2 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments
3 next in Brown against Hotel and Restaurant Employees and 4 the consolidated case.

5 Mr. Parrillo, I think you may proceed whenever 6 you are ready.

7 ORAL ARGUMENT OF ANTHONY J. PARRILLO, ESQ., 8 ON BEHALF OF THE APPELLANTS

9 MR. PARRILLO: Thank you.

10 Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the 11 Court. This matter is here on appeal from the Third 12 Circuit's decision declaring preempted a provision of 13 New Jersey law which disqualifies certain labor union 14 officials on the basis of state proscribed criminal or 15 quasi-criminal conduct from association with our casino 16 gaming industry.

17 That provision, Section 93 of New Jersey's
18 Casino Control Act, is but part of a larger 19 comprehensive statutory and regulatory scheme of casino 20 control which is designed not only to prevent the 21 industry's infiltration by criminal elements or their 22 agents, but also to avoid any public perception that 23 such a foothold is even available.

24 The issue the is whether New Jersey's exercise 25 of its police power over conduct incompatible with the

1 well regulated casino industry impermissibly clashes
2 with rights accorded unions and their members by federal 3 labor law.

4 The facts here are not in dispute, and are 5 basically a matter of historical, judicial, and 6 legislative record. In 1976, New Jersey, within the 7 sole confines of Atlantic City, legalized casino 8 gambling, and spawned an industry that had been 9 criminally outlawed for over 200 years in our state.

10 Intended as a tool to revive a decaying region
11 in our state and to fund worthy programs for the benefit 12 of our seniors and handicapped citizens, the casino
13 gaming industry is vitally and strongly affected with a 14 deep public interest. No matter how great its rewards, 15 New Jersey would tolerate casino gaming only if it were 16 regulated and controlled in such a manner as to avoid 17 any risks to which the public would be exposed by 18 legalizing this heretofore unlawful activity.

19 Thus, aware of the uniqueness of the industry,
20 its historical susceptibility to crime and corruption,
21 and the documented hazards associated with gambling 22 generally, our legislature enacted the toughest and the 23 tightest set of casino rules perhaps in the world. The 24 very prospect of such comprehensive legislation was the 25 basis upon which New Jersey citizens consented to casino

1 gaming in the first place.

2 The distinction between this business of 3 casino gaming and useful trades and occupations is 4 substantial, and it compels a state regulatory interest 5 in every aspect of casino activities, as well as those 6 ancillary enterprises and individuals involved either
7 directly or indirectly with a licensed casino 8 operation.

9 Our legislature included within this latter 10 class casino hotel labor unions, because by virtue of 11 the relationship, of their relationship with the 12 licensed employees they represent, and the licensed
13 employer they collectively negotiate with, such unions 14 are positioned to exert significant control and 15 influence over the conduct of legalized casino gaming in 16 New Jersey.

17 Thus, Section 93 of our Casino Control Act is 18 basically an information gathering device for the state,
19 and it requires that each union representing casino 20 hotel workers as well as its leadership register and 21 file disclosure forms with the Casino Control Commission.

22 This information in turn assists the sister
23 agency, that is, the Division of Gaming Enforcement's 24 investigation into whether these casino labor officials 25 have engaged in any of the essentially criminal or

1 quasi-criminal conduct proscribed by another section of 2 the Casino Control Act, and that is Section 86.

3 If proof of such conduct is uncovered, the 4 Casino Control Commission is empowered to hold a full 5 evidentiary trial type hearing. Upon finding a 6 disqualifying event, the Commission may order that 7 sanctions befall the union if the disqualified official
8 remains in office. These sanctions, the ban on dues 9 collection in employee benefit plan administration, 10 whether applied singly, as in this case, or jointly,
11 serve only to encourage the removal of the disqualified 12 officer, and decidedly not to disqualify the union as an 13 entity or as an organization.

14 The rest is history. In 1978, appellees Local 15 54 as well as its leaders did register and file the 16 requisite disclosure forms with the Casino Control
17 Commission. When the results of the Division of Gaming 18 Enforcement's investigation were reported to it, the 19 Commission scheduled a hearing. After appellee's motion
20 in the Federal District Court to preliminarily enjoin
21 the proceeding was denied, the Commission proceeded to a 22 hearing and a decision, and that decision found three of 23 Local 54's officers disqualified in accordance with the 24 statutory criteria of Section 86.

25 The Commission then ordered that if these

1 three individuals were to remain in union office by a
2 certain day, then the sanction of a dues collection ban
3 would follow. The Commission determined not to invoke 4 the other remedy available to it, and this order, of 5 course --

6 QUESTION: This was what?

7 MR. PARRILLO: The other remedy available to 8 the Commission was the ban, Justice White, on Local 54's 9 administration of employee benefit plans.

10 QUESTION: Do you think the state could just 11 have a general statute that generally imposed some kind 12 of qualifications for holding a union office? For 13 example, what if a state statute said no person who has 14 been convicted of a felony may be president of any labor 15 union in the state?

16 MR. PARRILLO: That is certainly not the case
17 here.

18 QUESTION: Well, I know, but --

19 MR. PARRILLO: As I understand the question, 20 I don't believe a state can do that without the proof of 21 a demonstrable or of a compelling need to do so, and 22 that concededly would be very hard to establish, much 23 the same way that it was not established in Hill versus 24 the State of Florida. If the sole purpose of the 25 statements --

1 QUESTION: But you think you may achieve the 2 same, almost the same result by imposing sanctions? I 3 mean, if the sanctions are legal, it is going to be 4 awfully hard for those officers to stay in office.

5 MR. PARRILLO: In the context of the casino 6 union, that is the primary purpose of the sanction on -- 7 of dues collection ban.

8 QUESTION: Yes.

9 MR. PARRILLO: And that is to remove the 10 union officer. It is a more -- a less direct way than 11 direct injunction against the union. I would now like 12 to outline --

13 QUESTION: But you would say in the casino
14 context, would you, that the state could just flat 15 outright prohibit them from holding office. They 16 wouldn't have to go about it indirectly.

17 MR. PARRILLO: I believe that is --

18 QUESTION: Would that be your position?

19 MR. PARRILLO: Yes. In fact, Justice
20 O'Connor, our sister state, Nevada, who is amicus in 21 this case, has a provision in its Casino Control Act 22 which allows their Gaming Commission to go into federal 23 -- into state district superior court to enjoin the 24 actual service of the disqualified labor official from 25 office. That is not part of our statute. Whether that

1 remedy is available to the regulatory agencies in New 2 Jersey is at this point an open question of state law.
3 This is the first application of the statute in New 4 Jersey.

5 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will resume there at 6 1:00 o'clock, counsel.

7 MR. PARRILLO: Thank you.

8 (Whereupon, at 12:00 o'clock p.m., the Court 9 was recessed, to resume at 12:59 o'clock p.m. of the 10 same day.)

3 Parrillo.

4 ORAL ARGUMENT OF ANTHONY J. PARRILLO, ESQ., 5 ON BEHALF OF THE APPELLANTS - RESUMED

6 MR. PARRILLO: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice,
7 and may it please the Court.

8 I would now like to briefly outline our 9 four-point program of legal argument, which will focus 10 in on whether Section 93 is preempted by the 11 Taft-Hartley or Landrum-Griffin Acts.

12 I would, with this Court's permission, and if 13 there are no questions, I would like to rely upon our 14 brief for the other issues involved.

15 Our legal argument will begin with an analysis 16 of the scope of the federal right in issue, namely,
17 Section 7 of the Taft-Hartley Act, which appellees
18 contend is totally preemptive, and which we submit on 19 the basis of DeVeau versus Braisted in the 1959 20 Congressional enactment of Landrum-Griffin is 21 necessarily less than absolute. We will then proceed to 22 establish a Congressional intent to accommodate in 23 certain limited instances the ability of the states to 24 -- the state here to impose disqualification standards
25 more stringent than those of federal law.

1 Such an intent is gleaned from essentially
2 three events. Number One, the Congressional 3 acquiescence in 1953 in state imposed eligibility
4 standards upon a certain class of labor union officials, 5 namely, those involved in the waterfront. Second, the 6 affirmative grant of state authority explicit in Section
7 603 of Landrum-Griffin. And three, DeVeau's express 8 ruling and appellees' proper concession that 9 Landrum-Griffin does not preclude states from operating 10 in this field.

11 Given the absence of a compelling
12 Congressional direction to prevent, we will then 13 demonstrate how Section 93 serves a unique and 14 compelling state interest which on balance outweighs the 15 minimal impact, if any, on the Section 7 right. The 16 particular susceptibility of the state created and 17 public interest charged industry to crime and corruption
18 instinctively evokes the police power of state 19 government and readily distinguishes this case from any 20 other which may come before this Court in the labor 21 preemption field.

22 Finally, we will show that the means by which 23 New Jersey enforces its casino labor control program, 24 particularly the ban on dues collection invoked in this 25 case, is a necessary and permissible adjunct to our

1 power to legislate disqualification standards for casino
2 labor officials. This case involves the choice of labor
3 leaders, and in our view Section 7 of Taft-Hartley is 4 neither as express nor as absolute as appellees or for 5 that matter the Third Circuit majority would have it.
6 Indeed, Mr. Justice Frankfurter writing for the Court in 7 DeVeau versus Braisted declined to decide that case
8 mechanically on an absolute concept of free choice.

9 QUESTION: Did he write for the Court?

10 MR. PARRILLO: Mr. Justice Frankfurter did.
11 Yes, Justice Blackmun. He declined to decide that case 12 mechanically, opting instead to weigh --

13 QUESTION: In other words, there were five 14 votes in his opinion?

15 MR. PARRILLO: There were, on the issue of 16 whether the Landrum-Griffin Act preempted state -- the 17 New York Waterfront Act, there were five votes, Mr.
18 Justice Brennan concurring in the opinion, and 19 particularly on that portion of the opinion which dealt 20 with the Landrum-Griffin Act. Mr. Justice Frankfurter 21 spoke for four justices, a plurality, on the view that 22 the National Labor Relations Act did not preempt all 23 states' regulation of the employee freedom of choice.

24 In any event, Justice Frankfurter decided to 25 weigh the competing interest involved and to determine

1 whether Congress would have intended to preempt the 2 state legislation that was in issue. If there be any 3 doubt on that score, well, Congress itself in 1959,
4 through the enactment of Landrum-Griffin, established 5 that the Section 7 right was not unfettered, and that 6 national labor policy admits of some limitations.

7 Indeed, Section 504 of that Act establishes 8 minimum standards for and prohibits certain individuals
9 from holding union office. Thus, Section 7, even if it
10 ever did, does not now guarantee unlimited employee 11 freedom of choice. That choice is obviously and 12 necessarily limited by the operation of federal law
13 itself. Equally clear is that national labor policy 14 allows some state regulation of the complete freedom of 15 a group of employees to designate representatives of 16 their own choosing.

17 In fact, DeVeau held that Section 8 of the New 18 York Waterfront Act which permanently disabled all 19 expellants from serving in union office did not deprive 20 a Section 7 right, but merely placed a limited 21 restriction on its exercise. This holding is all the 22 more significant when one considers that New York law 23 was prohibiting certain convicted individuals from 24 holding union office even though federal law would have 25 allowed them to serve.

1 Earlier, in 1953, Congress had approved the 2 bi-state compact which was later at issue in DeVeau, and 3 expressly endorsed the state's supplementing
4 legislation, of which Section 8 was a part. In lending
5 its support to New York's method of enforcement, 6 Congress clearly indicated that it did not view all 7 state regulation of union officer qualifications as 8 incompatible with federal labor policy.

9 On the contrary, Congress manifested its 10 general willingness to tolerate in certain limited
11 situations more stringent state regulation even if it
12 included a component which restricted the Section 7 13 right. This conclusion again is reinforced by the 14 passage of Landrum-Griffin in the absence of an express 15 provision within Section 504 preempting state action.

16 This was a telling omission, since as other
17 sections of Landrum-Griffin indicated, where Congress
18 meant to preclude the operation of state laws, it left 19 absolutely no doubt on that score, and to make the 20 matter conclusive, Section 603(a) of Landrum-Griffin 21 affirmatively preserves the operation of state laws such 22 as Section 8 of the Waterfront Act and by necessity 23 Section 93 of the Casino Control Act.

24 Justice Frankfurter stated for the DeVeau
25 plurality Section 603(a) is an express disclaimer of

1 preemption of state laws regulating the responsibility
2 of union officers, and again, Mr. Justice Brennan, 3 providing the fifth vote on that ruling, concurred that 4 Landrum-Griffin explicitly provides it shall not 5 displace such legislation of the states.

6 Confronted with this clear pronouncement of 7 the Court, it is not surprising that appellees concede
8 on Page 27 of their brief that "It is clear that Section 9 504 does not preempt" the states from establishing more 10 stringent standards for labor union officials.

11 While the Taft-Hartley Act does not preclude 12 every state policy that may restrict the Section 7
13 right, neither admittedly does it condone all state 14 incursions. Rather, whether state regulations should be 15 allowed because of the deeply rooted nature of the local 16 interest really involves, as this Court has counseled
17 and commanded in Jones, Farmer, and Sears, a balancing 18 of the state interest against any harm to the federal 19 regulatory scheme established by Congress.

20 Well, here a compelling and demonstrable need 21 exists to go beyond the federal norm in our unique and 22 localized casino industry. That gambling is a 23 distinctively state problem to be governed and 24 controlled by the states is abundantly clear. As part 25 of New Jersey's overall program of casino integrity,

1 Section 93 stands as a prophylactic measure designed to 2 keep this cash intensive industry free from the risk of 3 crime or its taint through the back door access provided 4 by ancillary services and including labor unions that 5 are associated with the industry.

6 The standards for disqualifying casino labor 7 officials achieve that statutory goal by removing such 8 unacceptable risks from positions where they can exert 9 influence and control over casino operations. The 10 exercise of such a compelling state interest neither 11 interferes with the primary jurisdiction of the National 12 Labor Relations Board nor does it impermissibly infringe 13 on a substantive federal right.

14 As to the former, well, the objectives of New 15 Jersey's law and those of the labor boards are really 16 mutually exclusive and don't provide any opportunity for 17 collision. I think this is most evident in the exercise
18 of the board's jurisdiction in industries such as casino 19 gaming in Nevada and the waterfront in New York and New 20 Jersey. The boards' jurisdiction has historically 21 successfully coexisted with enforcement of local laws in 22 those extensively state regulated industries.

23 As to the federal guarantee, well, we know
24 from DeVeau, we know from Congressional acquiescence 25 that Section 93 does not deprive employees of their

1 choice of labor representatives. Again, it merely 2 imposes a limited restriction which, as in DeVeau, as 3 here, it is both narrow in scope and historically 4 explained, which is perfectly compatible with the less 5 than absolute nature of the federal right.

6 If, then, New Jersey can validly disqualify
7 certain casino labor officials, it necessarily follows
8 that New Jersey can enforce its lawful demands. Thus, 9 Section 93 provides for a ban on dues collection which 10 was invoked in this case, but solely as a means to 11 effect the removal of the disqualified officer from the 12 union, and from, more importantly, association with our 13 casino industry.

14 The dues collection ban, we submit, is a 15 reasonable and necessary means of achieving the 16 statutory purpose of Section --

17 QUESTION: Does the dues collection ban extend 18 only to members of the union who are employed in the 19 casino industry?

20 MR. PARRILLO: That is correct. The way to 21 enforce that, Justice Rehnquist, would be perhaps a 22 Commission order to those under its jurisdiction, 23 namely, the licensed employees who are also members of 24 the union, as well as the licensed employers who may be 25 checking off the union dues.

1 Not only does it achieve the statutory purpose
2 of Section 93, but it has been previously implicitly 3 upheld by this Court in Alabama State Federation of 4 Labor versus Macadory. This Court refused to invalidate 5 a state statute which prohibited a union from collecting 6 dues if the union failed to file requisite information
7 with the state, and similarly, again, the Waterfront
8 Act, validated by this Court in DeVeau, also prohibited 9 the receipt of union dues by a union that retained in 10 office a disqualified individual.

11 QUESTION: You wouldn't suggest, would you,
12 that New Jersey could say that unless a so-called 13 disqualified official resigns the union may not act as 14 collective bargaining agent?

15 MR. PARRILLO: We are not doing that.

16 QUESTION: I know. I didn't ask you that.

17 MR. PARRILLO: We would suggest that that 18 would be a more direct -- what Justice White suggests 19 would be a more direct -- would be a more intrusive 20 invasion of the Section 7 right, and if Hill is to be 21 good law, we would say we could not do it.

22 QUESTION: Well, it seems to me you pretty 23 well cripple a union acting as a collective bargaining
24 agent if it can't get any money to perform its job.

25 MR. PARRILLO: Again, Justice White, the

1 purpose -- the remedy wouldn't be --

2 QUESTION: Well, think of how much more
3 effective remedy it would be to say they can't act as a 4 collective bargaining agent unless this official 5 resigned.

6 MR. PARRILLO: The Court in Macadory did
7 distinguish, though, Justice White, from a dues
8 collection ban with a criminal enforcement procedure
9 which we don't have here from a direct injunction 10 against the operation of a union as such, so there is 11 that distinction. If the practical effect of a dues 12 collection ban would be the dismantling of a union, and 13 if Hill can be read as saying you can't enjoin a union 14 from operating as such, and if DeVeau can be read as 15 saying you can allow a dues collection ban, perhaps it
16 is Hill that should be reconsidered by this Court, 17 because it is an earlier case, a case that has obviously 18 been modified by subsequent developments, Congressional 19 developments, and a shift in preemption analysis by this 20 Court itself.

21 QUESTION: Mr. Parrillo, what are the numbers
22 involved here, the total numbers of members of the union
23 and those whose dues would be withheld?

24 MR. PARRILLO: The record establishes that 25 there are presently around approximately 12,000 members

1 in Local 54, 8,000 of which are licensed casino hotel
2 employees. However, our records indicate -- it is not a
3 matter of just because they have had, I guess, increased 4 membership over the years. I believe the figure now, 5 there are approximately 9,500 members who are licensed 6 casino hotel employees.

7 QUESTION: So that would pretty much cripple
8 the operation, I suppose, of the union. We should just 9 assume that in answering this question, shouldn't we?

10 MR. PARRILLO: I cannot deny the fact that 11 that remedy would have an impact on 54.

12 QUESTION: Well, the collective bargaining
13 units, are they individual casinos? Is that it?

14 MR. PARRILLO: There are the nine casino
15 hotels that voluntarily recognized --

16 QUESTION: Is that a multi-employer bargaining 17 unit? Do they bargain for all of them? Or do they 18 bargain individually?

19 MR. PARRILLO: I believe they bargain
20 individually, but the contract, the collective 21 bargaining agreement is fairly standard throughout the 22 industry. I may not be totally accurate on the first 23 point, but I understand the contract is fairly 24 standard.

25 To conclude, there are certain union officials

1 not disqualified under federal law that may nevertheless 2 present the gravest kinds of danger to our casino
3 industry. The Court of Appeals held that New Jersey
4 citizens may be compelled to accept organized and other 5 kinds of criminal involvement as the price for having 6 legalized casino gaming. I do not believe that Congress
7 intended to put our state to the choice of having no
8 industry at all or one that it could not effectively 9 regulate.

10 Accordingly, I would ask this Court to reverse 11 the decision of the third circuit. I would also like to 12 reserve whatever time I have left for reply.

13 QUESTION: Were you going to address the 14 younger abstention question at all?

15 MR. PARRILLO: As I said, I would rely on the 16 brief for that. I will note for the Court that our 17 sister agency, co-appellant, has pursued that in this 18 Court, but we have -- that is, the Attorney General's 19 office has withdrawn that --

20 QUESTION: And you are the prosecuting end.

21 MR. PARRILLO: We are the prosecuting and 22 enforcement arm of the dual regulatory agency.

23 QUESTION: And as far as you are concerned, it 24 is waived?

25 MR. PARRILLO: The Attorney General of New

1 Jersey has waived that argument in this Court.

2 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well.

3 MR. PARRILLO: Thank you.

4 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Gold.

5 ORAL ARGUMENT OF LAURENCE GOLD, ESQ.,

6 ON BEHALF OF THE APPELLEES

7 MR. GOLD: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
8 please the Court.

9 Our argument in this case that the state law 10 is preempted by the National Labor Relations Act as 11 amended rests on Hill versus Florida. We have set out 12 the essence of the reasoning in Hill on Pages 15 through 13 17 of our brief, the red brief.

14 Hill was a case concerning a Florida statute 15 which prohibited individuals who were not citizens of 16 ten years' standing who had been convicted of a felony 17 or who were not judged to be of good moral character
18 from serving as union officers. Moreover, the statute 19 had certain registration requirements and enforced those 20 requirements as well as the requirement I have just 21 stated by injunctive and criminal proceedings.

22 QUESTION: Mr. Gold, to what extent do you 23 think the case of Local 926 versus Jones, decided in 24 1983, cuts back on Hill against Florida, where the Jones 25 opinion indicated that something that touches on

1 interests so deeply rooted in local feeling and 2 responsibility requires a balancing, and could tip it
3 the other way? Should we read that as any modification
4 of Hill against Florida?

5 MR. GOLD: Your Honor, we don't believe so,
6 for the following reason. As this Court has recognized 7 throughout the development or the modern development of 8 the preemption doctrine in labor law, there are two 9 distinct parts, or maybe it would be more accurate to 10 say there are two distinct doctrines. One concerns
11 substantive supersession, situations in which the state 12 law conflicts directly with the federal law, and where 13 under all normal supremacy clause analysis, and going 14 back to cases like Hines versus Davidovitz, there would 15 be preemption.

16 The second doctrine is the doctrine based on 17 the primary exclusive jurisdiction of the labor board, 18 and that doctrine was first stated in the Garman case in 19 359 US, whereas Hill was decided back in 325 US in 1945.

20 The Court has made clear, and Jones is a 21 Garman case, the Court has made clear that there is an 22 exception to the Garman doctrine for state regulation
23 deeply rooted in local feeling, and that that exception
24 to the Garman doctrine is to be administered through a 25 balancing test. It isn't simply that the state interest

1 may be deeply rooted, but it also concerns the relative 2 impact on the board's jurisdiction. There is no case of 3 which we are aware in the other branch of the doctrine 4 that concerning substantive supersession, which employs 5 a balancing test, and we do not think this is a 6 happenstance.

7 It seems to us to be a principal distinction
8 between these two different types of preemption. It is 9 not, with all deference to this Court, to balance where 10 there is a substantive conflict between federal and 11 state law. As noted in a very recent case which we 12 cited and set out in our brief at Page 41, the Fidelity
13 Federal Savings and Loan versus De La Costa, a case 14 which is in 458 US. Where the Court concludes that 15 there is substantive conflict, the determination is that 16 Congress has weighed the different interests, and no 17 matter what the state law means to the state, the 18 supremacy clause applies.

19 The Garman rule is a more far-reaching rule 20 than substantive supersession. It guards against 21 potential conflicts in administration which may have an 22 effect on the law, a potential conflict which the Court 23 has determined is inconsistent with Congress's plan in 24 setting up its single administrative agency in 25 elaborating that doctrine, as I say, because it is more

1 far-reaching, and because the conflict is different
2 kind, the Court has applied a balancing test.

3 For that reason, we suggest that one of the 4 three principal arguments made by the state in this 5 case, namely, its reliance on Garman and deeply rooted 6 in state interest exception to Garman as a reason for 7 doubting the continuing force of Hill is mistaken, and 8 is wrong in theory.

9 I would note just to complete this point that 10 the distinction I have stated between these two 11 different preemption doctrines is articulated in the 12 Court's opinions, most notably in the Railway Trainmen 13 opinion for the Court by Justice Harlan, and is a basic 14 element of a very recent decision last term in Bellknap
15 versus Hale, where the Court applied a balancing test
16 only with regard to the Garman preemption claim and not 17 to the other preemption claim made in that case.

18 The Hill case, as I said, concerned the 19 Florida statute I have just described, and with the 20 Court's permission, because, as I say, it is the bedrock 21 of our argument, I would like to quote portions of the 22 full reasoning of the Court which is set out, as I said, 23 on Pages 15 to 17 of the red brief.

24 The Court there stated, "The declared purpose 25 of the Wagner Act as shown in its first section is to

1 encourage collective bargaining and to protect the full
2 freedom of workers in the selection of bargaining
3 representatives of their own choice. Congress attached 4 no conditions whatsoever to their freedom of choice in 5 this respect. Full freedom to choose an agent means 6 freedom to pass upon that agent's qualifications.

7 Section 4 of the Florida Act circumscribes the 8 full freedom of choice which Congress said employees
9 should possess. To the extent that Section 4 limits a 10 union's choice of such an agent or bargaining 11 representative, it substitutes Florida's judgment for 12 the workers' judgment."

13 Chief Justice Stone concurred in that portion 14 of the Court's opinion, and as the court below noted, 15 the statute at issue here replicates the vice of the 16 Florida statute exactly. It is the state that makes the 17 determination rather than the employees as to who will 18 be their agents.

19 The state law as well in practical terms as 20 Justice O'Connor points out runs afoul of the second 21 holding of Hill. Hill also held that even a proper 22 registration requirement could not be enforced by means 23 which would constitute an obstacle to collective 24 bargaining. There is no need for surmise here on the 25 effect of a dues remedy, if I can use the word "remedy"

1 in this context, in this case. There are undisputed 2 affidavits from the union that it cannot act as the 3 collective bargaining representative for some 85 to 90 4 percent of its membership if there is an absolute state 5 bar for those people paying a penny to the union as 6 dues.

7 QUESTION: Mr. Gold, do you think Hill
8 remained absolutely unimpaired by the DeVeau opinion, 9 which was four-one-three, with Justice Harlan not 10 participating?

11 MR. GOLD: We believe that the principle of 12 Hill does remain unimpaired. The Court distinguished 13 Hill. It did not overrule or question its reasoning, 14 and that is so even though Justice Frankfurter wrote the 15 plurality opinion, and he was one of the two dissenters 16 in Hill.

17 It seems to us as it appears to have struck
18 the Court that the decisive difference between the Hill 19 case and this case on the one hand and DeVeau on the 20 other is that Congress had acted. Congress is not 21 limited to making such exceptions to its general rules 22 as Congress chooses to make, and in DeVeau, New York and 23 New Jersey had gone to Congress and asked for approval
24 of a compact and a compact which Justice Frankfurter 25 underlined gave Congressional authorization to enabling

1 legislation.

2 Section 8 of the Waterfront Act was part of 3 the package of enabling legislation which was already in 4 force.

5 QUESTION: Yes, but Section 8 itself was not 6 approved by Congress.

7 MR. GOLD: It was and it was not. The 8 Congress did not simply give approval to the compact, 9 the substantive terms of the compact. It also gave 10 approval -- Whether that was wise or not is another 11 question. It also gave approval to enabling 12 legislation, and it did so after hearings at which it
13 was advised that the enabling legislation included
14 Section 8 of the Waterfront Act and where the waterfront 15 unions had argued that that was precisely why the 16 compact which provided for approval of enabling 17 legislation should not be approved. And in those terms,
18 we do not believe that DeVeau, the ruling in DeVeau
19 changes the law of substantive supersession.

20 QUESTION: What if another state, what if 21 Connecticut had come up with a law just like Section 8
22 of the New York statute that was upheld in DeVeau 23 against Braisted? They had not -- They were just 24 operating by themselves. They weren't operating under a 25 compact. And their argument was, well, surely if

1 Congress would have approved it for New York and New 2 Jersey, they would likewise have approved it for 3 Connecticut. Now, should they prevail?

4 MR. GOLD: I think that they should not 5 prevail. I think that the question is about as nicely
6 balanced as one can imagine. There is one other factor
7 which was heavily relied on by the Court and it is this 8 added factor which seems to me to make the question a 9 particularly difficult one, or one of the two reasons I 10 think it is a particularly difficult one.

11 New Jersey and New York did not simply come to 12 Congress and say we have a feeling that a compact is 13 needed. We would like to extend our authority because 14 there are certain possibilities that we can envisage.
15 They came to Congress and said, there is persuasive 16 evidence detailed in hearings held in New York and New 17 Jersey and held by Congress that there is a very, very 18 substantial problem in the New York-New Jersey 19 waterfront, and that extreme measures are necessary to 20 deal with that problem.

21 And Congress, the reports show, was convinced
22 of the soundness of that argument. Now, I had no basis 23 for judging, and I don't know how one would go about the 24 process of whether Connecticut could make a sufficient 25 showing and what is a sufficient showing for Congress.

1 I think that the situation therefore is that those 2 states that wish authority in this area have to make 3 their case to Congress just the way anyone who wishes, 4 any state authority that wishes authority which is 5 contrary to general federal principles has to make the 6 case to Congress.

7 It may be that the sheer number of requests
8 will have one of two effects. First, to cause Congress 9 to change the general rule rather than to make ad hoc 10 exceptions. Or, to repent of its one exception on the 11 ground that it has proved unwise, and it is the 12 proverbial camel's nose under the tent.

13 That is for Congress. That is uniquely for 14 Congress, and there is, we submit, no showing that 15 Congress has repented of what it has done in general 16 terms in the National Labor Relations Act. Indeed, we 17 would suggest that the 1947 legislative history of the 18 Taft-Hartley Amendment tends to prove exactly the 19 opposite. Congress, as the Court knows, completely 20 rewrote the National Labor Relations Act in 1947.

21 In the legislative deliberations, Congress was 22 conscious of and referred to Hill versus Florida, and to 23 Bethlehem Steel versus New York Board, both of which 24 stand for the principle that it is not open to the 25 states in industries covered by the National labor

1 Relations Act to regulate any aspect of the 2 representation process, that that -- that such state
3 regulation is inconsistent with the federal scheme, and 4 Congress in light of those determinations made two 5 specific judgments.

6 First, as a proviso to Section 10(a) of the 7 National Labor Relations Act, there is a special 8 permission for the Federal Labor Board to enter into 9 agreements with state labor boards to administer the law 10 so long as the law is substantively consistent with the 11 federal law. To that extent, Congress recognized and 12 dealt with the problem presented to this Court in the 13 Bethlehem Steel case. It did not do what New York had 14 wanted in the Bethlehem Steel case, namey, the right to 15 regulate whether or not the state law was absolutely 16 consistent, but only on an undertaking of consistency.

17 QUESTION: Mr. Gold, what, if anything, in the 18 federal law would prevent the state of New Jersey from 19 passing a law that says that there are -- establishing 20 certain qualifications for union officers in its gaming 21 or casino industry? Any union who has a collective 22 bargaining agent can't have an officer that is so and 23 so, and going farther than the federal law. Would that 24 be preempted?

25 MR. GOLD: We believe that on the reasoning of

1 Hill, it is Sections 7 and 9 of the National Labor
2 Relations Act and Section 2-5 of the National Labor
3 Relations Act which prevents the states from narrowing 4 the scope of employee free choice, and we do not believe
5 that there is anything that Congress has said or done
6 since passing Sections 7 and 9 and 2-5 and reconsidering 7 the matter in 47 which changes the substance of the 8 federal law.

9 This is an area, employee free choice, where 10 Congress has taken the matter in hand, has stated an 11 overall purpose and principle, and has made only such 12 very narrow limitations --

13 QUESTION: That is another branch of your 14 substantive supersession --

15 MR. GOLD: Yes, we have only a substantive 16 supersession argument here.

17 QUESTION: Well, but certainly it wouldn't be 18 impossible to comply with both. It isn't a square 19 conflict in the sense that you couldn't comply with both 20 the federal and the state law. You have to establish 21 that Congress intended that the states establish no 22 stiffer qualifications.

23 MR. GOLD: That's correct. It would not be --

24 QUESTION: There aren't any case here square
25 on on that, are there?

1 MR. GOLD: We believe that Hill versus Florida
2 is specifically on that unless you confine your question
3 to a specific industry.

4 QUESTION: That is what I --

5 MR. GOLD: Oh, I apologize. I thought you
6 meant --

7 QUESTION: I have already -- I did that.

8 MR. GOLD: Oh, I apologize. We think that on 9 the question of whether states can move in particular 10 industries as opposed to whether a state, to go back to 11 the question you asked before lunch, could pass an 12 across the board statute, that the principle on which we 13 rely is best stated in the Wisconsin Board case in 340 --

14 QUESTION: You think the federals just plainly 15 occupied the field on this?

16 MR. GOLD: Well, we think the structure of the 17 Act is that Congress has not given it to the states to 18 make industry by industry deviations from the general 19 rule.

20 QUESTION: What if New Jersey enacts a statute 21 saying that no one may be employed in a casino who has 22 been guilty of conviction of the following felonies, and 23 it includes some felonies that the Landrum-Griffin Act
24 does not include as barring union office, and the union 25 complains and says, we ought to have a right to vote for

1 any union member for shop steward, and now there are 2 people who can't work here who would otherwise be 3 members of the union.

4 MR. GOLD: We don't think that the National 5 Labor Relations Act creates any right to work. If a 6 union were to protest either -- were to protest a 7 licensing law that you can't be a skilled craftsman, 8 plumber, or electrician -- there are such laws -- unless 9 you meet certain requirements to be an employee, we 10 simply don't believe that the Act speaks to that. The 11 Act takes the group of employees as they are. The only 12 thing that Hill says is that once you have that group, 13 they make the judgment of who among their number may be 14 a state office.

15 So we simply don't think that Congress has 16 regulated that far, just as we have no brief to carry 17 for the employers who are regulated by the New Jersey 18 law. There is simply no inconsistent federal law which 19 protects their interests, and therefore putting due 20 process and other such interests aside, New Jersey can 21 do what it sees fit.

22 QUESTION: Well, you may be here again, then.

23 MR. GOLD: That is true.

24 QUESTION: Even if you win this case.

25 MR. GOLD: That is true. But in terms of the

1 industry specific question, it seems to us that the 2 issue here is akin to and is answered in principle by 3 the arguments made by the public utilities and the 4 states that wish to regulate public utilities in the 5 Wisconsin Board case.

6 The argument there was that while Congress had 7 regulated the right to bargain collectively and the 8 right to strike, it had regulated those activities in a 9 fashion which showed that they are not absolute rights, 10 because Congress had placed limits on the rights, and 11 therefore the states could in industries that were 12 "local" and of particular importance to the state, and 13 that had historically been regulated by the state, 14 impose additional requirements not permitted by federal 15 law and not enacted by Congress.

16 And the Court rejected that argument,
17 recognizing that the National Labor Relations Act is 18 general in terms, and states general principles, and 19 that in the Act Congress made a conscious determination 20 to regulate to the full extent of its commerce power, 21 and Congress has in fact made certain industry specific 22 exemptions and exceptions to its rules.

23 Section 8(e) and Section 8(f) deal in specific 24 terms with the construction and garment and apparel 25 industry. Section 8(g) deals specifically with the

1 hospital industry. There are specific provisions which 2 deal with industries that are national in scope, the 3 so-called emergency strike provisions.

4 And Congress can and has and may make such 5 exceptions to its general rules as it wishes, but where 6 you have a general principle, as we do have, and as Hill 7 states, either for employee free choice or for 8 collective bargaining for the states to add or subtract 9 to the federal rules in this area seems to us to be 10 plainly inconsistent with the most elementary preemption 11 principles.

12 QUESTION: Mr. Gold, let me ask you to go back
13 for a moment to the concern about whether DeVeau cut 14 back on Hill at all. There is the one sentence that I
15 have looked at several times toward the bottom of Page 16 152 of Justice Frankfurter's opinion in which he says, 17 "Obviously, the National Labor Relations Act does not 18 exclude every state policy that may in fact restrict the 19 complete freedom of a group of employees to designate 20 representatives of their own choosing."

21 Do you think that sentence is consistent with 22 Justice Black's opinion in the earlier case?

23 MR. GOLD: I think that it may be consistent
24 with it in the way that Chief Justice Stone pointed out
25 in his concurring opinion in Hill. Chief Justice Stone

1 said there are no immunities in this statute from state
2 penal law. If that is the limit of Justice
3 Frankfurter's cryptic statement, I think that there is 4 no inconsistency.

5 Certainly it is such a muted call for Hill's 6 limitation or rejection that we would hope it would not 7 be read as such. I think if I can I would like to spend 8 a moment on Section 504 of the LMRDA, the provision in 9 which Congress stated certain limits on the right to run 10 for and hold union office, and I wish to make only two 11 points about that section.

12 First of all, as I have just noted, Congress 13 has limited the right to bargain collectively and the 14 right to strike. The Court has recognized, and it seems 15 to me to be indisputable, that Congress's limitations do 16 not mean that the states can move into the field and 17 either add or subtract, and in that regard, I do wish to 18 stress in particularity the difference between Section 19 -- a critical difference between both Section 504 and 20 Section 8 of the Waterfront Act at issue in DeVeau.

21 Both those sections were limited to 22 individuals who had been convicted of felonies. While 23 the Court did not use the term, it was in the nature of 24 an added penalty.

25 The New Jersey statute sweeps well, well

1 beyond any such limitation. This statute is triggered
2 by an administrative determination that there is a 3 reason to believe that somebody who has never committed 4 a wrong is associating with other people who may or may 5 not have committed a wrong but do not have to have been 6 shown to have committed a wrong.

7 Moreover, there is a disqualification for 8 "failure to cooperative with the Commission" and to 9 supply information not merely relevant to the Act under 10 the language of the New Jersey statute, but information
11 requested by the Commission. I think we are exactly 12 back into the area covered by Hill. It is this 13 Commission created by New Jersey which is going to make 14 a highly subjective, unfocused judgment which will 15 override the judgment of the employees, unless, as the 16 court below held and as we believe is compelled by both 17 the statute and precedent, the New Jersey law is 18 declared preempted.

19 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Do you have anything
20 further, Mr. Parrillo?

21 ORAL ARGUMENT OF ANTHONY J. PARRILLO, ESQ.,
22 ON BEHALF OF THE APPELLANTS - REBUTTAL

23 MR. PARRILLO: Just very briefly, in response 24 to a question by Justice O'Connor, Mr. Gold said that 25 this Court should pay no deference to balance where

1 there is state substantive conflict with a federal 2 right. Well, that justification for preemption is 3 really a function of the strength of the argument that 4 Section 7 does in fact absolutely protect the conduct at 5 issue, and of course here we submit that Section 7 6 doesn't lend that absoluteness ascribed to it by 7 appellee or by the Third Circuit majority.

8 With respect to Hill, we are not asking this 9 Court to overrule Hill, just to recognize that 10 subsequent developments have limited the scope of Hill's 11 applicability and require that it be substantially 12 restricted to circumstances not here present.

13 In any event, Hill can be clearly
14 distinguished from this case in at least four distinct 15 aspects. In the first place, the Florida regulatory 16 scheme, as Justice White had recognized, was applicable 17 across the board to all labor unions operating in the 18 state of Florida, whereas New Jersey's law only 19 affects --

20 QUESTION: Yes, but what do you say about his 21 reliance on the Wisconsin case? The public utility 22 case.

23 MR. PARRILLO: Your Honor, the strike cases
24 are, Number One, Wisconsin acted to totally abrogate the 25 right to strike. Number Two, Congress, we contend, was

1 much more specific and clear when it spoke about the 2 right to strike. In fact, this very same section they 3 announced the right, they also announced the 4 qualifications and limitations on that right as to leave 5 no doubt that they had occupied that field.

6 What Congress did in Section 7 on the contrary 7 talked about a right to collectively bargain through 8 representatives of one's choosing, as Judge Becker noted 9 in his dissent, a rather amorphous way to create an 10 absolute protection.

11 The second ground for distinction of Hill is 12 that Florida plainly substituted its judgment for that 13 of the worker by requiring affirmative proof of good 14 moral character. Under the New Jersey scheme, there are 15 no prerequisites for functioning as a casino labor union 16 in our state other than filing.

17 Third, and most significantly, Florida was an 18 out and out attempt to regulate labor unions and their 19 agents. The sole purpose was to require them to license
20 and then additionally to prescribe affirmative 21 qualifications for licensure. Absent in Hill was the 22 compelling state interest that we think New Jersey has 23 demonstrated in this case.

24 Fourth and last, the operation and application 25 of the Hill statute directly conflicted with the NIRA.

1 It enjoined a union from operating as such, enjoined the 2 business agent from operating as such. Again, New 3 Jersey's sanction is a dues collection ban designed only 4 to encourage the removal of the disqualified union 5 officer.

6 Equally unavailing are appellees' efforts to 7 essentially write off DeVeau because of the presence of 8 the compact. Well, he doesn't recognize that four 9 Justices declined to infer a Congressional intent to 10 preempt all state regulation, regardless of the presence 11 of the compact. The compact was brought to Congress in 12 the DeVeau case because it was constitutionally required
13 to approve or at least to be brought to its attention a 14 compact between two states.

15 And thirdly, of course, DeVeau was not decided 16 on any one factor. It was decided on a number of 17 factors, the most important of which was a weighing, a 18 balancing of the federal and state interests, and that 19 Congress first -- excuse me, the Court in DeVeau first 20 determined that the Section 7 right was not absolute, 21 then engaged in the balancing test.

22 Thank you very much.

23 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.
24 The case is submitted.

25 (Whereupon, at 1:50 p.m., the case in the

1 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
