P R O C E E D I N G S

CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Schafer, I think you may proceed whenever you're ready.

ORAL ARGUMENT OF WILLIAM J. SCHAFER, III
ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER

MR. SCHAFER: Mr. Chief Justice and may it
please the Court, this case questions the propriety under the double jeopardy clause of the Arizona Supreme Court ordering a resentencing, following a life sentence that was imposed after the sentencer erroneously concluded as a matter of law that one of the statutory aggravating factors was not applicable to this case.

Now, the facts are rather simple.
Dennis Rumsey decided to rob the motorist who picked him up. To accomplish that, he shot him. Rumsey was convicted of both murder and robbery. At the separate hearing to determine the sentence for murder, the State offered no new evidence to the sentencer, which by statute in Arizona is the trial judge. The State simply referred to the facts that had already been proved at the trial.

One of the aggravating factors, the State felt had been shown by the evidence that was introduced at the trial, was that the killing had been done for pecuniary gain. Now, without deciding whether that had

1 been shown or not, the trial judge said that that 2 aggravating factor -- pecuniary gain -- applied to only 3 a very narrow class of killers, hired killers, and it
4 had no application to a robbery murder such as occurred 5 here.

6 The State at the initial hearing also argued 7 two other aggravating factors, claimed that they had 8 been shown by the evidence, but the trial judge
9 disagreed. In the special verdict where the trial judge 10 is required by statute to list his findings on each of 11 the aggravating factors under the statute, the judge 12 found that there were none present, and he imposed a 13 life sentence which the statute requires where no 14 aggravation has been shown. The judge at that time also 15 imposed a consecutive sentence for the robbery.

16 Now, both sides appealed to the Arizona
17 Supreme Court; Mr. Rumsey from the consecutive sentences
18 that had been imposed, and the State from the judge's 19 legal ruling that the pecuniary gain circumstance 20 applied only to hired killers.

21 QUESTION: Mr. Schafer, may I ask right there, 22 would the State have had the right to appeal if the 23 defendant had not appealed?

24 MR. SCHAFER: We would not have under the 25 appeal statute, Your Honor.

1 QUESTION: So that, had he not appealed, we 2 never could have reached this issue.

3 MR. SCHAFER: No. I don't below the second 4 follows from the first. It is conceivable, and I 5 believe still an open question in Arizona as to whether 6 the State could have sought a special action. That has 7 not been tested in the state court yet on this kind of a 8 point.

9 There are -- I answered your first question 10 directly to appeal. Under the appeal statute, we could 11 not have. And that was discussed in the second Rumsey 12 opinion.

13 QUESTION: There is some other statutory 14 method of review in Arizona by which the prosecution can 15 get a review of the sentences?

16 MR. SCHAFER: There is an action, which is 17 called in the rules "Special Action," which permits the 18 State or the defense, either part, to gain a hurry-up 19 decision from the Supreme Court where it is claimed and 20 is shown that there has been abusive discretion. And in 21 this case, that may well have been sought, had the 22 opportunity arisen.

23 QUESTION: And that's available in a case
24 where there would be no appellate review otherwise.

25 MR. SCHAFER: Normally it is, Your Honor,

1 yes. It is a discretionary procedure.

2 We, as well as Rumsey appealed, and ours was 3 only from this one point, the legal ruling that the 4 trial judge made that the pecuniary gain factor didn't 5 apply to this case. The Supreme Court held that the 6 trial judge did make a legal error. They concluded that 7 he erred as a matter of law in concluding that he could 8 not decide that particular circumstance. And they sent 9 the case back to the trial court for resentencing.

10 Now, without either side offering any evidence 11 at the resentencing, the trial judge then found that the 12 pecuniary gain circumstance had been shown.

13 QUESTION: Mr. Schafer, could the State and 14 the defense offered evidence that there be sentencing?

15 MR. SCHAFER: Yes, Your Honor, we could have.

16 And with that finding, the judge then set the 17 sentence at death. Rumsey's appeal was then automatic 18 to the Arizona Supreme Court, and the Arizona Supreme 19 Court reversed itself on the basis of Bullington v.
20 Missouri.

21 The State sought certiorari because of its 22 belief that Bullington is not implicated in this case, 23 because there has been no acquittal in the trial court.
24 And I believe that's the question that this Court must 25 decide: Was there a resolution of the factual issue

1 against the State? We contend the record shows that 2 there was not, that there was no rejection of our 3 position that the murder was for monetary or pecuniary 4 gain.

5 The reason for the holding in Bullington was 6 that the State of Missouri had a full and a fair
7 opportunity to muster its forces and to present its case
8 to the sentencer. And in that case, the sentencer 9 rejected the case of the State. The resolution of those 10 factual issues against Missouri operated as an 11 acquittal. Because the double jeopardy clause gives 12 absolute finality to acquittal, Missouri could not be 13 given another opportunity to present its case when it 14 had failed to make its case the first time.

15 There was no such acquittal here. The trial
16 judge did not decide the factual issue of pecuniary gain
17 against the State. The only thing he decided in regard 18 to that murder was that he was not going to reach the 19 factual issue, because it simply didn't apply in the 20 case.

21 Now, unlike Missouri's appeal --

22 QUESTION: This means, I suppose, Mr. Schafer, 23 that further proceedings are necessary then?

24 MR. SCHAFFER: I do not believe further 25 proceedings are necessary at this point, Your Honor.

1 The relief we would ask for is that you overturn the 2 Arizona Supreme Court opinion and allow them to go
3 forward with the appeal.

4 The appeal from the death sentence has never 5 been held.

6 QUESTION: In your brief, on page 19, you say 7 that the trial court found that Rumsey committed the 8 crime for pecuniary gain.

9 MR. SCHAFER: Yes.

10 QUESTION: You do not cite to the record on 11 that. Is there a place in the record that you can 12 support that statement?

13 MR. SCHAFER: I do at a further point in the 14 brief, I believe, Your Honor, which is page 66 of the 15 Joint Appendix.

16 Now, specifically, what I'm referring to in 17 the brief -- and I pointed it out perhaps in a footnote 18 in the brief -- is that in regard to the robbery, the 19 trial judge made what I considered a finding as to 20 pecuniary gain, a finding that the robbery and the 21 murder were actually one act. The same force was used 22 to accomplish both. And if you read what the trial 23 judge did at 66, and especially -- page 66 of the Joint 24 Appendix -- if you combine it with other things that 25 were before the trial judge, I believe the conclusion is

1 inescapable that in his mind he had concluded that the 2 murder was for pecuniary gain, that the case of the 3 murder was the robbery, which our Supreme Court has 4 defined under the murder statute as the definition of 5 pecuniary gain.

6 Now, a little earlier when I spoke, I -- I 7 believe made the statement that the trial judge did not 8 make a factual determination in regard to the murder. I 9 tried to be clear in the brief to show that his 10 conclusion was really stated when he was sentencing for 11 the robbery and not for the murder.

12 My point is that I believe the entire record 13 shows that there was no question in his mind that he 14 believed, if he could have considered that circumstance, 15 that the murder was for pecuniary gain.

16 QUESTION: Mr. Schafer, what do you -- how do 17 you distinguish the language of this Court in United 18 States v. Scott when it said that the fact that the 19 acquittal in a criminal case may result from an 20 erroneous evidentiary ruling or erroneous interpretation 21 of governing legal principles affects the accuracy of 22 the determination, but it doesn't alter its character?

23 In other words, even though an acquittal might 24 be based on an erroneous interpretation of law, it's 25 binding for double jeopardy purposes. Now, to the

1 extent that the death sentencing curing is given similar 2 characteristics, how do you distinguish that?

3 MR. SCHAFER: I distinguish it like this, Your 4 Honcr. I believe that there was no acquittal here. In 5 Scott and other cases from this Court, there was an 6 actual acquittal. There was nothing in this case that 7 terminated the proceedings against the State, as this 8 Court said last week in Lydon. There was nothing to 9 show there but termination.

10 The only thing that could approach being an 11 acquittal here was the trial judge's statement that "I 12 am not even going to consider this," although I am 13 paraphrasing, of course. And he went ahead, then, and 14 finished with the sentencing, as he is required to do by 15 statute, without even getting to that aggravating factor.

16 My point is that --

17 QUESTION: Well, the problem, of course, is 18 that Bullington has treated the sentencing hearing as 19 much like a trial for purposes of acquittal.

20 MR. SCHAFER: Yes, that is true.

21 QUESTION: So that's why, when you combine
22 Bullington with Scott, you have a problem, don't you?

23 MR. SCHAFER: I think I have a problem, but I 24 think the answer to that is, Your Honor, that even with 25 Bullington and all of the language in Bullington, we can

1 argue, reasonably so, that there was no acquittal.
2 Bullington does require an acquittal. There was an 3 acquittal in Bullington of death, of course, but we have 4 no such acquittal here. We have no such termination of 5 the case against the State, and I think that's the 6 distinction.

7 QUESTION: Mr. Schafer, doesn't that argument
8 depend on your being right about the special action 9 being a method of review? Because if you could not have 10 appealed independently, could it not be said that the 11 case on sentencing was over against the State?

12 MR. SCHAFFER: If we had no method of appeal, 13 Your Honor, I think I would have to --

14 QUESTION: Wouldn't that have been equivalent 15 to an acquittal?

16 MR. SCHAFFER: At the State -- well, I would --

17 QUESTION: So that doesn't the case under your 18 approach really require us to decide whether you did 19 have this method of review otherwise?

20 MR. SCHAFFER: I would not like to concede 21 that, but logically, Your Honor, I believe I'd have to 22 say that there would be a termination in our favor 23 because we could go nowhere from that.

24 QUESTION: Well, try this one. Assuming that 25 the Court finds that you're guilty of second degree

1 murder but not first degree murder, is that an acquittal
2 of first degree murder?

3 MR. SCHAFER: I think it would be under your 4 Greene opinion. Yes, Your Honor.

5 QUESTION: Well, suppose the statute says of 6 the state of Podunk that people guilty of second degree
7 murder are sentenced to life automatically, and people
8 guilty of first degree murder are sentenced to death
9 automatically, and the Court finds him guilty of second 10 degree murder? Could he later be found guilty, and 11 death?

12 MR. SCHAFER: I believe under Greene, he could 13 not be. He would have been acquitted of first degree 14 murder, which would --

15 QUESTION: And the difference between that and 16 this case is that the statute doesn't say it 17 specifically.

18 MR. SCHAFER: Or the statute does not say that 19 at all, Your Honor, yes.

20 QUESTION: Any other reason?

21 MR. SCHAFER: There is no acquittal in this 22 case. There is no acquittal as there would be in the 23 hypothetical you've asked me. There is a decision by 24 the trial judge to avoid any termination of proceedings 25 on this particular point on pecuniary damage.

1 Unlike Missouri's appeal, the State's appeal
2 here and the relief given by the Arizona Supreme Court
3 did not involve the State proving its case all over 4 again. In Bullington, Missouri said it was going to do 5 that. That's exactly what it said: We are going to 6 prove the case that we presented before.

7 But Arizona did not have to represent its 8 case. The facts of its case had already been presented 9 and proved at the trial. What Arizona asked for in its 10 appeal was to correct the error that had been made, and 11 in that sense it was much like the appeal the government 12 took in the DiFrancesco case. That appeal was to 13 correct an error by the sentencer, and that appeal was 14 upon the record that was made in the sentencing court.
15 That's the same thing that was done here by the State of 16 Arizona.

17 If the controlling consideration behind the 18 double jeopardy clause where there is an acquittal, is 19 to prevent the government oppression that would come 20 with repeated efforts to convict and to make up its 21 deficiencies in the State's case with each new effort of 22 reprosecution, then applying the double jeopardy clause
23 here would not accomplish that. Once jeopardy attaches, 24 before a defendant can claim that there has been a 25 second jeopardy to which he has been put, he just show

1 that the first jeopardy was terminated.

2 But it was not terminated here. And I
3 believe, absent that, Bullington really does not apply 4 to this fact situation.

5 If my argument has been unpersuasive, if the 6 Court feels that Bullington must be applied to this 7 case, then I urge the Court to reconsider its holding in 8 Bullington. In DiFrancesco, this Court recognized that, 9 historically, double jeopardy principals had not been 10 applied to sentencing proceedings. There is a 11 fundamental difference, said the Court, between the two 12 procedures that required that. And we have the Pearce, 13 Chaffin, and the Stroud decisions that recognize that 14 distinction. And Stroud involved a death sentence after 15 a life sentence. Bullington did not overrule Stroud.
16 It was felt that there was no need to overrule Stroud, 17 that what distinguished the two cases were the number of 18 trial protections given in Bullington that were not 19 present in Stroud.

20 The effect of that recognition is that the 21 more trial attributes a state builds into its sentencing 22 procedure, the more likely it is to lose the ability to 23 eliminate aberrant sentences like that given to Dennis 24 Rumsey.

25 Since 1972 and the Furman case, we, the states

1 who have death penalties, have been doing what we can 2 to eliminate aberrant death sentences. Bullington, I 3 believe, impedes that progress. If a state today were 4 to draft a new death penalty statute, and it wanted to 5 do the most that it could to produce an informed and a 6 rational final sentence, it would want to retain some 7 kind of review flexibility. The only way that it could 8 cope with Bullington in that regard would be to write 9 into its procedures as few trial attributes as possible
10 to take it away from the holding in Bullington, and 11 perhaps return it to a case like DiFrancesco or Stroud.
12 And that would not be the signal that should be sent to 13 such a state.

14 Our argument is that Bullington does not apply
15 because there has been no final termination factually 16 against the State's point.

17 And with that, I would like to reserve the 18 rest of my time for rebuttal.

19 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Rummage.

20 ORAL ARGUMENT OF JAMES R. RUMMAGE, ESQ.

21 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENT

22 MR. RUMMAGE: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
23 please the Court, the matter that's presently before
24 this Court is actually a classic case of double jeopardy 25 and it falls within none of the recognized exceptions to 1 the double jeopardy clause.

2 After the sentencing hearing before the trial
3 court in this matter, a hearing which amounts to a 4 trial, there was a final verdict of acquittal as to 5 those facts which were at issue. On his appeal, on his 6 direct appeal, respondent won nothing. He certainly did 7 not win a retrial, as was the case in Chaffin, Pearce, 8 Stroud, and even Bullington.

9 There is no justification under the double 10 jeopardy clause for reviewing respondent's acquittal at 11 that sentencing trial and allowing the State to retry 12 those factual issues which were already resolved against 13 it.

14 At the sentencing hearing or --

15 QUESTION: Which of our cases would you think 16 makes this certainty that you've just asserted?

17 MR. RUMMAGE: I'm sorry, Your Honor. Which 18 certainty are you referring to?

19 QUESTION: Well, the certainty that this was 20 an acquittal, that it was the functional equivalent, 21 take it you said, of an acquittal.

22 MR. RUMMAGE: Yes, Your Honor.

23 Well, first of all, of course, Bullington 24 essentially states that. In Bullington, when the 25 defendant was sentenced to life, this Court stated that

1 that was an acquittal as to the death penalty. Here, we 2 have even more certainty that there was an acquittal.
3 The Court made the finding -- and I think this is 4 important, Your Honor -- the Court made the finding that 5 the defendant did not commit this offense in 6 consideration for the receipt or in expectation of the 7 receipt of anything of pecuniary value.

8 That, to respondent, Your Honor, seems to be 9 about as direct as an acquittal -- an acquittal as there 10 can be.

11 At the sentencing hearing or trial following 12 his conviction for first degree murder, Dennis Wayne 13 Rumsey was put in jeopardy of his life. Depending on 14 the factual determinations made by the trial court, he 15 would either be subject to the death penalty or not 16 subject to it. Either he would be guilty beyond a 17 reasonable doubt of whatever is necessary to receive the 18 death penalty, or he would be not guilty.

19 In its special verdict, the trial court
20 announced, as required by Arizona law, its factual
21 findings as to each individual aggravating
22 circumstance. The Court found that no aggravating 23 circumstance had been proven, and specifically found, as 24 I just mentioned, that the offense was not committed for 25 pecuniary gain as described by the statute.

1 Respondent appealed, the State
2 cross-appealed. The only issues raised by respondent on 3 his direct appeal involved the consecutive nature of his 4 sentences. He did not even seek to have his convictions 5 overturned.

6 QUESTION: What do you say about the 7 statements of the trial judge at page 66 of the Joint 8 Appendix that your friend alluded to earlier?

9 MR. RUMMAGE: Well, Your Honor, those 10 statements --

11 QUESTION: Seems to be somewhat in conflict 12 with what he said elsewhere, and --

13 MR. RUMMAGE: With what the judge had said
14 elsewhere?

15 I don't believe there is a conflict, Your 16 Honor, and this is the reason. On page 66, he 17 essentially was stating what the evidence at trial was.
18 He was essentially restating that, saying that Mr.
19 Rumsey planned a robbery; the robbery ended up with this 20 guy being killed.

21 QUESTION: Well, he was a little more specific 22 than that, wasn't he? I don't have it at hand. You 23 might read that. It's in the lower part of the page.

24 MR. RUMMAGE: Yes, Your Honor.

25 "The defendant planned this robbery, which

1 resulted in the needless death of an individual who 2 befriended the defendant and girlfriend, in order to 3 obtain what the defendant knew was only a few hundred 4 dollars, to possibly obtain the victim's car, although 5 the Court is satisfied the primary motive was to receive 6 something in the approximate sum of a few hundred 7 dollars."

8 QUESTION: That sounds like a homicide for 9 gain, doesn't it?

10 MR. RUMMAGE: Well, Your Honor, obviously 11 there is a gain or an intent to gain. First of all, the 12 Court did not state that the purpose of the murder was 13 to gain. The Court stated that it resulted in the 14 needless death of the individual, but not that the 15 purpose of the murder was to gain.

16 QUESTION: Mr. Rummage, how about -- take the 17 paragraph right after the one where you were reading, at 18 the top of page 67. There, he does say it was an 19 aggravating circumstance, doesn't it?

20 MR. RUMMAGE: An aggravating circumstance as 21 to the armed robbery. And I need to answer your 22 questions and finish the Chief Justice's answer at the 23 same time.

24 As far as finding it is an aggravating 25 circumstance for the robbery, as I pointed out in my

1 brief, Your Honor, he found that as an aggravating 2 circumstance under the subsection that permits finding 3 anything that is appropriate as an aggravating
4 circumstance for a non-capital crime. He did not find 5 that as an aggravating circumstance under the statute 6 which provides that the crime was committed for 7 pecuniary gain.

8 That leads me to the second part of my answer 9 to the Chief Justice's question, which is the judge at 10 trial interpreted the statute, and I think subsections 4 11 and 5 are read together by him. He interpreted the 12 statute which uses that pecuniary gain language as 13 meaning a murder for hire.

14 And again, as I pointed out in my brief, this 15 is not some sort of off-the-wall interpretation. It's an 16 interpretation that was shared by one of the justices of 17 the Arizona Supreme Court at the time the issue was 18 decided, and it's an interpretation that has since 19 apparently been shared by another one of the members of 20 the Arizona Supreme Court.

21 So it is not a totally absurd construction of 22 the statute. This is the construction that he applied.
23 There was no direct interpretation of the statute at the 24 time. He determined that factually, these facts do not 25 fit into that aggravating circumstance.

1 QUESTION: Well, your argument would be the 2 same, even if it was absurd.

3 MR. RUMMAGE: Well, it really would, Your 4 Honor. I think it perhaps --

5 QUESTION: Even if the Supreme Court had 6 already construed the statute, and the trial judge just 7 didn't know about it and construed it himself, contrary 8 to the --

9 MR. RUMMAGE: That would be correct,
10 Your Honor.

11 QUESTION: And you would still be here, taking 12 the same position.

13 MR. RUMMAGE: Pardon me, Your Honor?

14 QUESTION: You would still be taking the same 15 position.

16 MR. RUMMAGE: Yes, Your Honor. I think,
17 though, that the fact that it is not an absurd 18 construction, or at least was not considered absurd by 19 two members of the Arizona Supreme Court does lend some 20 strength to the argument.

21 On direct appeal or on the State's 22 cross-appeal, the State sought review of the trial
23 court's failure to find the pecuniary gain aggravating 24 circumstance. Respondent did not prevail, obviously, on 25 appeal the first time. The State did prevail. And as a

1 result, the State was allowed to conduct a new 2 presentence hearing at the which the State attempted 3 once again to prove several aggravating circumstances to 4 the trial court. An entirely new special verdict was 5 issued in which the trial court, essentially citing the 6 Arizona Supreme Court's first opinion in this matter,
7 found that the pecuniary gain aggravating circumstance 8 existed.

9 In essence, the chronology of this case, as 10 far as the sentencing is concerned, was this: 11 Respondent was acquitted of those things necessary for 12 the death penalty. The State appealed from that 13 acquittal, and respondent was retried and then 14 convicted. This is a clear violation of the guarantees
15 of the double jeopardy clause, whether analyzed in terms 16 of traditional double jeopardy law or in terms of the 17 particular application of the double jeopardy clause
18 described in Bullington v. Missouri.

19 Upon his conviction for first degree murder
20 alone, respondent could not be given the death penalty.
21 Without more, life was the only possible sentence.
22 Before the death penalty could be imposed, the State was 23 required at the presentence hearing to prove beyond a 24 reasonable doubt the existence of one or more 25 aggravating factors.

1 The trial judge's conclusion in his special
2 verdict that none of those aggravating factors existed
3 represented a resolution in respondent's favor, correct
4 or not, of some or all of the factual elements charged.

5 Thus, as this Court has stated more than once,
6 there was an acquittal. As this Court has stated
7 repeatedly since 1896, one of the most fundamental rules 8 of double jeopardy jurisprudence is that a verdict of 9 acquittal may not be reviewed without putting the 10 defendant twice in jeopardy.

11 QUESTION: Mr. Rummage, in Arizona there is a 12 separate verdict returned by the jury, is there, on the 13 guilt, nonguilt phase?

14 MR. RUMMAGE: That is correct, Your Honor.

15 QUESTION: And then it simply goes to the 16 trial judge and he alone does the sentencing?

17 MR. RUMMAGE: Yes, Your Honor. That is 18 correct.

19 QUESTION: And it's the acquittal on the 20 sentencing issue that you're talking about here. There 21 was no acquittal on the guilt.

22 MR. RUMMAGE: There was no acquittal by the 23 jury in the guilt phase of the trial; that is correct.

24 QUESTION: And you say this is different from 25 DiFrancesco because it's a capital case, and therefore

1 it comes under Bullington?

2 MR. RUMMAGE: It is different from DiFrancesco
3 for a number of reasons, I believe, Your Honor. First 4 of all, one that is significant is that in DiFrancesco, 5 there is a statute that particularly provided for appeal.

6 No. 2, the burden of proof in DiFrancesco was 7 not the burden beyond a reasonable doubt.

8 QUESTION: Whether there's a statute that 9 provides for appeal is basically a question of state 10 law, isn't it, or federal law? How would that affect 11 the constitutional issue?

12 MR. RUMMAGE: Well, Your Honor, that's really 13 correct. Obviously, there can't be a provision for 14 appeal if it violates the Constitution.

15 QUESTION: No. If Congress provides tomorrow
16 that the Government can appeal from any jury verdict of 17 not guilty, that doesn't mean it's okay.

18 MR. RUMMAGE: That's absolutely correct,
19 Your Honor.

20 In any event, DiFrancesco is distinguishable
21 from the present case, for several different reasons.
22 First of all, the burden of proof in DiFrancesco was not 23 beyond a reasonable doubt. I believe it's by 24 preponderance of the evidence.

25 Secondly, the choice of sentencing, the range

1 of sentence that was provided to the sentencer was quite 2 large. As I believe was the case in DiFrancesco, the 3 effect of the sentence that he received for being a 4 dangerous special offender was an additional year beyond 5 the sentence that he was already serving. And given the 6 possibility of making concurrent sentences as they were 7 in DiFrancesco, presumably the sentence could have been 8 zero, a range from zero, I believe, to 25 years.

9 In this case, there is no such range of 10 sentence. It is one or the other, life or death, just 11 as it would be guilty or innocent at a trial on the 12 question of guilt or innocence.

13 Beyond that, in DiFrancesco, the defendant was 14 found to be a dangerous special offender. And the 15 appeal that the government took was essentially an 16 appeal from the length of the sentence that was 17 imposed. In this case, when -- in this case, Mr. Fumsey 18 was not found to be guilty of those things, the 19 aggravating circumstances, which would allow the 20 imposition of the death penalty.

21 So that, I believe, too, is a significant 22 distinguishing characteristic.

23 As this Court has said, the law attaches a 24 particular significance to an acquittal. An acquittal 25 absolutely shields the defendant from a retrial. To 1 permit a second trial after an acquittal, however 2 mistaken, would present an unacceptably high risk, as 3 this Court has stated, that the innocent may ultimately 4 be found guilty.

5 These considerations all apply directly to the 6 case before this Court.

7 In addition to those general double jeopardy 8 considerations, the particular considerations, the 9 particular analysis that was presented by this Court in 10 the Bullington v. Missouri decision applies to this case 11 as well.

12 The sentencing here, as the sentencing in 13 Bullington, was not a traditional sentencing. It was 14 not merely a decision by the sentencer, in his 15 discretion meting out what he felt justice required.
16 The sentencer here, as in Bullington, had the choice of 17 life or death, essentially guilty or not guilty of those 18 things that could result in the death penalty.

19 There are specific standards that are provided 20 to the sentencer in determining whether the sentence of 21 death may be imposed or, in Arizona, must be imposed.

22 And finally, the burden of proof regarding 23 those aggravating circumstances is on the State, a 24 burden of proof beyond a reasonable doubt. So under 25 traditional notions of double jeopardy law, as well as

1 this Court's holding in Bullington v. Missouri, the 2 State should not have been allowed to retry the 3 respondent a second time on the issue of whether his 4 first degree murder was a first degree murder with 5 aggravating circumstances subject to the death penalty.

6 Petitioner argues that the Arizona sentencing
7 procedure does not resemble a trial sufficiently to call 8 the double jeopardy clause into play. Obviously, 9 respondent disagrees with that. There are certain 10 objective factual issues which must be resolved at the 11 Arizona sentencing hearing, just as there are at a 12 trial. The State must carry the burden of proof beyond 13 a reasonable doubt as to those factual issues, just as 14 at a trial. If the State prevails at the hearing, the 15 authorized punishment of death must be imposed. If the 16 State does not prevail, the authorized punishment cannot 17 be imposed, just as at a trial.

18 At the Arizona sentencing hearing, it is truly 19 an issue of guilty or not guilty of those things for 20 which the penalty of death is authorized.

21 Petitioner recites in his brief a litany of 22 minor differences between the Arizona and Missouri
23 capital sentencing procedures, in the hope of convincing
24 the Court that the double jeopardy clause does not apply 25 in the present case, as it does in Bullington. In fact,

1 those differences that do exist either are insignificant
2 to the double jeopardy issue or they make Arizona's
3 procedure even more like a trial than is Missouri's.

4 First of all, the fact that a judge is a fact 5 finder in Arizona makes no difference, as double 6 jeopardy law does not discriminate between bench and 7 jury trials. Contrary to petitioner's assertion, 8 Arizona procedure does not provide -- does provide for 9 an argument to the court -- essentially a closing 10 argument.

11 Third, the fact that the rules of evidence do 12 not apply to mitigation in Arizona is not significant.
13 What is significant is that the rules of evidence apply 14 to aggravating circumstances, those things which must be 15 proven in order to result in the imposition of the death 16 penalty. This implies that the risk of error at that 17 hearing is on the State.

18 Another distinction that petitioner has set
19 forth is that aggravating circumstances that are found 20 in Missouri must separately be found to be sufficient to 21 -- for the imposition of the death penalty. The fact 22 that this is not the case in Arizona, this separate 23 proof of sufficiency for imposition of the death
24 penalty, really does not make Arizona's procedure less 25 like a trial. At a regular trial, the State does not

1 have to prove, once it's proven the elements of the 2 crime beyond a reasonable doubt, does not have to prove 3 separately that they are sufficient for a conviction.
4 Once they are proven, that results in conviction.

5 Finally, the fact that Arizona's procedure
6 does not allow the Court to exercise compassion and 7 sentence a defendant to life, even though the State has 8 proven its case, makes the Arizona procedure more like a 9 trial than Missouri's. Never at a trial on guilt or 10 innocence is the jury ever instructed that even though 11 they find the State has proven their case beyond a 12 reasonable doubt, that they can still acquit the 13 defendant.

14 The petitioner also attempts to fit the 15 present case into the mold of United States v.
16 DiFrancesco, rather than the mold of Bullington. All 17 the similarities that this case shares with DiFrancesco 18 are also shared with Bullington, and mean nothing with 19 regard to the double jeopardy clause.

20 I've already recited in my answer to 21 Justice Rehnquist the differences between the Arizona 22 proceeding and the proceeding in DiFrancesco which are 23 significant to this issue.

24 Petitioner argues that the Arizona sentencing
25 procedure is not the final step. This, of course, is

1 true only when the death penalty is imposed. It is not 2 true when a life sentence is imposed, as was made
3 abundantly clear in the Arizona Supreme Court's second 4 Rumsey opinion.

5 I believe this touches on a question that was 6 asked by Justice Stevens of petitioner regarding -- 7 well, which was answered by petitioner by referring to 8 the Arizona procedures known as "Special Action" to the 9 Supreme Court. Petitioner has stated that this is an 10 open question in Arizona as to whether the State could 11 have proceeded by means of special action.

12 I would submit to this Court that, given the 13 fact that the double jeopardy clause is called into 14 play, it does not matter whether the special action law
15 could be used or not. It could not, under double 16 jeopardy considerations, be used.

17 Petitioner also has argued that the Arizona 18 death sentencing procedure is no different from the 19 procedure for imposing a sentence less than death. In 20 fact, respondent would submit that from beginning to 21 end, the procedures are totally different. There is 22 notice required of aggravating circumstances in a death
23 penalty proceeding, but in a non-death penalty 24 sentencing proceeding there is no notice required.

25 In death proceedings, there is a required

1 hearing that must take place. In non-death penalty
2 proceedings, there is no required hearing. The Court
3 can impose an aggravated sentence in Arizona on a 4 non-death penalty case without holding any hearing at 5 all.

6 The burden of proof on the State is on the 7 State at a death penalty sentencing proceeding in 8 Arizona to prove beyond a reasonable doubt those 9 aggravating factors which would justify the death
10 penalty. With non-death penalty sentencing procedures, 11 there is no burden on the State to prove anything. The 12 Court can merely find the aggravating circumstances.
13 There is no proof beyond a reasonable doubt requirement.

14 The choice at sentencings other than death
15 penalty sentencings in Arizona is not a choice between 16 life and death. It's a broad choice, a broad range of 17 sentences from which the sentencer can select. The 18 aggravating factors in a death penalty sentencing 19 proceeding are limited to those set forth in the 20 statute, but in a non-death penalty sentencing
21 proceeding, they can include anything that the Court 22 deems to be appropriate.

23 Finally, in a death penalty sentencing 24 proceeding, a special verdict is required at which the 25 sentencing judge must set forth his findings as to each

1 and every aggravating circumstance. This, of course, is 2 not required in a non-death penalty sentencing procedure.

3 Petitioner states that if the Arizona
4 procedure does amount to a trial, then the State of 5 Arizona proved its case at the first hearing and that 6 the judge found that the State proved its case, but 7 refused to find it to be an aggravating circumstance.
8 Respondent, again, disagrees. The Court specifically 9 found that the State did not prove its case; that the 10 facts -- the facts proven did not constitute the conduct 11 prescribed by the statute.

12 Petitioner further claims that the State's 13 appeal herein was the same as an appeal from an 14 erroneous directed verdict after a guilty verdict, which 15 would merely require reinstatement of the verdict.

16 Well, respondent is at a loss as to which 17 verdict is to be reinstated: the verdict which stated 18 that the defendant did not commit the offense, in the 19 expectation as consideration for the receipt or in 20 expectation of the receipt of anything of pecuniary 21 value; or the verdict which said there are no 22 aggravating circumstances; or the verdict which said the 23 defendant shall be sentenced to life rather than death.

24 Clearly, the analogy does not hold up. There 25 is no verdict to be reinstated, no verdict in favor of

1 the State that can be reinstated. The only verdict is a 2 verdict in favor of the respondent.

3 Petitioner has asked this Court to, if all
4 else fails, reconsider the Bullington rule. Respondent 5 would submit that that is not appropriate. It is 6 particularly not appropriate in this case, which 7 respondent believes presents a much stronger double 8 jeopardy case than even Bullington did.

9 In any event, respondent submits that 10 Bullington does not blur the distinctions between trials
11 and sentencings, as petitioner has argued. There is a 12 clear line drawn in Bullington. Bullington says that 13 when the sentencing -- when the factual findings that 14 lead up to that sentencing constitute a trial, when 15 there are particular facts that must be proven by the 16 State in order to reach the determination that the death 17 penalty is to be imposed, and when those factors must be 18 proven beyond a reasonable doubt, when there is a choice 19 between only two alternatives, then you don't have a 20 sentencing, you don't have the mere imposition of a 21 sentence, you have a trial, you have a factual
22 determination by the finder of fact.

23 Petitioner made a very noteworthy comment in 24 his brief. In attempting to distinguish this sentencing 25 procedure from a trial, petitioner stated that the

1 reason the rules of evidence apply to aggravating 2 circumstances and the reason those circumstances must be 3 proven beyond a reasonable doubt is to -- and I quote -- 4 "require more credibility and reliability of the facts 5 upon which the death sentence may rest."

6 No doubt this last statement that I quoted 7 from petitioner's brief is true. The intent here was to 8 require more credibility and more reliability of the 9 facts upon which the death penalty may rest. This,
10 respondent would submit to the Court, is why the Arizona 11 sentencing procedure resembles a trial. These are the 12 same things that are required at a trial, because the 13 determination has been made that society, the State, 14 will impose upon itself almost the entire risk of error.

15 This certainly must even be more true when the 16 death penalty is the final verdict. When the verdict of 17 guilty is the death penalty, it must be more true than 18 in any other criminal trial. The double jeopardy
19 clause, therefore, must be applied to this case and it 20 absolutely shields the respondent from the retrial which 21 resulted in the imposition of the death penalty.

22 Thank you.

23 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Do you have anything
24 further, counsel?

25 MR. SCHAFER: No, I have not.

1 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.

2 The case is submitted.

3 We'll hear arguments next in Thigpen against 4 Roberts.

5 (Whereupon, at 11:37 a.m., the case in the 6 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
