1 refused to defend the statute, then it was proper for 2 Messrs. Karcher and Orechio to defend the statute as 3 intervenors in defense of their own reputation as legislators.

4 That is what they do for a living. They pass
5 legislation. Their job is to pass good legislation, to pass 6 responsible legislation, to pass constitutional legislation.
7 And their reputational stake in life depends on their ability 8 to pass such legislation.

9 QUESTION: In New Jersey, is that a full-time job, 10 Mr. Lee?

11 MR. LEE: I honestly don't know, Justice Blackmun
12 whether it is or not.

13 QUESTION: In some states, it isn't, of course.

14 MR. LEE: I do not know whether it is in New Jersey 15 or not.

16 QUESTION: Mr. Lee, wasn't it reasonably clear from 17 the record that Mr. Karcher and Mr. Orechio appeared in their 18 official capacity? They intervened in that capacity.

19 MR. LEE: They did intervene in their official 20 capacity. That is correct.

21 QUESTION: And they no longer hold the offices that 22 they held at the time they intervened as Speaker and President, 23 respectively; is that correct?

24 MR. LEE: At the time that they intervened, they did 25 hold those offices, yes.

1 QUESTION: Yes, but they no longer do.

2 MR. LEE: They do not at the present time. That is 3 correct.

4 QUESTION: And why, under our Federal Rules, are not 5 their successors automatically substituted?

6 MR. LEE: Necessarily, under the rules apply -- do 7 not apply by their own terms to legislative officers. Those 8 officers -- those rules apply, in our view, to executive 9 officers who do have ongoing responsibilities and, therefore, 10 the language of the rules substituting one for the other makes 11 sense. It does not make sense in the context of legislators.
12 And, in any event, because of their interest as legislators, as 13 the producers of this legislative product, they have standing, 14 core representational standing, reputational standing because 15 of their own interest in their own reputation for their ability 16 to pass legislation and have it upheld as constitutional.

17 QUESTION: Mr. Lee, would you make --

18 MR. LEE: They also have standing in their own
19 respect.

20 QUESTION: Would you make that same argument if they 21 had been defeated and were no longer members of the 22 legislature?

23 MR. LEE: The argument might be slightly less strong,
24 but I guess, yes, Justice Brennan, I'd make the same argument
25 if they had been defeated.

1 QUESTION: And if this had happened 25 years ago?

2 MR. LEE: Well, I think there are -- there comes 3 points of diminishing returns. When the nature of that 4 interest -- as they take new jobs, then they are no longer 5 legislators. Then they do something else for a living. But at 6 the present time, that is what they do for a living. And,
7 certainly that is what they -- they have standing in that 8 respect.

9 You have to bear in mind, also, that there is a 10 difference between, we submit, the standing -- standing as a 11 plaintiff to attack constitutionality in the first place and 12 standing of defendant. The major standing cases that have 13 raised the stringent requirements, Valley Forge, Worth v.
14 Seldon, Flass v. Cohen and so forth, have all been plaintiff 15 standing cases. And I submit that cases like Chathau, and 16 United States v. Lovett, and Bob Jones v. the United States
17 simply fit in a different category where in those cases, there
18 is no question there was a case in controversy, whether Chathau 19 was going to be deported depended on whether that statute was 20 upheld as constitutional or not. The only problem was that 21 like here there was no party to take the adverse side. Both 22 sides took the same position. And, as a consequence, the House
23 and Senate were permitted to intervene and take the same side.

24 QUESTION: There is no one else in the case defending 25 the statute; is there?

1 MR. LEE: That is correct. There was not.

2 Now, there are differences -- excuse me, Justice
3 Scalia.

4 QUESTION: I presume that what you say about 5 professional politicians who have chosen to be professional 6 legislators would apply to professional politicians who have 7 chosen to make their career in the Executive Branch. So, it
8 would follow that if we -- even if we apply our Federal Rule 9 that requires the substitution of one executive officer for 10 another, a former executive officer who disagrees with the 11 position being taken by the then current executive officer 12 would continue to have standing to participate in the case?

13 MR. LEE: That question calls me to question whether 14 my answer to Justice Brennan's question is really the best one 15 or not. Once they are no longer legislators -- I think I would 16 like to withdraw my answer to that question and say that once 17 they are no longer legislators, or once they are no longer in 18 the Executive Branch, then they do not have that concrete stake 19 in the outcome.

20 QUESTION: But they could have a different job in the 21 Executive Branch.

22 MR. LEE: That's right, which might give them
23 standing because of their personal stake in the outcome.
24 Certainly, as concrete a stake as was the case in the Price 25 Anderson case or as was in the Scrap case.

1           In the Bob Jones case, for example, there was nobody 2 on opposite sides by the time the case got to this Court. And 3 this Court simply appointed a respected member of the Bar of 4 this Court to represent one side.

5           Now, let me make two final suggestions.

6           QUESTION: Of course, you still haven't met Justice
7 O'Connor's point that even if you assume that that character of 8 standing is adequate, that is not the character on the basis of 9 which these particular individuals intervened. They didn't 10 purport to be vindicating their integrity as legislators. They 11 purported to be there in a representational capacity.

12          MR. LEE: Yes. Yes.

13          QUESTION: And that's gone.

14          MR. LEE: Well, that is correct. The narrow question 15 that she asked was whether the rules applied. My answer was 16 that in our view it applied.

17          QUESTION: Then extend the question beyond the rule.

18          MR. LEE: I understand the extension of the question
19 and it is a more difficult, it is a more difficult question.
20 But regardless, you still have, as long as they are 21 legislators, their concrete interest that is just as great as 22 the interest of some that have been sustained by this Court 23 when you had plaintiff standing, not defendant standing, but 24 plaintiff standing as sustaining the jurisdiction of this 25 Court. And we submit that that is sufficient.

1           Now, we submit two final things for your 2 consideration. The first is that for these reasons, that is 3 enough. And if it is enough -- if it has been enough in 4 comparable instances for plaintiffs, it ought to be enough here
5 under these circumstances for defendants. But that under any 6 circumstances, the ones who have the most to lose from a ruling
7 on justiciability grounds, the arguments that the Plaintiffs 8 are making are the Plaintiffs, themselves. Because it has been 9 very clear for sometime that Plaintiffs -- that no -- that no 10 harm can spawned, no legal consequence can be spawned by 11 unreviewable judgments.

12           What we now have is two judgments of two Federal 13 courts that have been spawned because of these Defendants, to 14 whose standing no one objected at any time. They are there.
15 They are judgments. Those judgments cannot stand. And in the 16 event that this one must be reversed, then clearly, under the 17 authorities of this case, what must happen is that the judgment 18 of the Court of Appeals must be vacated with instructions to 19 dismiss the complaint.

20           QUESTION: But if we were to simply hold that the 21 Appellants here had no standing to appeal, that would not 22 necessarily result in the vacation of the Court of Appeals 23 judgment; would it?

24           MR. LEE: No, but I am not sure it solves the case, 25 either, because they had already appealed by the time there was

1 any objection made to their being here. This objection was not 2 made until one month after the jurisdictional statement had 3 been filed. And you would still end up with --

4 QUESTION: But isn't it jurisdictional, Mr. Lee?

5 MR. LEE: In that event --

6 QUESTION: I mean may we not so respond to you?

7 MR. LEE: Yes. I think you can. And maybe you 8 perhaps have an obligation to do so. I guess my real answer to 9 the Chief Justice's question is that would be a complete
10 perversion of Muncie Wier principles to say that it makes a 11 difference whether the appeal has been taken by one or by 12 another. Because the theory of Muncie Wier as I read it is 13 that an appeal can spawn no legal consequences. That it is 14 simply unfair to say to the Plaintiff, "Well, for Article 3 15 reasons, you cannot go ahead with your appeal."

16 QUESTION: Well, I take it if your clients had won 17 below in the Court of Appeals and the other side had come up 18 here, and then it was decided that for some reason that these, 19 that the Respondents then, if they didn't want to defend the 20 case, the Court would have appointed somebody to defend from 21 the bottom side.

22 MR. LEE: I assume so.

23 QUESTION: But your clients were the Appellants.

24 MR. LEE: That is correct. That is correct.
25 Nevertheless, the same principle that says that no appeal can

1 spawn any legal consequences applies under this circumstances.
2 And the same basic underlying principle of fairness.

3 The final of my two points is this: We think they 4 are standing here --

5 QUESTION: I'm not sure how that works. It seems to 6 me that whenever you lose below -- well, let's see. If you win 7 below and the other side takes an appeal, you think you can 8 always wash out the whole judgment by simply saying you no
9 longer have any interest in contesting the matter.

10 MR. LEE: Absolutely not. That is not what I am 11 saying. I sue you; you win. I decide not to appeal. Total 12 victory for you. It is when it becomes moot or for some 13 Article 3 or other reason outside my control the judicial 14 system is unable to go ahead with the case on the same basis 15 that it did below that the Muncie Wier Doctrine comes into 16 play. And that is the difference.

17 QUESTION: Who noticed the appeal?

18 MR. LEE: We did.

19 QUESTION: Who is "we"?

20 MR. LEE: Messrs. Karcher and Orechio.

21 QUESTION: Were they the originals?

22 MR. LEE: They were the original defendants.

23 QUESTION: They were the original defendants?

24 MR. LEE: Excuse me, the intervenor defendants.

25 QUESTION: They were the intervenor defendants. They

1 signed the notice of appeal.

2 MR. LEE: Yes, Your Honor.

3 QUESTION: And, now, they have been replaced.

4 MR. LEE: As legislators. That is correct. We 5 contend that they are still entitled to maintain their position
6 as the parties who are pursuing this lawsuit.

7 QUESTION: They haven't been replaced as legislators.

8 MR. LEE: Excuse me. Not as legislators. I 9 apologize. I misspoke. Not as legislators. They have been 10 replaced as Speaker of the House and President of the Senate.

11 QUESTION: Well, you only claimed that for the 12 Speaker, you don't claim it for an individual Member of the 13 House; do you?

14 MR. LEE: That is correct. Only for the Speaker of 15 the Senate.

16 QUESTION: So, they are out.

17 MR. LEE: Now, the final point with respect to 18 standing and then I do want to move on to the merits is that 19 assume that you disagree with us. And it is a close question.
20 There is something to be said for these issues of great 21 national moment that consume for people like my client enormous 22 amounts of resources. And that consume for this Court not 23 small amounts of resources being decided once they are here. I 24 say that without derogating in any way the principles of 25 Article 3, but that if there is a way to decide it without

1 doing any violence to Article 3, once the case is here, it 2 ought to be done.

3           You have before you a motion to put on our side of 4 the case the same kinds of parties as are on the other side of 5 the case. Two parents and a teacher. And I would suggest as a 6 possible consideration that you reconsider, if necessary, the 7 motion to intervene filed by those people.

8           Turning to the merits, there is an interesting
9 parallel in this case between one aspect of Wallace v. Jaffree, 10 and the statute here. I think Justice Stevens particularly 11 will remember because I remember with great discomfort the 12 exchange that he had with Paul Battor over this particular 13 statute that there was one statute, one of the three statutes
14 that was concededly constitutional. Everyone in the case 15 agreed it was constitutional. And, indeed, the fact that 16 everyone agreed that it was constitutional became part of the 17 reason -- became a crucial fact in the decision in Wallace v.
18 Jaffree.

19           This statute that is at issue today is identical,
20 identical to Alabama Code Section 20 -- 16.1.20 that everyone
21 agreed was constitutional in Wallace v. Jaffree. That Alabama
22 statute provides for, and I am quoting: "A period of silence
23 not to exceed one minute in duration which shall be observed
24 for meditation." Whereas, the present statute provides for a 25 one-minute period of silence to be used so at the discretion of

1 the individual student before the opening exercises of each day
2 for quiet and private contemplation or introspection.

3 There is not a nickel's worth of difference between 4 them. Excuse me. There is. There is one difference between 5 them and that is that the Alabama statute is mandatory. The 6 moment of meditation must be used for that purpose, whereas, in 7 New Jersey the student has the option whether to use his or her 8 60 seconds for introspection or contemplation.

9 The three-part lemon test squarely vindicates the 10 constitutionality of New Jersey's moment of silence. In this 11 case, there are two purposes and the major focus in this case, 12 as in Wallace v. Jaffree is on purpose.

13 The first of these purposes, the case for the first 14 of these purposes can be very simply and powerfully stated.
15 And it is as follows: There is a legitimate secular 16 pedagogical purpose for a moment of silence at the beginning of 17 each day and, second, the statute itself says that that 18 objective, legitimate pedagogical purpose is its purpose. And 19 that objective purpose is to provide for a moment of 20 introspection and contemplation at the beginning of the day.

21 Now, under Lynch v. Donnelly, that is the end of the 22 inquiry because Lynch makes a couple of things -- well, cases 23 all the way from really Abington through Mueller make it quite 24 clear, the first thing, that in deciding matters of purpose, a 25 great deal of deference is given to the individual legislature.

1 And, second, Lynch makes it clear that if there are several 2 purposes and one of them is a non-sham, legitimate purpose, 3 then you are over that hurdle and you go on to effect and 4 entanglement. It is probably best stated by Lynch where the 5 Court said that even where the benefits to religion were 6 substantial we saw a secular purpose and no conflict with the 7 establishment of cause.

8 How, then, could the District Court possibly hold 9 where you had an objective purpose stated on the face of the 10 statute, no contrary purpose stated on the face of the statute
11 hold that it was unconstitutional. And he did so by saying 12 that the secular purpose was a pretext and that it was really 13 just a pretext for bringing prayer back to the schools. He did 14 so by relying on the hearsay statements from five legislators 15 who said that that was its real purpose, even though other 16 legislators said that the statute means what it says.

17 QUESTION: That was post-legislative.

18 MR. LEE: Some of it was post-legislative,
19 Justice White. Actually, most of the post-legislative related 20 to other matters such as what was --

21 QUESTION: Yes, but there was no record of --

22 MR. LEE: There was no record, there was -- well, the 23 best that you had, the best that you had was hearsay. Somebody 24 else being there saying, "Yes, I was there and I heard somebody 25 say this." That is the best that you had. But you had equally

1 good stuff on the other side for other people.

2 Now, this experience, the District Court's experience
3 with this kind, with this kind of reliance on, quote, 4 "legislative history," demonstrates the consistent-- 5 demonstrates the wisdom of cautions from cases like United 6 States v. O'Brien and other cases against post-legislative 7 statements and hearsay statements, generally. And that if you 8 have got something in the record, you ought to stick to what is 9 in the record.

10 And what comes from the court's rule in this case is 11 a mystery. Apparently, it would allow for a single legislator
12 veto so that if I were one who disfavored the Moment of Silence
13 Bill, I could simply say, "I favor this bill and the reason I 14 favor it," or I could say I favor it or not. I could simply 15 say, "I think that what this is going to do is bring prayer 16 back to the schools."

17 Equally outrageous in my opinion was the District 18 Court's consideration of expert opinion on both sides of the 19 fundamental policy issue, whether the Moment of Silence really 20 would make a contribution to school secular purposes, including 21 the transition time from a pre-school mindset to a post-school 22 mindset. It is no surprise that school people were willing to 23 express an opinion on both sides of that issue as to whether 24 you really would get a quieting down effect and a salutary 25 effect from that kind of experience or not.

1           What is surprising is the District Court was willing 2 to listen to it. Public policy for the State of New Jersey,
3 including school policy, is set by the Legislature of the State
4 of New Jersey. And if that legislature determines, in its 5 wisdom, that the boundary between what happens during the 6 school hours and what happens just before school hours may be 7 marked or that school discipline may be improved by having a 8 moment of silence at the beginning of the school day, then it 9 doesn't matter all of the legislators -- excuse me, all of the 10 school experts in the State of New Jersey think about that 11 issue. Their opinions on that issue should be addressed to the 12 Legislature, itself, and not to a Federal District Court
13 reviewing for a constitutionality. Neither Lemon v. Kurtzman 14 nor any other case has ever held that a statute filed, the 15 establishment clause -- held a statute violate of the 16 establishment clause because the court takes a different view
17 from that of the legislature as to whether the secular 18 objective can be achieved.

19           The second purpose that is established by this 20 statute is that it provides an accommodation for those students
21 who want to use the moment of silence of prayer. Now, as I 22 read Wallace v. Jaffree, under Wallace v. Jaffree, if the 23 statute provided only that you use it for prayer, it would be 24 unconstitutional. But it doesn't.

25           QUESTION: Mr. Lee, can I ask you whether you think

1 it would violate the statute for the teacher during this minute
2 to allow some students to pray out loud? Because it says the 3 students are permitted to observe a one-minute period of 4 silence. I wonder if that would allow some to be silent and 5 others to pray out loud.

6 MR. LEE: In my opinion, that would be violative of 7 the statute, Justice Stevens.

8 It is completely permissive -- much of the -- I will 9 just say this and then I will save the rest of the time for my 10 rebuttal. Much of the District Court's difficulty in this case 11 is based on its assumption that the statute is mandatory and 12 not permissive. And they are just plain wrong. The Court of 13 Appeals is right in that respect. It is mandatory on the 14 teacher. The teacher has to permit the student, but the 15 student can use it for whatever. The only requirement is that 16 it be quiet.

17 Chief Justice, if the Court has no further questions, 18 I would like to save the rest of my time for rebuttal.

19 CHIEF JUSTICE REHNQUIST: Thank you, Mr. Lee.

20 We will hear now from you, Mr. Cantor.

21 ORAL ARGUMENT OF NORMAL L. CANTOR

22 ON BEHALF OF RESPONDENTS

23 MR. CANTOR: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please the 24 Court:

25 I will start with the standing issue which is a

1 threshold issue, of course, in this case. And our basic 2 position, of course, is that the real party in interest that 3 intervened in this litigation was the New Jersey Legislature.
4 And the representatives of that legislature have now determined
5 to withdraw the appeal leaving this Court with no jurisdiction.

6 I note that Mr. Lee, if I understand him correctly, 7 has abandoned the argument originally made in their brief that 8 Mr. Karcher was in as an individual as well as a representative
9 of the legislature. The record clearly refutes that contention 10 of the brief. As I understand Mr. Lee, he no longer insists on 11 that position.

12 QUESTION: Well, let us assume that the intervenors
13 had said both as Speakers of the House and as individual 14 legislators, you wouldn't be making -- you still would be 15 making the argument there is no standing.

16 MR. CANTOR: We would certainly be making the 17 argument that if his sole status today is as individual 18 legislator, then he lacks --

19 QUESTION: Because I don't -- I suppose we have 20 authority to consider him as an individual legislator, whether 21 he intervened that way or not.

22 MR. CANTOR: His sole status in this litigation is as 23 a representative of the body. And he is not allowed to switch 24 roles in mid-stream.

25 QUESTION: Who said so?

1 MR. CANTOR: This Court said so in Bender v.
2 Williamsport.

3 QUESTION: Well, we could say something else, too, I 4 suppose now.

5 MR. CANTOR: That is certainly possible, Mr. Justice
6 White.

7 QUESTION: I suppose we could reconsider the motion
8 for an intervention here by somebody else, too.

9 MR. CANTOR: That is certainly possible, Your Honor.
10 You passed on -- the Court passed on that motion quite 11 recently.

12 QUESTION: Yes.

13 QUESTION: But there is no motion for intervention 14 here.

15 MR. CANTOR: There was a motion for intervention here 16 filed by Mr. Lee on behalf of a teacher and student in New 17 Jersey. And that motion was denied.

18 QUESTION: Yes, but not by the present Speaker of the 19 House. No motion for intervention by the present Speaker of 20 the New Jersey House --

21 MR. CANTOR: The present leadership of the New Jersey
22 Legislature, both the Speaker of the Assembly and the President 23 of the Senate have notified the Court that they do not wish to 24 prosecute this appeal and they have instructed their counsel to 25 withdraw the appeal. Their counsel so notified the Court in

1 April of 1986 and the only question is whether Mr. Karcher, in 2 some capacity, is allowed to pursue the appeal despite the 3 wishes of the New Jersey Legislature.

4 Now, there are several reasons why he, as an 5 individual, cannot pursue the appeal. First of all, because a 6 collective body was the real party in interest, the New Jersey
7 Legislature, it is clear that only that body, itself, or a 8 representative can determine whether to appeal from an adverse 9 judgment. That is the lesson of Bender v. Williamsport School 10 District where an individual member of the school board
11 attempted to bring an appeal before this Court and this Court
12 denied standing because it was the collective school board 13 which was deemed to be the party in interest.

14 We have a very similar situation with regard to 15 Mr. Karcher's current effort to continue this litigation. He 16 also, we would contend, lacks Article 3 standing as an 17 individual legislator. There is no Supreme Court case which 18 gives standing to an individual legislator to contest the 19 constitutionality of a legislative measure unless there has 20 been action depriving that individual of an actual vote. A 21 disenfranchisement of the legislator.

22 QUESTION: Mr. Cantor, under New Jersey law, does a 23 presiding officer of a House and the Legislature, is that 24 person able to bind the entire Legislature for purposes of 25 making it a party to a suit?

1 MR. CANTOR: The answer to that is, yes, Justice
2 O'Connor. First of all, I would point out that Alan Karcher 3 intervened in this very action through that very device and the 4 Appellants --

5 QUESTION: And you think that his intervention made 6 the entire legislative body that he represented a party?

7 MR. CANTOR: There is no question that that was the 8 understanding of everyone involved in this litigation, 9 including the District Court.

10 QUESTION: And what do you point to in New Jersey law
11 for that authority?

12 MR. CANTOR: Okay. Well, what -- what the 13 intervenors, what Mr. Karcher, himself, pointed to at the time 14 that he intervened in January of 1983 was both the rules and 15 the custom of the New Jersey Legislature. Their counsel, 16 Mr. Marinari stated to the Federal District Court as the 17 presiding officers of both Houses, they are empowered by the 18 rules of both Houses to represent the House in litigation.

19 I continue, quote: "It is the presiding officer of 20 each House and in charge of all administrative duties and from 21 that we have been in numerous suites."

22 QUESTION: So, you take the position that the real 23 intervening party was, in effect, the whole Legislature?

24 MR. CANTOR: That is correct, Justice O'Connor.

25 I would make one further point in substantiation of

1 their contention that the presiding officer can bind the 2 legislative body. And that is we checked up on their custom 3 claim. And we discovered that, indeed, they had intervened in 4 other legislation -- I'm sorry, in other litigation through the 5 action of the presiding officers of the Legislature. We cite a 6 case in note 66 of page 8 of our brief which provides an 7 example and states the history of that litigation. And it was 8 Mr. Karcher, himself, who intervened on behalf of the 9 Legislature in that instance.

10 QUESTION: You say that the Speaker has the right to 11 represent the Legislature.

12 MR. CANTOR: That's correct.

13 QUESTION: The Legislature wasn't sued.

14 MR. CANTOR: They intervened after --

15 QUESTION: Well, where did they get right to 16 intervene?

17 MR. CANTOR: They made a motion and they were granted 18 intervenor status after the Attorney General of the State, who 19 was representing the Commissioner of Education, determined not 20 to defend the statute on the basis --

21 QUESTION: That should have been the end of the case.

22 MR. CANTOR: He determined not to defend the statute, 23 but the statute was still enforce. We still had a litigation 24 seeking a declaratory judgment.

25 QUESTION: But it wasn't against the Legislature.

1 MR. CANTOR: The original suit was not against the 2 Legislature.

3 QUESTION: So, how come the Legislature has a right
4 to be represented?

5 MR. CANTOR: Because in other instances, this Court
6 has indicated, such as in Diamond v. Charles where the Illinois 7 Legislature was present to defend the abortion statute even 8 though they were not originally named.

9 QUESTION: As a party?

10 MR. CANTOR: Pardon?

11 QUESTION: As a party?

12 MR. CANTOR: They were not originally a named party.
13 I believe they intervened.

14 QUESTION: I'm not interested in your belief. I am 15 interested in what happened.

16 MR. CANTOR: I believe -- my recollection, Your 17 Honor, is that the State of Illinois was not a party and 18 intervened to defend the constitutionality of this --

19 QUESTION: Well, does the Legislature of New Jersey 20 have the right to intervene in any case involving a statute of 21 the State of New Jersey?

22 MR. CANTOR: I don't have any question but that the 23 Legislature is entitled to intervene when one of its officers,
24 namely, the Commissioner of Education, is sued as a party 25 defendant, refuses to defend the State enactment and the

1 enactment is there without any defense, it seems to me --

2 QUESTION: Where do you get that from? A statute of 3 New Jersey?

4 MR. CANTOR: It is the Legislature, itself --

5 QUESTION: Is it --

6 MR. CANTOR: That denominated the Attorney General of 7 the State as the normal party to defend the constitutionality 8 of its enactment.

9 QUESTION: Did it say normal party or did it say 10 "the" party?

11 MR. CANTOR: The party. The exclusive party.

12 QUESTION: That's right. It didn't say anybody else.

13 MR. CANTOR: That's correct. But, just as the 14 Legislature designated by statute --

15 QUESTION: So, suppose that somebody attacks the 16 income tax law in New Jersey and the Attorney General says, 17 "I'm not going to defend it." The Legislature can come in?

18 MR. CANTOR: I would think so, Justice Marshall.

19 QUESTION: On any legislation?

20 Wouldn't that upset all the balance --

21 MR. CANTOR: The Legislature, not any individual 22 legislator.

23 QUESTION: That makes the Legislature an executive.

24 MR. CANTOR: When the legislative --

25 QUESTION: What happened to the executive part? The 1 legislative can take over the executive?

2 MR. CANTOR: I don't think that the defense of the 3 constitutionality of a legislative measure is necessarily 4 exclusively an executive act. It certainly normally is, but I
5 have no -- we had no quarrel, the District Court had no quarrel
6 with having the Legislature defend its statute.

7 QUESTION: Why is the defense of it any more
8 important than the execution of it? I mean if you can say 9 that, you know, where the executive declines to defend it, the 10 legislature can step in to do so. Why can't you say where the 11 executive declines to execute it, the legislature can step in 12 to do so. This doctrine of necessity that you are expounding.

13 MR. CANTOR: I would think that the Legislature can 14 adopt legislation directing the Attorney General to prosecute 15 or to enforce the measure.

16 QUESTION: Assuming that New Jersey does have a 17 statute that allows the New Jersey Legislature to litigate, 18 does that bind us as to whether there is Article 3 standing on 19 the part of a legislature to litigate concerning the lawfulness 20 of a statute that it has passed?

21 MR. CANTOR: I don't think it binds this Court
22 necessarily, but I think if the Legislature designates itself 23 as having a sufficient interest either in its own capacity or 24 as a representative of the potential beneficiaries of the 25 statute, I think that that is a meaningful interest.

1 QUESTION: Have we ever held that a legislature has 2 standing to litigate the constitutionality of its laws?

3 MR. CANTOR: I view Diamond v. Charles as saying 4 that.

5 QUESTION: That's the only case you have.

6 QUESTION: Well, certainly, there is something to be 7 said, perhaps not in a strict standing sense, for a case in 8 which a plaintiff goes into a Federal District Court and 9 challenges the constitutionality of a statute, to have that 10 case defended on the merits rather than simply have it go by a 11 default judgment.

12 MR. CANTOR: Absolutely, Mr. Chief Justice.

13 There has been a claim made that Mr. Karcher might 14 represent the 200th Legislature which went out of existence
15 three and one-half years ago. And I simply want to take a few 16 moments to dispel that notion. First of all, it doesn't 17 conform with reality that he indeed represented the 200th
18 Legislature as opposed to the New Jersey Legislature. It
19 happened to be the 200th Legislature at the time that it 20 intervened, but that was not noted because, of course, it was 21 not deemed significant. The appeal to the Third Circuit was 22 process and funded by the 201st Legislature. And, indeed, now 23 time has gone by and the 202nd Legislature has determined not 24 to appeal. There was never any indication that Mr. Karcher was 25 exclusively a representative of the 200th Legislature. It also

1 does not conform with reason to suggest that.

2 The party in interest in the defense of the 3 constitutionality of a state enactment is the current 4 legislature as the policy maker for the State of New Jersey, 5 the shaper of the state's criminal and civil codes. That is 6 the message of Diamond v. Charles, that it is the function of 7 the current legislature to decide whether or not a statute's
8 constitutionality should be maintained by appeal to this Court.
9 The Illinois Legislature determined not to appeal and this 10 Court recognized its status and dismissed the appeal.

11 QUESTION: Mr. Cantor, if you are right that there 12 was standing, originally, for this case to be decided and if 13 you are also right that there now no longer is standing, why 14 shouldn't we dispose of this case the way we would dispose of a 15 case that originally posed a controversy, which controversy has 16 become moot while it is on appeal. That is simply remand with 17 a direction to vacate the judgment below.

18 MR. CANTOR: I don't think the analogy to mootness is 19 sound at all. There is an ongoing and very live controversy, 20 the effect of the dismissal of the appeal here will be that the 21 Third Circuit judgment remains very much in force.

22 QUESTION: Well, controversy between whom? Not a 23 controversy between the parties. A case becomes moot even if 24 it involves a very sensitive public issue, where the party who 25 was raising that public issue happens to have died. You could

1 make the same statement: The issue is still a very important
2 one. There is a real controversy. Unfortunately, this case is 3 moot. Now, why isn't that the situation here?

4 MR. CANTOR: Because the dispute is not moot. When a 5 party determines not to pursue an appeal from a judgment, that 6 does not render the prior judgment moot. And that is precisely
7 the situation here. The New Jersey Legislature has determined 8 to acquiesce in the judgment of the Third Circuit. They 9 determined that they can live with it. They can take --

10 QUESTION: Repeal of the statute?

11 MR. CANTOR: That is correct, Your Honor. Diamond v.
12 Charles indicates, they had two options. They could have 13 chosen the repeal of the statute or they could have done what 14 they indeed did and that is to acquiesce in the judgment of 15 unconstitutionality.

16 QUESTION: Mr. Cantor, earlier a question was asked
17 of Mr. Lee whether the legislators in New Jersey have a 18 full-time job.

19 MR. CANTOR: Yes.

20 QUESTION: I thought they did not. Am I right?

21 MR. CANTOR: You are correct, Justice Brennan.

22 I will make one last point on the issue of standing 23 and it is simply to make a juris prudential -- a statement of 24 constitutional juris prudence. We urge the Court not to reach 25 out to resolve a constitutional issue where the legislative

1 party in interest has determined to acquiesce in a Circuit
2 Court of Appeals decision.

3 The Supreme Court adjudication of a constitutional 4 issue is a precious currency which ought not to be expended 5 except where resolution of a constitutional issue is necessary.
6 That was the message of TVA v. Ashwander ever since 1937 and 7 Justice Brandeis's principles of the avoidance of unnecessary 8 constitutional adjudication.

9 Counsel's suggestion that standing is less important 10 where a defendant rather than a plaintiff is involved simply 11 ignores cases like Bender v. Williamsport School District and 12 Diamond v. Charles, both decided in 1986.

13 I will turn now to the merits of the dispute and to 14 the determination by the Federal District Court of New Jersey
15 and the Third Circuit Court of Appeals that New Jersey's Minute
16 of Silence law, A10-64, violated the establishment clause.

17 Our basic contention is that the District Court's 18 approach was eminently sound and that its conclusion was 19 eminently sound. The District Court concluded after five days 20 of trial and scores of exhibits that the actual legislative 21 purpose behind A10-64 was religious. More specifically, a 22 purpose to reinject prayer into the schools in a fashion
23 prohibited by Supreme Court precedent.

24 Our basic contention here is that that conclusion is 25 amply supported in the record and deserves to be upheld. We

1 devote considerable attention to enumerating the reasons for 2 that claim at our brief at pages 16 to 26 and 36 to 37. I 3 would simply mention that there were numerous elements of 4 proof. It was not simply isolated statements by a legislator.
5 There were in the legislative history a very clear and dominant 6 focus on the issue of prayer and neglect of any other --

7 QUESTION: How do we know it was legislative history?

8 MR. CANTOR: New Jersey does not keep a record of 9 either the committee hearings or the legislative debates. As a 10 consequence, we were forced to seek various indirect means of 11 showing the legislative history. We did present witnesses-- 12 eye witnesses --

13 QUESTION: Who were there at the creation?

14 MR. CANTOR: That's correct.

15 (Laughter.)

16 MR. CANTOR: I reiterate that there are a variety of 17 elements of proof in the record below, including the dominant 18 focus of the legislative history, including statements by seven 19 legislators, including the sponsor of the bill and the 20 President of the Senate. There is the utter refutation of the 21 sole asserted secular purpose; namely, that the Minute of 22 Silence law was aimed at creating a calming transition period.

23 We presented numerous elements aimed at refuting that 24 notion and in Federal District Court, after hearing our proofs, 25 concluded that indeed that was not an actual purpose of the New

1 Jersey legislation and indeed that asserted secular purpose was 2 a sham. The Third Circuit accepted that determination and I
3 think the record stands very clearly that the sole asserted
4 secular purpose was rejected by the Federal District Court as a 5 sham, a conclusion which was upheld by the Third Circuit.

6 QUESTION: Mr. Cantor, would you concede that if all 7 we had before us was the language and text of the statute that 8 was passed that it would survive our establishment clause 9 tests?

10 MR. CANTOR: If the Court refused to look at all 11 beyond the face of the statute, it is conceivable to me that 12 the measure would be upheld.

13 QUESTION: Do you think that we have given some 14 indication that it is risky or dangerous to try to prove 15 legislative intent by the use of statements of individual 16 legislators in the course of passage?

17 MR. CANTOR: Absolutely, Your Honor. There is no
18 question that the burden of demonstrating an illicit collective 19 legislative purpose is a heavy burden and a hard burden to 20 satisfy. Nonetheless, statements by legislators are one of the 21 elements of proof of collective legislative intent and that is 22 exactly the way those statements were used in this instance, as 23 one of the indicia of proof.

24 With regard to your comment about the face of this 25 statute, I think it was clear from the record at the time that

1 the Federal District Court decided to delve behind the face of 2 the statute that there were considerable indicia of prayer on 3 the face of the statute and in the immediate background of the 4 statute which warranted that inquiry into actual legislative 5 purpose.

6 For example, there was the term, "contemplation," 7 which as the record demonstrates has a certain religious 8 connotation. There was the selection of the first minute of 9 the school day, a format which mimicked or replicated the 10 traditional time for school prayer.

11 QUESTION: May I interrupt you there? I don't think 12 that is quite what the statute says. It says, "Before the 13 opening exercises." Why would it not comply with a statute for 14 a principal to say that school exercises shall begin at 9:00
15 a.m. From 8 until 8:30 the assembly hall will be open and any 16 student who wants to can go in there for a minute for silent
17 contemplation? Why wouldn't that satisfy the statute?

18 MR. CANTOR: Justice Stevens, no one has interpreted 19 the statute in the fashion that you are suggesting.

20 QUESTION: But that is what it says.

21 MR. CANTOR: The District Court specifically asked 22 whether or not that was a plausible reading of the statute.
23 And the record shows that no one --

24 QUESTION: No, but you are being asked by Justice
25 O'Connor if we just have the statute and nothing else --

1 MR. CANTOR: Right.

2 QUESTION: And that is what I am saying. If I just 3 have the statute and nothing else, what I suggest would be 4 clearly in compliance with the statute; wouldn't it? What 5 language would deny the principal --

6 MR. CANTOR: All I can tell you, Justice Stevens, is 7 that every administrator and every party associated with 8 implementation of this statute interpreted it otherwise, that 9 at the beginning of the school day meant as part of the opening 10 exercises once the school had started.

11 QUESTION: It doesn't say at the beginning. It says 12 before the beginning. It doesn't say at the beginning of the 13 school day.

14 MR. CANTOR: I repeat that all I can tell you --

15 QUESTION: So, they based their interpretation not on 16 what the statute says, but what they thought it meant?

17 MR. CANTOR: They are the people who were charged 18 with implementing the statute and they were giving their fair 19 interpretation of what the statute intended.

20 QUESTION: Mr. Cantor, assuming the preponderance of 21 legislative history that you referred to, is there anything in 22 that preponderance of legislative history that is inconsistent
23 with the notion that this was being done by the New Jersey 24 Legislature as an accommodation to religious practice?

25 MR. CANTOR: Several things, I think, Justice Scalia.

1           QUESTION:    The preponderance of the legislative 2 history would contradict the assertion that this was being done
3 in order to accommodate religious practice?    Or, more 4 specifically, how do you -- how would you distinguish this 5 proposal?    Assuming that there was some desire to make things 6 easier for the religiously motivated, predominantly in the 7 legislature's mind.    Assuming that.    How do you distinguish
8 this from what we have upheld; that is the New York Legislature 9 making available release time for those who wished to do so to 10 go to religious instruction?

11           MR. CANTOR:    Okay, I will turn to the issue of 12 accommodation, since you raise it.

13           QUESTION:    That is what I am asking about.

14           MR. CANTOR:    Justice Scalia, first of all to directly 15 answer your question about Zorach v. Clauson, I think there are 16 at least four ways in which Zorach v. Clauson ought to be 17 distinguishable from the instant litigation.

18           First of all, the degree of impediment to the 19 religious practice was considerably greater in the case of 20 Zorach v. Clauson than it is in the instant case.    That is they 21 were talking there about an hour of released time during the 22 week as opposed to one minute per day.    That's one suggestion.
23 That the degree of impediment to the religious practice was 24 different.

25           Secondly, there --

1 QUESTION: I don't understand what you mean. The 2 degree of impediment. I thought you were going to say that the 3 degree of accommodation was greater. I mean, if anything, here
4 is the state taking out a whole hour as opposed to five minutes 5 a week.

6 MR. CANTOR: One of our theses is that an 7 accommodation of a religious exercise is usually appropriate 8 only when there is some kind of impediment to the religious 9 practice. If it is simply a facilitation of religious practice
10 when there is no obstacle, then the message is that government 11 is encouraging and endorsing a religious practice.

12 Therefore, the fact that one hour could not be 13 accommodated within the school context makes it different from 14 one minute which we claim could be accommodated without any 15 special kind of legislation. Indeed, the record shows that 16 there were numerous opportunities for school children in New 17 Jersey to have a minute of silence during the course of the 18 ongoing school day. There was no need, therefore -- there was 19 no impediment existing which would warrant a pure accommodation 20 measure.

21 QUESTION: Was there any impediment in Zorach v.
22 Clauson to go to Sunday School on Sunday?

23 MR. CANTOR: No, but that was the whole point. Why
24 was there an accommodation needed. Apparently, school children 25 thought that it was burdensome to have to take the hour at some

1 other time. It is certainly not burdensome to take the minute
2 in some other context.

3 QUESTION: What is the second difference?

4 MR. CANTOR: The second difference is that in Zorach
5 v. Clauson, there was no juxtaposition between public school 6 classrooms and the religious exercise while here, in fact, we 7 are talking about a religious exercise within the school
8 building, within the classroom.

9 Thirdly, the presence of extensive regulations on the 10 part of the State Commissioner of Education and the City Board
11 of Education --

12 QUESTION: That goes to entanglement, I presume, and 13 not to religious motivation.

14 MR. CANTOR: It goes to effects more than to purpose.
15 But I think it is an important distinction because one of our 16 contentions here is that the total absence of any kind of 17 regulations, any kind of implementing guidelines meant that the 18 practice would inevitably be abused.

19 And, finally, I would suggest that a meaningful 20 secular alternative was provided to the religious exercise in 21 Zorach v. Clauson while that is not the case in this instance.
22 The record says with regard to Zorach that those not released 23 stay in the classrooms.

24 I give Justice Douglas the benefit of the doubt and I
25 assume that they weren't simply warehoused in the classrooms

1 and that there was, in fact, a secular educational activity
2 going on. One of our contentions here and one of the reasons 3 why we conclude that even under an accommodation view of the 4 statute as Judge Gibbons took in the Third Circuit, that it is 5 still unconstitutional, that his conclusion was correct, 6 because there were no secular alternatives provided and 7 articulated for these school children, these impressionable 8 school children. They were told that we, the State of New 9 Jersey, are preempting the normal educational program in order 10 to permit students to pray. That was the message. That was 11 the message.

12 QUESTION: To meditate. Their secular alternative is 13 to think about Ayn Rand or, you know, whatever you like.

14 MR. CANTOR: What they were told, Justice Scalia, is 15 that there is an opportunity for contemplation or 16 introspection. And this measure was applicable from 17 Kindergarten through 12th grade. I suggest to you that on the 18 face of the statute to tell Kindergarten through 3rd graders
19 that they have an option of contemplation or introspection
20 during the first minute of the school day is to tell them 21 nothing. The only message that they understand is that that is 22 the traditional format for school prayer. They don't 23 understand what contemplation or introspection is unless there 24 are guidelines articulating an alternative secular function.

25 CHIEF JUSTICE REHNQUIST: Thank you, Mr. Cantor.

1 Mr. Lee, you have three minutes remaining.

2 ORAL ARGUMENT OF REX E. LEE

3 ON BEHALF OF APPELLANTS - REBUTTAL

4 MR. LEE: I also have that many comments, Your Honor.

5 First, with regard to the suggestion that the case
6 for -- the case for this being anything other than just a 7 newspaper collection of clippings in support of the proposition 8 that the Moment of Silence was in support of prayer, simply 9 cannot withstand the record. And I would simply invite the 10 Court's attention in that respect to two things. One is the 11 opinion, itself, which it is very apparent that that is all 12 that they did was just go through and quote statements from 13 people who had been there.

14 The best statement in the whole record is the 15 sentence that come from Judge Becker in which he says: "That 16 the evidence as a whole is equivocal at best. The single 17 unambiguous piece of evidence, the statute on its face, attests 18 the secular motives."

19 And I submit that under this Court's cases, that is 20 all that is needed.

21 Now, second, with respect to accommodation. The only 22 way that you can sustain the proposition that the difference
23 between a minute and an hour cuts in Zorach's favor is exactly 24 the basis that was just stated. And that is if you say that 25 the only possible accommodation -- the only permissible

1 accommodation doctrine turns on the removal of an impediment,
2 but that simply -- doctrine simply far outran that particular 3 notion.

4 Cases like Alan, and Tilton and Epperson, I think 5 have to be explained as accommodation cases and there was no
6 impediment in those cases. And, indeed, in Zorach, itself, you 7 could say that there was an accommodation because the state was 8 requiring attendance at school. But that really falls short, 9 because those students could have attended their religious 10 instruction, as many religious students do throughout the 11 country today, at a time earlier than school.

12 Zorach v. Clauson simply cannot be squared with an 13 affirmance of the Third Circuit's decision in Karcher v. May.
14 And the two differences are: the one minute and the one hour 15 and the difference between the extent to which you bring the 16 forces of the school into play.

17 In this case, there are only 60 seconds of the 18 school's attention time that were used, maybe not even school
19 hour time, probably school hour time; whereas in Zorach v.
20 Clauson, it was a full hour and the -- in Zorach v. Clauson --
