1           There is no evidence of any personal contact 2 with any readers, no evidence of any personal advice or 3 handling of clients' funds. There's no allegation of 4 trading or ownership of securities. There's no 5 allegation that any of the advice contained in the 6 publications is fraudulent or misleading or untruthful.

7           The only ground on which Petitioners are to be 8 enjoined is that they are not registered under the Act.
9 At one point --

10           QUESTION: Mr. Schoeman, you did not petition 11 on the basis of an argument raised below, which was that 12 Mr. Lowe was exempt from the provisions of the Act; is 13 that correct?

14           MR. SCHOEMAN: That's correct. We believe 15 that, unfortunately, Capital Gains Research Bureau, in I 16 think it's 375 U.S., resolved the question of whether an 17 impersonal publisher is subject to the Act, and we felt 18 that that was controlling.

19           QUESTION: I guess maybe that question might 20 be open in this Court?

21           MR. SCHOEMAN: Well, it's --

22           QUESTION: I mean, if we decided the exemption 23 question and determined that the Act didn't cover this 24 type of publication or that it was exempt, then we 25 wouldn't reach the constitutional issue, is that

1 correct?

2 MR. SCHOEMAN: That is correct.

3 QUESTION: Do we have an obligation, then, to 4 consider that in an effort to avoid the constitutional 5 issue?

6 MR. SCHOEMAN: Yes, I think the Court should 7 do everything it can to avoid reaching the 8 constitutional question.

9 QUESTION: And yet you didn't raise it. Are 10 you satisfied that there is no exemption under the Act?

11 MR. SCHOEMAN: I don't think that the 12 Petitioners necessarily feel that they can only exercise 13 their rights if they publish on a regular basis.
14 Petitioners have a right to publish a book, for example, 15 containing the same information, and yet that doesn't 16 come within the terms of the exception.

17 I would think the real problem with Capital 18 Gains Research Bureau I think is that it misread the 19 legislative history. I think when you read the 20 legislative history, particularly the excerpt from the 21 House report that we quote on page 7 of our brief, it is 22 clear, to me at least, that what Congress was trying to 23 regulate was the personalized services of investment 24 advisers, because that's what they said.

25 And it's also true that in the SEC study on

1       which the Act is based there really was no consideration 2       given to publications that distribute to you personally 3       by mail.

4               QUESTION: Are we dealing here with regular 5       publications, though?

6               MR. SCHOEMAN: Well, that's an unclear
7       question, because Congress didn't really define what 8       "regular" means.

9               QUESTION: Well, but I'm talking about the 10       publications of Mr. Lowe.

11              MR. SCHOEMAN: Well, Mr. Lowe's publications 12       are scheduled on a regular basis, but they haven't been 13       published on a regular basis.

14              QUESTION: Like law reviews.

15              (Laughter.)

16              MR. SCHOEMAN: Yes, sir.

17              I would -- I think what Capital Gains failed 18       to do is to interpret the statute in the light of the 19       First Amendment problems that that case was creating, 20       because it wasn't argued there, apparently.

21              QUESTION: But if you're bound by that case, 22       you're client is covered?

23              MR. SCHOEMAN: That's right.

24              QUESTION: What if he had gone out door to 25       door, office to office, in the typical way dealers would

1 engage in their activity of not only advising, but 2 selling securities, after all of his licenses had been 3 revoked? Could a court enjoin that activity?

4 MR. SCHOEMAN: If he went door to door selling 5 his publication?

6 QUESTION: Well, usually they did it by 7 telephone, but that he continued doing just what he had 8 done as a dealer after his license had been revoked.
9 Now, that includes a great deal of verbal activity, 10 doesn't it?

11 MR. SCHOEMAN: Yes. If all he was doing was 12 selling the publication --

13 QUESTION: No, not the publication. I'm 14 talking about securities.

15 MR. SCHOEMAN: Ah, if he were selling
16 securities.

17 QUESTION: I'm moving away. He's acting as a 18 dealer, selling securities, advising people and selling 19 securities, calling them on the phone, having 20 conferences with them, just as any dealer does. And 21 then his license is revoked and he continues, and the 22 court enjoins him.

23 Can the court enjoin his First Amendment 24 right, as you put it, to speak to these customers and 25 potential customers?

1 MR. SCHOEMAN: I think that if his talking to 2 the customers and giving them literature is still part 3 of his effort to engage in the selling and buying of 4 securities, then it's very much in the nature of 5 promotional advertising, I think, in which he is 6 promoting securities and his objective is to get people 7 to make purchases through him.

8 I think that it then comes within the analysis 9 of Folger against Youngs Drug Products, for example, in 10 which some of the material was informational and yet the 11 objective of the material was to get people to use the 12 product that was involved there.

13 QUESTION: Well, what if your client in this 14 case had given personal advice to a group of potential 15 purchasers on a one to one basis, but it was not 16 published, but it was nonetheless something that he 17 intended to get any profit out of? He would not get any 18 commissions for any stock that was sold.

19 MR. SCHOEMAN: Well, the Act itself requires 20 that the activity be done for compensation.

21 QUESTION: Well, but I mean he would bill 22 them, you know, a certain amount an hour and say, given 23 your portfolio, I think you ought to pick up a few 24 shares.

25 MR. SCHOEMAN: I think if an individual gives

1 a speech at a public meeting at which he is giving his 2 own opinions, he is protected by the First Amendment.
3 The distinction would be whether he solicited or 4 obtained specific questions from people about their 5 personal situations, because at that point he would then 6 start rendering personalized advice to people.

7 QUESTION: But of course that's nonetheless
8 speaking.

9 MR. SCHOEMAN: Yes, it is. And it's just a 10 distinction it seems to me that's been drawn. Lawyers 11 are regulated, even though many of them just give advice
12 and perform no services in court, for example. And I 13 think the basis of the distinction is that the lawyer is 14 addressing only the specific interests of his client.
15 He's talking just about his client's needs and he has 16 entered into a dialogue with his client.

17 A publisher doesn't know what his client's 18 needs are. He doesn't know who his readers are, except 19 possibly by name where there's a subscription list.
20 He's expressing his own views, and it's up to the 21 readers and the public at large to determine whether 22 that piece of advice fits their situation or does not.

23 QUESTION: I can see the factual difference, 24 but why does that make a difference when you're 25 interpreting the First Amendment?

1 MR. SCHOEMAN: Because the First Amendment I
2 think is certainly concerned with public discussion. It 3 also reaches private speech when that private speech is 4 for compensation. We have a tradition in this country 5 of regulation of those kinds of communications as 6 professions, and I suppose that there could be all 7 manner of professions.

8 But there has to be a line drawn between 9 personalized communication to individual persons based 10 on their needs and public discussion. Otherwise you 11 would have what the Government is arguing for in this 12 case, that all Congress needs to do is professionalize a 13 subject matter and they can then license not only the 14 personal relationship, but they can license public
15 discussion.

16 And that's what this Act has done. It's an 17 attempt by Congress to select a particular subject 18 matter in which Congress has an interest and to say that 19 only certain people are to be permitted to discuss that 20 subject matter.

21 QUESTION: Would you agree that every 22 disbarment or suspension of a lawyer from practice has 23 some collision with the First Amendment propositions 24 that you're advancing?

25 MR. SCHOEMAN: It doesn't have any collision

1 with the lawyer's or the disbarred lawyer's right to 2 publish.

3 QUESTION: Well, to speak.

4 MR. SCHOEMAN: The thing that the lawyer --
5 the lawyer is not prevented, I think, from advising 6 people if he doesn't hold himself out to be a lawyer or 7 if he doesn't accept compensation. He can still speak, 8 but there is a restriction on the lawyer's right --

9 QUESTION: I should have made my hypothetical, 10 my question, a little more clearly. Doesn't the 11 disbarment interfere with the lawyer's right to speak to 12 clients for compensation and fees?

13 MR. SCHOEMAN: Yes, it does. But it does 14 not --

15 QUESTION: And how do you distinguish that 16 from this situation?

17 MR. SCHOEMAN: Because it does not interfere 18 with that lawyer's or ex-lawyer's right to publish a law 19 review article on how to comply with the takeover 20 statute. I'm free to publish a law review article in 21 California telling people how to do various things under 22 the law, although I'm not a lawyer in California. I 23 can't practice there, but I can publish there; and 24 that's the distinction.

25 QUESTION: Do you think you would be free in

1 California to publish a newsletter to subscribers
2 interpreting recent decisions say of the Supreme Court
3 of California, or trends in California law, and collect 4 from them on an individual basis for it?

5 MR. SCHOEMAN: Absolutely.

6 QUESTION: Well then, a disbarred lawyer in 7 California could do the same thing?

8 MR. SCHOEMAN: Yes, sir. What he can't do is 9 advise people based on their specific situations. He 10 cannot evaluate whether Mr. X should have a will or 11 shouldn't have a will, or should have an inter vivos 12 trust or shouldn't.

13 But he can, like Mr. Dacey in New York County
14 Lawyers against Dacey, publish a book which says people 15 should have inter vivos trusts in order to avoid 16 probate.

17 This question has come up. Every time it's 18 come up in state supreme courts it's been decided on the 19 basis of the distinction that I'm suggesting here.
20 Personalized communication based on the individual 21 situation of a client is subject to regulation, but 22 publication to the public in general not based on the 23 particular situation of readers --

24 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Schoeman, can a 25 non-lawyer publish how-to-do-it forms telling people how

1 to tailor their own situation to, for instance, get 2 their own divorce or probate their own will?

3 MR. SCHOEMAN: Certainly.

4 QUESTION: And furnish the forms and describe
5 how you can do that for yourself?

6 MR. SCHOEMAN: Yes.

7 QUESTION: Even though you're not licensed?

8 MR. SCHOEMAN: Yes.

9 QUESTION: And the same with a medical 10 practice?

11 MR. SCHOEMAN: Yes.

12 QUESTION: As a non-licensed physician, you 13 can publish directions to people as to how to treat 14 their illness?

15 MR. SCHOEMAN: That's right, because the 16 legislature can't say that certain subjects are fit for 17 public discussion and certain subjects are not. Whether 18 I rely on Mr. Lowe's newsletter or someone else's 19 newsletter or I rely on my broker or who I rely on, 20 that's up to me. Congress cannot cut off public
21 discussion.

22 It can, based on a long tradition of 23 regulating of professions, limit and control to some 24 extent the private rendering of advice to individuals 25 based on their individual circumstances.

1 QUESTION: Do you think that Congress -- 2 assuming that we agreed with your basic proposition that 3 the First Amendment protects the circulation of the 4 newsletter, in this circumstance he's been twice 5 convicted of felonies, hasn't he?

6 MR. SCHOEMAN: Four times.

7 QUESTION: Four times. And they are felonies 8 related somehow to the securities business?

9 MR. SCHOEMAN: Three of them involve worthless
10 checks, one was tampering with physical evidence.

11 QUESTION: Well, wasn't the worthless checks 12 conviction related to some -- he got $10,000 from some 13 client to invest and --

14 MR. SCHOEMAN: That was a misdemeanor.

15 QUESTION: Oh, was that it? I see.

16 My question is this: Could the Commission
17 have a regulation that says that, while we can't stop 18 you from circulating this newsletter, we require that 19 you include in the newsletter a statement that you've 20 been convicted of these felonies?

21 MR. SCHOEMAN: I don't think they can do 22 that.

23 QUESTION: Why not?

24 MR. SCHOEMAN: I think the chilling effect of 25 that on scaring away readers and on scaring away Mr.

1       Lowe from publishing would be too severe. The 2       Government charged that --

3               QUESTION: Have you any precedent to suggest 4       that?

5               MR. SCHOEMAN: No, I do not.

6               QUESTION: Well, you mean you don't have a 7       precedent in the securities field?

8               MR. SCHOEMAN: That's correct, that's 9       correct.

10              QUESTION: Well, a disbarred lawyer is chilled 11      from talking to clients for pay, isn't he?

12              MR. SCHOEMAN: He is prohibited. That's an 13      outright prohibition. I wouldn't call that chilling.
14      He's prohibited from doing it.

15              QUESTION: Well, it chills him from trying it 16      again.

17              MR. SCHOEMAN: Yes, sir.

18              (Laughter.)

19              QUESTION: Well, how far does your position 20      go? Taking Justice Brennan's line, suppose -- does the 21      First Amendment protect false reports in these 22      investment newsletters?

23              MR. SCHOEMAN: It protects untrue reports, 24      yes.

25              QUESTION: To the same extent as it protects

1 other untrue --

2 MR. SCHOEMAN: That's correct.

3 QUESTION: So that just because this 4 newsletter has several times contained or regularly 5 contains false reports would be no basis for an 6 injunction?

7 MR. SCHOEMAN: That's correct. In fact, there
8 was no finding or even allegation that it ever contained 9 any false information.

10 QUESTION: Well, I know, but that's not my 11 question.

12 MR. SCHOEMAN: But that certainly is what the 13 Court held in Near against Minnesota, that here was 14 something that was regularly published and found to have 15 regularly contained defamatory material, but 16 nevertheless the publication of that newspaper could not 17 be enjoined in the future.

18 The fact that someone commits a wrong in the 19 past or several wrongs doesn't tell you what it is he's 20 going to publish tomorrow.

21 QUESTION: May I ask a question that's 22 prompted by Justice Brennan's question. Am I correct 23 that the only administrative order was the one that 24 cancelled his registration? There's no administrative 25 order directing him not to publish these papers? It's

1 the result of separate litigation?

2 MR. SCHOEMAN: Yes, but may I qualify. The 3 SEC's order revoked the registration of Lowe Management
4 Corporation, which is one of the Petitioners, and it 5 ordered that Mr. Lowe not be associated with any 6 investment adviser in the future.

7 QUESTION: And who is the investment adviser
8 that he is being associated with now?

9 MR. SCHOEMAN: Well, it's the other
10 Petitioners.

11 QUESTION: The corporate entities?

12 MR. SCHOEMAN: Yes.

13 QUESTION: And so presumably, even if there 14 had been no criminal violations of any kind, they could 15 be enjoined from publishing these papers because they 16 are acting as investment advisers and they're not 17 registered, is that right?

18 MR. SCHOEMAN: As the statute apparently 19 reads, for two of the corporate Petitioners they have 20 never had any administrative action taken against them.
21 They simply --

22 QUESTION: Had they ever qualified as 23 investment advisers?

24 MR. SCHOEMAN: No, they never attempted to.

25 QUESTION: Well then, I'm not quite clear on

1 the relevance of the criminal proceeding. Is the case 2 any different than if just some stranger who had never 3 been an investment adviser started to publish these 4 papers?

5 MR. SCHOEMAN: The relevance of the criminal
6 proceeding is to demonstrate to the Court how we fit 7 directly under the disqualifications of the statute.

8 QUESTION: But the net effect of all that is 9 that they justify the revocation of your registration.
10 And why is that legally any different than if you had 11 never even applied for registration?

12 MR. SCHOEMAN: Legally it is not, since we 13 didn't have to apply for registration.

14 QUESTION: If that's true, then is the 15 criminal proceeding even relevant? I'm a little 16 puzzled.

17 MR. SCHOEMAN: the criminal proceeding is 18 relevant just to show that we fit within the statute, 19 that's all, in terms of the disqualifications.

20 QUESTION: So you fit within it because you're 21 not registered. Well, it might be that someone who just 22 starts a newsletter without registering, it may be that 23 he might be treated different constitutionally than 24 someone who's been convicted of a crime after 25 registration.

1 MR. SCHOEMAN: I don't --

2 QUESTION: I would think the Government's 3 argument would equally fit the person who starts a 4 newsletter without registration and he has no criminal 5 record.

6 MR. SCHOEMAN: That is correct. That is 7 correct, because this Act applies to all publishers 8 except for those who have been exempted under the 9 statute. And apparently there are some 500 of them who 10 are registered.

11 QUESTION: Who are registered.

12 MR. SCHOEMAN: I'm sorry, Mr. Justice, I
13 didn't hear you.

14 QUESTION: Or who are registered.

15 MR. SCHOEMAN: Yes.

16 It seems to us that this statute is an amalgam
17 of the worst features that the Court has identified over 18 the years in connection with First Amendment licensing.
19 It's based on status, it's got a great degree of 20 discretion. It's discriminatory and discriminating 21 among different kinds of publications. It's a 22 content-based regulation, singling out a particular 23 subject.

24 QUESTION: What would you say if the 25 newsletter touted a bunch of stocks and it was shown

1 that it provoked buying and then the publisher made a
2 profit off of it, off of the stock? He bought stocks 3 and then sold them.

4 MR. SCHOEMAN: Well, I think in that case he 5 could be subject to regulation, because --

6 QUESTION: But not for publication?

7 MR. SCHOEMAN: Not for publication.

8 QUESTION: But for manipulation.

9 MR. SCHOEMAN: Because it's the manipulation,
10 because of his other activity. The speech in that 11 situation I think would be deemed a subordinate part of 12 his other activities.

13 QUESTION: Just like a broker-dealer.

14 MR. SCHOEMAN: That's correct.

15 But that's certainly not the case here.
16 There's no indication of any such conduct.

17 It seems to me the Commission's argument
18 basically puts no limit on Congressional power, and all 19 that it comes down to is that Congress thought that 20 there was a good reason for licensing people who talk 21 about this subject.

22 I have no problem with them licensing people 23 who talk for compensation on a personalized basis on 24 this subject. But when they then try to extend that 25 concept to public discussion in a newsletter distributed

1 impersonally, that's when they violate the prohibition 2 on abridgment of the freedom of the press and freedom of 3 speech.

4 QUESTION: Do you think it makes any 5 difference whether they sell that publication or give it 6 away?

7 MR. SCHOEMAN: I don't think it makes any 8 difference, because the Court has on numerous 9 indications indicated that the sale of a publication or 10 the fact that a publication is distributed for profit 11 doesn't take away the First Amendment rights of the 12 publisher. And that's certainly throughout the United 13 States. Almost everything that's published you have to 14 pay for.

15 I do want to touch for a moment on this 16 question of whether we're involved in commercial 17 speech. I say we are not involved in commercial speech, 18 that commercial speech essentially means advertising, 19 and that the distinguishing characteristic of commercial 20 speech is speech which is associated with the speaker's 21 effort to sell his own product or services, and we do 22 not fall at all within that category.

23 I ask the Court to reverse the decision of the 24 court below. I'd like to reserve the balance of my 25 time.

1 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Very well.

2 Mr. Solicitor General.

3 ORAL ARGUMENT OF REX E. LEE, ESQ.,

4 ON BEHALF OF RESPONDENT

5 MR. LEE: Mr. Chief Justice and may it please 6 the Court:

7 The key to decision in this case is the 8 perspective from which it is approached. The 9 Petitioners would view it as a single dimensional case
10 involving exclusively First Amendment issues. It's a 11 perspective that would bring into play our historical 12 aversion to prior restraints and a perspective which 13 would draw no distinction between, on the one hand, the 14 right of any person to publish to the world at large 15 and, on the other hand, the right of a fiduciary to 16 publish for the benefit of the very group to whom he or 17 she owes the fiduciary obligation.

18 But it is a quite different case if it's 19 considered for what it really is, and that is a 20 professional discipline case, because prior restraints 21 of the clearest kind have been upheld by this Court in 22 cases like Barsky versus the Board of Regents and 23 Ohralik versus the Ohio State Bar Association in order 24 to assure that unworthy persons not serve in certain 25 fiduciary capacities.

1           In this case the person affected is a 2 five-time convicted criminal whose offenses have 3 included stealing a client's funds and then falsifying 4 the evidence in an attempt to convince the court that he 5 had made restitution when in fact he had not, and that 6 particular offense was a felony.

7           QUESTION: Mr. Solicitor General, this is the 8 question I asked your adversary: Would it not be the 9 same case if he had never committed a crime and had 10 never applied for registration, just published precisely 11 what he's published here?

12          MR. LEE: From our standpoint it would,
13 because he's unregistered and the statute requires
14 registration.

15          QUESTION: So really the criminal history is 16 totally irrelevant?

17          MR. LEE: Well, except that -- except in this 18 sense, Justice Stevens. Absent the criminal conduct, 19 registration as a practical matter is virtually 20 automatic following the 45-day period. You can look at 21 the documents that surround the application and in the 22 event there is no problem then registration becomes 23 automatic.

24          QUESTION: But you could have an eccentric 25 publisher who just doesn't believe in licensing the 1 press.

2 MR. LEE: And never apply.

3 QUESTION: And never apply.

4 MR. LEE: And never apply.

5 QUESTION: That would be the same case?

6 MR. LEE: That is correct, that is correct.

7 The starting point for analysis, I submit, is 8 that the Petitioners have effectively conceded that this 9 is a professional discipline case, because the remedy 10 that --

11 QUESTION: Mr. Solicitor General, I take it 12 that your case depends on that, doesn't it?

13 MR. LEE: Excuse me? Being viewed as a 14 professional discipline case?

15 QUESTION: Yes.

16 MR. LEE: Yes, it does, Justice Blackmun.

17 QUESTION: And if you cannot achieve that your 18 case is down the drain.

19 MR. LEE: Yes. But in effect, Justice
20 Blackmun, we're over that hurdle, because both sides are 21 treating it as a professional discipline case, the 22 remedy for which Mr. Schoeman is contending is one that 23 involves an oral -- excuse me -- a prior restraint of 24 the clearest kind, because he agrees that because of the 25 crimes committed by Mr. Lowe he can be enjoined from 1 giving in person investment advice.

2 So that the only real question in this
3 case --

4 QUESTION: Either in writing or orally?

5 MR. LEE: That is correct. So that the only 6 real question is one of line-drawing. Now, the 7 Petitioners for their part contend that the line to be 8 drawn between those whose speech is to be previously 9 restrained and those whose speech is not to be 10 previously restrained is a line between advice delivered 11 on an individualized basis for compensation and 12 published advice for compensation.

13 The line marked out by Congress is different.
14 Congress extended the registration requirement to all 15 investment advisers, including those who publish, but it 16 excluded publishers of bona fide newspapers, magazines, 17 or other financial or business publications of general
18 and regular circulation.

19 And our case comes down to this: Since prior 20 restraints are a constituent element of everybody's test 21 and since therefore the only question is where the line 22 is to be drawn, we submit that Congress, for whom the 23 fashioning of dividing lines lies at the very core of 24 its constitutional stewardship, was entitled to mark out 25 its own boundary and was not constitutionally required

1 to pick the one preferred by Petitioners.

2 And that proposition is strengthened when we 3 examine the line that Congress -- the decision that 4 Congress made against the background of the problem that 5 it faced. As this Court stated in SEC versus Capital 6 Gains, the Investment Advisers Act of 1940 was the last 7 in a series of acts designed to eliminate certain abuses 8 in the securities industry which were found to have 9 contributed to the stock market crash of 1929 and the 10 Depression of the 1930's. That statement was made in 11 the context of a case involving the precise form of 12 investment advice that is involved here, namely an 13 investment advisory letter.

14 The series of six statutes extending from 1933
15 to 1940 dealt with many phases of the securities
16 industry, and concern over the practices of investment
17 advisers surfaced early in the process. In 1934 a 18 Senate report revealed widespread abuses by publishers
19 of financial publications and, contrary to Petitioners' 20 assertion, these included practices of publishers of 21 investment advisory services, and those are set forth in 22 footnotes 11 and 13 of our brief and in footnote 15 of 23 this Court's Capital Gains opinion.

24 But even so, Congress did not act
25 immediately. The 1940 Act was passed only after another

1 report, undertaken pursuant to the Public Utility 2 Holding Company Act of 1935, confirmed the presence of 3 the problem in the investment advisory profession.

4 Plainly, we ought not criticize Congress for 5 proceeding slowly and carefully one step at a time. But 6 ultimately, it concluded that national regulation of 7 investment advisory publishers was necessary because of 8 two types of injury that it found to have been caused by 9 unscrupulous publishers in the absence of regulation.
10 The first was harm to investors generally trading in the 11 market; and the second was direct harm to the individual 12 subscribers caused by the investment advice that they 13 received.

14 Even so, the actual regulatory scheme selected 15 by Congress was a fairly modest one. At the core of 16 what it did was its determination that investment 17 advisers are fiduciaries, and this also lies at the core 18 of our case; that they occupy, as this Court stated in 19 Capital Gains, "a relationship of trust and confidence 20 with their clients." And necessarily, given the 21 language of the Investment Advisers Act, "their clients" 22 means those who subscribe to published investment 23 advisory letters.

24 Congress did not impose either financial or 25 educational qualifications on investment advisers, as it

1 had, for example, in the case of broker-dealers.
2 Rather, it required only that they file, that they 3 register, and it made the continuing entitlement to 4 registration conditioned on the applicant not having 5 engaged in certain specified misconduct relevant to that 6 special fiduciary relationship.

7 In short, the central thrust of the statute
8 was to maintain the integrity of the fiduciary channel, 9 the channel of communication between the adviser and 10 those who had specifically sought out and paid for his 11 advice, by preventing criminals and other wrongdoers 12 from having access to those channels.

13 QUESTION: I suppose that's no different 14 generally than the decision of any state to regulate the 15 lawyers practicing in it. Now, consistent with your 16 view, I suppose a state could prohibit a disbarred 17 lawyer or a non-lawyer, if the criminal history is 18 irrelevant, from writing a newsletter for subscribers
19 about recent developments in California law.

20 MR. LEE: I would draw the line at this point, 21 Justice Rehnquist. My general principle, the governing 22 principle, is that disbarred persons or otherwise 23 unqualified persons may not have access to the special 24 fiduciary channels.

25 Now let's take the disbarred lawyer, and I'll

1 refer to your example, your present example, and also 2 the one that you posed to Mr. Schoeman. Here I think is 3 the case in which the state can regulate. During the 4 time that I was in practice in Arizona, I represented a 5 number of trade association clients and also other 6 groupings of clients. Because of those representations, 7 from time to time when there would be general 8 developments, either opinions of this Court, as for 9 example in the agricultural labor context, I would send 10 out letters to all of my clients telling them of general 11 developments in the law.

12 Now, the reason that I did that was because of 13 a previously established fiduciary relationship between 14 me and them. There is little doubt in my mind that the 15 day that I was disbarred from practice is the day that I 16 could no longer do that because of this previously 17 established fiduciary relationship.

18 Now, the harder case is the one that you posed 19 to Mr. Schoeman, where I simply pick people out of the 20 phone book without this previously established fiduciary 21 channel.

22 QUESTION: Well, then under your analysis
23 would it be different in this case if Mr. Lowe had had 24 no previous financial dealings with the particular 25 people who subscribed to his newsletter? He just sets

1 up shop and says: I know a lot about stocks, I'm 2 publishing a newsletter, you can have it for 25 bucks a 3 week.

4 MR. LEE: It would not, and here is the 5 reason. The analogy between lawyers and investment 6 advisers carries you to a certain point, but does not 7 solve all the problems. The crucial, ultimate inquiry 8 is, does a fiduciary relationship exist or not?

9 QUESTION: Well, it seems to me your answer 10 with respect to lawyers is quite different from your 11 answer with respect to securities.

12 MR. LEE: No, it is not, and here is the 13 reason. The fiduciary relationship exists with respect 14 to investment advisers because of Congress' express 15 determination, made in the context of a publication that 16 went out, of an investment advisory letter that went out 17 to thousands of people, that there was a fiduciary 18 relationship between the publisher of an investment 19 advisory letter and those who sought out and paid for 20 that particular advice.

21 QUESTION: But a state legislature could make 22 precisely that determination with respect to a disbarred 23 lawyer or an unlicensed lawyer who simply solicited
24 people for a newsletter, although he never advised them
25 in any legal sense. And that would make that the same

1 case, unless there's a difference between securities
2 brokers and lawyers.

3 MR. LEE: There is one difference between 4 securities brokers and lawyers in my view. The state, 5 if it made such a determination, I think it would lie 6 within the authority of a state legislature to determine 7 that there is a sufficient fiduciary relationship 8 between a disbarred lawyer who is giving legal advice of 9 the kind that you talk about and these general types.
10 This is a situation in between, of course, where he 11 simply publishes a book or is a syndicated columnist.

12 But where he publishes to subscribers, I think 13 that that would lie within the prerogative of the 14 state. But there is also -- this case is also 15 distinguishable in this sense, and this relates to the 16 difference between the way that lawyers do their work 17 and the way that investment advisers do their work. In 18 the case of investment advisers, they are capable of 19 prescribing, if you will, or giving their advice on 20 which people will rely all at once and doing so with a 21 greater effect.

22 That is, typically for the lawyer the advice 23 is one on one.

24 QUESTION: Mr. Solicitor General, along that 25 line, could the legislature of a state pass a law that

1 no disbarred lawyer can publish a paper?

2 MR. LEE: Absolutely not, Justice Marshall.

3 QUESTION: You're getting awful close.

4 MR. LEE: The difference is this --

5 QUESTION: Couldn't a lawyer publish an 6 article, a column in the newspaper?

7 MR. LEE: Clearly he could, clearly he could.

8 QUESTION: Could he give legal advice in that 9 column?

10 MR. LEE: I think that he could. The 11 difference is this: The persons who purchase that 12 newspaper are purchasing a collection, are purchasing it 13 for a collection of reasons. In that newspaper is 14 advice on food, on travel, on who should be number one 15 in the football polls, and also perhaps is an article by 16 a lawyer.

17 QUESTION: Well, suppose it's only legal 18 news.

19 MR. LEE: If it is only legal news, that 20 becomes a much harder case.

21 QUESTION: You mean that the legislature could 22 pass a law saying that a disbarred lawyer may not 23 participate in any transmission of legal advice by 24 newspaper?

25 MR. LEE: That statute I think would be

1 unconstitutional. The hardest, the hardest is the other 2 hypothetical that you just asked, where the legislature
3 -- and this gets very close to Justice Rehnquist's 4 hypothetical -- where the legislature passes a law 5 saying that it is a violation of what we perceive to be 6 a fiduciary relationship between disbarred lawyers and 7 anyone within the state with regard to the --

8 QUESTION: Well, you can't have a fiduciary 9 relationship between a disbarred lawyer and the general 10 public, no way.

11 MR. LEE: Well, regardless of whether you call 12 it a fiduciary relationship, position, or a relationship 13 of special trust and confidence, I think the hardest 14 case is whether the legislature could say that a 15 disbarred lawyer may not publish a -- may not publish a 16 newsletter that deals exclusively with legal advice, 17 which will be subscribed to expressly for the purpose of 18 obtaining legal advice.

19 That is a harder case than is the case where 20 he just publishes one column which is a part of a column 21 in a newspaper. And it is a much harder case than is 22 this case, and the reason is that Congress, as a result 23 of what can only fairly be described as the greatest 24 financial calamity that our nation has ever undergone, 25 concluded that a contributing cause to that was the

1 practices of unscrupulous persons acting as investment 2 advisers.

3 QUESTION: Well, General Lee, if the purpose
4 that Congress has in mind is to protect the public from 5 unscrupulous advisers in the financial field, why isn't 6 that interest fully served by simply requiring full 7 disclosure of the background of this publisher?

8 MR. LEE: For the same reason, Justice
9 O'Connor, that the public interest is not fully served
10 by requiring that I as a disbarred lawyer, before I 11 exercise speech in the way that I'm exercising it right 12 now, in representing a client, in doing legal work, 13 disclose to that client and to the public at large that 14 I'm a crook.

15 QUESTION: Well, no, in the context of the 16 publication of investment advice newsletters, not the 17 person to person selling of securities.

18 MR. LEE: Well --

19 QUESTION: As applied to the publications we 20 have here, which are, after all, apparently available 21 for the purchase of anyone who wants to subscribe, 22 whether they were formerly clients or not.

23 MR. LEE: Well, but the point is that they 24 become clients when they do subscribe. They are not 25 clients simply when they purchase it as a part of a

1 newspaper. They are asking Mr. Lowe for his specific 2 advice as to how they should invest their money. And 3 the point, the crucial point to decision in this case, 4 is that that is the fiduciary relationship that Congress 5 identified.

6 Now, to come more directly to your question, 7 that's always a question of how far you need to go, is 8 disclosure sufficient or is a more effective remedy 9 needed under the circumstances.

10 QUESTION: Well, isn't that the test we've 11 employed for commercial speech, which you argue this 12 is? Don't we look at that very thing?

13 MR. LEE: Certainly not in the professional 14 discipline context. Take the Capital Gains Research 15 case itself. If the Petitioners were correct, then the 16 result in the Capital Gains case would have had to have 17 been different, and the reason is as follows.

18 The position for which the Petitioners contend 19 is summarized in their reply brief: "The power to 20 license professionals" --

21 QUESTION: What page, please?

22 MR. LEE: Excuse me?

23 QUESTION: Page 2. I'm sorry.

24 "The power to license professionals extends 25 only to persons who render personal service or advice

1 and cannot under the First Amendment include persons who 2 merely publish."

3 Now, if that statement is correct that under 4 the First Amendment Government is powerless to regulate 5 those who merely publish, as opposed to those who give 6 in person advice, then Government would have been 7 powerless to do exactly what it did in the Capital Gains 8 case, namely to require the disclosures that were 9 required in that case.

10 And the reason is that, while there is the 11 difference that in this instance what the Government has 12 done is prohibit publication and in Capital Gains it
13 required publication, this Court has made it very clear 14 in cases like the West Virginia flag salute case and the 15 New Hampshire license plate case -- this is a direct 16 quote from the license plate case -- that "The First 17 Amendment includes both the right to speak freely and 18 the right to refrain from speaking at all."

19 So that the line that Congress drew, we 20 submit, is an appropriate one and is a constitutional 21 one, that there is a difference between the 22 effectiveness of requiring Lowe simply to disclose what 23 he has done in the past and to prohibit him from 24 publishing at all. That was the effect, that was the 25 precise effect of what happened in Capital Gains.

1 QUESTION: Mr. Lee, you may be right about 2 Capital Gains, but I'm not sure that your colleague on 3 the other side would agree with you that the result
4 would be different in Capital Gains. I thought he said
5 that if an investment -- if a publisher of this 6 information, of this newsletter, touted stock and then 7 bought in and then sold out when the price went up, that 8 that could be -- that the Commission could stop that.

9 MR. LEE: Yes, but he would also -- I don't 10 want to put words in his mouth, but I do --

11 QUESTION: Suppose he doesn't agree with you,
12 then, because Capital Gains could easily have come out 13 the same way under that view?

14 MR. LEE: Well, there are many things with 15 which Mr. Schoeman and I disagree in this case.

16 QUESTION: Yes, yes.

17 MR. LEE: But I'm simply saying that the 18 thrust of the position that is taken in the reply brief, 19 that the power of Government to regulate professionals 20 is limited to the face to face in person context, simply 21 will not wash, because that's exactly what happened in 22 Capital Gains, this Court did uphold it.

23 Now, I'll grant you that the Court did not 24 pass in the precise First Amendment issue in that case 25 because they didn't have to. But the point is that the 1 result would have been -- the result would have had to 2 have been otherwise.

3 And in Ohralik, Ohralik was clearly 4 prohibited, not just required to disclose, but was 5 clearly prohibited from engaging in speech. Dr. Earsky, 6 if you will, when he was disqualified from practicing 7 medicine for six months was disqualified from engaging 8 in speech.

9 In short, once you get over the threshold that 10 this case is a prior restraint case because it involves 11 professional discipline, then we submit that Congress 12 was constitutionally entitled to draw the line at the 13 place that Congress in fact drew it.

14 Many of the arguments that are advanced by the 15 Petitioners and their amici are addressed to cases other 16 than this one. They are arguments that are designed to 17 make this case more difficult than it is. There is a 18 rather clean dividing line. Fortunately, it is a line 19 that has been marked out by Congress. It is that 20 Government is entitled to maintain the integrity of the 21 channels of communication between the fiduciary and 22 those persons whom the fiduciary serves; and in the 23 event that there is a communication occurring within 24 that channel, then Congress can control it.

25 Now, there are differences in that respect

1 between the kinds of fiduciary relationships between a
2 lawyer and his client and between an investment adviser 3 and his clients, but there again the significance of the 4 Capital Gains case is its determination, is its approval
5 of Congress' determination, that that was and is a 6 fiduciary relationship.

7 QUESTION: Mr. Solicitor General, let me go
8 back for a moment, because I'm still wrestling with this 9 in my mind, to the hypothetical about your mailing list 10 of the trade association, is what prompted the 11 question.

12 Supposing you had a law review published by 13 law students who were not admitted to the bar, just 14 writing on recent developments in tax law, and people 15 who were interested in tax law began to subscribe to 16 it. Could the state prohibit the publication of that?

17 MR. LEE: It could.

18 QUESTION: You say it could?

19 MR. LEE: Justice Stevens, that is right at 20 the very edge of --

21 (Laughter.)

22 MR. LEE: -- of what is permissible and what 23 is not permissible.

24 QUESTION: It seems to me it has the same 25 fiduciary definition --

1 MR. LEE: No, it does not.

2 QUESTION: -- that your concept does.

3 MR. LEE: No, it does not have the same 4 fiduciary relationship, because there is nothing to 5 establish a fiduciary relationship between law students 6 or even lawyers and a person who has never sought out 7 that person's advice. That's the way a fiduciary 8 relationship comes into existence in our profession.

9 QUESTION: Well, supposing you had a group of 10 business school students who got interested in the stock 11 market and they started to publish a counterpart to a 12 law review on investments in utility stocks or trends in 13 the gold market or something like that and they 14 publicize it, and either with the sponsorship of the 15 school or just independently to make some money. I 16 suppose they -- how do you compare that with the --

17 MR. LEE: If you had -- I think it would 18 depend on two things.

19 QUESTION: And why is one a fiduciary and the 20 other not? I guess that's my question.

21 MR. LEE: For two reasons. One is that you do 22 have in this instance perhaps the most careful and 23 extensive determination that Congress could have made, 24 extending over a period of seven years in which it 25 examined the causes of a financial calamity that

1 occurred in this country, and it reached the conclusion
2 that -- that conclusion has been affirmed by this Court 3 -- that there was under those circumstances a fiduciary 4 relationship.

5 Now, the reason that I hesitate in applying
6 that analogy to other circumstances is that I think 7 you'd have to have, in order to justify applying that to 8 another context, you'd have to have something like that 9 kind of history, supported by something like that kind 10 of Congressional determination, in the overall context 11 of the general rule that in making those kinds of 12 determinations, and particularly drawing those dividing 13 lines, that Congress and legislatures in general are 14 entitled to great deference.

15 Now, let me just say in that regard, any way 16 you decide this case you're going to have to make some 17 very tough dividing lines, and you're going to have some 18 tough hypotheticals that are going to be on the one side 19 or on the other. And I would simply submit that in 20 approaching that overall very important, and in this 21 case frankly very difficult task, that the Court should 22 find it helpful to rely on a couple of general mooring 23 places.

24 QUESTION: What was your other reason? Are 25 you going to get to that? You said for two reasons.

1 MR. LEE: Well, the one is -- the one is that 2 Congress has made that determination; and the second is 3 that there was an unusually good Congressional record, 4 an unusually good factual record supporting what 5 Congress had done. And I think probably both of these 6 are required.

7 Now, one of these foundation stones is the 8 general proposition that in marking out dividing lines
9 Congress is entitled to broad discretion.

10 The other is that if you look at what's 11 involved on both sides of this case, from the standpoint 12 of avoiding inhibitions on speech I have never been able 13 to understand how it is that First Amendment values are 14 really advanced by protecting written published advice 15 over in person advice, which is more likely to be oral.
16 Both are speech, and I'm unaware of anything in this 17 Court's jurisprudence suggesting that written speech 18 enjoys a preference over oral.

19 And from the standpoint of Congress'
20 objective, which was to prevent repetition of the kinds 21 of conduct that led to one of the greatest financial 22 crises in our nation's history, if any distinction 23 between these two is to be drawn it would not favor the 24 protection of the criminally convicted defrauder to 25 influence large numbers of people rather than just a

1 few.

2 If Lowe can be subjected to Government
3 regulation when he recommends securities to one client, 4 as Mr. Schoeman says that he can, then we submit that he 5 may also be subjected to regulation when he sends these 6 recommendations by publication to 100 clients or 1,000 7 or 3,000.

8 Thank you very much.

9 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Mr. Schoeman.

10 REBUTTAL ARGUMENT OF MICHAEL E. SCHOEMAN, ESQ.,

11 ON BEHALF OF PETITIONERS

12 MR. SCHOEMAN: I think the Solicitor General 13 listed two reasons as to why investment advisers and 14 regulation of publications containing investment advice 15 are different from the legal situation. One was that 16 Congress made the determination.

17 That of course is exactly what the First 18 Amendment prohibits Congress from doing. Congress may 19 not abridge freedom of speech or freedom of the press.
20 It's not for Congress to draw the line. The line is 21 drawn by the Constitution.

22 Secondly, the Solicitor General said there is 23 an unusually good record, and I think he is intimating 24 that the Depression was caused in some way by financial 25 publications. There's an exceptionally poor record on

1 that, for that proposition. There's almost nothing in 2 the legislative history of the 1940 Act that in any way
3 relates to these publishers.

4 They were included, apparently, without very 5 much attention being paid to it. None of them 6 testified. There's no record of what any of them were 7 doing. They were not covered by the SEC survey. There 8 may be circumstances, conceivably, in which, for reasons 9 of national security or some other great crisis, you 10 have to have more regulation of publications in some 11 regard. But that certainly is not this case.

12 What the Petitioners are doing is simply 13 publishing and talking about a subject which is a matter 14 of legitimate public interest. It's a subject that's 15 widely discussed, without licensing I may add, in 16 newspapers and magazines and on television and radio.
17 You may not always be able to find out what the 18 President of the United States has said on any given 19 day, but you can always find out the trading price of 20 IBM stock.

21 It is a subject that's widely discussed, and 22 there's no reason why Mr. Lowe cannot participate along 23 with everybody else in the public discussion --

24 QUESTION: May I ask you --

25 MR. SCHOEMAN: -- of this topic.

1 QUESTION: -- a question on that, that 2 subject. Supposing that the revocation of his 3 registration had been based on publishing misleading
4 information in these very publications and touting stock 5 and then profiting from it himself and that sort of 6 thing, so that he'd misused these publications.

7 MR. SCHOEMAN: I really don't think that would 8 make a difference.

9 QUESTION: That was going to be my question.
10 You'd say even then they could not require that he cease 11 publishing these papers?

12 MR. SCHOEMAN: The fact that --

13 QUESTION: Disassociate himself from them for 14 the future?

15 MR. SCHOEMAN: Yes, sir. The fact that in, I
16 believe it was, Vance against Universal Amusement
17 Company, Universal Amusement Company had shown a 18 pornographic movie, that's no basis on which to shut 19 down the movie house. Simply the fact that Mr. Near 20 published repeatedly this defamatory material, that's no 21 ground on which to shut down his activity in the 22 future.

23 The fact of past misconduct has no necessary
24 relationship to the contents of a future publication.

25 QUESTION: So you do agree that Capital Gains

1 would have to come out differently if you win this 2 case?

3 MR. SCHOEMAN: No. In Capital Gains, all they 4 did was, as I read it, was require disclosure of his 5 trading activity.

6 QUESTION: Yes.

7 MR. SCHOEMAN: He was allowed to continue to 8 publish.

9 QUESTION: So Capital Gains would come out the 10 same way, even if you win?

11 MR. SCHOEMAN: Yes, yes.

12 QUESTION: And you concede that -- you concede
13 that they could require this disclosure if the activity
14 he engaged in was the activity in Capital Gains?

15 MR. SCHOEMAN: Yes, I think so, although I 16 would think that the Court might want to add some First 17 Amendment consideration to that subject. But I would 18 not be troubled with that result.

19 QUESTION: What precise disclosure is that?
20 Past criminal --

21 MR. SCHOEMAN: Well, if a person is actually 22 committing a fraud through the use of his publication, 23 as was the case in Capital Gain, he could be required in 24 some way to disclose that he is committing that fraud, 25 because speech is not his only activity. Fraud is his 1 activity.

2 QUESTION: Well then, he in the publication
3 would have to say, I'm committing a fraud by publishing 4 this?

5 MR. SCHOEMAN: No, he would have to describe, 6 as he was required to in Capital Gain, that the 7 publisher has purchased securities discussed in this 8 publication and may be selling them if the price goes 9 up.

10 QUESTION: How about -- but you say he could 11 not be required to say whether or not he is a registered 12 investment adviser under the Act?

13 MR. SCHOEMAN: No, I'm not -- I think that the 14 state can adopt regulations that say, if you want to 15 call yourself a lawyer you better be one, if you want to 16 call yourself a registered investment adviser --

17 QUESTION: Could you require him to say 18 whether he ever was and why he isn't now?

19 MR. SCHOEMAN: Well, then I think you start 20 getting into the chilling effect.

21 QUESTION: Well, I know you start, but are we 22 there or not?

23 MR. SCHOEMAN: No, I don't think you're 24 there.

25 QUESTION: So you could require him to say, I

1 was an investment adviser but I no longer am?

2 MR. SCHOEMAN: I think the chilling effect 3 would prohibit that, because it would lead him not to 4 publish and it would tend to have people not read the 5 publication.

6 What's important is is the publication a valid 7 thing to be read, is it something that people ought to 8 read or at least ought to have available, or should they 9 be pushed away from it by chilling effects? And I
10 distinguish between the case where a man is committing a 11 a fraud -- that you could require a disclosure about -- 12 and the case where a man is not committing a fraud.

13 QUESTION: Well, even if there's no fraud, 14 would you agree he could be compelled to disclose his 15 financial interest in all the securities that he 16 discusses in his publication, his recent trading in the 17 securities?

18 MR. SCHOEMAN: Yes, I'm not troubled by that.

19 QUESTION: Without any necessary fraud?

20 MR. SCHOEMAN: Although, although that's a 21 hard question, because he may not be engaged in 22 fraudulent activity. He may simply be a rich man who 23 owns a lot of stock.

24 QUESTION: Well, I'm assuming he's not in my 25 question. I'm assuming he's not.

1 MR. SCHOEMAN: I think there'd have to be some 2 kind of rule that would allow us to determine the 3 likelihood of a fraud actually being committed. The 4 mere fact that I may own some IBM stock shouldn't 5 necessarily require me to list that on my publication.
6 The question is whether I'm engaging in a fraudulent 7 activity, and not what securities I may happen to own, 8 certainly.

9 Thank you.

10 CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, gentlemen.
11 The case is submitted.

12 (Whereupon, at 11:03 a.m., argument in the 13 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
