and in terms of the safety of 5 potential government witnesses or informants or people 6 who they might think are government witnesses or 7 informants.

8 QUESTION: Mr. Frey --

9 MR. FREY: So the one thing that I think 10 clearly was not going to happen ever with these people 11 was to return them to the general population at Lompoc.

12 QUESTION: May I ask you, you make a very 13 major point out of the reason for the detention being 14 security rather than investigation. Would the issue 15 before us be different if it were for investigative 16 purposes after the 90 days?

17 MR. FREY: No, of course --

18 QUESTION: The issue -- I mean, is this 19 critical to your case?

20 MR. FREY: Let me put it this way. Certainly 21 in our view it is not critical to our case. In our 22 view, our first argument -- and we think the precedents 23 of the Court clearly support it -- is there has to be in 24 some court somewhere something that resembles a charge
25 of a crime before the Sixth Amendment attaches, and all

1 of the rest of this is irrelevant -- functional 2 equivalent analysis or symbolic --

3 QUESTION: It seems to me your argument would 4 be very relevant if there were a suit for damages for 5 being detained for too long or something like that, but 6 under your Sixth Amendment analysis I'm not quite sure 7 why it makes any difference why they were detained.

8 MR. FREY: Well, I am responding to the 9 rationale of the Court of Appeals and the rationale of 10 my brother who you will hear from.

11 QUESTION: But your central response, as I
12 understand it, is that no Sixth Amendment right attaches 13 no matter what the reason for the detention.

14 MR. FREY: That is true, but I am now in this 15 portion of the argument trying to address the question 16 whether if there were a some functional equivalency or 17 symbolic accusation rationale that would be acceptable, 18 whether this case would satisfy the requirement.

19 QUESTION: Well, these prisoners weren't going 20 anywhere anyway, were they?

21 MR. FREY: Well, they were going somewhere.
22 They were going to the control unit in Marion.

23 QUESTION: Well, they were going to remain in 24 custody somewhere.

25 MR. FREY: There's no question that they were

1 going to be in custody. The question is whether they 2 were going to be in custody in the general population at 3 Lompoc, the administrative detention unit at Lompoc, or 4 someplace else.

5 QUESTION: Was there a claim of some 6 constitutional right to be in a particular part of the 7 prison on the part of these people?

8 MR. FREY: No, that's not the issue in this 9 case.

10 QUESTION: Did the Ninth Circuit give any hint 11 that there was some right to be in a particular part of 12 the prison?

13 MR. FREY: No. That would be an issue -- I
14 mean, if we are talking about it as a matter of due 15 process liberty interest, that would be an issue that 16 would require application of the principles of Hewitt v.
17 Helms, decided last term, to the particular regulations
18 of the Bureau of Prisons.

19 But that's not the basis of the Ninth
20 Circuit's ruling. The basis of the Ninth Circuit's 21 ruling is that they were held in administrative 22 detention. One of the reasons, and that's why I 23 emphasize that it was conjunctive -- you have to find 24 that they are a threat to the security of the 25 institution, but the Bureau has framed the regulations

1 in such a way as not to give the warden simply 2 essentially standardless authority. He must find not 3 only that they are a threat, but also that one of six 4 other conditions exists.

5 One of them is that he is pending criminal 6 investigation or trial. One of them is that he is 7 pending transfer. Now in the case of all these inmates, 8 and I have to emphasize that the record is incomplete, 9 we have supplied certain forms that we have retrieved 10 from the Bureau of Prisons recently and lodged them with 11 the Clerk.

12 But I think it is fair to say that if there 13 were a hearing on this question it could be established 14 that these inmates were being held both -- always for 15 security reasons, always because there was a 16 determination that it was dangerous to return them to 17 the general population. But, in addition, in order to 18 meet the other second independent requirement because 19 they were awaiting transfer and because there was a 20 criminal investigation.

21 But the point that's relevant to this case is 22 if there had been no criminal investigation pending, 23 they would not have been released into the general
24 population at Lompoc. They were still awaiting transfer 25 to the Marion facilities.

1           QUESTION: Then I take it that according to 2 the Court of Appeals there wouldn't be any right to 3 counsel either if the day that this prisoner asked for 4 the appointment of counsel they just let him out of the 5 control unit.

6           MR. FREY: That's clear, or indeed they said 7 he could be held for 90 days and then let out of the 8 control unit.

9           QUESTION: Yes. They let him out and his 10 right to counsel claim fails even though the 11 investigation goes on.

12          MR. FREY: The investigation against him goes 13 one. But their point is that the detention is like an 14 arrest.

15          QUESTION: I understand. I understand.

16          MR. FREY: And they rely on the Sixth 17 Amendment speedy trial cases that discuss arrest.

18          Now there is, I think, some language that is 19 debatable in some of those cases, but you have to 20 recognize that in speedy trial cases -- Marion 21 originally formulated in terms of the attachment of the 22 speedy trial right is when you are arrested and held to 23 answer criminal charges.

24          Subsequent cases like Dillingham talk about 25 arrest, but the point is that arrest alone, as MacDonald

1 makes clear, is not enough to trigger Sixth Amendment
2 rights or, if it does, they get untriggered the minute 3 you're let out with no criminal charges pending against 4 you.

5 It is the pendency of criminal charges that 6 activate, that satisfy the Sixth Amendment requirement
7 that there be a prosecution. An arrest is not a 8 prosecution. That's what Kirby held.

9 QUESTION: So the Court of Appeals in effect 10 said if you hold him beyond 90 days it is equivalent to 11 a --

12 MR. FREY: It's a symbolic accusation or a 13 functional equivalent of an accusation, and --

14 QUESTION: Well, the Court of Appeals really 15 pretty well repudiated the reasoning of the plurality
16 opinion in Kirby, didn't it?

17 MR. FREY: Well, it would be our view I don't 18 think it can stand against the plurality opinion in 19 Kirby or the later cases that draw this distinction -- I 20 mean, Ash and --

21 QUESTION: Kirby really rejected this kind of 22 functional equivalent type of analysis in this 23 particular situation.

24 MR. FREY: Well, it's true that Kirby must 25 stand for the proposition that an arrest doesn't cause

1 the attachment of Sixth Amendment rights, but what Kirby 2 is relevant to is a somewhat different point.

3 The respondents have a quite different reason 4 for saying the Sixth Amendment attached here, and that 5 is a reason that says it would be awfully helpful to 6 have a lawyer in terms of preparing a defense.

7 QUESTION: But don't you think what they 8 really meant was it would be helpful to have a private 9 investigator.

10 MR. FREY: Exactly.

11 QUESTION: And the Sixth Amendment doesn't 12 guarantee any right to a private investigator.

13 MR. FREY: Well, if you were to affirm the 14 Ninth Circuit --

15 QUESTION: Then you would.

16 MR. FREY: Then the next claim would be that 17 if you have a right of preindictment investigation you 18 have to then have a constitutional right to enforce that 19 through court orders requiring access to the 20 prosecution's evidence.

21 A lot is made in this case of the lack of 22 access to physical evidence being prejudicial to the 23 preparation of the possible defense in the event these 24 people are indicted. Well, I can assure that unless a 25 court orders it the defendant's lawyer would not be

1 given access to the bag with the name Sanchez that was 2 found in the victim's cell, the blood samples, all those 3 other things.

4 QUESTION: Mr. Frey, how much of that material
5 was used? There were disciplinary hearings, weren't 6 there, and they went through some kind of determination 7 that they were involved in the murder?

8 MR. FREY: There were disciplinary hearings
9 and they were found to be involved in the murder.

10 QUESTION: So some of the evidence was 11 disclosed to them.

12 MR. FREY: No.

13 QUESTION: Wasn't it? They didn't 14 participate?

15 MR. FREY: No. That's one of the features 16 that is the -- perhaps the most salient feature about 17 prison disciplinary hearings is the non-disclosure of 18 evidence that Wolff v. McDonnell allows, I mean, for 19 instance, the non-disclosure of witnesses.

20 One reason why the prison authorities can in 21 many cases promptly determine the guilt of somebody but 22 the prosecuting authorities it may take them a long 23 time, if ever, to make a prosecutable, indictable case, 24 is because the prison authorities can rely on informants 25 whose identity is never disclosed, so they don't have to 1 deal with the right of confrontation.

2 And they do not disclose to the defendant the 3 physical evidence. They give him an opportunity to be 4 heard. They give him an opportunity to call witnesses, 5 which was declined in this case by and large. So they 6 give him an opportunity to present some kind of a 7 defense. They give him a prison staff assistant.

8 But they do not give him access to the 9 evidence, and if he had a lawyer appointed and the 10 lawyer came to the prison door, to the FBI, and said I'd 11 like to look at the evidence --

12 QUESTION: Of course, even though they don't 13 make the evidence available to him they have formed a 14 judgment that there is at least probable cause to 15 believe he committed the murder in order to impose 16 discipline.

17 MR. FREY: They may be quite certain that he's 18 committed a murder.

19 QUESTION: Then if they know this, I guess 20 this doesn't relate to the constitutional issue, but 21 what would be wrong with giving him a lawyer at that 22 point then they know they are going to indict him for 23 murder?

24 MR. FREY: What is wrong with giving him a 25 lawyer at that point?

1                   QUESTION: Yeah. You know you're going to 2 indict the man for murder.

3                   MR. FREY: No, no, wait a minute. You've made 4 a very important step inadvertently.

5                   QUESTION: Well, if you don't indict him for 6 murder, no harm would be done.

7                   MR. FREY: We know --

8                   QUESTION: If there's a strong probability, if 9 you've had all these informants and you've made a 10 judgment in the disciplinary proceeding that he killed
11 the person, there's a likelihood that he'll be indicted 12 for murder and a probability he's going to need a 13 lawyer. Why not appoint him?

14                  MR. FREY: Well, I think it's difficult for me 15 to answer that question. If this were a legislative 16 committee, I would be, I think, better prepared to 17 respond to that question. We've had some material 18 adduced by our opponents which is properly addressed to 19 a legislative committee about the problems of lawyers in 20 prison.

21                  The question here is whether the Constitution 22 requires it.

23                  QUESTION: I understand.

24                  MR. FREY: And --

25                  QUESTION: So basically your argument is well,

1 it might be a good idea, but the Constitution doesn't 2 require it?

3 MR. FREY: Well, it's difficult for me to 4 say -- I don't think giving them a lawyer would be of a 5 great deal of use to them. I don't agree with the basic 6 assumption that it's no good to have a lawyer later on 7 and you need one.

8 In fact, going back to the point that Justice 9 Rehnquist made, it can't be that the Court of Appeals is 10 saying you need the specialized talents of a lawyer in 11 this situation, which is what the Sixth Amendment right 12 to counsel is about, if it would be a satisfactory 13 substitute for that to let them just back into the 14 prison population to conduct their own investigation.

15 Just as you would not say if you had a 16 defendant who was arrested and indicted and released on 17 bail and then his lawyer became ill and no substitute 18 lawyer was appointed for him until the morning of trial, 19 nobody would entertain a claim that he was out and he 20 could conduct his own investigation, he didn't need a 21 lawyer.

22 The point is that once he is going to be tried 23 he needs a lawyer and we supply him a lawyer at critical 24 stages of the investigation. But prior to that time he 25 does not have a right to a lawyer. It might be helpful,

1     although our --

2                   QUESTION: Mr. Frey, wouldn't it be truthful 3     to say that a lawyer can't do him much good under the 4     rules in the institution?

5                   MR. FREY: I think it would be hard for a 6     lawyer to do him a great deal of good unless you're not 7     only going to give him a right to a lawyer but you're 8     also going to say that the Constitution requires that 9     the lawyer be allowed into the institution to wander 10    around, talk to people, that he be allowed to see the 11    physical evidence, that he be allowed to do a lot of 12    things.

13                   So you may be biting off a little more than 14    you can chew if you start down this road. Now maybe 15    that would be a good idea, but I --

16                   QUESTION: And perhaps give the lawyer the 17    right to confer immunity on witnesses?

18                   MR. FREY: Well, I mean I'm sure there's no 19    limit to what the lawyers could imagine they could have 20    that would be useful, and I don't deny that in many 21    instances a lot of these things would be useful.

22                   QUESTION: One thing he might do, as sometimes 23    happens, he negotiates a plea agreement, so the whole 24    thing --

25                   MR. FREY: There is such a thing as --

1 pre-indictment plea negotiation does go on, not in a 2 case like this. I don't think that's very practical.

3 What -- in the real world, what happens is 4 it's very important to have that indictment or 5 information or charge because that's when the lawyer 6 knows what the government's case is. At that point he 7 does get some discovery, gets physical evidence. He 8 gets his client's prior statements.

9 If he starts doing a very active investigation 10 before then, one of the reasons why it's not common is 11 he may only put himself in a position where he is 12 handicapped in representing his client once he knows 13 what the government is actually charging him with and 14 what his case is.

15 So even where the Sixth Amendment right to 16 counsel attaches for purposes of a preliminary hearing, 17 a bail hearing, and so on, it is simply not the fact 18 that the lawyer immediately goes out and starts
19 investigating the case. They may or they may not. It 20 may or may not be helpful.

21 Our position here does not depend on any 22 conclusion that it would have been useless to these 23 respondents to have lawyers, but I think they greatly 24 exaggerate the value that it would have been to them.

25 Now I wanted also to make just one other

1 point, which is that their emphasis on the utility of a 2 lawyer, even if you accept it, does not put them in any 3 different position from lots of other people, such as 4 people who get in a serious automobile accident and are 5 in a hospital for six months while the government is 6 investigating their case, people who are arrested on 7 other charges.

8               And I believe Mr. Levine is going to argue 9 this morning. I am told he had a client who was in 10 precisely that situation -- arrested on state charges, 11 put in a state prison, and meanwhile a federal 12 investigation was going on.

13              Or if we had let these folks out of jail. If 14 their mandatory release date had come, they would not 15 have been held in administrative detention. They would 16 have been released. They would have been just as unable 17 to conduct an investigation.

18              One other point I wanted to make, and that is 19 that the whole code of guilt rationale falls down if you 20 look at what they did with respondent Gouveia. He was 21 transferred within 90 days out of ADU in Lompoc and sent 22 to Leavenworth. There was no question that he was being 23 held in ADU as some kind of symbolic accusation of the 24 crime of murder. He was transferred to Leavenworth, and 25 they still dismissed the indictment against him.

1 I'd like to reserve the balance of my time.

2 QUESTION: Mr. Diamond.

3 ORAL ARGUMENT OF CHARLES P. DIAMOND, ESQ.

4 ON BEHALF OF RESPONDENTS

5 MR. DIAMOND: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
6 please the Court:

7 In the time allotted to me to address the right
8 to counsel issue I would like to make four principal 9 points concerning the decision below.

10 First, the decision does not limit the right 11 of the government to order an inmate into segregated
12 confinement or to hold him there indefinitely. It 13 simply recognizes that under limited circumstances an 14 inmate can be rendered an accused by that confinement
15 and under limited circumstances is entitled to counsel.
16 The government does not point to any adverse 17 consequences which could flow from that decision.

18 Point two, the decision of the Court of 19 Appeals fully accommodates the interests of the 20 government in responding promptly to disruptive events.
21 Indeed, it only pertains to those who have been held 22 under Bureau of Prisons' own regulations to answer in a 23 pending criminal indictment.

24 In that respect, the decision of the Court of 25 Appeals is far less rigorous than standards that have

1 been promulgated by the American Bar Association and 2 other legal groups.

3 Point three. The Court of Appeals did not 4 require the appointment of counsel for all inmates
5 confined in administrative detention for more than 90
6 days. Contrary to what Mr. Frey says about this case, 7 this case concerns only inmates who have been detained 8 to answer in pending criminal charges and thus who in a 9 constitutional sense have been accused of a crime.

10 Point four. The decision below does not 11 represent any radical departure from anything. It 12 simply stands for the proposition that those arrested 13 within the walls of a prison are as much entitled to 14 legal representation as those who are arrested outside 15 the walls of an institution.

16 In light of Mr. Frey's comments, I'd like to 17 diverge from the order in which I was going to cover 18 these points and plunge right into the constitutional 19 basis for what the Court of Appeals did. That really 20 goes to the third point that I wanted to cover this 21 morning in that the Court of Appeals recognized a right 22 to counsel only in inmates who have been held in a 23 constitutional sense because they have been accused of a 24 crime.

25 What the Court of Appeals looked to were the

1 Bureau of Prison regulations which state an inmate can 2 be detained indefinitely -- and in this case we have up 3 to 20 months of detention -- without a lawyer while he 4 is pending criminal investigation and trial for a 5 criminal act committed in the institution.

6 QUESTION: Where would he have been had there
7 been no murders or other injuries?

8 MR. DIAMOND: He would have remained within 9 his general population at the Lompoc Penitentiary. He 10 would not have been confined, or these individuals would 11 not have been confined in three by five-foot cells for 12 23-1/2 hours a day for 20 months without anyone to do 13 anything about the charges that everybody knew was 14 coming down the pike.

15 QUESTION: You say he couldn't do anything.
16 They did make telephone calls.

17 MR. DIAMOND: In limited circumstances they 18 had limited access to make telephone calls.

19 QUESTION: They did, right. Is there anything 20 else?

21 MR. DIAMOND: That was the extent to which 22 they could communicate with the outside world, coupled 23 with the potential of having visits, if a visitor showed 24 up to see them.

25 QUESTION: No letters?

1 MR. DIAMOND: I'm sorry. Also they had the 2 right to communicate with the outside world by mail.

3 QUESTION: And receive?

4 MR. DIAMOND: Yes.

5 But with respect to communications within the 6 inmate population, and that is where the body of 7 witnesses that would have been available to build a 8 defense on their behalf resided, they had absolutely no 9 means of communication with the possible exception of 10 the illustrations that Mr. Frey points out.

11 QUESTION: Mr. Diamond, Kirby was arrested, 12 wasn't he, before charges were preferred against him, 13 and the holding of the Court was that even though he was 14 arrested it did not bring into effect the Sixth
15 Amendment right to counsel. So even though you 16 establish that this person was detained pending criminal 17 charges, if you don't show that there was some sort of 18 commencement of criminal prosecution it seems to me 19 you're contrary to the Kirby case.

20 MR. DIAMOND: Justice Rehnquist, we don't 21 believe it is at all contrary to the Kirby case.
22 Indeed, Mr. Kirby, in the Kirby case, was arrested, but 23 the crucial fact, in our opinion, that makes Kirby much 24 different than this case is that he was not detained to 25 answer, and I'd like to come back to Kirby in greater

1 depth.

2 But I want to refer to --

3 QUESTION: What do you mean by the term
4 "detained to answer"?

5 MR. DIAMOND: That is the words that this 6 Court used in United States v. Marion, reaffirmed four 7 years later in Dillingham v. United States, to define 8 when for purposes of the Sixth Amendment a criminal 9 prosecution commences.

10 QUESTION: But they're talking there about the 11 constitutional right to a speedy trial. They weren't 12 talking about the right to counsel.

13 MR. DIAMOND: What the Court was talking about 14 in that decision was the following clause of the Sixth 15 Amendment: "In all criminal prosecutions the accused 16 shall enjoy the right." The Sixth Amendment proceeds to 17 list and identify various rights that are enjoyed by an 18 accused, but Marion dealt with what does it mean to be 19 an accused, what constitutes an accusation during the 20 course of a criminal proceeding.

21 QUESTION: Well, supposing one were to 22 conclude that perhaps the language in Marion pointed one 23 way and the language in Kirby pointed another, Kirby 24 having dealt with right to counsel and Marion having 25 dealt with speedy trial? Wouldn't Kirby govern here?

1           MR. DIAMOND: Justice Rehnquist, they're not 2 at all inconsistent, and let me explain why. Let me
3 first state that the reason the Court of Appeals found 4 these individuals entitled to counsel or at least 5 accused in a constitutional sense was because they were 6 detained to be held to answer in a pending charge.

7           What was the situation --

8           QUESTION: Well, how do you know it was then 9 pending? That's just language.

10          MR. DIAMOND: We conducted -- that was the 11 principal issue, Justice White, that was litigated in 12 the District Court before Judge Gray, who dismissed the 13 indictments in this case originally. What we had were 14 detention orders which recited the fact that these 15 individuals were committed to administrative detention 16 on the nights of the crimes, and this pertains to my 17 clients, Mr. Mills and Mr. Pierce; we have an analogous 18 proceeding in the other case.

19          But those detention orders recited the fact 20 that the individuals had been put in ADU because of the 21 pending criminal investigation and the pending criminal 22 trial.

23          QUESTION: Well, I know, but they weren't 24 being -- the only time they would be held to answer a 25 charge is if the charge was filed.

1           MR. DIAMOND: Marion -- I'll try to answer
2 this question then I'd like to return to Justice
3 Rehnquist's question.

4           Marion's use of the term "holding to answer" 5 does not mean that there has to be a charge, a formal 6 charge, on file. In fact, the Court, in Marion, 7 stated --

8           QUESTION: Well, what about Kirby, like 9 Justice Rehnquist says? What about Kirby?

10          MR. DIAMOND: Kirby is readily explained by a 11 number of facts. Number one, it dealt principally with 12 the question of whether to extent the Wade-Gilbert
13 exclusionary rule to retain police show-ups conducted 14 upon arrest.

15          In a constitutional sense --

16          QUESTION: Now that is not the thrust of 17 Justice Stewart's opinion, as I recall the case. That 18 is just Justice Powell's concurrence.

19          MR. DIAMOND: That is correct. But Justice
20 Stewart's comments, as I recall, commanded four votes.
21 But I would like to deal with Justice Stewart's comments 22 and the result reached by Justice Stewart as they would 23 apply to this case.

24          Marion tells us that if one is accused in a 25 constitutional sense, that the Sixth Amendment becomes

1 operable in the first instance if one suffers the 2 imposition and actual restraints, and the holding to 3 answer. Marion makes clear that -

4 QUESTION: What does that mean -- "holding to 5 answer"?

6 MR. DIAMOND: A decision to bring the guy into 7 the stationhouse and not cut him loose and let him go 8 home, to hold him there --

9 QUESTION: That's just arrest.

10 MR. DIAMOND: It's an arrest and a decision to 11 keep him there until something happens.

12 QUESTION: So you say the language in Marion 13 doesn't mean that he's being held to answer a charge 14 that's been filed? You think it means that he is being 15 held to answer a charge if it's ever filed?

16 MR. DIAMOND: He has been held to answer a 17 charge that the prosecutors are preparing to bring 18 against him.

19 QUESTION: Well, that's certainly contrary to 20 the normal meaning of "hold to answer" that we learned, 21 at least we learned in the days when I was in law 22 school, that being held to answer is going before a 23 magistrate to see if there's probable cause. If the 24 magistrate says there's probable cause, you are held to 25 answer and bail is set.

1 MR. DIAMOND: But, Justice --

2 QUESTION: It is inconceivable you would be 3 held to answer without there being a charge to which you 4 are held to answer to.

5 MR. DIAMOND: Justice Rehnquist, I understand 6 the Solicitor General tries to tie the concept of 7 holding to answer into the procedure that we have.

8 QUESTION: Well, I speak out of my experience, 9 not what the Solicitor General is trying to do.

10 MR. DIAMOND: I understand that. But my point 11 is how could Marion have referred to a procedure in 12 which a magistrate determines probable cause and binds 13 someone over when it was decided in 1971 and wasn't 14 until 1975 in Gerstein v. Pugh that this Court for the 15 first time recognized that one arrested had a right to 16 go through that process.

17 Beyond that, what that argument reduces to is 18 that the police can go out on the street and they can 19 throw somebody in the hoosegow, and if they decide not 20 to bring him before a magistrate or, in this case, since 21 the rules don't apply, don't have to, he has not been 22 held to answer.

23 QUESTION: Well, Kirby says that no Sixth 24 Amendment right to counsel is implicated in those 25 circumstances. Now maybe some other constitutional

1 right is.

2 MR. DIAMOND: Let me attempt to distinguish 3 Kirby, because I think it is distinguishable from the 4 situation that Marion addressed, it's distinguishable
5 from the situation here.

6 The problem in Kirby or what happened in Kirby 7 was an individual was, Mr. Kirby was taken off the 8 street, largely because the police thought he was 9 somebody else, and he was in possession of, as I recall, 10 traveler's checks with somebody else's name in it, and 11 they thought that was suspicious and they brought him to 12 the station house for further investigation.

13 They get to the station house and for the 14 first time the police learn that the man whose 15 traveler's checks he was carrying was the victim of a 16 robbery. Well, it's not unlawful to carry those 17 traveler's checks and in fact Mr. Kirby had an 18 explanation for that.

19 They had made no decision to hold him to 20 answer. The police went out and got the victim, brought 21 him in, and conducted an uncounseled lineup. It wasn't 22 until after that uncounseled lineup that they decided to 23 hold Mr. Kirby for the robbery charge. At the time 24 Kirby was subjected to the uncounseled lineup, he had --

25 QUESTION: You mean it wasn't until then they

1 decided to file a charge against him?

2 MR. DIAMOND: No, it wasn't until then that 3 they decided to hold him until a charge could be filed.

4 QUESTION: Mr. Diamond, when should he have 5 counsel in this case? What point in time?

6 MR. DIAMOND: Justice Marshall, we believe 7 that an inmate detained under these circumstances
8 plainly is entitled to a lawyer sooner than 20 months 9 after he is isolated.

10 QUESTION: When?

11 MR. DIAMOND: We seen the principle emerging 12 from the Sixth Amendment cases that an individual must 13 be afforded representation within a reasonable period of 14 time following arrest.

15 QUESTION: What is a reasonable time in this 16 case?

17 MR. DIAMOND: In this case, the Court of 18 Appeals --

19 QUESTION: Well, for example, the government 20 says when he was indicted.

21 MR. DIAMOND: Certainly it can't be 22 indictment, because that means the door is limitless and 23 there's no right to counsel under these circumstances.
24 I think a proper benchmark might well be the rules that 25 apply outside the prison population.

1 In virtually -- in all the states --

2 QUESTION: I don't see how you can apply 3 outside the prison population.

4 MR. DIAMOND: Well, I think --

5 QUESTION: Well, when?

6 MR. DIAMOND: Within 90 days after the inmate 7 is confined.

8 QUESTION: On the 89th day? You're putting it 9 on time now, not on condition.

10 MR. DIAMOND: Justice Marshall, that is what 11 this case is about. It's about time, in part. It's 12 about 20 months of isolation.

13 QUESTION: If he had been released on the 89th 14 day, you wouldn't be here?

15 MR. DIAMOND: That is correct under the Ninth 16 Circuit decision.

17 QUESTION: That's what you are urging us to --

18 MR. DIAMOND: That is the rule of the Ninth 19 Circuit decision and in that respect we endorse that 20 principle.

21 What this case is analogous to, not Kirby,
22 because Kirby is distinguishable on the constitutional 23 basis that there was not a holding to answer. The case 24 is analogous to situations which rarely arise in this 25 nation of an individual arrested and then detained for

1 an unconscionably long period of time without a lawyer.
2 Those cases are indeed rare under our system of justice 3 because nowhere in this country can an individual be 4 arrested without in a reasonable period of time having a 5 lawyer appointed for him.

6 But in the rare case in which that has arisen
7 the courts have uniformly condemned that result. One 8 example was Chism v. Koehler, and only one of two 9 examples in the Federal system that we were able to 10 find, in which Mr. Chism was arrested and then forced to 11 litigate for the next 15 months as to whether he had the 12 right to appointed counsel in the first place.

13 The Court there in reversing the 14 convictions -- and this is the Sixth Circuit adopting 15 the language of the District Court -- noted in three 16 sentences the unfairness of the situation.

17 The Court said: "During the 15 months that 18 petitioner was incarcerated without the assistance of 19 trial counsel there was no one to gather and preserve 20 evidence which might have been favorable to the 21 defense. Meanwhile the state was proceeding in the case 22 with all the investigative expertise and resources at 23 its disposal. Such an imbalance strikes the very 24 essence of even-handed criminal justice."

25 It is precisely that situation of which we are

1 complaining in this case. There was no question but 2 that within hours in the case of Mills and within weeks 3 in the case of the Gouveia prosecution that there would 4 be a criminal prosecution -- no question whatsoever.
5 And we contend that within a reasonable point an 6 individual has to be recognized for what he is under 7 those circumstances. He has in effect been arrested.
8 He has been held to answer a criminal charge.

9 One point that I think must be understood in 10 response to Mr. Frey's comments, there were no security 11 rationales applicable in this case. We had a District 12 Court finding which was concurred in by the Court of 13 Appeals.

14 Thank you.

15 QUESTION: Mr. Levine.

16 ORAL ARGUMENT OF JOEL LEVINE, ESQ.

18 MR. LEVINE: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
19 please the Court:

20 I am going to attempt to address my comments 21 for the most part to what Mr. Frey has referred to as 22 the secondary issue, and I will attempt to first agree 23 with one thing that he said. It is a secondary issue, 24 the issue being the remedy that was fashioned by the 25 Ninth Circuit, only in the sense that if there is no

1 right to counsel, as has been discussed by Mr. Diamond, 2 then there is really no need to discuss what the remedy 3 should be.

4           However, I think as a prefatory remark I
5 should state to the Court that if there were no
6 prejudice as pervasive as existed in this case there 7 would be no need for us all to be standing here 8 discussing whether the right to counsel should apply.

9           And as we weave our way through ten appellate 10 briefs and the oral arguments that have been heard here 11 today I think that one thing becomes apparent, and that 12 is throughout all those arguments nobody has suggested 13 an alternate remedy that works.

14           There are cases which this Court has 15 considered down through the years, where the --

16           QUESTION: What do you mean "works" -- that 17 avoids a conviction?

18           MR. LEVINE: Well, hopefully so, Your Honor, 19 but what I'm specifically speaking about is remedies 20 such as suppression of a statement or suppression of 21 part of a government's -- of the government's evidence.
22 That was briefly spoken --

23           QUESTION: How would you have a remedy that 24 affects that?

25           MR. LEVINE: Well, my point is that there can

1 be no other remedy on this type of a case other than 2 dismissal of the indictment. These other remedies that 3 I am attempting to just illustrate to the Court would 4 not work.

5 QUESTION: You mean if there's been a denial 6 of the right to counsel?

7 MR. LEVINE: That's right. That's right. My 8 argument presupposes --

9 QUESTION: In other words, it doesn't help you
10 to prove that there's a right to counsel when you say 11 you don't get these kinds of remedies.

12 MR. LEVINE: Well, Your Honor, in a sense you 13 do. Really the attempt to bifurcate these two issues is 14 probably a little unfair to this Court. The lawyers in 15 this case, all of us who are seated here today, when we 16 came upon the scene of these cases -- and this is in the 17 record -- it is our contention that we were faced with 18 an insurmountable burden in attempting to build a 19 defense and defend our clients.

20 Now some of the highlights of that are 21 contained in the record of this case. By way of 22 example, one of the lawyers in his brief discussed the 23 fact that there were 67 inmates who could have had some 24 knowledge of the murder which occurred in a certain unit 25 at Lumpoc.

1                   QUESTION: Could they have telephoned you with 2 respect to these matters?

3                   MR. LEVINE: If they knew us.

4                   QUESTION: Could the clients that you're now 5 representing have telephoned you and got advice over the 6 telephone or by visits which were allowed?

7                   MR. LEVINE: Well, that would have been the 8 case had somebody who was associated with them retained 9 an attorney such as myself, and if these defendants, we 10 have to assume, had the ability to pay for an attorney.
11 But we are dealing with defendants who are indigent, who 12 did not have the ability to retain an attorney either at 13 the time of these murders or 20 months later.

14                   They all established their indigency and, Your 15 Honor, in the opinion by Judge Sneed, the majority 16 opinion of the Ninth Circuit, that was one of the 17 requirements of his rule, was that the inmate, in order 18 to be afforded the right to counsel needed to establish 19 indigency. He further needed to ask for an attorney.

20                   And if he was held outside the general prison
21 population for a period in excess of 90 days then Judge 22 Sneed said, with the majority of the court, that he 23 would either have to be released to the population of 24 the prison or afforded an attorney. He gave the Bureau
25 of Prisons a choice.

1           QUESTION: How much better off with respect to 2 being able to prepare his defense would he have been in 3 the general prison population than in the control unit?

4           MR. LEVINE: Well, in the control unit --

5           QUESTION: Because I guess you can see that if 6 he had been released to the control unit he could have 7 asked for counsel forever and wouldn't have been 8 entitled to it, even if he was indigent.

9           MR. LEVINE: Well, Your Honor --

10          QUESTION: Until there had been a charge 11 filed.

12          MR. LEVINE: I understand that.

13          QUESTION: Isn't that right? Isn't that 14 right?

15          MR. LEVINE: I think he has a tremendous 16 advantage by going to the general population. First of 17 all, let's say for the sake of argument --

18          QUESTION: Well, he's not going to get an 19 attorney appointed for him, so what does he do to help 20 himself?

21          MR. LEVINE: Okay. In the general prison 22 population there are perhaps 15 times as many inmates as 23 there are in control unit, if we assume there are 15 24 units in the prison. In that inmate population are 25 going to be, especially if he is released within a

1 relatively short period of time from the murder, are 2 going to be persons who may know something about the 3 murder, who may know something about the witnesses the 4 government is going to call, and who may also know 5 something about other persons who, let's say, had a 6 grudge against the decedent.

7 Now that's an important point, the last one I
8 made, because in each of these two prosecutions there 9 was an alternate theory of who may have committed this 10 murder, as opposed to the defendants who were on trial.

11 In the Gouveia case --

12 QUESTION: So he's -- when he's in the general 13 prison population he is going to be conducting, 14 gathering these facts himself?

15 MR. LEVINE: He has the right to do it and 16 maybe the potential --

17 QUESTION: He also has the right to be 18 killed.

19 MR. LEVINE: That's absolutely true, Your 20 Honor, and unfortunately in a prison setting that occurs 21 more often than not. We're not here to condone that 22 kind of activity, but we're trying to give a defendant 23 who is on trial for his life -- and these defendants, at 24 least in the Gouveia case, when you talk about 25 prejudice --

1 QUESTION: Well, let's back up a minute. You
2 said that if he could afford a lawyer he could get one,
3 right?

4 MR. LEVINE: Even if he were in isolation.

5 QUESTION: Yes, sir, is that right?

6 MR. LEVINE: That's absolutely right.

7 QUESTION: Would a lawyer be able to go out
8 and talk to all the prisoners?

9 MR. LEVINE: He would have a right to attempt 10 to do so.

11 QUESTION: Would he be able to do so?

12 MR. LEVINE: I think within certain 13 limitations, yes.

14 QUESTION: Like two or three?

15 MR. LEVINE: Well, Your Honor, maybe two or 16 three a day. There are opportunities to make 17 arrangements with prisoners.

18 QUESTION: There are opportunities, but I mean 19 every prisoner out there is going to have a lawyer going 20 around talking to the prisoners? Who is going to run 21 the jail?

22 MR. LEVINE: Well, not the lawyers, Your 23 Honor. The opportunity exists and in this particular 24 case I think there has been a record made.

25 QUESTION: I agree with what was said

1 earlier. You don't want a lawyer, you want an 2 investigator.

3 MR. LEVINE: Well, Your Honor, I think the -- 4 QUESTION: Am I right?

5 MR. LEVINE: If I were an accused in that 6 position, I would prefer to have a lawyer. I -- that's 7 perhaps just one --

8 QUESTION: Do you know of a lawyer that would 9 go down into the prison yard and talk to prisoners at 10 random?

11 MR. LEVINE: We did it in this case, Your 12 Honor.

13 QUESTION: What?

14 MR. LEVINE: We did it in this case and it's a 15 matter of record in this case.

16 QUESTION: You did?

17 MR. LEVINE: Yes, Your Honor.

18 QUESTION: But you weren't paid?

19 MR. LEVINE: No, this was after indictment.
20 This was after --

21 QUESTION: This was done by the paid lawyer?

22 MR. LEVINE: I don't see why a paid lawyer
23 would not do it.

24 QUESTION: Let me see if I understand you.
25 You said out in the yard? I thought these people were

1 in administrative detention.

2 MR. LEVINE: No. The lawyers went to the 3 prison.

4 QUESTION: You mean those who were not your 5 clients?

6 MR. LEVINE: That's right. The lawyers
7 attempted to interview people who knew something about 8 these murders, and they went to Lompoc, and this is a 9 matter of record in this case, and they attempted to 10 find people who might have known something about the 11 alternate theories of the murders or who might have 12 known something about the government's witnesses.

13 And to a limited degree we were able to 14 interview some people, but the use of the word "limited 15 degree" is the important distinction here, because we 16 weren't there until 20 months had expired. By that time 17 the potential witnesses and the use of evidence of an 18 alternate theory had evaporated, and our hands were if 19 not tied completely at least tied to a very large extent 20 in attempting to build a defense for these defendants.

21 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Levine, you succeeded in 22 producing a large number of witnesses, did you not, at 23 the trial?

24 MR. LEVINE: I --

25 QUESTION: How many witnesses from the former

1 prison population were you able to produce?

2 MR. LEVINE: Justice O'Conner, in response to 3 your question, that comes up in the government's brief 4 time and time again. There is the allegation that the 5 Gouveia defendants -- and I participated in that 6 trial -- called 14 alibi witnesses and 31 witnesses in 7 all to defend themselves.

8 That issue came up in the oral argument before 9 the Ninth Circuit as well, and I think it should be 10 pointed out here, as it was pointed out there, you are 11 dealing with 14 alibi witnesses for five different 12 people in a trial, and 35 witnesses or 31 witnesses for 13 five different people, and it's not the quantity of 14 witnesses alone which should determine whether a person 15 has had an adequate defense.

16 It's the quality of those witnesses. For 17 example, on behalf of Mr. Segura, who I represented at 18 the trial, I called five people who could be 19 characterized as alibi witnesses, and of those five -- 20 and maybe this is just a quantitative or qualitative 21 evaluation of my own -- there was really only one who 22 established his alibi or who attempted to do so.

23 The other persons, their memories were so
24 dimmed by the passage of 20 months, by that time 27 25 months, that their ability to relate facts to a jury was

1 severely limited, and we attempted in our pretrial 2 motions to delineate other witnesses who might have 3 known where these people were but had either disappeared 4 into the world outside prison or who had been 5 transferred to other prisons and we couldn't locate 6 because we only knew them by nicknames. They were no
7 longer at Lompoc.

8           It's those kinds of problems that really make 9 this case a nightmare for a trial lawyer.

10           QUESTION: Well, how did you get into this 11 case?

12           MR. LEVINE: Appointed after indictment, Your 13 Honor.

14           QUESTION: And suppose there had been a 15 release after 90 days into the general prison 16 population. You don't claim then there would have been 17 any right to an appointment of a lawyer?

18           MR. LEVINE: Not according to Judge Sneed's 19 opinion, there would not. Judge Sneed gave them the 20 choice.

21           QUESTION: And so he would then have had to 22 proceed on his own?

23           MR. LEVINE: That's correct. Or, if they kept 24 him in isolation beyond that date, then he would have a
25 lawyer.

1                   QUESTION: I understand.

2                   MR. LEVINE: The choice was being given to the 3 Bureau of Prisons. I guess what Judge Sneed was saying 4 was that if any given prisoner is such as threat to the 5 security of the prison that you have to keep him past 90
6 days, then give him a lawyer, and if he isn't such a 7 threat and you're holding him for trial past 90 days, 8 then let him out into the prison population where at 9 least he can attempt to do something to establish or 10 build his own defense.

11                  QUESTION: Even with the risks that might be 12 attendant and were thought to attend such a release into 13 the general population?

14                  MR. LEVINE: Well, there would have been a 15 risk with every prisoner being released. With some of 16 them the risk would be smaller than with others. I
17 think what Judge Sneed was doing was giving the Bureau
18 of Prisons the opportunity to make that evaluation, 19 which they -- they're the ones that should.

20                  Justice Marshall asked -- he doesn't like the 21 fact that the lawyers would be running the prisons.
22 Judge Sneed's opinion gives that right to the Bureau of 23 Prisons. They should make the determination and either 24 choose point A or point B, whichever one they felt is 25 better in their own discretion.

1                   In closing, Your Honor, let me just make this 2 comment about this entire case. When we talk about the 3 potential prejudice or prejudice, as the Morrison case
4 discusses, when you have six people who are serving life
5 plus 99 years in prison, the claims of prejudice begin 6 to get your attention.

7                   And in this particular case I think the 8 Solicitor General's office is beginning to take a rather 9 inconsistent position when you hear them argue in the 10 case immediately preceding this that it is the 11 government's interest to bring people to trial while the 12 evidence is new and the memories of witnesses are clear 13 and in this particular case they seem not to have very 14 much concern for that position, and that's our position, 15 Your Honor.

16                   Unless there are any further questions, I am 17 through.

18                   QUESTION: Do you think that there are some 19 rather unusual difficulties in investigating this kind 20 of case, as you have said it was for you, and that those 21 difficulties would also attend the government's inquiry 22 to try to get information from these prisoners?

23                   MR. LEVINE: Your Honor, the way one of these 24 cases is typically investigated -- and I know in the 25 brief that I supplied the Court with I outlined a

1 step-by-step approach to how they found their evidence 2 in this case, and the dates upon which they found it.

3 And I think it's a very, very good
4 illustration of how fast the government really does come 5 up with their evidence in one of these cases. Maybe 6 they don't do it within 90 days, maybe they don't do it 7 within 45 days, but when they -- when a murder occurs at 8 an institution such as Lompoc what happens is the FBI 9 goes out and interviews perhaps half, if not more than 10 half, of the prison population.

11 Of that number of people -- and this is in the 12 record, too, in Mr. Wilkins' affidavit, he was the FBI 13 agent -- perhaps 98 or 99 percent of those prisoners are 14 going to tell the FBI I know nothing about this case.
15 And they do that because that's the credo within the 16 prison.

17 QUESTION: It's also safer, isn't it?

18 MR. LEVINE: Absolutely. There is a one, two 19 or three percent part of the prison population who are 20 always looking to be informants or to get a favor out of 21 the government and maybe, in the government's view, to 22 tell the truth about what happened.

23 Those people immediately come forward, are 24 immediately interviewed. Their interviews are 25 memorialized in FBI documents. And those people are

1 taken away from the general prison population and placed 2 into protective custody.

3 From that point on the government puts 4 together its physical evidence, however long that 5 takes. But they have their case on ice. They have the 6 defenlants on ice in isolation, and the defendants 7 cannot do what the government is doing.

8 I was in court when Judge Gray dismissed the 9 Mills case the first time, and those were his comments
10 in dismissing that indictment. His attitude was well, 11 the government can develop its case right away, and then 12 keep the defendants on hold indefinitely while they have 13 no opportunity to build a defense for themselves.

14 And here we're dealing with a murder
15 prosecution. And there's no statute of limitations. So 16 if there is no right to counsel, when does it end? It 17 could go on forever. In this case, it went on 20 months 18 and we claim the prejudice was pervasive.

19 QUESTION: Well, do you have anything further, 20 Mr. Frey?

21 ORAL ARGUMENT OF ANDREW L. FREY, ESQ.

22 ON BEHALF OF PETITIONER - REBUTTAL

23 MR. FREY: A couple of things. I would like 24 to emphasize with Mr. Levine that we are dealing with a 25 murder case here, which makes the seriousness of the 1 remedy of dismissal a concern.

2 QUESTION: How many of these defendants
3 charged with murder had these long life sentences?

4 MR. FREY: I think they all. I'm not certain 5 what the sentences were. I assume they all got life 6 sentences for these murders. No, Pierce in fact was, 7 after the indictment was dismissed and while the 8 government was appealing, his mandatory release date 9 came up and he was let out. He robbed some banks in 10 northern California and he's in state custody now. So 11 if the mandatory release date comes, this symbolic 12 accusation evaporates and they are let out of prison.

13 It's the prison authorities who decide to put 14 them in administrative detention. It is not the FBI and 15 not the prosecutor. It is not a foregone conclusion 16 that there will be a prosecution. In this case, we have 17 a statement by the assistant that as to Mr. Levine's 18 client, Mr. Segura, it was only several months before 19 the indictment was returned that he felt he had a 20 prosecutable case.

21 They have based much of their argument on a 22 witness named Giffin, an individual named Giffin, who 23 gave us information about the murders, who was going to 24 be our main witness, and he didn't testify at trial.
25 Fortunately Mr. Kinard, one of the co-defendants did,

1 but we would not have had a case.

2           These cases are very fragile. We may be quite 3 confident that people are guilty, but that is not enough 4 to justify returning an indictment. We have to be able 5 to secure convictions.

6           I wanted to make one point about the District
7 Court's finding with regard to the lack of a security
8 basis for the detention of these people. That is tucked 9 away in a conclusion of law, not a finding of fact. It 10 was not an issue in this case at all until the Court of 11 Appeals, when it was really raised by Mr. Diamond, 12 refuted by us in our reply brief in the Court of 13 Appeals.

14           The panel of the Court of Appeals ruled in our 15 favor and said there was a security basis, which, as I 16 say, under the regulations has to be there, and under 17 the -- what evidence there was showed that there was a 18 security basis.

19           Now it is true that they were under 20 investigation for a crime. We don't deny that. We do 21 deny, however, if there were a hearing I think we could 22 plainly establish that that was not a necessary 23 condition for their detention.

24           QUESTION: Mr. Frey, if one of these people 25 had plenty of money and apart from prison regulations,

1 would he have had a constitutional right to retain 2 counsel of his choice before indictment?

3 MR. FREY: Well, I kind of discussed that a 4 little bit back in December in the Flanagan case, but 5 that would sound to me something like a substantive due 6 process right, and I am not sure what this Court would 7 find. There would be a decent argument, I think, that 8 if somebody wants to retain a lawyer it is the kind of 9 associational interest in running one's own affairs that 10 the government could not arbitrarily interfere with or 11 prevent.

12 The point about the Gulag business, about 13 holding people indefinitely without a lawyer, of course, 14 raises a due process claim. You can't hold people 15 indefinitely, not because of their right to counsel but 16 because they can't be deprived of their liberty without 17 due process. So, therefore, in order to hold them there 18 must be a charge and a judicial findings and a judicial 19 proceeding. There is none of that --

20 QUESTION: Or some other reason to hold them
21 in confinement -- I mean, in control units.

22 MR. FREY: Well, it could be confined in a 23 mental institution.

24 QUESTION: Or under the control unit. I
25 suppose the security problem could exist for a long

1 time.

2 MR. FREY: Well, I want to make a point. The 3 Court of Appeals said in its opinion that holding them 4 in ADU was equivalent to an arrest because it serves the 5 important need of investigative officers to protect 6 witnesses and evidence, facilitate an effective 7 investigation, prevent further criminal activity by the 8 suspect.

9 And it said these are the interests that lead
10 to an arrest. Well, the Court of Appeals, I think it 11 forgot about bail. That is not the purpose of an 12 arrest. That is preventive detention. We don't 13 generally have that in this country. Most arrests are 14 not for the purpose of preventive detention, but they 15 may lead to the institution of a judicial proceeding.
16 That is a different story.

17 In this case we do have preventive detention 18 which is perfectly legitimate in the context of the 19 prison situation. It is not an accusation of a crime.
20 There is no prosecution. No right to counsel.

21 MR. FREY: Thank you.

22 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.
23 The case is submitted.

24 (Whereupon, at 2:24 o'clock p.m., the case was 25 submitted.)
