CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments
next in Block against Rutherford.

Mr. Bennett, I think you may proceed when you're ready.

ORAL ARGUMENT OF FREDERICK R. BENNETT, ESQ.,
ON BEHALF OF PETITIONERS

MR. BENNETT: Mr. Chief Justice and may it
please the Court:

This matter is before this Court on a petition for certiorari to the Ninth Circuit, which affirmed two injunctive orders concerning operational aspects of the Los Angeles County men's central jail, a 5,000 inmate facility operated by the sheriff of the County of Los Angeles.

The first order required the sheriff to select up to 1500 inmates from the 5,000 inmate population who he determined presented the least likely opportunity or risk of escape or drug potential and to permit them to visit in a setting where they could touch, kiss and embrace their visitors, a practice that has been referred to in the courts as contact visitation.

The second order required the sheriff to permit inmates to observe routine cell searches and to ask questions during the searches.

1 This is a large jail, as a reflection of the 2 size of the County of Los Angeles, which encompasses 3 over 4,000 square miles and a population approaching 4 eight million people. That's roughly half the size of 5 the State of Maryland, with about twice that state's 6 population.

7 QUESTION: Just this one jail, that's over 8 4,000 square miles?

9 MR. BENNETT: No, the County is 4,000 square 10 miles.

11 QUESTION: Oh, I'm sorry.

12 MR. BENNETT: Although all male inmates are 13 centralized at one facility, in part because of the size 14 of the County and because of some duties that are 15 imposed upon the sheriff under state law. He is 16 required to accept the prisoners from the police 17 departments of the 82 independent cities within the 18 County of Los Angeles.

19 He has no discretion to refuse them, and is 20 required to transport on a daily basis one-fifth of that 21 jail's population to 26 separate jurisdictional courts 22 located throughout the wide expanse of the County and 23 bring them back again at night.

24 The jail has a high turnover. It receives 25 over 200,000 prisoners a year. The stay for most of

1 these is quite short because of the state's rather 2 liberal pretrial release statutes, primarily with regard
3 to misdemeanants. Most inmates stay within the facility 4 less than ten days.

5 On the other hand, there are longer-term 6 inmates within the facility. These are primarily 7 persons accused of more serious felonies, that are 8 involved in protracted criminal process and appellate 9 process, and they may serve between two and four months 10 or longer between arrest and sentencing.

11 The Court's order with regard to --

12 QUESTION: Mr. Bennett, when you say they're 13 involved in appellate process, you mean perhaps a motion 14 to suppress that's appealed prior to trial, that sort of 15 thing?

16 MR. BENNETT: It could be that. We have 17 really three classes of prisoners within the jail as far 18 as are relevant here. Many of these inmates when 19 they're arrested are picked up on warrants from many of 20 the courts around the jurisdiction. They may be 21 sentenced on one charge, awaiting trial on another. The 22 state sometimes leaves those sentenced inmates with us 23 during some appellate processes before they may be 24 transferred to a state prison facility.

25 So it is possible, in both appeals and writs,

1 which is a common practice in the California courts,
2 that they could be involved in appellate process.

3 QUESTION: But they're not members of the 4 class, are they? Isn't the class just pretrial
5 detainees?

6 MR. BENNETT: Technically, it was certified as 7 to all prisoners within the jail, which at the time of 8 certification involved a significant number of sentenced 9 inmates. Now the facility is predominately pretrial.

10 QUESTION: I thought the Court of Appeals' 11 opinion referred only to pretrial detainees, that the 12 order only referred to them.

13 MR. BENNETT: In the progress of this case, 14 virtually all counsel and the courts at all levels
15 focused only on the matters that dealt with pretrial 16 detainees, although --

17 QUESTION: I mean, the legal issues would be 18 quite different if they were sentenced people, would 19 they not?

20 MR. BENNETT: That's perhaps true as to some 21 issues.

22 QUESTION: But there still are within the 23 technically certified class a small minority who are not 24 pretrial detainees?

25 MR. BENNETT: We can't say how small, because

1 if an inmate is sentenced on one charge and is a
2 sentenced inmate, but is awaiting trial on other 3 charges, of which there are many within our facility, we 4 treat him for our classification purposes as if he is a 5 pretrial detainee.

6 The court's order requiring us to select up to 7 1500 inmates for these contact visits is in addition to 8 the sheriff's existing procedures to provide inmates an 9 opportunity to maintain their personal relationships, 10 and the sheriff has a three-pronged plan and program to 11 accomplish that.

12 All inmates in the jail have daily access to 13 telephone calls, for unmonitored telephone calls. There 14 is fairly unrestricted mail.

15 And all inmates have the daily opportunity for 16 a non-contact visit in a setting where inmates and their 17 visitors sit in separated booths on either side of a 18 large glass window and speak over telephones. In this 19 fashion the sheriff, rather incredibly, handles over 20 2,000 visitors a day, over 63,000 visitors a month at 21 this one facility.

22 The sheriff has two concerns which led him to 23 adopt this three-pronged plan. As the district court 24 noted and observed, the sheriff is committed to and well 25 recognizes the importance of permitting inmates to

1 maintain their personal relationships. At the same 2 time, the sheriff is also committed to housing his 3 prisoners in as safe a manner as possible and free from 4 injury.

5 And to accomplish these two goals, he has 6 chosen this three-pronged plan of daily telephone calls, 7 unrestricted mail, and non-contact visits because it 8 maximizes the frequency of the opportunity to maintain 9 these personal relationships, while at the same time 10 minimizing the risks involved.

11 And it's fairly obvious why there's no risk
12 under this plan. The visitors never enter the security 13 of the facility, the inmates never leave it. There is 14 no opportunity to pass contraband.

15 Because of this and in this fashion, this 16 large number of visitors can be easily handled with 17 minimal risk and without intrusive security measures
18 associated with most other types of visitation: no
19 strip searches, no appointments, no screening, no 20 limitation on the visitors that you can see or their 21 names -- without any of those intrusive measures.

22 QUESTION: Is there a claim here, Mr. Bennett, 23 that those objectives could have been accomplished by 24 less intrusive, less restrictive measures? That is, 25 using a wire screen that would prevent the passing of

1 weapons or narcotics, but eliminating the telephone? Is 2 there a claim?

3 MR. BENNETT: They did not make that request.
4 Unlike some district court cases concerning other jails 5 where the phones were always inoperative and people had 6 to scream back and forth to be heard, I think the record
7 reflects that this is a fairly modern visitation
8 facility, with well-maintained telephones.

9 The thrust of the plaintiff's claim was 10 contact visits, permitting kissing, touching and 11 embracing, and not so much the fact that one had to 12 communicate over the telephone.

13 QUESTION: This included children as well as 14 adults?

15 MR. BENNETT: Yes, it did.

16 QUESTION: I take it that your New York 17 counterpart disagrees with some of the things you've 18 just said?

19 MR. BENNETT: Well, I think that the New York
20 facility is certainly different from ours. Even though 21 it's maybe the second or third largest jail in the 22 country, ours is more than twice its size, with unique 23 problems that make it quite different.

24 Plus, administrators place different 25 priorities on things within their own circumstances and

1 exercise a different level of prudence. I think the 2 most telling evidence in this case was the testimony of 3 Warden Gaston of the Ryker's Island facility, who was 4 the warden of their largest jail that had permitted
5 contact visits for a number of years. He said two 6 things:

7 One, he did not see how we could permit
8 contact visitations within our existing facility;

9 And two, that if contact visitation was 10 required in our facility, that he didn't want to be the 11 manager of it.

12 Contact visits --

13 QUESTION: Excuse me, before you go on. Do
14 you have any record or any statistics on the drug 15 problem within the facility? To what extent has there 16 been a drug problem?

17 MR. BENNETT: I'd like to focus on two 18 aspects: one, our drug problem; and then the drug
19 problem, for instance, at New York jails which permit
20 contact visits.

21 We do have a drug problem. Within our jail
22 are probably as large a group of drug-oriented gangs 23 that are organized to control drug trafficking within 24 the jail through threats and violence, more than you'll 25 find in any other facility in the country. Drugs do

1 exist in our facility, because we can't control the 2 inmates at court, they can be hidden in packages in 3 mail, and that is a problem within our facility.

4 Significantly, at the New York facility, if we 5 listen to Warden Gaston from Ryker's Island, when they 6 permit contact visits he's found that the most prevalent 7 use is the use of a balloon, that is swallowed -- that 8 is passed through a kiss and swallowed to retrieve
9 later. He pointed out that their drug problem was so 10 pervasive that on more than one occasion these empty 11 balloons have clogged up their sewer system.

12 Contact visitation I think presents a unique 13 and unavoidable opportunity for serious and genuine 14 breaches of a facility's security.

15 QUESTION: Mr. Bennett, before you get into 16 that. You started to tell us about the three classes of 17 inmates and I was curious to know -- as I understand the 18 district court's order, it only applies to those who 19 have been in the facility for over 30 days, and also it 20 excludes the drug people who can be identified as 21 associated with drug traffic, I guess.

22 How many people does the order apply to, in 23 your judgment?

24 MR. BENNETT: Well, the court certainly 25 thought it applied to up to 1500.

1 QUESTION: Well, it put a ceiling of 1500. It
2 didn't require you to have 1500 visits, as I read the 3 order. It says no more than 1500.

4 MR. BENNETT: But that number, in terms of 5 total inmates that meet the 30-day requirement, would 6 exceed that number.

7 QUESTION: And out of those, how many would be 8 -- how many could you segregate out as having 9 association with drug traffic or being particularly 10 violent?

11 MR. BENNETT: We don't think that we can 12 segregate them within our facility or classify them as 13 to those types of risks.

14 QUESTION: You don't have any classification
15 system at all?

16 MR. BENNETT: We do. In fact, the New York
17 people who came out and testified said we had the finest 18 classification system that they had seen in examining 19 all of those. But it's a classification system designed 20 to house inmates by compatibility within a secure 21 facility, which is our main job at this point.

22 QUESTION: Yes, but for example, if someone's 23 arrested on a drug charge presumably the jailer would 24 know that and just make him ineligible for this visit.
25 That wouldn't be very difficult, would it?

1 MR. BENNETT: Even if we can segregate out 2 those who might present the lesser risk of drugs or 3 escape, we can't prevent the intermingling within our 4 facility. All or many activities within our jail are 5 centralized: medical care, meals, recreation, law 6 library, school.

7 QUESTION: What I'm trying to find out -- and 8 I don't know if the record will tell us -- is how many 9 people would get the benefit of this order if the Ninth 10 Circuit were affirmed, in your judgment? If you assume 11 you can identify people who were arrested for murder and 12 people who were arrested on drug charges --

13 MR. BENNETT: I think it was apparent to us
14 that the court expected us to find at least 1500
15 people --

16 QUESTION: I'm not asking you what the court
17 expected you to find. It put a 1500 person ceiling, I
18 understand that. How many people do you think the order 19 will benefit?

20 MR. BENNETT: I can't say.

21 QUESTION: You have no idea?

22 MR. BENNETT: Although I would indicate that, 23 in light of our sheriff's history as reflected in the 24 record, that he would make an effort to try and find 25 1500 people if he could. The problem --

1 QUESTION: Well, why would he do that? The 2 court didn't require him to find a lot of people. The 3 court put a ceiling on. Is he going to go out looking 4 for people unnecessarily, to make it as hard a case as 5 possible?

6 MR. BENNETT: I think it's a reflection of 7 this sheriff who, as the district court pointed out, 8 tried, to the extent that it was told to him that he had 9 to do something, he would make an effort to do that.

10 QUESTION: Well, what if you told him that you
11 thought he shouldn't do any more than absolutely 12 necessary? How many people would then be involved, in 13 your judgment?

14 MR. BENNETT: I can't tell you.

15 QUESTION: You don't have any idea?

16 MR. BENNETT: No, I can't.

17 But you've pointed out one problem, that we 18 can't prevent the intermixing of inmates, even if we 19 could separate them by classification. Not only the 20 centralized activities, but this incredible logistics 21 task of pulling out, sometimes with an order telling you 22 who it is only the night before and which court he's 23 going to only the night before, 1,000 inmates, one-fifth 24 of the jail's population, that have to be comingled by 25 court destination and transported out to these courts

1 and brought back again at night on a daily basis.

2 The significance of that is that even if you
3 found some inmates that could be trustworthy, and no 4 doubt there are many, that you can't preclude the use of 5 coercion and threats by those with a compulsion to 6 obtain the drugs to coerce these people permitted 7 contact visits to do their deeds for them. And these 8 prison drug trafficking-oriented gangs are a major 9 problem in that respect.

10 But I think another thing about contact 11 visitation that we have to think about is that the 12 necessary security measures for it are very intrusive
13 and have adverse effects on the inmates. Justice
14 Marshall well pointed out that these strip searches, 15 which are almost universally determined to be necessary 16 with contact visitation, may themselves have adverse 17 psychological impact upon the inmate, that they're 18 certainly degrading, and that they may present the 19 potential --

20 QUESTION: The inmates and the guards.

21 MR. BENNETT: That's true.

22 QUESTION: The guards don't like it either.

23 MR. BENNETT: They don't.

24 Also, contact visitation is more protracted,
25 time consuming, and personnel intensive. It may limit

1 the number of non-contact visits that we can permit to 2 other inmates, and may take immediate personnel away
3 from other important duties within the jail.

4 Finally, the jail was not designed for contact 5 visitation, and if we were forced to try and deal with 6 such an order it's clear that rather expensive and 7 complex additional construction would be required.

8 Two decades of prisoner' rights litigation
9 have taught us that the problems of jails are difficult 10 and intractable and not easily solved by judicial 11 decree, and this is because they involve sensitive 12 judgments concerning the confinement of people against 13 their will, to many of whom violence is no stranger, and 14 where the compulsion to obtain narcotics and other 15 contraband may override rationality, and most 16 importantly, where the cost of miscalculation may be 17 human life in its forfeit instant.

18 I'd like to deal briefly with the search 19 procedures. We've pointed out in our briefs at 20 length --

21 QUESTION: Well, before you leave the contact 22 visit issue, may I ask you. As I understand it, if 23 we're talking about pretrial detainees the issue is 24 whether it can be punishment under Bell against 25 Wolfish. In your view, could it ever be punishment, no

1 matter how long the incarceration, to deny a person who 2 has not yet been tried any contact whatsoever with his 3 family? Could that ever constitute punishment?

4 MR. BENNETT: I don't think the mere question
5 of contact visits rises to constitutional proportions.

6 QUESTION: Well, it does if it's punishment.

7 MR. BENNETT: Then the answer is it's not 8 punishment, given the other alternatives that are 9 available to permit the maintenance of these 10 relationships.

11 QUESTION: Your answer is it could never 12 become punishment as long as other alternatives that are 13 less desirable to the inmate are provided?

14 MR. BENNETT: I think I would have to take 15 that position.

16 QUESTION: I think you would.

17 MR. BENNETT: The search procedures, as we've 18 indicated in our briefs, are really not very 19 distinguishable from this Court's prior examination of 20 that question in the Wolfish decision. In fact, our 21 district court relied in haec verba on the very 22 reasoning and analysis of Judge Frankel that was 23 rejected in that case. That's as close as you can come, 24 I think, to not being able to distinguish a case.

25 But one thing about searches that may trouble

1 some members of the Court, the district court here
2 focused on but one aspect and certainly the less 3 important aspect of a dual purpose search. The primary 4 purpose of these searches is to locate weapons and drugs 5 and contraband.

6 It turns out, because of matter of 7 convenience, we also do a housekeeping function with 8 it. The guards go through, they remove the excess food
9 for sanitation purposes. They take out the excess 10 newspapers and magazines because that presents a fire
11 hazard in great quantity. They take the jail-issued 12 clothing that is in large number, the extra pair of 13 pants, the multiple blankets and towels, and recycle 14 them back into the system.

15 These are severable functions, although it 16 would be more difficult to do them separately. And to 17 the extent that the court was concerned with the seizure 18 of the magazines or the newspapers or the like, that's 19 part of the housekeeping function. Our security 20 concerns devote primarily to the hunt for contraband and 21 weapons.

22 With the Court's permission, I'd like to 23 reserve the balance of my time for rebuttal.

24 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well.

25 Mr. Bronstein.

1 ORAL ARGUMENT OF ALVIN J. BRONSTEIN, ESQ.,

2 ON BEHALF OF RESPONDENTS

3 MR. BRONSTEIN: Mr. Chief Justice and may it
4 please the Court:

5 I think Justice Stevens focused on the real 6 issue in this case, which is not, is not, a blanket
7 constitutional right to contact visits, the question
8 presented by the Petitioner. Justice Stevens asked 9 whether under any circumstances the denial of a contact
10 visit could constitute punishment, and I think to accept 11 the County's argument and to overrule the Ninth Circuit
12 this Court would have to say that as a matter of law
13 there are no factual circumstances under which detainees 14 would have the right to a barrier-free visit. That is,
15 that the denial could never constitute punishment, no
16 matter what the facts.

17 QUESTION: Mr. Bronstein, can you answer the 18 question that was earlier asked Mr. Bennett as to 19 approximately how many people are included within the 20 class certified?

21 MR. BRONSTEIN: I cannot. I do agree with 22 Justice Stevens that the 1500 was a cap. I have no
23 idea. I was not involved in the trial of the case, 24 Justice Rehnquist. The trial lawyer is now a judge and 25 no longer in the case.

1 QUESTION: Mr. Bronstein, I have a
2 recollection, but I haven't been able to check it out,
3 of a case that came to us from the Second Circuit that 4 involved a contact visit with the mother bringing a 5 small child in, and in New York they had, or at least in 6 the Second Circuit, there had been a screen barrier that 7 was preventing the transfer of drugs or weapons or 8 anything else.

9 Do you recall that case?

10 MR. BRONSTEIN: No --

11 QUESTION: Perhaps I'm confusing one --

12 MR. BRONSTEIN: -- not specifically. There is 13 in that circuit, but at the district court level, the 14 Boudin versus Thomas case, which dealt with the right of 15 a woman detainee to visit, to have a contact visit with 16 her infant child.

17 That case is cited in our brief, and there the 18 Bureau of Prisons wanted to make an exception of this 19 detainee because of her particular notariety and the 20 district court said that the woman should be entitled to 21 a contact visit. That case was not appealed by the 22 Bureau of Prisons. But I don't know specifically which 23 case you're referring to.

24 I think, going back to whether it could ever 25 constitute punishment, we have to visualize, for

1 example, the plaintiff Rutherford in this case, who was 2 incarcerated for 39 months, detained for 39 months.
3 Assume that his wife was pregnant when he went into the 4 jail, that she delivered three months after he was 5 incarcerated.

6 That would mean that for three years that 7 detainee could never touch that child, could never hold 8 that child, could never, as is graphically illustrated 9 in the amicus brief of the New York City Board of 10 Corrections, never put that child on his lap. I'm 11 referring to Appendix C in the Board of Corrections 12 amicus brief.

13 For three years, I'd say that would be 14 torture, not just punishment, and that's what the County
15 is arguing on that viist.

16 The County, Mr. Bennett, my distinguished 17 adversary, focused a fair amount on what he believes are 18 the factual support for his position. Unfortunately, 19 the factual findings of the district court are all 20 contrary to his assertions, and those findings were 21 approved by the Ninth Circuit as not being clearly 22 erroneous.

23 Two separate questions have to be looked at:
24 the constitutional bases for the contact visit order --
25 which, by the way, Justice Stevens, you are correct,

1 applied only to detainees and only to that narrow
2 category of low-risk, long-term detainees. The cell
3 search issue, by the way, appears to apply to all 4 prisoners, but only those who are in the area at the 5 time a search is going to be made, and I'll come back.

6 QUESTION: Well, what is the precise
7 definition of the class certified, do you know, Mr.
8 Bronstein?

9 MR. BRONSTEIN: There were two classes
10 certified, Justice Rehnquist, a class of detainees and a 11 class of sentenced prisoners. At the time of the trial
12 there were a large number of sentenced prisoners. Now 13 apparently, I agree with Mr. Bennett, there are very 14 few.

15 But the contact visit order specifically by 16 its terms applies only to detainees.

17 QUESTION: And is that the one there's the 18 1500 cap?

19 MR. BRONSTEIN: That is right.

20 QUESTION: And that doesn't apply to the 21 convicted ones who are also detainees?

22 MR. BRONSTEIN: It does not. It speaks
23 exclusively to pretrial detainees.

24 QUESTION: Well, aren't there some of those 25 that are convicted? Aren't some pretrial detainees

1 convicted felons?

2 MR. BRONSTEIN: They may have been convicted 3 in some other case, yes.

4 QUESTION: Yes. Aren't there many of them?

5 MR. BRONSTEIN: I don't know.

6 QUESTION: Does it apply to them?

7 MR. BRONSTEIN: In this, I don't know the 8 answer to that either, Justice Marshall, whether it
9 would apply to them in this case. I just don't know.
10 Perhaps Mr. Bennett can clarify that on his rebuttal.

11 The trial court first found, following the 12 teachings of Wolfish, that the total prohibition on 13 contact visits was an exaggerated response by County
14 officials to security concerns, which the trial court
15 found to be punishment in violation of the due process 16 clause. Also going through this issue are the fact that 17 the total prohibition results in unconstitutional
18 interference with important familial rights of detainees
19 and their families, following a long line of Fourteenth 20 Amendment cases.

21 On the first argument, Wolfish teaches us that 22 a detainee has the right to be free of any punishment, 23 and whether a condition or practice, the total
24 prohibition in this case, is punishment is essentially a 25 factual question.

1 The County argues that to find inferred
2 punitive intent you must have a condition that on its 3 face appears punitive and the condition must be very 4 harsh, and they refer to footnote 20 in Justice
5 Rehnquist's opinion in Wolfish, the example of loading a 6 chain with detainees in shackles and placing them in a 7 dungeon.

8 In other words, they argue for a return to the 9 hands-off doctrine. That assertion I submit flies in 10 the face of the facts of this case, the example I gave 11 you of Mr. Rutherford before, and historical facts.
12 Many practices, we know --

13 QUESTION: Of course, the class is certified 14 not just to include Mr. Rutherford, who you say was 15 there for 39 months, but to include anyone who is there 16 for more than 30 days. So that we have to analyze it in 17 terms of someone who has been there 35 days as well as 18 someone who's been there 39 months.

19 MR. BRONSTEIN: That's precisely what the 20 district court did, and if you'll notice, the district
21 court in its original order provided that detainees
22 there only 14 days were entitled to visits. Then -- 23 that's after the 17-day trial. Then, on the County's 24 application, the court held another four-day hearing, 25 took further evidence on the contact visit issue, and

1 made a factual finding that 30 days would be more
2 appropriate, to accommodate the County's concerns.

3 But many practices that historically started
4 for valid reasons, as I started to say, are today
5 punishment. We know that the penitentiary in this 6 country was started by the Quakers for rehabilitative 7 purposes, and their concept was that you lock people up 8 in silence and in solitude for many years and that they 9 would become penitent and be rehabilitated, and of 10 course most of them went mad. Today we would 11 characterize that treatment as punishment.

12 Corporal punishment and whipping was common in 13 our prisons for deterrence. It was a benign thing. We 14 would deter bad conduct by publicly whipping a person.
15 Now, of course, we would consider that punishment.

16 It is true, as the Court said in Wolfish, that 17 effective management and security concerns are 18 legitimate government interests that may justify certain 19 conditions or restrictions on detainees, the kinds of 20 things that Mr. Bennett was talking about, and that the 21 Court should ordinarily defer to corrections officials 22 in the absence -- this language from Wolfish -- in the 23 absence of substantial evidence in the record which 24 indicates that the officials have exaggerated their 25 response. In other words, the deference is not

1 absolute.

2 It is true that contact visits, like any other
3 practice, present a security problem. But as Judge
4 Duffey said in the Boudin case I referred to before: "A 5 naked man in chains poses no risk. From that point on, 6 every increase in freedom brings at least some decrease
7 in security. But obviously, we will not countenance 8 keeping a person naked in chains."

9 QUESTION: I take it that you do not suggest 10 that there's no risk of having drugs or weapons come 11 into prisons, Mr. Bronstein?

12 MR. BRONSTEIN: I do not suggest that at all,
13 and the district court found that there is some risk, 14 and prisons are --

15 QUESTION: Some risk?

16 MR. BRONSTEIN: That's right.

17 QUESTION: You think it's just some risk, or 18 that it is an enormous risk?

19 MR. BRONSTEIN: The district court found there 20 was --

21 QUESTION: I'm speaking of generally. Lay 22 aside the findings of the district judge for a minute.

23 MR. BRONSTEIN: Generally, in some 24 institutions it is a risk and a problem, in some more,
25 some less. It exists in every jail and prison that I

1 have visited in this country, and I have visited many,
2 many hundreds.

3 And the evidence in this record indicates that 4 in almost every prison in this country contact visits is 5 the rule, except for people who violate visiting rules 6 or special categories of prisoners, and in most 7 detention facilities today -- many detention facilities
8 today, including the giant system in New York, contact 9 visits are permitted in spite of the fact that they know 10 there is always some risk.

11 There is also a risk from correctional 12 officers bringing in drugs. We know that, too. Just 13 two weeks ago at the Metropolitan Correctional Center in 14 New York, the facility the subject of Wolfish, nine 15 correctional officers were indicted for bringing in 16 drugs as contraband. But that doesn't mean that that's 17 the rule every place.

18 The evidence in this record which led the 19 judge to the findings was heard after 17 days of an 20 initial hearing, four more days on the issue of contact
21 visits, two personal inspections. Let me just briefly 22 review the factors which the district judge found and 23 which the Court of Appeals affirmed as being appropriate 24 findings.

25 On exaggerated response, why the trial judge

1 found that this was an exaggerated response, the total
2 prohibit: First, he found there was testimony by 3 corrections experts which revealed the existence of a 4 variety of adequate and tested security precautions
5 available for contact visits.

6 By the way, Mr. Bennett relies very heavily on 7 Warden Gaston, who testified in New York -- in this case
8 in 1978. As Mr. Bennett knows, Warden Gaston was warden 9 of a facility in New York for two months and 19 days in 10 toto during the very first few months of the experiment
11 with contact visits in New York.

12 He had nothing upon which to base any kind of 13 experience and testimony, and clearly the judge didn't 14 find his testimony credible. He was only warden for two 15 months and 17 days. The brief amicus of the New 16 York --

17 QUESTION: If you knew Ryker's Island, you'd 18 find you can learn a whole lot in one day.

19 MR. BRONSTEIN: Yes, but the brief of the New 20 York City Board of Corrections indicates that last year
21 there were 339,000 contact visits involving an average
22 daily population of almost 10,000, and they were 99.95
23 incident-free. I think that's much more important 24 testimony than what Mr. Gaston said in 1978.

25 QUESTION: Is there any -- I know there's no

1 evidence as to how much of drugs came in during that 2 period.

3 MR. BRONSTEIN: No, there is none.

4 QUESTION: There is --

5 MR. BRONSTEIN: Except that there were no
6 incidents in 99.95 percent, no finding --

7 QUESTION: Well, the incident would be a
8 person being caught.

9 MR. BRONSTEIN: That's correct.

10 QUESTION: But there is no record of those who 11 were not caught.

12 MR. BRONSTEIN: I would concede that some 13 drugs may have come in in some of those visits, 14 obviously.

15 But the trial judge evaluated all of those 16 things, based on the expert testimony. He found that 17 contact visits were the norm in most prisoners and in 18 many detention facilities. He found that the withdrawal 19 of contact visits was regularly used as punishment for 20 violation of a rule.

21 He found that the County was able to and it
22 was actually engaged in classifying prisoners for risk.
23 He found two other things which are very significant,
24 because the opinion in Wolfish states that where you 25 have genuine privation and hardship for very extended

1 periods of time, that may raise a question under the due 2 process clause about punishment:

3 He found that detainees, some of them, were 4 there for very extended periods of time; and he found 5 that the denial of contact visits, particularly with 6 close family, constituted genuine privation and 7 hardship.

8 And finally, he had the benefit of all of the 9 professional standards which recommended contact visits 10 in detention facilities.

11 QUESTION: The trial judge didn't make new 12 findings after the remand, did he?

13 MR. BRONSTEIN: No, he did not.

14 QUESTION: He just relied on his --

15 MR. BRONSTEIN: He was directed by the --

16 QUESTION: Court of Appeals?

17 MR. BRONSTEIN: -- Court of Appeals to hold -- 18 to consider it in the light of Wolfish, without an 19 evidentiary hearing.

20 QUESTION: And he could have held it? He 21 could have made new findings.

22 MR. BRONSTEIN: He could have made new 23 findings. He did not. And I will in a moment, Justice 24 White, speak to I think why he did not.

25 But just to finish with the standards, we know

1 that this Court has often looked to what the Federal 2 Bureau of Prisons does as being instructive of what is 3 professionally appropriate and correct. Well, the 4 Bureau of Prisons -- and I'm referring now to 28 Code of 5 Federal Regulations, Section 540.40 says: "The Bureau 6 of Prisons encourages visiting by family, friends and 7 community groups to maintain the morale of the inmate."

8 QUESTION: Is that speaking only of pretrial
9 detainees?

10 MR. BRONSTEIN: No, that's generally, and now
11 I'm going to get to detainees.

12 The next general rule is in 540.51.G.2: 13 "Staff shall permit limited physical contact, such as 14 handshaking, embracing, and kissing, between an inmate
15 and a visitor." And then finally, 551.120: "Staff 16 shall allow pretrial inmates to receive visits in 17 accordance with the Bureau's rules."

18 QUESTION: Do you think, Mr. Bronstein, that 19 there is a difference between the classification of 20 prisoners in the federal system and in what we're 21 dealing with here? What kind of crimes bring people, 22 25, 30,000 people, into federal prisons as compared with 23 --

24 MR. BRONSTEIN: Well, a great many drug 25 crimes, Your Honor. So that is the main concern. There

1 are probably as high a percentage of offenders in the 2 federal system with drug histories as there are --

3 QUESTION: A great many so-called white collar 4 crimes?

5 MR. BRONSTEIN: Not that many. As we all 6 know, they rarely go away to prison. Most of them get 7 other kinds of alternative treatment.

8 But today, as the prison population of the 9 federal system has skyrocketed, it's primarily the 10 so-called more violent, more dangerous offender. It is 11 not an increase in white collar crime. That's not on 12 the record, but that's my own personal knowledge.

13 The trial court had all of these findings. It 14 balanced the deprivations against the security 15 concerns. And again I would like to point out that the 16 determination of an exaggerated response to an 17 alternative purpose is primarily a factual finding. And 18 as this Court said just a year ago in Pullman Standard 19 versus Swint, Rule 52 broadly requires that findings of 20 fact not be set aside unless clearly erroneous.

21 QUESTION: Mr. Bronstein, the Court of Appeals 22 in remanding to the district court said -- this was in 23 giving the district court some guidance:

24 "A condition is punitive if there is a showing 25 of express intent to punish. Otherwise, if a particular

1 condition is reasonably related to a legitimate,
2 non-punitive objective, it does not, without more,
3 amount to punishment."

4 MR. BRONSTEIN: Does not, without more.

5 QUESTION: Well now, my question to you is, do
6 you think that invites a balancing process?

7 MR. BRONSTEIN: No. It invites the very 8 process --

9 QUESTION: Well, it invites an inquiry as to 10 whether a particular restriction is reasonably related 11 to a non-punitive goal?

12 MR. BRONSTEIN: And also, as Wolfish tells us, 13 whether there were genuine privations and hardships for 14 very extended periods of time, and whether the 15 particular response by the officials was exaggerated to 16 the real concern for security.

17 QUESTION: Well --

18 MR. BRONSTEIN: And illustrative --

19 QUESTION: The district court said: "Thus, it 20 seems to me, regardless of how it's phrased, the test 21 still remains what is reasonable under the 22 circumstances." And you think that's -- you think that 23 Wolfish directs a district judge just to answer, just to 24 decide what he thinks is reasonable?

25 MR. BRONSTEIN: I don't think that's -- I

1 think that --

2 QUESTION: That's what he said.

3 QUESTION: That's what he said.

4 MR. BRONSTEIN: But in context, if the entire 5 district court opinion is read, I think it is clear that 6 he specifically follows Wolfish by finding the 7 exaggerated response.

8 Even before Wolfish, in February of 1979, the 9 district court in its first opinion, at Petitioner's
10 appendix 30, the district court before Wolfish said,
11 utilizing -- that he would utilize the exaggerated
12 response test set forth in Feeley versus Sampson, a 13 First Circuit case approved by this Court in Wolfish at 14 two different points, rather than the strict scrutiny or 15 compelling interest test of Campbell, because it is less 16 burdensome to the custodial authority.

17 Throughout these proceedings, even before 18 Wolfish -- in fact, the Ninth Circuit thought that the 19 district court had already anticipated Wolfish, but 20 remanded it out of an excess of caution.

21 QUESTION: Is it your suggestion that a 22 district court's conclusion as to whether or not a
23 condition is reasonably related to a legitimate
24 non-punitive objective is a finding of fact?

25 MR. BRONSTEIN: Well, that particular thing I

1 think would be --

2 QUESTION: Or his result of a balance is a 3 finding of fact?

4 MR. BRONSTEIN: No. I think the underlying 5 factors that go in to reach that are findings of fact.
6 The ultimate conclusion is a finding, is a mixed
7 finding, one which I think would be governed by this 8 Court's decision in Sumner versus Matar, also a 1982
9 case. And I think the questions of fact that underlie 10 the ultimate legal conclusion are governed by the 11 presumption of correctness.

12 The facts in Pullman are very close to this 13 one, because there this Court said that whether the 14 differential impact of a seniority system reflected an 15 intent to discriminate was a factual finding, subject to 16 the clearly erroneous rule. Here, whether there was an 17 intent to punish that could be inferred I think is 18 similarly a factual issue.

19 QUESTION: You've referred to several times, 20 Mr. Bronstein, to overreaction or -- I've forgot the 21 precise phrase, that there is an overreaction to --

22 MR. BRONSTEIN: Exaggerated response.

23 QUESTION: Exaggerated response to the 24 problem. Suppose here, instead of a glass partition and 25 a malfunctioning telephone that you mentioned, they put

1 up this fine screen which is used in many institutions,
2 where you see the person, you have a conversation
3 normally, but you can't pass any articles to them.

4 Would you say that that was permissible?

5 MR. BRONSTEIN: I don't think that would be 6 permissible, and that would not satisfy what Judge Gray 7 was concerned about. The heart of his finding of 8 deprivation was based on the testimony of prisoners, of 9 experts, and all the studies which show that the barrier 10 visit, where a person cannot touch, touch the hair of a 11 small child, put that child on his lap, embrace for a 12 moment, the way the Bureau of Prisons permits, that that 13 was the real deprivation.

14 To see through the screen again is saying:
15 Your father is an animal, you are not allowed to touch 16 that person. So I don't think the screen would 17 suffice.

18 I think the County categorically rejected any 19 proposal like that or any other proposal for contact 20 visits -- they didn't reject that specific one -- as the 21 district court found. And the court found:

22 "It is inescapable that, in the words of the 23 Supreme Court, the County's action was excessive in 24 relation to the alternative purpose of security
25 assigned. The deprivations exceeded the reasonable

1 requirements of security. To deprive a prisoner for 2 long periods of time of any opportunity to embrace his 3 wife or hug his children is very traumatic treatment,
4 and such treatment is not made necessary by reasonable
5 security requirements. It constitutes severe 6 punishment."

7 As to the rights specifically of wives and 8 children, those important familial rights, protected by 9 the many decisions of this Court, those fundamental 10 values we would argue should be measured by an even 11 stricter test than that which is set forth under the due 12 process clause in Wolfish, but under the kind of test
13 that Procunier versus Martinez suggests: if the complete 14 elimination of the opportunity to touch their loved ones
15 is greater than necessary or essential to the protection 16 of the governmental interest involved.

17 In closing on this issue, I would just ask you 18 to visualize, as I think the trial judge did, to 19 visualize a person who is a father or a grandchild
20 behind a glass wall. For months or even years, you can 21 see but not touch that child. I would find that, as I 22 said earlier, not just punishment; I would find that 23 torture.

24 Let me turn very briefly to the other issue,
25 which I recognize at the outset is a closer question,

1 the cell search issue. But let me redefine or correct 2 the impression that was left earlier about what that 3 order says.

4 It is not an order that says that any prisoner
5 has the right to observe a cell search of his cell.
6 What it says is that any prisoner who is in the area 7 may, under these very specific provisions, observe the 8 cell search. So that a prisoner who is in the dining 9 room or at recreation or out at court or visiting and 10 they want to search his cell, they don't have to go get 11 that person and bring him back.

12 The protection was, if the prisoner happens to 13 be in the cell or right on that block of cells and is 14 there, then there was this special accommodation to 15 allow the prisoner to observe the cell search. And this 16 is a procedural due process issue, as Judge Gray dealt 17 with it, rather than freedom from punishment as a matter 18 of substantive due process. And he distinguished from 19 Wolfish, which was decided basically on Fourth Amendment 20 grounds.

21 QUESTION: Is that really anything but a 22 rather sophistic distinction?

23 MR. BRONSTEIN: I don't think so --

24 QUESTION: I mean, do you think a district 25 court could properly say that, after this court has

1 analyzed a particular claim under the Fourth Amendment,
2 to reach a wholly different result, just saying, well,
3 I'm going to use a little different constitutional 4 provision?

5 MR. BRONSTEIN: Well, what I think Judge Gray
6 was concerned about was his observations, his personal 7 observations of the likelihood of the loss of cherished 8 possessions: a photograph of a deceased mother, legal 9 papers, a book that was of very great importance. He 10 saw these kinds of things happening.

11 QUESTION: Well, how does that bear on our 12 opinion in Wolfish?

13 MR. BRONSTEIN: Well, what he found was that, 14 I think, that it was not a search and seizure question,
15 but since we have already determined that a prisoner 16 does -- that the state may not take property without 17 some procedural due process, he found that if those 18 things were taken there was no adequate procedural 19 protection, such as the damage claim mentioned by 20 footnote 38 in Wolfish; and that under Parratt v.
21 Taylor, which reaffirms that a state may not take 22 property without some sort of hearing or, as the Court
23 said in Parratt, a meaningful hearing at a meaningful 24 time, the only time to do that is in a prophylactic way, 25 to prevent the taking.

1 I think that was his analysis. But he clearly 2 limited it, I think because of Wolfish, to those 3 prisoners in the immediate area of the cell search.

4 He did not strike down the search rule in its 5 entirety, which is what was at issue in Wolfish. He 6 found, after evidence and personal observation, that the 7 risks of improper confiscation of cherished possessions
8 was great and could not be redressed in any future
9 action. That was the basis for his ruling.

10 I submit, I agree that it is a closer question 11 because the facts are so close to the Wolfish case. But 12 I think, for all of the reasons that I have set forth,
13 this Court should affirm the decision of the Ninth 14 Circuit.

15 Unless there are any further questions, I will 16 sit down.

17 QUESTION: Do you have anything further, Mr.
18 Bennett?

19 REBUTTAL ARGUMENT OF FREDERICK R. BENNETT, ESQ.

21 MR. BENNETT: I'd like to direct my attention 22 just briefly to this 39-month inmate, because it may 23 cause some concern to some members of the Court.
24 There's nothing in the record to indicate that's a 25 routine or other than an exception.

1 And I point out that every one of these 2 pretrial inmates is before a judge in a pending criminal 3 case, which regularly makes orders concerning 4 confinement and the treatment of that prisoner during 5 trial. What's significant about that is one portion of 6 the record that's easy to overlook, and it's set forth 7 on page 62 of the joint appendix, and it was a fact 8 stipulated to between the parties at the outset of the 9 litigation, and it reads: "Physical contact between 10 prisoners and visitors is not routinely permitted." Not 11 routinely permitted.

12 We do get orders from judges in cases that are 13 particularly protracted, that are handled on a one on 14 one basis, which is manageable within our facility. In 15 fact, I'm not sure if it appears in the transcript or 16 not, but I was there. Judge Gray himself ordered some 17 such visits. I can't remember if it dealt with Mr.
18 Rutherford himself, but with regard to one inmate who 19 made such a request.

20 In conclusion, we do argue that the Court as a 21 matter of law should not find contact visits
22 constitutionally required; given the unavoidable risks,
23 given the availability of relatively risk-free
24 alternatives, that the Court should not find that a 25 court is warranted in substituting its judgment either

1 for the jailer who operates that jail or for the local 2 and state officials and government for which they work.

3 New York is a prime example. It has gone far 4 beyond constitutional mandates and has indicated that 5 that may occur.

6 With regard to the findings, as we've 7 indicated in our brief I don't think the findings of the 8 court support either its conclusions or the position of 9 the inmates. It's clear when you compare the three 10 decisions that the court merely substituted its 11 perception of what was reasonable for that of the 12 sheriff.

13 When you look at the first initial decision, 14 the court looked at two different tests: a compelling
15 necessity test that came out of the New York courts, 16 which required strict scrutiny; and it then looked at 17 the reasonably necessary test, which came out of another 18 circuit. And it said even then, between those two 19 tests, at the petition appendix page 30, that even those 20 two tests were the same, that only they differed in 21 theoretical analysis, but the result was the same.
22 Still a balancing test.

23 When you get to the final decision after 24 remand after Wolfish, the court no longer talks about 25 the compelling necessity test, but he talks about his

1 prior test and he says, even the test of Wolfish and 2 what I did before is the same, that really -- and that 3 was at the appendix 25.

4 Whether you're talking about the compelling
5 necessity test, strict scrutiny, the reasonably 6 necessary test, or the test of Wolfish, the court says, 7 I read the tests the same and the result is the same.
8 And what that tells us is that the court worked in 9 reverse order.

10 He first looked at his perception of what was 11 an appropriate way to deal with this problem of 12 permitting inmates to maintain personal relationships, 13 and worked backwards to try to make the test fit that 14 result. And really, the one thing that Wolfish tells us 15 is that you go in reverse order. You first look at the 16 determination of the jailer or of the local entity or 17 state government for which he works, and you examine his 18 choice of the range of reasonable solutions and see if 19 it is sufficiently related to legitimate government 20 goals that it's not punishment and thus constitutionally 21 permissible.

22 And with that, I will submit.

23 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.
24 the case is submitted.

25 (Whereupon, at 11:44 a.m., argument in the

1 above-entitled case was submitted.)
