1                                    P R O C E E D I N G S

2                    CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: We will hear arguments
3 next in Securities Industry Association against the 4 Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve.

5                    Mr. Weidner, you may proceed whenever you are 6 ready.

7                    ORAL ARGUMENT OF JAMES B. WEIDNER, ESQ.

8                    ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER

9                    MR. WEIDNER: Mr. Chief Justice, may it please
10 the Court. This case involves an admittedly
11 unprecedented order of the Federal Reserve Board, 12 reversing 50 years of administrative understanding, and 13 industry understanding permitting bank affiliates, for 14 the first time in half a century --

15                   QUESTION: How can it be unprecedented if you 16 reverse something?

17                   MR. WEIDNER: Unprecedented in terms of 18 reversing the understanding, but not unprecedented in 19 terms of reversing a prior administrative ruling.

20                   Involved are two statutes fundamental to the 21 governing of the banking industry, and financial 22 services industry in this country, the Bank Holding 23 Company Act and the Glass-Steagall Act. In this case, 24 directly contrary to congressional intent, in our view,
25 the Board of Governors, affirmed by the Second Circuit,

1 turned two narrow exceptions in the statutes into broad
2 authorizations instead. We believe that the decision
3 below should be reversed for two reasons.

4 First, the Bank Holding Company Act requires 5 that any bank affiliate, which is not a bank, be 6 involved in a business that is so closely related to 7 banking as to be a proper incident thereto. That has 8 been interpreted and requires that that business be 9 closely related in the sense of being -- of having a 10 direct and significant connection to banking, and not 11 similar -- not simply being related to it in the sense
12 of being functionally similar, which is what the Board 13 found.

14 Secondly, we believe that the Glass-Steagall
15 Act prevents any affiliation of a bank with an entity
16 that is principally engaged in the public securities 17 business, and that is the business in which the 18 affiliate here involved is here involved.

19 Briefly, the facts are these: In early 1982,
20 the BankAmerica Corporation, owner of BankAmerica, one 21 of the largest banks in the world, applied to the 22 Federal Reserve Board for permission to acquire the 23 Charles Schwab Corporation. Schwab is the owner of one 24 of the largest, if not the largest discount brokers in 25 the United States.

1           The SIA, our client, opposed the application
2 and requested a hearing. The Federal Reserve Board
3 ordered a hearing before an Administrative Law Judge.
4 The Law Judge ruled in favor of the proposed 5 acquisition. The Second Circuit affirmed.

6           If I may, let me first address the Bank 7 Holding Company Act. That Act was passed in 1956 to 8 further the basic congressional purpose of separating
9 banking from commerce in general. By that Act, Congress 10 said that banks will not evade that separation through 11 the structure of a bank holding company, and said that a 12 bank holding company could not acquire a non-banking 13 subsidiary unless -- a very narrow exception -- that 14 subsidiary's business was so closely related to the 15 business of banking to be a proper incident thereto.

16           The Board of Governors interpreted that 17 statute for the next decade as requiring a direct and 18 significant connection between the proposed activity of 19 the subsidiary and the activity of the bank holding 20 company itself.

21           In 1969, the Board asked Congress to amend the 22 statute to loosen up the standard. They found it to be 23 too restrictive. What they proposed was that the 24 closely related standard be changed to read
25 "functionally related," and that the phrase "the business

1 of" be deleted from the phrase "closely related to the 2 business of banking."

3 The House and the Senate both passed bills, 4 which in fact did substitute "functionally related" for 5 "closely related," but there were significant 6 differences between those bills. One of the most 7 significant differences was that the House said: We 8 will put functionally related in, but we are also going 9 to have what became known as a laundry list of 10 prohibited activities that in no case will be deemed 11 closely related to banking.

12 The result was a conference committee, of 13 course, and what can only be described as a legislative 14 Donnybrook. Clearly there was a battle in the 15 Conference Committee as to which view would prevail. In 16 fact, the compromise was reached only after a virtual 17 stalemate. The obvious deal that was cut was this:

18 The Conference agreed to leave out "the 19 business of" from the "business of banking," but in 20 return for that, and in return for the House members 21 deleting their laundry list of prohibited activities, 22 the proposed functionally related test was out and the 23 original "closely related" language was left in the 24 statute.

25 A review of the legislative history makes

1 clear -- It is a little bit difficult to discern all of 2 the ramifications of what happened, but one thing, I
3 believe, is absolutely clear from the legislative 4 history, and that is that Congress did not substitute 5 "functionally related" for "closely related" in the 6 statute.

7           The Congressional Report -- The Conference
8 Committee Report makes clear that the Board was given 9 greater flexibility in the sense that by deleting "the 10 business of" from the statute, no longer did a 11 connection a connection have to be shown between the 12 specific holding company and the proposed activity, but 13 that a direct and significant connection continued to be 14 required between banking in general and the proposed 15 activity. That is the connection that could not be 16 found here.

17           The specific business that is at issue is 18 execution of securities trade for the public. That is a 19 business that banks have not been in for the last 50
20 years. It was not on the basis that banks generally 21 have been in the business that the Board found, or could 22 find this acquisition to be permissible. Instead, the 23 Board found it permissible because, in its view, the 24 activities involved here were functionally similar to 25 other activities performed by banks, so that at least

1 some banks were well-equipped to perform them.

2 I suggest what has happened is that the Board
3 -- This is not a mere matter of interpretation. The 4 Board has in fact put back in the statute exactly the 5 language that the Congress refused to accept. We have a
6 Board, in effect, amendment of statute directly contrary 7 to legislative intent. It is not simply that it is 8 contrary to legislative intent, but I suggest, if 9 anything, "functionally similar" is even broader than 10 "functionally related."

11 For example, if all that is necessary to be 12 shown is that the bank, or at least some banks have the 13 capacity to perform some activity and, therefore, it is 14 closely related. Banks have the capacity and do execute 15 wire transfers. Then why couldn't it be argued that 16 they should be able to go into the telecommunications 17 business, and that is not a farfetched example.

18 The American Bankers Association -- this is in 19 our brief -- has in fact asked the Federal Reserve Board 20 to approve, as a bank affiliate activity, 21 telecommunication services. It seems to me that the 22 next thing we are going to hear is that because banks
23 have dispensed toaster and calculators to get depositors 24 to put money in the bank, then they can go into the 25 retail toaster business. In a more serious vein, I

1 really do believe that this is virtually a limitless
2 standard.

3 The Board has pointed to this Court's decision 4 in what we have called ICI-2 as authority for its 5 standard. But the fact it, the activity involved there, 6 investment advice to a closed and mutual fund, was an 7 activity that banks had done for 50 years. Indeed, this 8 Court specifically said that in looking at future
9 applications, the Board was to assure that the bank
10 affiliate did not exceed bank's traditional fiduciary 11 functions.

12 In this case, however, there is no doubt that 13 securities execution is not a traditional banking 14 function.

15 QUESTION: Although it is for customers.

16 MR. WEIDNER: I am sorry.

17 QUESTION: It certainly is for customers of 18 the bank.

19 MR. WEIDNER: Securities execution?

20 QUESTION: Sure.

21 MR. WEIDNER: No, Justice O'Connor, I don't 22 believe that it is. To the extent that banks have had 23 an involvement in "brokerage" through the years, their 24 involvement has simply been to accommodate orders of 25 bank customers to sell stock or securities. But in

1 doing that, they have uniformly forwarded the orders to 2 brokers for execution.

3           There is a significant difference here because 4 a broker who executes a trade puts his net capital on 5 the line every time he does that. In other words, 6 whether it is one time a day or 100,000 times a day, 7 each time that trade executed that broker has got to 8 come up with the securities or cash to make good in the 9 trade. If his customer doesn't have it, the broker has 10 got to come up with the money or the securities.

11           It is for that reason -- Turning to 12 Glass-Steagall just for a moment, because I think it 13 does respond to your question, although it is not in the 14 Bank Holding Company Act. The Glass-Steagall Act was 15 amended, and I will return to this, to limit bank 16 securities activities to purchasing and selling, without 17 recourse upon the order and for the account of 18 customers.

19           The question is what does "without recourse"
20 mean? This Court addressed -- In its technical sense, 21 it means without endorsement or guarantee. But this 22 Court that specific requirement in the Awotin case, and 23 expressly flatly held that without recourse, in this 24 context, in this statute, its predecessor, is not 25 limited solely to endorsement and guarantee because it

1 would make any sense in terms of trading and securities,
2 which are not typically endorsed or guaranteed.
3 Certainly stock is not endorsed or guaranteed. It said
4 it had a broader meaning.

5 Then the question is, what is the analogous 6 liability that a broker might face to a third party, if 7 it is not endorsement or guarantee? The analogous 8 liability is exactly the risk of customer fails. The 9 broker has got to come up with the securities or stock 10 to the third person if his customer doesn't. It is 11 exactly that kind of liability which we believe Congress
12 expressly legislated against in the Glass-Steagall Act.

13 The way that a bank or a broker can accomplish 14 avoiding that liability, and many brokers do, is acting 15 as a forwarding broker, that is to say, the broker gets 16 a securities order, forwards it to an executing broker 17 on a so-called fully disclosed basis -- that is 18 disclosing the name of the customer to the executing 19 broker -- who then deals directly with the customer, 20 account statements, confirmations, and the like. There 21 is no recourse against the bank.

22 In fact, I should point out -- this is 23 something that has happened since our reply brief was 24 filed on the same day -- the Comptroller of Currency, in 25 a proposed rulemaking reported at 49 Federal Register

1 15089, has proposed regulations to deal with bank
2 securities activities.

3 One of the things that the Comptroller said in 4 that regulation a week ago was that no bank will conduct 5 a securities business in-house, except on a fully 6 disclosed basis, that is to say, forwarding the orders
7 to brokers for execution, which is what banks have done 8 on an incidental accommodation basis for years, and 9 that, I suggest, is what the Comptroller understands 10 "without recourse" means in the statute.

11 To return to where we started, no, I don't 12 believe that banks have been in the business of 13 executing securities orders for the public at any point
14 until they were allowed to be affiliated with Schwab 15 only two years ago.

16 QUESTION: Are you saying under the new 17 proposed regulation that the activity considered here
18 would be made invalid?

19 MR. WEIDNER: It could be performed, but only 20 in a separate subsidiary. The bank itself could not 21 perform it, that is correct.

22 If I may turn --

23 QUESTION: This case involves a separate 24 subsidiary, does it not?

25 MR. WEIDNER: This clearly does involve a

1 separate subsidiary, that is right, but in terms of 2 viewing --

3 QUESTION: So the new regulation would not 4 counteract this particular situation?

5 MR. WEIDNER: No, it would not, and I didn't 6 mean to imply that it would. If I did, I certainly 7 didn't mean to. It had direct relevance because a 8 question, turning now to the Glass-Steagall Act, is 9 exactly what did Congress mean to prohibit in that Act.
10 In our view, without going to the background of the 11 Glass-Steagall Act, of course, it was a reaction to the 12 crash of '29 and the economic chaos and bank failures
13 that followed.

14 In our view, Congress meant to prevent banks 15 from doing certain securities activities entirely, and 16 from affiliating with entities who are principally in 17 those securities activities. The question, then, is 18 what were banks prohibited from doing and how does that 19 relate to their affiliates.

20 Perhaps I could step back just brief to 1927,
21 because the story really starts there with the McFadden 22 Act. In 1927, Congress passed the McFadden Act, which 23 for the first time authorized banks to deal in 24 securities. Significantly, it authorized banks to deal
25 only in investment securities, that is, low risk debt

1 securities.

2 At no point had Congress authorized banks to 3 deal in stock. The only thing that banks were doing at 4 that time was, on an informal basis, accommodating 5 customers who may have inherited some stock, or 6 whatever, by passing along those orders to a broker for 7 execution.

8 By 1933, after the chaos had occurred,
9 Congress, in effect, realized that it had made a 10 mistake, and in the Glass-Steagall Act withdrew the 11 securities powers that it had granted in the McFadden 12 Act of 1927, and said that banks shall not deal in 13 investmetn securities, except to the limited extent of 14 purchasing and selling, without recourse, upon the order 15 and for the account of their customers.

16 I won't return to "without recourse," but it 17 seems to us from the face of it that it is clear that 18 that language meant that a customer -- that a bank was 19 merely to pass a customer's orders along for execution.
20 But there really can't be much doubt about what was 21 done, in our view, because immediately after the 22 Glass-Steagall Act passed, the Comptroller of Currency, 23 who is responsible, of course, for all national banks, 24 said: Look, wait a minute. I think that you may have 25 gone too far, because if you read that proviso, the

1 exception to dealing literally, it says that a bank may 2 accomodate only orders in investment securities, not 3 stock, and said the Comptroller, that is pretty 4 important in rural areas where a bank may be the only 5 financial institution in miles. There isn't a brokerage 6 house on the corner. Won't you clarify your intent, in 7 effect, he said, and make it clear that banks can 8 continue to accomodate on this informal basis orders 9 and stock, as well.

10 He proposed legislation. In 1934, both the 11 House and Senate passed bills that incorporated it, but 12 it floundered on the last day of the session. The 13 Comptroller then issued a rulemaking interpretation that 14 said, in effect, in my view Congress didn't mean to 15 prevent accomodating orders on stock. I am going to 16 permit it and return to Congress, in effect, next year 17 to get it expressly permitted. But, said the 18 Comptroller in that ruling, this does not mean banks may 19 do a brokerage business.

20 That was in July 1934. In August, I believe 21 it was, or September 1934, the Federal Reserve Board 22 ruled similarly and specifically quoted the 23 Comptroller's language.

24 In 1934, the Comptroller did return to 25 Congress, testified that in his view this was necessary

1 to expand this exception, and made clear that it was 2 only on an accommodation basis, and convinced Congress
3 to expand the statute to include purchasing and selling, 4 without recourse, on the orders, securities and stock.

5 Under this Court's precedent, in Zuber against 6 Allen, it seems to me that that history itself should be 7 controlling, if there were ambiguity, we don't think 8 there is, as to what Congress intended in the exception 9 in Section 16 for accommodating stock orders.

10 The Comptroller proposed the legislation. He 11 testified directly before the Congressional Committees 12 that were considering it, what his view was, and 13 Congress enacted what he proposed.

14 The respondents say, wait a minute, in 1933, 15 the Congressional Reports that accompanied the initial 16 Glass-Steagall Act said, "Banks shall be permitted, to 17 the same extent heretofore, to deal in securities," 18 therefore that shows that they were permitted to be 19 public stockbrokers. But let's look at what happened.
20 Banks had not been permitted prior to 1933 to broker 21 stock, or prior to any date to broker stock. They had 22 been permitted only to deal in investment securities.

23 The Comptroller made that clear, he made clear
24 what he had in mind, that is an accommodation provision 25 limitation during 1934 and 1935.

1           The '35 Amendment that added stock -- expanded
2 the exception to add stock, was specifically 3 characterized as a technical amendment intended to make 4 no substantive changes in the law.

5           If respondents are correct that what Congress
6 intended to do was to permit banks to be public stock 7 brokers, it would necessarily mean that in 1935, when 8 Congress passed a technical, non-substantive amendment
9 to a statute, the Glass-Steagall Act, otherwise meant 10 broadly to prohibit securities activities for banks, it 11 authorized, for the only time in 200 years, banks to 12 become public stockbrokers. I suggest that simply 13 doesn't make common sense, let alone legislative history
14 sense.

15           QUESTION: I thought that we were dealing here 16 with a bank affiliate, not the bank itself. I also 17 thought that the prohibition in Section 16, on its face, 18 applied to banks and not the affiliates.

19           MR. WEIDNER: Justice O'Connor, we clearly are 20 dealing with a bank affiliate, and let me turn to 21 Section 20, which deals specifically with them.

22           Let me say this that in our view the structure 23 and the history of the Glass-Steagall make it clear that 24 what Congress had in mind was, given -- remember that 25 when this was passed, given the crash and the 2,000

1 banks that failed in the interim, to get banks out of 2 the securities business, and it did it by prohibiting 3 certain activities entirely for banks, and prohibiting 4 them principally for their affiliates.

5 There is no history, although this is in 6 effect what we believe the Board and the Second Circuit 7 have held, no history, legislative or statutory, that 8 suggests that the Board has discretion to authorize bank 9 affiliates to engage principally in what banks can't 10 engage in at all. That we believe is what has 11 happened.

12 I might contrast Section 20 with Section 32
13 that has to do with interlocks. Section 20 has to do
14 with bank affiliations. Section 32 did vest the Board 15 with exemptive authority over certain circumstances.

16 Let me turn to Section 20. As I said, that 17 statute -- that section has to do with bank 18 affiliations, part of the Glass-Steagall Act, and 19 provides that a bank may not be affiliated with any 20 entity "engaged principally in the issue, floatation, 21 underwriting, public sale, distribution," and so on. I 22 will come back to the language.

23 In our view, that language covers the 24 waterfront in terms of activities, including public
25 brokerage. It says, "public sale." It is a remedial

1 statute. The statute should be construed broadly, and 2 indeed every time this Court has assessed the 3 Glass-Steagall Act, it has said that its provisions are 4 indeed to be read as remedial provisions, broadly.

5 What the government -- the respondents say is,
6 now wait, public brokerage wasn't covered by that 7 because -- Let me turn to the Second Circuit first. The 8 Second Circuit said, it is not covered because the terms
9 apply only to principal activities, as opposed to agency
10 activities.

11 Underwriting, for example, they said, is a 12 principal activity, and so on, so brokerage is out. But 13 the fact is that underwriting certainly encompasses, and 14 the Board doesn't dispute, best effort underwriting.
15 That is an agency, not a principal activity. And there 16 is no reason why a public sale couldn't equally well be 17 an agency as well as a principal activity.

18 The Board, apparently recognizing the problem
19 in the Second Circuit opinion in that respect, doesn't 20 support it here. They have a different view. Their 21 view is that those terms concern themselves only with 22 new issues of stock or the introduction of large blocks
23 of stock to the public. In other words, public 24 offerings.

25 The problem with that interpretation is what

1 they are saying in essence is that it covers only 2 primary distributions of stock -- the first time stock
3 is made available to the public. If that is the case,
4 they have just eliminated half of the securities
5 industry from the statute. The entire secondary market
6 where stocks are traded once they are out in public 7 hands.

8 If that is the case, and that is necessarily 9 what they are saying, that means not only could bank 10 affiliates principally be stockbrokers, but they could 11 be dealers, that is, trading for their own account.
12 They can even be market-makers. Even the Federal 13 Reserve Board has said in its amended Reg Y that dealing 14 is not a permitted activity.

15 One further thing, I think, bears upon Section
16 20 to contrast it with Section 32, the interlock 17 provision, which as of 1935 used the same phrase as 18 Section 20. Its predecessor language -- the predecessor 19 in '32 as enacted in 1933 -- said, purchasing, selling, 20 and negotiating, not issuance, floatation, and so on.
21 That amendment was also a technical, non-substantive 22 amendment.

23 If, as the Board says, the statutory phrase
24 now means only underwriting, then necessarily Section 32 25 must have meant the same thing in 1933 when it was

1 initially passed. Then the statute falls apart, because 2 Section 16, which we talked about before relating to 3 agency activities, uses the terms "purchasing and 4 selling," clearly relating to agency activity.

5 In other words, I think if you look at the 6 statute as a whole, there is only one construction that 7 makes sense and it makes sense in terms of the general 8 congressional intent as well, that is, and if I may let 9 me read Section 20 in its entirety, "May not affiliate
10 with an entity principally engaged in the issue,
11 floatation, underwriting, public sale, or distribution
12 at wholesale or retail, or through syndicate 13 participation of stocks, bonds, debentures, notes, or 14 other securities."

15 I suggest that what Congress had in mind was 16 covering the waterfront. It meant to prevent principal 17 engaging at all activities, whether they are principal 18 or agent, in all markets, whether primary or secondary, 19 and in all securities, whether they are equity or debt.
20 I think any other construction of that statutory phrase
21 throws this language out of kilter and, I respectfully 22 suggest, out the window.

23 In summary, we believe that the Federal 24 Reserve Board, affirmed by the Second Circuit, was 25 incorrect. Schwab is unquestionably principally engaged

1 in the execution of securities trades for the public,
2 the public securities brokerage business.

3 They have reached that conclusion by turning
4 very narrow exceptions, "closely related" in the Bank 5 Holding Company Act, "purchase and sale" in the 6 Glass-Steagall Act, into broad authorizations instead,
7 never intended by Congress. In effect, they are trying 8 to turn the clock back to 1927, when Congress had 9 permitted -- even further, to permit dealings in stock.

10 I suggest that if the clock is to be turned 11 back, that is a policy decision of enormous consequences
12 that should be addressed by Congress only, and in fact 13 Congress is right now looking in an omnibus fashion to 14 the financial services industry to see if and, if so,
15 how that industry should be restructured.

16 I believe the decision below should be 17 reversed.

18 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Phillips.

19 ORAL ARGUMENT OF CARTER G. PHILLIPS, ESQ.

20 ON BEHALF OF RESPONDENT

21 MR. PHILLIPS: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
22 please the Court.

23 At issue in this case is the Federal Reserve 24 Board's determination, made on the basis of an 25 exhaustive administrative record, that the business of

1     executing securities transactions on exchanges is 2     closely related to banking as to be a proper incident
3     thereto, and that such brokerage activities are not 4     prohibited to bank holding companies or their 5     subsidiaries by the Glass-Steagall Act.

6             In that regard, it is probably worthwhile to 7     emphasize once more, as Justice O'Connor did with her
8     question, to remember that this case concerns only a 9     bank holding company and its subsidiary. It does not 10    involve the bank and, therefore, precisely what banks 11    are permitted to do, and have engaged in, in the past is 12    not directly controlling on the outcome of this case.

13            Contrary to petitioner's general assertion --

14            QUESTION: Is that the same inquiry under the 15    Bank Holding Company Act?

16            MR. PHILLIPS: Is what, I am sorry, I don't 17    understand.

18            QUESTION: What did you just say?

19            MR. PHILLIPS: What I am suggesting is that 20    the question of what a bank may do under Section 16 does 21    not control what a bank holding company or its 22    subsidiaries can do under Section 20. There is very 23    different language.

24            QUESTION: It is not supposed to engage in 25    non-banking activities, is it?

1 MR. PHILLIPS: Under the Bank -- Yes, it --
2 well, it has to be an activity that is closely related 3 to banking, but it doesn't have to be an activity that 4 is banking. Indeed, this Court said as much in the ICI 5 II decision.

6 QUESTION: You think that it doesn't have to 7 be an activity that a bank ever engaged in?

8 MR. PHILLIPS: It may not have to be an 9 activity that it is precisely engaged in, no. But I
10 think that if it is so closely related to banking that a 11 bank would be perfectly well suited to engage in that 12 form of activity that that would be fine. Especially 13 if, as in this case, the reason why banks are not 14 engaged in that activity are not so much dependent on 15 the law as they are on the financial events that gave 16 rise to the problem in the first instance.

17 I think that it is important to understand 18 what the Board did here to place it in context. In the 19 1970s, the Securities and Exchange Commission unfixed 20 the fees that brokers charge -- can charge on their -- 21 for executing transactions on the stock exchanges. This 22 pro-consumer decision led directly to the creation a new 23 form of financial opportunity from this discount 24 brokerage, a firm such as Schwab emerged. Prior to that 25 time, it was generally not possible to offer fewer

1 services for a lesser fee.

2 In the early 1980s, BankAmerica, realizing
3 what an opportunity this presented, made an application 4 to the Federal Reserve Board to acquire the Charles 5 Schwab Discount Brokerage firm. The Board published 6 notice of the proposed acquisition and solicited
7 comments from the public.

8 You may regard it as probably worthwhile, and 9 this will also reemphasize again that this case involves 10 bank holding companies. It is important to note that 11 the Securities and Exchange Commission expressly passed 12 judgment on this particular issue, and did not oppose 13 the acquisition of Schwab by BankAmerica's Holding 14 Company.

15 QUESTION: Neither did the Comptroller.

16 MR. PHILLIPS: The Comptroller did not oppose 17 either. In fact, the Comptroller very favorably 18 affirmed that decision, frankly.

19 It is common for the Board to issue a 4(c)(8)
20 order based solely on these sorts of written comment, 21 but in this case they went the extra step and set the 22 matter down for an extensive hearing in order to examine 23 this new form of commercial opportunity.

24 First the Administrative Law Judge, and then 25 the Board, thoroughly analyzed the history of brokerage

1 activities undertaken by banks, compared them with the 2 specific business of Schwab. Both the Administrative 3 Law Judge and the Board invoked the standards that had 4 been applied for the last ten years regarding what is 5 closely related to business, those standards coming in 6 the D.C. Circuit's 1975 Courier case. Both found that 7 banks generally provide services that are operationally 8 and functionally so similar to the proposed services as 9 to equip them particularly well to provide that 10 service. Both the Administrative Law Judge and the 11 Board then engaged in the proper incident analysis and 12 concluded that the public benefits greatly outweighed 13 any detriments that might arise.

14 It is our view that procedurally and 15 substantively, the Board's action were precisely what 16 Congress envisioned when it rejected the House's attempt 17 to narrowly constrain the Board's discretion in dealing 18 with the what is closely related to banking by bank 19 holding companies. That determination is left to the 20 experience and the expertise of the Federal Reserve 21 Board, and it has made a judgment in this case as to 22 what businesses can properly be integrated under the 23 umbrella of a bank holding company. This Court has 24 consistently said that it would respect that kind of 25 judgment made in this complex financial arena.

1           Petitioners challenge that the Board's 2 decision is based solely on a semantics fortuity.
3 Congress, in 1970, did reject a mere functional
4 relationship test. This Court has already recognized 5 that the purpose of that change is very vague, and it is 6 not clear precisely intended by its actions in 1970.
7 From this, petitioner infers that the Board is precluded 8 from ever analyzing these problems in terms of 9 functional relationships.

10           The problem with the argument is that the 11 decision in this case did not turn on mere functional 12 relationship. The Board found that banks have 13 traditionally purchased and sold securities as agent for 14 their customers. In over-the-counter markets, the Board
15 found that banks oftentimes perform the entire function
16 of the purchase and sale of securities.

17           QUESTION: Do you think that they have often 18 acted exactly like a broker?

19           MR. PHILLIPS: That is precisely what the 20 finding of the Administrative Law Judge were, that they 21 have the same computer operations, they have the same
22 training personnel, and they engage in exactly the same 23 kinds of judgments.

24           QUESTION: What about with the same legal 25 effect?

1 MR. PHILLIPS: In terms of -- In terms of 2 effecting a purchase and sale of security, there is no
3 difference.

4 With regard to the "without recourse" issue
5 that the petitioner places so much emphasis on, it seems 6 to us quite clear that the Congress did not intent to 7 preclude banks from transmitting brokerage exchange -- 8 brokerage transactions in a way that they had to 9 designate who the customer was in order to avoid 10 liability of the bank.

11 As far as we know, banks have historically 12 collected large quantities of orders and just shipped
13 them off, without setting out exactly who the customers 14 are.

15 QUESTION: You don't think they have always -- 16 You don't think that they have always submitted them to 17 a broker?

18 MR. PHILLIPS: On the exchanges, they have 19 always transmitted them to a broker.

20 QUESTION: They won't have to now, will they?

21 MR. PHILLIPS: No, Your Honor, they won't have 22 to now.

23 QUESTION: That is somewhat of a change, isn't 24 it?

25 MR. PHILLIPS: It is true that it is somewhat

1 of a change with regard to the exchanges, but the basic 2 -- but the bottomline is that it is still an activity.

3 This Court's inquiry should be limited to the 4 issue of whether or not the Board has stated a 5 connection between the proposed activity and what banks 6 traditionally do, and whether it is rational to conclude 7 that that connection is a close one.

8 QUESTION: I thought our inquiry would be 9 whether what the Board did is contrary to what Congress
10 intended to do by the relevant statutes.

11 MR. PHILLIPS: Of course, that is the ultimate 12 inquiry, but Congress -- Congress delegated to the Board 13 discretion to make judgments, to employ its expertise in 14 deciding what activities are closely related to 15 banking.

16 QUESTION: You wouldn't suggest that the Board 17 could authorize a bank to engage in underwriting, would 18 you?

19 MR. PHILLIPS: No, Your Honor, of course, 20 not.

21 QUESTION: The argument right here is that 22 Congress didn't intend a bank to engage in brokering.

23 MR. PHILLIPS: But there is not one work in 24 the legislative history to suggest that Congress had any 25 concern about mere brokerage activities by banks. The 1 entire debates in 1933 and again in 1956 relate to the 2 problems of market, market collapse of large issues of 3 securities.

4 There is no reference in any of that history
5 to the mere execution of a brokerage transaction, and 6 there is no reason for any concern, because did not fail
7 in the late 1920s and 1930s -- in the early 1930s
8 because they executed transactions on securities 9 exchanges.

10 Banks failed because they engaged in 11 investment banking practices where purchased large 12 quantities of securities and those securities went 13 back. That is precisely what Congress prohibited, not 14 anything related to the simple execution of 15 transactions. Indeed, Congress expressly allows banks, 16 under Section 16, to purchase and sell securities as 17 agents for their customers.

18 Under the Glass-Steagall Act, it seems to us 19 that, notwithstanding petitioner's repeated reliance on 20 Section 16, that the only relevant provision is Section 21 20. Section 16, by its terms, relates only to national 22 banks. Section 21, also relied upon by petition, only 23 relates to the receipt of deposits, and it is undisputed 24 that Schwab nor BankAmerica do not receive deposits, and 25 neither has the bank.

1           Therefore, it makes meaningless, the plain 2 meaning role, to argue, as petitioner does, that the 3 restrictions imposed under those provisions should be 4 borrowed and applied willy-nilly to the activities of a 5 bank holding company that has its own specific set of 6 provisions to deal with.

7           And that provision of Section 20 -- Section 8 20, by its terms, prohibits bank affiliates from 9 underwriting, distributing, issuing, publicly selling, 10 or floating blocks of securities. That is not an 11 across-the-board condemnation of all securities
12 activities. That is a condemnation of public marketing 13 activities.

14           If Congress had intended to preclude bank
15 affiliates from engaging in brokerage activities, it 16 would surely have said that brokerage activities are not 17 permissible, or at least it would have used the term 18 "purchase and sale of securities as agent," just the 19 commonly understood definition of brokerage functions.

20           Congress did none of those things. Instead,
21 it drafted the language in a way that makes it 22 unmistakably clear that it is intended to deal solely 23 with underwriting. This Court recognized as much in the 24 Agnew decision. In characterizing the meaning of the 25 identical language in Section 32 of the Act, this Court

1 repeatedly described it as involving nothing but 2 underwriting.

3 Similarly, that interpretation of Section 32, 4 as not embracing brokerage -- mere brokerage activity,
5 was adopted by the Federal Reserve Board in the 1930s
6 and has remained unchanged since that time.

7 QUESTION: Mr. Phillips, are you aware of any 8 bank, other than J. P. Morgan, which at the time of the 9 adoption of the Glass-Steagall Act, actually had a seat 10 on the exchange and kept it?

11 MR. PHILLIPS: My understanding is that there
12 were six banks at that time --

13 QUESTION: Six.

14 MR. PHILLIPS: -- that maintained seats on the 15 exchanges. The reason, of course --

16 QUESTION: Did they continue to keep their 17 seats, other than Morgan, and use them to execute orders 18 for customers?

19 MR. PHILLIPS: Unfortunately, the record
20 doesn't reflect what those banks did, because that 21 didn't seem to be a major issue in the administrative 22 process. But we do know, in the New York Times Articles
23 that discussed those investments, those banking 24 operations that went to commercial banking as opposed to 25 investment banking, that they prominently stated that

1 they were keeping their seats on the exchanges, and one
2 can only assume that they would have only made that a 3 matter of serious concern if they planned to use those 4 seats.

5 So as far as we know, some banks did undertake 6 to act in that way.

7 QUESTION: And were not challenged under 8 Section 16 by the Comptroller, or anyone else for 9 executing orders?

10 MR. PHILLIPS: As far as we know there was 11 never any challenge, and petitioner has not presented us 12 with any evidence to indicate that there has ever been 13 any challenge.

14 QUESTION: Under the Comptroller's ruling,
15 until lately, a bank couldn't do this itself, could it?

16 MR. PHILLIPS: Yes, Your Honor, that is 17 correct. Until 1957, it could only do it without 18 profit. Then after -- and then most recently now, it 19 can do it in any situation.

20 QUESTION: That ruling was rather old, wasn't 21 it?

22 MR. PHILLIPS: That ruling did derive 23 initially from the immediate aftermath of the 24 Glass-Steagall Act.

25 QUESTION: When did the Comptroller overturn

1       that decision?

2               MR. PHILLIPS: He began to erode that decision
3       in 1957, soon after the Bank Holding Company Act.

4               QUESTION: When did he specifically overturn 5       that prior ruling?

6               MR. PHILLIPS: In 1982, I believe it was. At 7       that time, he explained that it was his view that the 8       earlier interpretation was not predicated on anything in 9       the language of Section 16, but appeared by all accounts 10      to be nothing more than a very conservative reaction to 11      the problems of problem failures.

12              QUESTION: He didn't need to admit that he was 13      wrong, in the first place, it is just that either his 14      prior ruling -- either one of them, his prior ruling or 15      this one, were correct.

16              MR. PHILLIPS: True, they both can be regarded 17      -- They both unquestionably reasonable interpretations 18      of the plain meaning of the language.

19              In deciding which of the provisions to apply 20      in this case, this Court has twice rejected efforts to 21      incorporate standards from one section in Glass-Steagall
22      and apply to other activities. In Agnew, this Court 23      concluded that different qualifying phrases used in the 24      provisions mark a distinction this Court should not 25      obliterate.

1 Similarly, in ICI II, the Court held that the 2 Act's structure reveals that congressional intent to 3 treat banks separately from their affiliate and to 4 impose a less stringent standard on bank holding 5 companies. Adherence to those principles requires the 6 conclusion that this case can and should be resolved 7 completely by reference to Section 20 of the 8 Glass-Steagall Act.

9 By strongly urging the Court to limits its 10 inquiry to Section 20, we do not, however, mean to imply 11 that we shy away from scrutiny by this Court under 12 Sections 16 or 21, by their terms they simply do not 13 apply. But if, as petitioner seems all too often to 14 assume, this case involved a national bank, our 15 submission would be no different.

16 Like their affiliates, national banks are 17 prohibited from underwriting securities, but they are 18 expressly authorized, as one of their many delegated 19 powers, to purchase and sell securities on behalf of 20 their customers as agent, and not for their own 21 accounts. In other words, banks would appear to be able 22 to serve as a broker.

23 This grant of power was intended in 1933 to 24 ratify preexisting practices of banks, and as we 25 explained in some detail in our brief, it is clear that

1 banks did engage in the purchase and sale of stock, and 2 other securities, for customers prior to that time, and 3 that is all that Congress meant to ratify.

4 The division Congress made in the 5 Glass-Steagall Act was between investment banking 6 activities that carry a tremendous risk of loss if the 7 market shifts. It did not intend to illuminate the 8 rather minimal potential for liability, or was not 9 worried about the potential -- minimal potential 10 liability of a broker having to cover for a customer who 11 happens to place an order.

12 It may be, as petitioner suggested today, that 13 brokerage firms place their entire assets at their 14 disposal when they execute an order, but the record in 15 this case reflects that less than 1 percent of all of 16 the transactions executed by the Schwab brokerage firm 17 -- less than 1 percent involves situations where the 18 customer fails to satisfy his own order or his own
19 request. Accordingly, this is not a significant 20 problem, and it is certainly not a problem Congress made 21 any specific reference in anything in 1933 or 1935.

22 Congress could not foresee in 1933 the 23 discount brokerage activities would some day be 24 profitable. It seems to us quite clear from the 25 language that it adopted, allowing for agency actions on

1 the part of bank in executing -- in the purchase and 2 sale of securities that it would clearly have upheld and 3 permitted the banks to engage in the kinds of activities
4 that Schwab undertakes here.

5 It seems to us that that interpretation, as I
6 just mentioned to Justice White, is a reasonable one,
7 and that is where this Court's inquiry should stop. So 8 long as the Comptroller's newest interpretation is 9 reasonable, it is entitled to deference by this Court.

10 Petitioner conjures up the horrors of the bank
11 failures of the 1930s and hints that the Board's 12 decision here is based on arguments presented in 13 connection with the regulatory and legislative decisions
14 of the mid-1920s that led to that financial disaster.
15 But the Federal Reserve Board has not turned the clock
16 back to 1927, nor created an environment of serious bank 17 failure.

18 The Board has instead adjusted to the 19 financial events of the 1970s and the 1980s, and acting 20 faithfully to the congressional scheme created to allow 21 substantial, but not unbridled, expansion of the 22 business of banking. It has presented a thorough and 23 reasonable explanation for its approval of BankAmerica's 24 application in this case.

25 It is petitioner and the securities firms whom

1 it represents who seek to stop the financial clock from 2 moving beyond the events of the 1970s, when that 3 industry as so structured that competition was severely
4 limited, and the only role for a bank on the exchanges
5 was to serve as an intermediary between the bank's 6 customer and the broker, with the latter receiving the 7 fee, but without any risk of competition.

8 Those times are gone, and the securities
9 industry must recognize that banks, and of particular 10 significance to this case, bank holding companies and 11 their affiliates are legitimate competitors in that 12 discrete area of securities activity concerning the 13 purchase and sale of stock as agent.

14 This change is not the product of regulatory 15 fiat, but rather a reasonable application of the plain 16 meaning of the statutes Congress adopted, and empowered 17 the Board to use its expertise to enforce. It is,
18 therefore, not the Board's action that "should be 19 legislated by Congress," as petitioner puts it, but 20 rather petitioner's efforts to overturn the orderly 21 decision of the Board that should be submitted to 22 Congress for reevaluation.

23 The Administrative Law Judge, the Federal 24 Reserve Board, and the Second Circuit have all 25 unanimously and correctly held that the discount

1 brokerage activities are a legitimate part of the 2 business of banking, which Congress did not intend to 3 prohibit by Glass-Steagall. Accordingly, the judgment
4 of the Court of Appeals should be affirmed.

5 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Weidner, do you
6 have anything further?

7 REBUTTAL ORAL ARGUMENT BY JAMES B. WEIDNER, ESQ.

8 ON BEHALF OF PETITIONER

9 MR. WEIDNER: If I may, several brief points.

10 Justice O'Connor, if I could respond briefly
11 to the question of the Morgan Bank and Brown Brothers 12 Harriman.

13 So far as we know, there are -- there were two 14 banks that were on the exchange, and two kept their 15 seats, but I don't think we can draw from that an 16 inference that it was proper.

17 First of all, remember the Comptroller
18 specifically prohibited them from engaging in public 19 securities brokerage, so it is unlikely that they did.
20 Second, there is no evidence that they did. Third, 21 there is a perfectly good economic reason why they would 22 have retained their seats, even though they couldn't be 23 public securities brokers, simply this, there are a lot
24 of floor traders, or there were a lot of floor traders 25 who had an exchange seat simply because when there were

1 fixed commissions, if they traded on the floor
2 themselves, they didn't have to pay any commission.

3 If, as an exchange member, they used the 4 privilege of using a floor broker there, you only have 5 pay 10 percent of the commission. So that, for example, 6 for trust accounts and the like, it would make eminently 7 good sense for Brown Brothers to have someone stay on 8 the exchange when they weren't engaged in the public 9 brokering of securities.

10 Let me turn then briefly to the Comptroller's 11 recent interpretation or reinterpretation. I suggest 12 that any indication that the Comptroller thought, in 13 1934 and 1935, he was convincing Congress to allow banks 14 to become public stock brokers, just is simply 15 illogical.

16 If it is true that it was important that 17 banks, like all other corporations, couldn't be exchange
18 members, only partnerships could be to avoid limited 19 liability, then why was the Comptroller trying to 20 convince Congress to allow banks to become public stock 21 brokers when they couldn't do it?

22 Well, maybe it was because he wanted them to 23 trade in the over-the-counter market where they don't 24 have to be exchange members. If that was his motive, 25 then why did he issue a regulation immediately after the

1 statute was amended specifically prohibiting them from 2 being public stock brokers. It just doesn't make any 3 sense.

4 Moreover, something that I didn't mention, but 5 I think bears mention, is in 1934 Congress was 6 considering the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934 to 7 govern public stock brckers. They excepted banks from 8 the definition of broker in the '34. Why would they do
9 that if they thought banks could be public 10 stockbrokers?

11 QUESTION: What year did you mention?

12 MR. WEIDNER: 1934, Mr. Chief Justice.

13 QUESTION: Haven't a lot of financial 14 arrangements changed?

15 MR. WEIDNER: Since then?

16 QUESTION: Since then, in the '40.

17 MR. WEIDNER: They have indeed. Although in 18 this area, the Securities and Exchange Commission has 19 restated its views only within the last six months that 20 in its view, and in our view, the legislative history
21 supports it, as they believe it has, banks were excluded 22 from the brokerage definition in the '34 Act because 23 Congress understood that they could not engage in public 24 stock brokerage because of the Glass-Steagall Act.

25 QUESTION: What is the SEC's position now on 1 this?

2 MR. WEIDNER: That they cannot.

3 QUESTION: On this problem?

4 MR. WEIDNER: Excuse me. That because they 5 have no jurisdiction over the banking laws, they can't 6 very handily change the banking laws. But they have 7 proposed a rule that would require banks that publicly 8 solicit a brokerage business to register as brokers, 9 because in their view the exception in the statute was 10 never meant to permit banks to be the only brokers that 11 were unregulated by the Securities and Exchange
12 Commission.

13 QUESTION: So you think that it was just a 14 little turf gathering that they supported this 15 application before --

16 MR. WEIDNER: Justice White, that is one of 17 the things I wanted to mention.

18 I must say that to say the SEC supported this 19 application is taking a fairly wide literary liberty.

20 QUESTION: What will happen is that they will 21 have many more applications for licenses.

22 MR. WEIDNER: It is certainly true that they 23 did not oppose it, but they -- their submission was in 24 about as hedged language as it could be. It said 25 something to the effect, and this is in the Joint

1 Appendix on appeal in the Second Circuit, while the 2 spirit, if not the letter of Section 20 would appear to 3 prohibit the banks becoming brokers, nevertheless that 4 is something over which the Federal Reserve Board has 5 jurisdiction.

6 QUESTION: Did they there say that if this 7 rule is approved, the banks would have to be licensed?

8 MR. WEIDNER: No, Justice White, they didn't,
9 but I think --

10 QUESTION: But they now assert it?

11 MR. WEIDNER: They do.

12 I think it is helpful to recall that when this 13 proceeding started at the beginning of 1982 there was no 14 bank in the public securities brokerage business. By 15 the end of 1982, every banking authority or financial 16 institutions authority in the country authorized their 17 institutions to go in the business.

18 Things have changed enormously in the last two 19 years. The SEC is trying to do what it can, but it
20 seems to me that this underscores why a policy decision
21 of this sort should not be done by piecemeal
22 administration.

23 What has happened is, you have the Federal 24 Reserve Board act, now the SEC has got to react to 25 propose regulations, and then we have the Comptroller

reacting to the SEC's reaction. It is a game of administrative billiards, where the next "cares" shot is going to come from. I'm quite serious.

This is a policy decision of enormous significance, and what we have seen happen is exactly what is going to happen as administrators preempt what should be a congressional and was a congressional judgment, and try to change the congressional intent.

With respectfully request that the decision below be reversed.

CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen, the case is submitted.

(Whereupon, at 1:49 p.m., the case in the above-entitled matter was submitted.)
