CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments first this morning in Heckler against Community Health Services.

Mr. Geller, you may proceed whenever you're ready.

ORAL ARGUMENT OF KENNETH S. GELLER, ESQ.,
ON BEHALF OF PETITIONER

MR. GELLER: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the Court:

This case involves a dispute over the appropriate amount of federal financial reimbursement due a provider of medical services under the Medicare program. The Secretary of Health and Human Services and the district court concluded that reimbursement of the amount at issue was clearly precluded by the Medicare Act and the governing regulations.

The Court of Appeals, on the other hand, held that the Government was estopped from relying on those statutes and regulations and must instead provide reimbursement contrary to law. We have sought certiorari because the Court of Appeals' decision is inconsistent with the repeated holdings of this Court that the Government may not be equitably estopped from enforcing the law.

1 Respondent Community Health Services is a
2 provider of health care under Part A of the Medicare
3 program. Under Part A, the Federal Government, acting 4 through private insurance companies, called fiscal 5 intermediaries, reimburses providers for the reasonable 6 costs of providing necessary medical services to 7 Medicare beneficiaries.

8 Congress set up a system under Medicare in 9 which intermediaries make interim payments to providers 10 on a monthly basis for the estimated cost of furnishing 11 services, and then the providers' annual cost reports
12 are audited later to determine the actual costs incurred 13 and corrective adjustments are then made to account for 14 overpayments or underpayments.

15 In 1975 CHS began to receive grant funds from 16 the Federal Government under the Comprehensive 17 Employment and Training Act, or CETA, and the purpose of 18 these grants was to provide job training and employment 19 opportunities for unemployed workers. During the next 20 several years, CHS hired a number of CETA workers and 21 used the federal CETA grant funds to pay their salaries 22 and fringe benefits.

23 In addition, when CHS filled out its Medicare 24 cost reports for the years in question it included the 25 salaries it paid to the CETA workers as a reasonable

1 cost attributable to the Medicare program. CHS did not,
2 however, offset against those costs the amount of the 3 federal CETA funds it received to pay those salaries.
4 The obvious result of this bookkeeping was that CHS got 5 reimbursed twice by the Federal Government for a single 6 group of expenses, once by CETA and then again by 7 Medicare.

8 Not surprisingly, this double reimbursement 9 was plainly contrary to Medicare regulations, which 10 prohibit the inclusion in a provider's cost reports of 11 expenses covered by so-called restricted grant funds, 12 such as CETA. In fact, the published regulations 13 expressly state that if restricted grant funds such as 14 CETA funds were not offset from a provider's expenses, 15 the provider would receive reimbursement for the same 16 expenses twice, and that of course is precisely what 17 happened here.

18 Now, CHS included the salaries of the CETA 19 workers in its cost reports, but did not deduct the 20 corresponding CETA grant in part because the 21 representative of its fiscal intermediary, Travelers 22 Insurance Company, orally informed CHS on several 23 occasions that the CETA grant did not have to be 24 offset. Travelers appears to have given CHS this 25 erroneous advice by misreading the Secretary's so-called

1 "seed money exception", which carves out a limited
2 exception from the general rule governing restricted
3 grants in the case of certain public health service 4 grants, which of course the CETA grant was not.

5 In 1977, after CHS again asked Travelers if 6 the CETA grants fell within the seed money exception, 7 Travelers decided to ask the Department of Health and 8 Human Services for its advice on the matter. A month 9 later HHS advised Travelers that the CETA grants did not 10 fall within the seed money exception and that the grants
11 therefore should have been offset on CHS' cost reports 12 for the years in question.

13 Travelers then reopened CHS' cost reports for 14 1975 to 1977, as the statute required it to do, and 15 determined that CHS had received overpayments in the 16 amount of some 63,000. Community Health Service sought 17 administrative and judicial review of the intermediary's 18 determination, and after an evidentiary hearing both the 19 Provider Reimbursement Review Board, which is the expert 20 administrative agency, and the district court agreed 21 with the Secretary that the amount spent on the salaries 22 of CETA workers was plainly not reimburseable under the 23 Medicare Act because CHS had already recovered those 24 expenses from its CETA grant.

25 The district court also rejected CHS' argument

1 that the Secretary should be estopped from reccovering 2 the erroneous overpayments. The district court found 3 that CFS had not acted reasonably in relying on the 4 intermediary's advice and that there was no evidence
5 that the intermediary or the Secretary had been guilty 6 of any misconduct.

7 As I mentioned a moment ago, a divided panel
8 of the Court of Appeals reversed the district court's 9 judgment. The Court of Appeals did not find that the 10 payments CHS had received for the CETA workers were in 11 fact reimbursable under the Medicare Act. Instead, the 12 court held that the Government should be estopped from 13 enforcing the governing Medicare statutes and 14 regulations to recover the misspend funds because of 15 what it termed the affirmative misconduct of the 16 intermediary in giving CHS erroneous legal advice.

17 Now, the decision of the Court of Appeals in 18 this case is impossible to square with the repeated 19 pronouncements of this Court on the issue of estoppel.
20 The Court has consistently held, from the earliest days 21 of the nation to as recently as two terms ago in 22 Schweiker versus Hansen and last term in INS versus 23 Miranda, that the Federal Government cannot be equitably 24 estopped by the actions of its employees from enforcing 25 public laws.

1 And this rule has always been applied with 2 particular force in the context of suits for public 3 funds. The Court has said time and again that the lower 4 courts must observe the conditions imposed by Congress 5 for charging the public treasury.

6 QUESTION: Mr. Geller, can I ask you a 7 question right there. Supposing, instead of having an 8 intermediary like Travelers as we have in this case, the 9 query had been to somebody in the Department itself,
10 perhaps to the General Counsel, and the General Counsel
11 had given the answer that Travelers gave, and then later 12 the General Counsel was replaced and a new General
13 Counsel came in and said, my predecessor made a 14 mistake. Would the case be any different?

15 MR. GELLER: The case would be no different, 16 for reasons that I will get to in a little while,
17 Justice Stevens. The case would be exactly the same.

18 QUESTION: Mr. Geller, do you see room in any 19 case for a so-called "affirmative misconduct" kind of an 20 exception for application of this rule?

21 MR. GELLER: We have argued in our brief that 22 there is no exception, because it's inconsistent with 23 the whole analytical framework of the rule that the 24 Government cannot be estopped. The Court has alluded to 25 it in the past, although it's never applied it, it's

1 alluded to it, though never in the context of a case
2 involving public funds.

3 The notion seems to have arisen in suits to 4 deprive people of citizenship, and there may well be 5 some due process notions that lurk in cases of that 6 sort, but not in cases of this sort involving suits for 7 public benefits where there is no statutory 8 entitlement.

9 In any event, here the Court of Appeals, by 10 invoking the doctrine of estoppel based on the alleged 11 misconduct of Travelers Insurance Company, has prevented 12 the Secretary from recovering amounts from CHS that are 13 not authorized by the statute and as to which CHS has 14 absolutely no statutory entitlement.

15 QUESTION: Assuming, Mr. Geller, there is a 16 statutory entitlement if someone had followed the 17 correct procedure, but there was a representation by the 18 General Counsel that this is the way to go about it and 19 then it turns out it really wasn't?

20 MR. GELLER: That would be very much like 21 Schweiker versus Hansen, where there arguably was a 22 statutory entitlement, but the procedures were not 23 followed, and this Court said that the procedures are a 24 part of the statutory entitlement. Congress has 25 required that the particular procedures be followed. So

1 the case I think would be no --

2 QUESTION: Would be the same?

3 MR. GELLER: Would be the same. I think
4 Schweiker versus Hansen holds as much.

5 QUESTION: Would it be correct to say that CHS 6 was no worse off so far as what it was entitled to get 7 from the Government after it had followed the 8 intermediary's advice than before?

9 MR. GELLER: Well, I think that's correct. It 10 got the CETA funds in any event. It just didn't get 11 double.

12 QUESTION: Now it has to pay them back, and 13 it's because it wasn't entitled to them.

14 MR. GELLER: Yes, that's correct.

15 Now, Respondents understandably have made
16 little effort to defend the Court of Appeals decision, 17 in light of this Court's precedents. Instead, they have 18 candidly urged the Court simply to abandon its long 19 settled holdings in the estoppel area, calling them 20 outmoded and socially unacceptable. And the Court of 21 Appeals for its part, while terming this Court's 22 estoppel decisions archaic, found in some of the 23 decisions what it took to be an affirmative misconduct
24 exception that it applied in this case.

25 We have explained at some length in our brief

1 why both of these assertions are incorrect. As to 2 Respondents' contentions, there simply are a number of 3 significant constitutional and policy reasons why it
4 would be wholly inappropriate to prohibit the Government 5 from enforcing a law concerning public benefits because 6 of the erroneous statements of its employees. If this 7 Court were to adopt such a rule, it would really have 8 the effect of raising employees of the Federal 9 Government to the status of legislators, because it 10 would give to their actions and words the force of law, 11 even though those actions and words were inconsistent
12 with the actions and words of Congress.

13 Here, for example, the Medicare Act and the 14 regulations governing it clearly provide that the 15 expenses covered by the CETA program are not 16 reimbursable as reasonable costs. Yet Travelers would 17 in effect be allowed to repeal this portion of the Act 18 and overrule the judgments of Congress simply by giving 19 its providers advice to the contrary.

20 And needless to say, such a rule would create 21 tremendous administrative burdens, opportunities for 22 abuse and evasion of statutory mandates, especially in 23 the context of massive social welfare providers like 24 those under the Social Security Act. The Court noted 25 these very considerations only recently in adhering to 1 its estoppel rulings in the Hansen case.

2 Let me give the Court some notion of the 3 extent, the magnitude, of the Medicare program. There
4 are some 16,000 providers. In the last fiscal year more 5 than $38 billion was expended.

6 Intermediaries and providers are constantly 7 having discussions, most of it oral, about how 8 particular costs should be handled. If every time an 9 intermediary orally gave a provider advice about how 10 costs should be handled, if the Secretary were bound by 11 that even though that advice was contrary to the 12 Medicare statute the system would break down.

13 And of course, providers could frequently 14 claim that they received oral advice even if they never 15 got it. That was, of course, one of the concerns that 16 prompted this Court's decision in Schweiker versus 17 Hansen.

18 But even if this Court were otherwise disposed 19 to reconsider its estoppel decisions, as Respondents 20 urge, or to imply an affirmative misconduct exception, 21 as the Court of Appeals suggested, we think this would 22 be a wholly inappropriate case in which to do, and we 23 think that for two reasons.

24 First, we submit that CHS failed even to meet
25 the requirements for estoppel under the law applicable

1 to private persons. And second, the actions of 2 Travelers fell far short of any showing of affirmative 3 misconduct as that term has been construed in this 4 Court's prior decisions. I'd like to discuss each of 5 these points in turn.

6 First, whatever the proper rules are for 7 applying estoppel against the Government, it seems 8 obvious that those rules should be at least as strict, 9 at least as strict as the rules that would apply in 10 private litigation. In other words, at a minimum the 11 party seeking to estop the Government should have to 12 meet the traditional requirements for estoppel in 13 non-Government cases.

14 One of those requirements has always been that 15 the party asserting estoppel show that it reasonably 16 relied on the other party's erroneous advice, and it's 17 clear from the very framework of the Medicare Act that a 18 provider such as CHS could never reasonably rely on the 19 advice of an intermediary as being the final definitive 20 word on legal questions that may arise under the Act.

21 Now, Congress, as I mentioned earlier, chose 22 to fund providers under the Medicare program on an 23 interim reimbursement basis, making it clear that the 24 final determinations would be made later on and there 25 would be retroactive adjustments to take account of 1 overpayments or underpayments. And perhaps more to the 2 point, the Secretary under this express statutory 3 mandate has promulgated regulations making it clear

4 beyond any doubt that determinations by an intermediary 5 on the treatment of costs are subject to reopening and 6 revision by the Secretary within a three-year period.

7 Now, the relevant regulation that covers this 8 situation is reprinted at page 4 of our brief. It's 42
9 U.S.C. 405.1885, and it bears careful scrutiny in light
10 of CHS' estoppel claims in this case, because this 11 regulation specifically informs providers that an 12 intermediary's determinations "shall be reopened" -- the 13 language is mandatory -- "shall be reopened" if the 14 Secretary of HHS within a three-year period notifies the 15 intermediary that its determinations were "inconsistent 16 with the applicable law, regulations or general
17 instructions by the Secretary".

18 And this language, we submit, could not be 19 clearer. It unambiguously notifies all providers, such 20 as CHS, that the Secretary and the courts and not 21 intermediaries have the final word on what payments are 22 permissible and what payments are not permissible under 23 the Medicare provider.

24 This statute and this regulation unambiguously
25 notify all providers such as CHS that an intermediary

1 simply doesn't have the authority to make any final 2 determinations concerning the interpretation of statutes 3 or regulations or otherwise to bind the Secretary to 4 erroneous advice.

5 The Respondents have never suggested how they 6 could have reasonably relied on the intermediary's 7 advice in this case in light of this regulation, which 8 expressly states that every piece of advice, every 9 determination that an intermediary makes in determining 10 cost bases is subject to reopening by the Secretary 11 within a three-year period.

12 And this regulation even allows the Secretary, 13 Justice Stevens, to reopen her own prior 14 determinations. So that it is clear under the Medicare 15 program, the way Congress has set it up, that all 16 determinations are subject to reopening within a 17 three-year period if the Secretary determines that the 18 preliminary determinations were contrary to law.

19 Now, the Court of Appeals did not address this 20 reasonable reliance point. It simply assumed that CHS 21 had satisfied the traditional estoppel requirements and 22 then it went on to discuss this more cosmic question of 23 whether the Government can ever be estopped.

24 As I mentioned earlier, the Court of Appeals
25 held that this Court had given what it called tacit

1 recognition to the theory that the Government could be 2 estopped in the instances where there was affirmative
3 Government misconduct. And the Court of Appeals reached 4 this conclusion by attempting to distinguish away five 5 of this Court's decisions and by reading the language of 6 the Court, negative implications in the language of the 7 Court in several of those decisions.

8 On a number of recent occasions this Court in 9 fact has alluded to the possible existence of an 10 affirmative misconduct exception to the rule against 11 estopping the Government. But the important thing is 12 that in each of those cases the Court found it 13 unnecessary to resolve the question because the conduct 14 at issue did not constitute affirmative misconduct.
15 Nonetheless, the lower courts have seized on the dictum 16 in this Court's decisions and have branded as 17 affirmative misconduct a number of actions that aren't 18 really misconduct at all, such as in INS versus Miranda, 19 much less affirmative misconduct.

20 Here, for example, the Court of Appeals
21 concluded that Travelers' actions in erroneously
22 advising CHS in good faith about some legal question
23 that arose under the Medicare Act is affirmative 24 misconduct. But it's baffling how this sort of good 25 faith error of judgment, giving advice of this sort,

1 could be considered affirmative misconduct within the 2 meaning of this Court's prior decisions.

3 The conduct of Travelers here doesn't seem 4 appreciably different from the Government agent's
5 conduct in the Merrill case, where a Government agent 6 told someone erroneously that his wheat crop would be 7 covered by Government insurance; or in Montana versus 8 Kennedy, where a Government agent told some woman that 9 she needed a passport to return to the United States
10 even though she didn't; or more recently in Schweiker
11 versus Hansen, where a Government social security 12 representative told a claimant that she was not entitled 13 to social security benefits, even though she was, and 14 told her not to even apply for them, which was in fact 15 contrary to an internal manual.

16 In each of those cases the Court found not 17 merely that the Government's actions did not constitute 18 affirmative misconduct, but they fell far short of 19 constituting affirmative misconduct. And we think the 20 Court's decisions in this consistent line of cases 21 compel the conclusion that the intermediary's actions in 22 this case also fell far short of the sort of conduct 23 that might conceivably estop the Government if there was 24 an affirmative misconduct exception.

25 I'd like to turn to just one more point,

1 because the Court of Appeals' decision -- there are a 2 couple of errors that seem to pervade the Court of 3 Appeals' decision. I'd just like to discuss them 4 briefly.

5 One is this notion that CHS did everything it 6 could here to get the right answer to its problem and 7 therefore it acted reasonably; and second is this notion 8 that the intermediary violated some mandatory duty in 9 not seeking advice from HHS.

10 As to this first point, CHS was getting double 11 reimbursement for a single expense from two parts of the 12 Federal Government. The district court said that should 13 have raised a red flag. It should have proceeded with 14 extreme caution since that's so unusual, to get double 15 reimbursement for one set of expenses.

16 If CHS had looked at the governing regulations
17 and the statute, it would have had substantial doubts 18 that what it was being told by the intermediary was 19 correct.

20 QUESTION: Well, why wouldn't the intermediary
21 have the same substantial doubts?

22 MR. GELLEFF: Well, this case arises because 23 the intermediary was negligent in construing these 24 statutes. The point, though, is was CHS reasonable in 25 relying on this advice to the point where the Government

1 may be estopped as a result, even though the statute --

2 QUESTION: You don't think there's any room at 3 all for argument on the fact that this might have been 4 seed money?

5 MR. GELLER: Well, I think it's --

6 QUESTION: It's perfectly clear it was not 7 seed money?

8 MR. GELLER: Well, I think we can look at the 9 following. As soon as Travelers asked HHS for its 10 opinion, HHS immediately wrote back and said, this is 11 not seed money. The district court -- the Provider 12 Reimbursement Review Board had no trouble concluding in 13 this case and in previous cases that CETA grants were 14 not seed money.

15 The district court said that no tortured 16 construction of these regulations could lead one to 17 conclude that this was seed money.

18 QUESTION: Perhaps Travelers is just plain
19 incompetent?

20 MR. GELLER: Well, the person -- we don't 21 know, for example, what CHS --

22 QUESTION: The Secretary did hire Travelers to 23 do this job.

24 MR. GELLER: The Secretary hired Travelers,
25 although the particular person who gave this advice I'm

1 told was not a lawyer. And we don't know, for example, 2 what CFS told Travelers in an effort to get this 3 opinion.

4 QUESTION: Well, there's no claim that they 5 misrepresented the facts. I understood Travelers
6 understood the whole theory.

7 MR. GELLER: Well, one of the problems in this 8 area -- we don't make that claim. We have no proof that 9 there was any misrepresentation. Of course, one of the 10 problems in this area, Justice Stevens, is that all 11 these communications were oral. So if the Court were to 12 allow the Third Circuit's decision to stand --

13 QUESTION: I thought they had a written 14 financial report that was filed each year or something 15 like that; wasn't there?

16 MR. GELLER: But the requests to Travelers for 17 advice on whether the CETA grants were reimbursable was 18 all done orally, and that's one of the points here. The 19 Third Circuit --

20 QUESTION: But you'd surely take the same
21 position if everything was in writing, I think.

22 MR. GELLER: We would, but my point is that if 23 the Court of Appeals is correct in this case that even 24 these sorts of informal oral conversations, as to which 25 there's no record of what was said by any party, would

1 be sufficient to estop the Government. Then you can 2 imagine --

3 QUESTION: And also no dispute as to what was 4 said, as I understand it.

5 MR. GELLER: Well, but in many cases there
6 will be disputes, and the rule can't be that estoppel 7 occurs only when there's no dispute. Presumably, if the 8 Government can be estopped here there'll have to be 9 evidentiary hearings to determine what was said, and 10 providers will be able to claim in a number of cases 11 that they sought informal advice and relied on the basis 12 of it, because there are constantly conversations going 13 back and forth between providers and intermediaries 14 about how particular costs should be handled.

15 QUESTION: But you seem to be arguing that the 16 answer was plain, but I think your argument would cover 17 a situation in which Travelers' construction was a 18 perfectly reasonable one which most of us might have 19 adopted the first time we looked at it.

20 MR. GELLER: It would, it would. But I'm 21 trying to answer the Third Circuit's decision in this 22 case.

23 QUESTION: Oh, I see. I'm sorry, you're 24 right.

25 MR. GELLER: The Third Circuit's opinion

1 suggests that CHS acted completely reasonably and did 2 everything it could do. One of my first points was that 3 if CHS had read these regulations they would have had 4 substantial doubts that they were getting correct 5 advice.

6 CHS made every inquiry orally. It never made 7 a request in writing. It never asked Travelers to 8 correspond and give it the advice in writing. CHS never 9 asked Travelers, as far as we know, to pass along its 10 inquiry to HHS. And we know that CHS never itself tried 11 to get an answer out of HHS.

12 So this notion that CHS did everything it
13 could do and therefore it should not have to pay back 14 the money that it was not entitled to under the statute 15 simply is not borne out by this record.

16 If there are no further questions, I'd like to 17 reserve the balance of my time.

18 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well.

19 Mr. Hasley.

20 ORAL ARGUMENT OF RAYMOND G. HASLEY, ESQ.

21 ON BEHALF OF RESPONDENTS

22 MR. HASLEY: Mr. Chief Justice and may it
23 please the Court:

24 While the facts here are not in dispute, the 25 emphasis placed on the facts is far different from the

1 standpoint of CHS. If we turn the clock back to 1975
2 and a little bit earlier, we find that the Federal 3 Government had a task force for the comprehensive health
4 planning program in the United States and a local task 5 force in western Pennsylvania.

6 Crawford County had been designated as an 7 underserved community medically and at this point in 8 time the only agency that provided any Medicare services
9 to any of the residents -- these are home health 10 services -- was Community Health Services, and they 11 provided them only in a small part of the community.

12 Now, the Medicare Act provides, I believe,
13 seven different types of services that might be rendered 14 by a home health agency. At the point we begin the 15 story CHS was only into one aspect of it, this nurse, 16 visiting nurse thing. The other areas were not being 17 covered for Medicare beneficiaries.

18 Under the definition of a home health service, 19 it has to be not only a non-profit organization; it also 20 has to be qualified as a charitable organization. Now, 21 under Medicare when an agency such as CHS renders a 22 service to which Medicare beneficiaries are entitled 23 they must also render the same service to everyone in 24 the community. So in effect, they now have to offer 25 charitable services identical to those which they offer

1 to the Medicare beneficiaries.

2 Now, faced with this situation in 1975, being 3 unable to serve the community -- and parenthetically, it 4 is interesting to note that perhaps the Secretary of 5 Health and Human Services had an obligation under the 6 Public Health Act to provide the employees to do this.

7 But at any rate, there was money available 8 from the Department of Labor in the CETA program, and 9 while this does provide -- one part of it provides for 10 training. Other parts provide for the expansion of 11 public services. And it is under this aspect, the 12 expansion of public services and particularly health 13 services that many of the CETA people worked.

14 Now, it also must be noted here that CHS not 15 only was involved in providing services to Medicare 16 beneficiaries; they were involved in providing services
17 to non-Medicare beneficiaries. So that in the testimony
18 it's pointed out that only about 50 percent of the CHS 19 services were for Medicare beneficiaries. Their other 20 services were directed to other people that did not 21 involve Medicare.

22 Now, how does this become important? When Mr.
23 Wallach approaches Mr. Reeves about this problem -- he 24 has the opportunity from the grants from the Department 25 of Labor; he needs to expand services to Medicare

1 beneficiaries; he can see, however, the opportunities, 2 that if you have this seed money concept applying you're 3 going to generate additional income which you can then 4 use in the seed money concept of the expansion of your 5 services to fill these needs.

6 At the time Mr. Wallach visited with Mr.
7 Reeves, CHS didn't even have a Medicare manual. They 8 had no bookkeeping set up. So it wasn't just a question 9 of seed money. He was with Mr. Reeves on setting up the 10 entire bookkeeping system for CHS so that they could 11 account for everything in a proper manner.

12 QUESTION: I'm not sure I got your point on 13 the fact that they did not possess the manual. Who 14 publishes the manual that you're speaking of?

15 MR. HASLEY: It's a Government manual and it 16 would --

17 QUESTION: Are you suggesting --

18 MR. HASLEY: Pardon me?

19 QUESTION: Are you suggesting there's some 20 obligation on the Government to see that everyone has a 21 copy of it.

22 MR. HASLEY: Well, whether it's their 23 obligation or the party's obligation to obtain it, they 24 did obtain it from Mr. Reeves, Mr. Reeves at the time of 25 the meeting, and the problem was after that. But my

1 point is that it was not just a simple question about 2 the seed money situation, it was concerned with setting 3 up a whole bookkeeping program so that everything would 4 be done in a proper fashion.

5 But one thing that has not been analyzed here,
6 but it's this hypothetical question: If at the time Mr.
7 Wallach went to Mr. Reeves for the answer the answer had 8 been to offset, at that point CHS had the opportunity to 9 use the CETA employees for services in the community not 10 at all involved with Medicare.

11 In other words, one of the services that the 12 CHS made available in the community is a homemaker 13 service. Now, the cost for homemaking service is not 14 covered by Medicare. Medicare covers nursing, a nurse's 15 aid type thing which is a little different.

16 QUESTION: Mr. Hasley, though, that was true
17 in Schweiker against Hansen, too, that had the person
18 made the application the way the Government regulations 19 provided, rather than the way she was advised to by the 20 Government official, she probably would have been better 21 off.

22 MR. HASLEY: But in the question of 23 detrimental reliance, I believe Mr. Geller said that CHS 24 was not disadvantaged, that they would nonetheless had 25 the CETA employees. They would not have had the CETA

1 employees in this bookkeeping problem.

2 QUESTION: Well, perhaps you're right in 3 thinking there was some disadvantage along the line of 4 your analysis. But I think if there is it is no
5 different than the detrimental reliance in Schweiker 6 against Hansen, which was disallowed as estopping the 7 Government.

8 MR. HASLEY: Well, this is one, this is of 9 course just one aspect of what happened. I mean, this 10 is the hypothetical as to what would have occurred, the 11 ability to use the employees on the Department of Labor 12 grants in a non-conflicting way.

13 But at any rate, as to this question of 14 whether this was proper, could this be interpreted as 15 seed money grant, it was in fact interpreted as a seed 16 money grant and acted out as a seed money grant.

17 Seed money grants were not new. Back in the 18 sixties in the mental health, mental retardation
19 program, the Secretary had this rule about not deducting 20 restricted funds. The funds for mental health and 21 mental retardation were restricted funds and the 22 Secretary nonetheless said that, because this was for 23 the expansion of services, that they would not offset 24 the mental health, mental retardation staffing grants.
25 And so that's the history of the interpretation by the 1 Secretary in other factual circumstances.

2 But in this case there was certainly an 3 arguable basis that these were seed money grants
4 according to an interpretation of them, although people 5 may argue about the interpretation.

6 In any event, it was in fact treated as seed
7 money. It was treated as seed money and used that way, 8 and it would not have been except for this inducement to 9 do it this way.

10 As a consequence of what happened on this 11 instruction of Mr. Reeves -- it was repeated and 12 repeated and repeated for nearly three years -- other 13 employees were hired, CETA people provided services to 14 Medicare patients, which they didn't otherwise have to 15 do, and they developed a program to try to solve the 16 health community problem for the entire community. Now, 17 you can't unscramble the situation three years later and 18 go back and retroactively put CHS in the position it 19 was.

20 Now, there's much that's suggested in the 21 brief that there was some excess of funds and it makes 22 it out as if CHS was a profiteer. Far from that, as a 23 charitable institution every time they expanded and 24 offered a new service to help the Medicare beneficiaries 25 they had to take in people on a charitable basis that

1 were not eligible Medicare beneficiaries.

2 Now, who paid that? Every year CHS ended up
3 in a deficit situation because it was trying to do all 4 these things for so many people.

5 QUESTION: Mr. Hasley, it seems to me your 6 arguing as if the standards which would estop the 7 Government were very much the same as are held in state 8 law to estop private individuals: detrimental reliance, 9 reasonable assertions, and that sort of thing. But 10 we've said at the very least it would take affirmative 11 misconduct on the part of the Government. How is the 12 Travelers' representative's statement to your client any 13 more than negligence at the most?

14 MR. HASLEY: Well, as the Court of Appeals
15 noted, in accordance with his duties -- he was under a 16 duty to communicate -- any communications from CHS were 17 to be communicated to the Secretary. Were we not 18 entitled to a binding answer at some point in time?

19 QUESTION: Well, that's just a mistake.
20 That's negligence. That certainly isn't affirmative 21 misconduct.

22 MR. HASLEY: Well, I don't know what 23 affirmative misconduct would be, then. If you have a 24 duty, if Travelers has a duty to give us a binding 25 answer and they don't give us a binding answer, haven't

1 they breached a duty to us?

2 QUESTION: Yes, and breach of duty is 3 ordinarily negligence.

4 Have you considered an action against 5 Travelers?

6 MR. HASLEY: The Government says they're 7 immune. We've raised the issue that if this is the 8 negligence that Justice Rehnquist seeks -- and I don't 9 -- first, I think when you look at the contract between 10 Travelers and the Secretary, it seems that on the face 11 of the contract the intermediary has expressed authority 12 to do what he did, to set out the procedures.

13 And if I may just briefly read, in the 14 functions and duties to be performed by an intermediary, 15 he's to make determination as to coverage of services, 16 of the amounts of payments, and make payment to 17 providers of services and eligible individuals. He's to 18 assist providers of services in the development of 19 procedures relating to utilization practice, and so 20 forth, and to make studies.

21 He's supposed to do all these things, and if 22 this doesn't put him in a position where he has to do 23 something that is binding, not as opposed to something 24 that's not binding -- on this question about reopening, 25 you see, there is never any new fact that comes into

1 light three years later. The facts are always the 2 same.

3 You're not talking about going back and 4 adjusting estimated payments that were made. In the 5 course of the year, the intermediary comes in and does a 6 desk audit of everything that's gone on and makes a 7 resclution of the correct figures.

8 QUESTION: But the regulation doesn't require 9 any mistake of fact to reopen, does it? It says the 10 Secretary can reopen if the decision is inconsistent 11 with applicable law.

12 MR. HASLEY: Well, when you look back at 13 Medicare there is no law in Medicare as Congress enacted 14 it that said you had to offset any grants. There's 15 nothing in Medicare that says this.

16 This whole offsetting problem goes back to 17 once upon a time when hospitals were charitable and 18 people -- the money that came into them came for 19 restricted purposes. The ladies guild or something 20 would raise the money for an X-ray machine or a new wing 21 or so many new beds. And Blue Cross in its history, in 22 order to minimize the cost to its subscribers and with a 23 position of leverage over hospitals, was able to make 24 that arrangement so they got the benefit of restricted 25 money that went into charitable institutions.

1 And when Medicare was set up, the 2 Congressional part of it puts the responsibility on the 3 Secretary to determine reasonable costs. There's no
4 suggestion in this reasonable cost matter that a 5 provider has to give free services.

6 And what you have here is the Department of 7 Labor's money for its purposes, its budget purposes, and 8 then you have the Medicare funds. If the Secretary's 9 correct, what you're doing is siphoning money from the 10 budget of the Department of Labor over into the benefit 11 of Medicare beneficiaries, to some of them. You're 12 siphoning money over into something that was never 13 budgeted.

14 In fact, interestingly enough, in one aspect 15 of cost reimbursement relating to hospitals --

16 QUESTION: But it's still my money, isn't it?

17 MR. HASLEY: It's not the same money.

18 QUESTION: I mean my tax money.

19 MR. HASLEY: Well, the money that's in the 20 Department of Labor is everybody's tax money, the 21 corporations' and everybody's tax money.

22 QUESTION: That's what I'm talking about.

23 MR. HASLEY: But the money in the Medicare are 24 the specific beneficiaries. You know, it's earmarked 25 for the individuals.

1 QUESTION: Well, what we're interested in here
2 is my money?

3 MR. HASLEY: Well, I think --

4 QUESTION: We're interested in the tax money, 5 aren't we.

6 MR. HASLEY: Yes, we are. We all are. But 7 all that tax money -- all that tax money was put to use 8 in furthering the purposes for which it was intended.
9 There isn't any suggestion here, Justice Marshall --

10 QUESTION: What's the magic of the phrase
11 "seed money"?

12 MR. HASLEY: If we go back into the --

13 QUESTION: Is it that you can just do whatever 14 you want with it?

15 MR. HASLEY: Pardon me?

16 QUESTION: That you can just do whatever you 17 want with it?

18 MR. HASLEY: No, no, no, no, no, no, no, no.
19 If we go back into the 1960's, when the effort 20 was to examine the problem of the state of mental 21 health, mental retardation, and the care of those people 22 in the sixties -- and late President Kennedy was a 23 strong advocate for legislation in that area -- it was 24 apparent that new ideas in health care had to be 25 instituted, but there was no way -- they wanted them to

1 be self-sufficient, but there was no way to get them
2 started.

3 And so the concept of the seed money evolved
4 on the basis that, yes, you are getting a little more 5 money right now, but you are going to take that money
6 and you are going to develop new services that we want 7 developed. So this is the seed. We are planting the 8 seeds for growth.

9 And in this case, that's exactly what happened 10 to the money. It went to provide new services to 11 Medicare beneficiaries. So in terms of any raid on the 12 Treasury, it could hardly be said to be a raid on the 13 Treasury when the money was used to generate the 14 services that Medicare wanted and that Congress 15 dictated.

16 One of the unfortunate things, Justice
17 Marshall, is that at this period in time Medicare did 18 not advance any money, so that there was a delay of 19 maybe four months between when services would be 20 rendered and when any money could come back.

21 QUESTION: Don't be misled that I don't know 22 what seed money means.

23 MR. HASLEY: Pardon me?

24 QUESTION: Don't be misled by thinking I don't 25 know what seed money -- I just wanted to know what you

1 say it means.

2 MR. HASLEY: Well, I hope that our views are 3 consistent.

4 QUESTION: Oh, not necessarily.

5 MR. HASLEY: It was in fact treated as seed 6 money by Community Health Services in the expansion of 7 services for the community and for the Medicare
8 beneficiaries. And it did serve the purposes of CETA, 9 too, because as the testimony shows new jobs were 10 created, people were put into permanent jobs. So all 11 these purposes were accomplished.

12 QUESTION: Mr. Hasley, in the colloquy I think 13 you may have overlooked that there was a question about 14 whether Travelers is immune, and if so why are they 15 immune.

16 MR. HASLEY: Yes. Well, we raised this 17 question. Initially we said, now, if Travelers isn't 18 authorized to bind you, then they surely must be 19 negligent for all this problem and under any common law 20 principles we'd have been entitled to indemnity in this 21 situation.

22 And the Government says: Well, no, they have 23 the same immunity that we do. So they're perfectly 24 protected and you can recover nothing from them. So we 25 were caught between a rock and a hard place.

1 QUESTION: Have you accepted that or do you go
2 ahead on your own?

3 MR. HASLEY: We have raised that issue in this 4 case, but Third Circuit did not reach these issues of 5 Travelers because of the disposition on an estoppel 6 grounds.

7 Justice Blackmun, you see, if you view
8 Travelers as having this breach of duty to us and if you 9 want to call it negligence, call it negligence only, 10 then weren't we entitled to take a federal tort claim 11 type concept of negligence which would give us a right 12 against Travelers to get back this money if we had to 13 pay it to the Federal Government?

14 QUESTION: Have you instituted suit against 15 Travelers and the answer was no?

16 MR. HASLEY: That's part of this, that's part 17 of this case.

18 QUESTION: You have?

19 MR. HASLEY: Yes. Travelers is a defendant in 20 the case. We have the two different lawsuits and 21 Travelers is a defendant, and we raised this issue. The 22 lower court, the lower court said that Travelers enjoyed 23 the same immunity, they were the agent of the Government 24 and enjoyed the immunity, and this issue then was never 25 reached in the Court of Appeals.

1 I want to make it clear that we raised many 2 issues in the Court of Appeals, any one of which would 3 have turned this case in favor of CHS, including this 4 issue on Travelers. But the Court of Appeals didn't 5 reach the issue. And if you do not agree with the Court
6 of Appeals' and our position on the estoppel in this 7 case, we certainly would like to go back and argue that 8 matter about Travelers.

9 I've tried to just touch the estoppel, confine 10 myself to the estoppel, but historically in the context
11 of the case all these things were going on. There 12 perhaps have been 200 or more cases in the country in 13 the district courts and the Courts of Appeals dealing 14 with this subject of estoppel and when might the 15 Government be estopped, and the consensus in all the 16 circuits and all the district courts is the Government 17 should be estopped in some circumstances, but the issue 18 has been raised by the district court and by the 19 appellate courts, what are those circumstances.

20 QUESTION: Well, what's the consensus in this 21 Court?

22 MR. HASLEY: Well, as I read it would be 23 estoppel may -- in the affirmative misconduct
24 situation.

25 But if you look at the broad spectrum of cases

1 that have been litigated in the country about Government 2 misconduct, I would suggest that to the extent that 3 there is some overwhelming need to protect the Federal 4 Government in some way, that that ought to be the 5 Federal Government's burden to show why the ordinary 6 rules of estoppel should not apply to them. They can be 7 protected if they bring in the evidence to justify the 8 position. It's a question of shifting burdens.

9 QUESTION: None of our cases, Mr. Hasley, 10 suggests that the ordinary rules of estoppel do apply to 11 the Government. From Federal Crop Insurance against 12 Merrill cn, we have said the ordinary rules of estoppel
13 do not bind the Government.

14 MR. HASLEY: Well, I guess this is a case 15 where the issue will be addressed further as to whether 16 it would be no estoppel against the Government in any 17 circumstances, in which event the Government can 18 literally destroy people like CHS, who have in good 19 faith relied on it, and wipe them out.

20 QUESTION: I suppose you would agree, Mr.
21 Hasley, that the meaning of a statute or a regulation is 22 ultimately and finally for this Court, would you not?

23 MR. HASLEY: Yes, yes.

24 QUESTION: In the meantime, does your position
25 not amount to saying that some clerk in some Government

1 agency can reach a contrary conclusion and that that's 2 binding until we set it aside?

3 MR. HASLEY: It would amount to that, Justice
4 Burger. But bear in mind today that the Federal 5 Government is larger in its activities than the Fortune 6 500 list of industrial companies.

7 QUESTION: That's one of the problems, the 8 millions of employees who can make decisions from day to 9 day.

10 MR. HASLEY: Yes. But can you really 11 interface, can Government really interface with the 12 private segment on a basis of nothing but uncertainties 13 in the way in which they conduct business?

14 QUESTION: It's certainly a heavy burden in 15 individuals, on citizens. But the old rule of thumb is 16 that every person is presumed to know the law, which 17 puts them in a pretty difficult position, of course.

18 MR. HASLEY: But we as lawyers know that's not 19 a practical rule in today's society.

20 QUESTION: But it's still the rule, is it not, 21 of the law?

22 MR. HASLEY: Yes, Your Honor. But when we're 23 dealing with an equitable concept, we're going for 24 equity, and estoppel is a rule of law, too. It's older 25 than our Constitution. It's inherent in the American

1 jurisprudence system that --

2 QUESTION: Except as applied to the 3 Government, generally.

4 MR. HASLEY: Well, I can argue no more than 5 that every circuit court in this country has looked at 6 this issue in different factual contexts and, while they 7 recognize the position of the sovereign and these 8 distinctions and have acted with restraint, as this 9 Court has on the problem, nonetheless could you really 10 have an effective Constitution that did not guarantee 11 the private sector the right of estoppel in some 12 circumstances in some circumstances?

13 Otherwise, as you see here, when this case
14 started the Federal Government was actually recouping
15 the matter through self-help. Since they don't pay 16 their bills for three or four months, or at least they 17 didn't at that time, they simply went to deduct the 18 money that they claimed they were entitled to.

19 So the situation was at that point that CHS 20 couldn't meet a payroll and its doors were going 21 closed. And you know, if those aren't circumstances 22 where equity comes into play even against the Federal 23 Government, even against the Federal Government -- this 24 is not a case where there's been any profiteering. It's 25 not a case of fraud or misrepresentation.

1 QUESTION: Do you believe that a Government
2 officer can violate a rule on equitable principles?

3 MR. HASLEY: I think in some circumstances.
4 But here you have a question -- you had a question --

5 QUESTION: No, no. Let's answer that 6 question.

7 MR. HASLEY: I think that he could do
8 something that was inequitable and that the Government 9 should be estopped from doing otherwise.

10 QUESTION: Well, you talk a lot about equity.
11 Would the Government have squeaky-clean hands?

12 MR. HASLEY: Does the Government have clean
13 hands? In this case they have dirty hands.

14 QUESTION: In your case does if it has dirty
15 hands is it equity?

16 MR. HASLEY: We contend that we have clean
17 hands. It's the Government that has dirty hands.

18 QUESTION: I mean, in your case you just said 19 that where he's going to give this equitable relief to 20 this person he knew better.

21 MR. HASLEY: Maybe I misunderstood.

22 QUESTION: Well, if he deliberately violated a 23 rule to do what he thought was right, would that excuse 24 him and the Government?

25 MR. HASLEY: Not if the other person was not

1 privy or knowledgeable, if the other party would be 2 totally innocent, and yes, I would bind the Federal 3 Government in that case.

4 But this would be a factual question as to 5 evidence.

6 QUESTION: How low down would that go in the 7 governmental offices? Would that be a person that's 8 sitting behind a desk? In other words, he could give 9 you $20 and give me $5 and give somebody else $2?

10 MR. HASLEY: No, no. He'd have to be in a 11 managerial, I would say at the managerial level, Justice 12 Marshall. I don't -- I mean, I think you would reach, 13 just as in any corporation, you reach the realm of 14 ridiculousness as to whether the janitor binds the 15 corporation because he happens to be present in the 16 circumstances. You have to deal with --

17 QUESTION: What rule gives --

18 MR. HASLEY: -- you know, reasonable scope of 19 authority.

20 QUESTION: What rule gives a federal employee 21 that right to violate the rules? I guess he could also 22 violate a statute, couldn't he, on equitable 23 principles?

24 MR. HASLEY: I guess that's the argument, as 25 to whether in this case he did or did not.

1 QUESTION: You think he could?

2 MR. HASLEY: Our position -- we've had 3 alternative positions. Our position was that he was 4 authorized and did make the interpretation and bound the 5 Government. Then -- that's the first position.

6 Alternatively, he was duty-bound to give us a 7 binding answer to the inquiry. His negligence, if it is 8 negligence -- and it could be -- is in his failure to 9 follow the lines of communications to the Secretary, et 10 cetera, and come back. On the other hand, he may 11 contend, well, it was the Secretary's duty to publish 12 all this information and put it out and to have a 13 policy, and in the absence of any policy what was I to 14 do?

15 I might note here that one of our contentions 16 below was that in 1975 when Mr. Reeves made the 17 decision, he has testified that there was no policy by 18 the Secretary, and he had searched high and low and 19 there was none. When he testified later before the 20 Provider Benefit Review Board, he said he still wasn't 21 aware of any that had ever existed back at that period 22 of time. So this is --

23 QUESTION: Then he was making the policy 24 himself.

25 MR. HASLEY: So he in effect did what he

1 thought was right.

2 QUESTION: He made the policy.

3 MR. HASLEY: Right, he made the -- well, I
4 think the policy had already been made on seed money
5 grants in the administration of the mental health, 6 mental staffing grants as to what seed money was and its 7 application.

8 QUESTION: Suppose -- in this case you
9 emphasize that this is a nonprofit corporation, the 10 Respondent, doing very worthy services. But if the rule
11 you advocate were adopted, wouldn't that apply to Dupont
12 and General Motors and Guaranty Trust of New York?

13 MR. HASLEY: Well, to be a worthwhile rule it 14 would have to be a general rule. But I'm looking for an 15 affirmance of the Third Circuit in this case, and I'm 16 happy to go with the affirmative misconduct rule.

17 But as you read all these cases and you see 18 all the problems that have come up over the country, you 19 do have to wonder, isn't there a solution in terms of 20 this policy? Shouldn't there be -- should our system of 21 jurisprudence today be brought up to the point where, if 22 the Government has a serious contention that someone's 23 raiding the Treasury -- and I don't mean for the money 24 here -- that they would prove that, that they would 25 prove why a court would not grant equitable relief.

1 That's my contention, that if you use the 2 ordinary principles of estoppel -- that is, full 3 knowledge of the facts to the other party, detrimental 4 reliance, change of position, et cetera, et cetera -- 5 where is the Government harmed by that if they have the 6 opportunity to show that a court of equity under the 7 circumstances that they contend exist should not give 8 equitable relief?

9 QUESTION: The red light's on.

10 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Do you have anything
11 further, Mr. Geller?

12 REBUTTAL ARGUMENT OF KENNETH S. GELLER, ESC.

13 ON BEHALF OF PETITIONER

14 MR. GELLER: I'd just like, if I could, to 15 clear up a few points made in Mr. Hasley's argument.

16 The first, as I understand it the Respondent 17 claims that the affirmative misconduct here was 18 Travelers' violation of this mandatory duty it 19 apparently had to communicate with HHS about this 20 question it had gotten. There's nothing in the statute 21 or the Medicare regulations or in the contract that 22 intermediaries sign with HHS that in any way imposes a 23 mandatory duty to communicate every question they get 24 from the provider.

25 Obviously, an intermediary can't consult HHS

1 on everything or else the whole system would break 2 down. There'd be no reason to have intermediaries if 3 every time an intermediary got a question it had to pass
4 it along to HHS. Obviously, an intermediary has to use 5 some discretion, and perhaps here bad judgment was 6 exercised, but it was not a violation of a mandatory 7 duty.

8 And I might add that some perhaps some duty 9 would arise to pass along to HHS a question when the 10 provider specifically asks the intermediary to do so.
11 But once again, I repeat here, there's no evidence that 12 CHS ever asked Travelers to get an interpretation from 13 HHS.

14 QUESTION: Mr. Geller, if the intermediary is 15 negligent in some way, is it your thought that it could 16 be held liable?

17 MR. GELLER: Now, there the Government has 18 taken the position that intermediaries are agents of the 19 Government and therefore they have no independent 20 liability. There is in fact a regulation, 42 CFR 421.5, 21 which explains that the Administrator of the Health Care
22 Financing Administration is the real party in interest
23 in any suit arising under the Medicare Act.

24 As Mr. Hasley mentions, however, they have 25 sued Travelers in this case and that is an issue that

1 the Third Circuit has not yet adjudicated.

2 But Respondents claims here time and again
3 that it has an entitlement to a binding answer of any 4 question it has under the Medicare program. That's what 5 it perceives as the affirmative misconduct here, a 6 violation of this entitlement to a binding answer.

7 But there obviously can't be under the 8 Medicare Act, where there are only interim payments and 9 subsequent adjustments, a binding answer. And the 10 regulation that I read earlier, 405.1885, is conclusive 11 that an intermediary can't give a binding answer and 12 that an answer that even the Secretary gives can be 13 reopened within a three-year period.

14 It is, once again, quite instructive that the 15 Respondent has not yet explained what that regulation 16 means or how it could have reasonably relied on the 17 intermediary's advice in the face of it.

18 The Respondent says it all boils down to the 19 scope of authority of an agent, and as this Court has 20 said on many occasions, employees of the Executive 21 Branch, it is not within their authority to amend Acts 22 of Congress; they are subject to Acts of Congress.

23 Thank you.

24 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.
