3 CHIEF JUSTICE REHNQUIST: We'll hear argument
4 first this morning in No. 90-5635, John J. McCarthy, 5 Petitioner, versus George Bronson.

6 Mr. Cerf.

7 ORAL ARGUMENT OF CHRISTOPHER D. CERF

8 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER

9 MR. CERF: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please
10 the Court:

11 While an inmate in a Connecticut prison, 12 petitioner was sprayed with tear gas and forcibly removed 13 from his cell. On the basis of that single episode, he 14 filed a 1983 action against respondents, who are various 15 officials and guards at the facility. The case was 16 referred to a Federal magistrate, who conducted an 17 evidentiary hearing and on that basis recommended that the 18 case be resolved against petitioner.

19 QUESTION: What was he seeking, Mr. Cerf?
20 Damages?

21 MR. CERF: He sought both damages and injunctive 22 relief, Justice White.

23 The only question presented in this case is 24 whether the reference was proper. In other words, whether 25 a complaint based on a single episode of unconstitutional --

1 unconstitutionally excessive force qualifies as a, quote,
2 "prisoner petition challenging conditions of confinement"
3 within the meaning of section 636(b) of the Federal 4 Magistrate's Act, and is thereby subject to reference 5 without the party's consent.

6 QUESTION: Mr. Cerf, do we take the case with 7 the agreement of both parties that the defendant waived 8 jury trial here?

9 MR. CERF: That issue is not before the case --
10 before the Court, Justice O'Connor.

11 QUESTION: So we decide it as though there was a
12 waiver?

13 MR. CERF: That is correct. Now, I don't think, 14 Justice O'Connor, that the fact that there was a waiver of 15 the jury right here is relevant to the argument we make 16 under the Seventh Amendment. And perhaps I should address 17 that.

18 We think, as an initial matter, that by far the 19 most natural reading of the statutory language is to 20 construe the phrase "prisoner petitions challenging 21 conditions of confinement" to refer to ongoing 22 circumstances or practices, as distinct from a fully 23 consummated, isolated event. We think that conforms with 24 common usage, with this Court's use of the phrase, and 25 with the use of the phrase by Congress in various other

1 statutes.

2           Whatever the outer limits of the definition may 3 be, we think it strains the common meaning beyond the 4 breaking point to suggest that a guard, by virtue of 5 beating one prisoner on one occasion, thereby creates 6 conditions of confinement.

7           But moving to your Seventh Amendment question,
8 Justice O'Connor, in this case respondent has conceded
9 that the magistrate is not empowered to conduct a jury
10 trial at all in cases referred under the prisoner 11 petitions clause, indeed in any case referred without the 12 consent of the parties. At the same time, cases -- 13 because of the rules governing the availability of 14 injunctive relief, cases based on a simple, fully 15 consummated episode, tend to be simple damages actions for 16 which the party is entitled to a trial by jury under the 17 Seventh Amendment.

18           Now, in light of respondent's concession, we 19 think it is just highly unlikely that Congress would have 20 intended to authorize the nonconsensual referral of an 21 entire class of cases for which the jury trial rights so 22 clearly attaches.

23           QUESTION: You can prevent that by demanding a 24 jury trial, can't you?

25           MR. CERF: I -- that is correct. And

1 respondent's position on this, of course, is that Congress
2 wrote a statute by which prisoners are told that entirely
3 against their will they may have a case referred for trial 4 before a magistrate, never bothered to mention that they 5 could entirely avoid the reference simply by timely 6 invocation of a jury trial right.

7 QUESTION: But in this particular case, if the 8 respondent is right, it worked the way Congress wanted it
9 to. Your client had his case referred to a magistrate.
10 He could have prevented the referral by demanding a jury 11 trial. He didn't.

12 MR. CERF: Chief Justice Rehnquist, I would 13 question that that was how Congress wanted it to work. I 14 think that Congress chose the phrase "conditions of 15 confinement" for a reason. It didn't say, all prisoner 16 petitions. It's -- it used what amounts to a term of art.

17 Now, what respondents are trying to sell here is 18 the notion that all prisoner cases are governed under the 19 case, and we -- are governed under the clause. And we 20 think that's unlikely in light of the backgrounds and with 21 amendment concerns.

22 Again, Mr. Chief Justice, we are not asserting 23 an independent Seventh Amendment claim here. What we are 24 suggesting is that, as an interpretive device, the Seventh 25 Amendment is quite useful. And we think that the

1 appropriate test here is that to the extent that a 2 complaint, not at the time that a complaint is filed, but 3 at the time that the case is actually set for trial, seeks 4 and is appropriate for injunctive relief. In other words, 5 it challenges an ongoing or recurrent circumstance or 6 practice that in fact is a petition challenging conditions 7 of confinement.

8 If, on the other hand, the only complaint at the 9 time that the case gets to the point of trial is that an 10 isolated event occurred, essentially a constitutional 11 tort. I don't think that does qualify under the language.

12 QUESTION: If you can waive a trial and you can 13 waive a jury, why can't you waive this?

14 MR. CERF: I suppose one can waive it, Justice
15 Marshall, in the following sense. Under section 636(c), 16 one can consent in any event the trial before a 17 magistrate. There was no consent here, at least as the 18 case comes to the court.

19 QUESTION: So what do you interpret from that, a
20 waiver?

21 MR. CERF: That's the -- Congress deemed that 22 consent rather than a waiver, but in effect it has the 23 same -- it has same consequences.

24 QUESTION: What's so sacred about this that you 25 can't waive it?

1 MR. CERF: I'm not suggesting that the right
2 can't be waived. What I am suggesting here is that 3 Congress wrote a statute that says independent of the 4 choice of litigants, it may be referred to magistrates 5 entirely against their will. And again, we think that 6 that is a rather unlikely thing for it to have done, given 7 that magistrates, as all parties before the court now 8 concede, take the position that magistrates are not 9 empowered to conduct a jury trial.

10 QUESTION: There's a certain incongruity it
11 seems to me in -- in your interpretation. Perhaps it's 12 not an incongruity, but it seems strange at first blush.
13 And that is that what you call a simple damages action
14 based on a one-time thing would go to the district judge.
15 And a major prison structure claim that things are all out 16 of whack at the prison, could go to the magistrate.

17 MR. CERF: Respondents make the -- very much the 18 same argument, as did the court below. And quite frankly,
19 Mr. Chief Justice, I think it rests on some questionable 20 premises. I -- I don't think it could be said that as a 21 class, cases that qualify as conditions cases are more 22 serious than cases based on a single, isolated episode.
23 It's always difficult of course to rank constitutional 24 violations. But to suggest that a claim in which a 25 prisoner was beaten to death is somehow less serious than

1 even a broad based class action seems to me not to be -- 2 not surprising.

3 QUESTION: Well, it's not so much the 4 seriousness of the event, but the amount of discretion
5 that's called for. It seems to me that if you were going 6 to allot these cases by the confidence in the judgment -- 7 presumably you have more confidence in the judgment of a 8 district judge than of a magistrate -- you would say that 9 if you're trying to restructure a court -- a prison
10 system, that kind of a case you'd trust to the discretion 11 of a district judge, whereas you might not trust it to the 12 discretion of a magistrate.

13 MR. CERF: I think in fact the incongruity 14 implicit in the question is somewhat overstated. For 15 example, we're not saying that only class actions qualify 16 under our definition. Not at all. And in addition,
17 Congress authorized the referral of all cases, including 18 those based on specific episodes of misconduct under 19 pretrial and the dispositive motions provisions of the 20 act. And historically, 96 percent in 1990 of -- of 21 prisoner civil rights cases are disposed of even before
22 trial. I think that suggests, Chief Justice Rehnquist, a 23 high level of confidence in magistrates' ability to handle 24 all kinds of cases of all levels of complexity. In 25 addition --

1                   QUESTION: Mr. Cerf, can I interrupt a minute?
2     The -- you're making a plain language kind of an argument.
3     You say that the normal meaning of conditions of 4     confinement suits your description of it. But if I
5     understand your description, if I have a claim that, as a
6     prisoner, for 1 week I was thrown into a dank cell with no 7     toilet facilities, with rats -- abysmal conditions -- for 8     a week, and I bring suit about that one incident. I don't 9     claim that it's general in prison. I don't claim they've 10    done it to me before or will do it to me afterwards. I'm 11    just complaining about that 1 week. You say that is not a 12    suit that relates to conditions of confinement?

13                  MR. CERF: I would say quite frankly, Justice
14    Scalia, that that is the most difficult category of cases
15    to get -- to categorize, wherein you have what I suppose 16    could be described as a past conditions case under any 17    sort of conventional understanding of the phrase --

18                  QUESTION: Well, why do you say it's a past 19    conditions case? You say it's a conditions case only if 20    it's on going and continuing.

21                  MR. CERF: Well, I'm saying that as you posited 22    the hypothetical, Justice Scalia, there was a condition of 23    confinement in the conventional sense of the word in that 24    for a period of time one was exposed to an unconditional 25    circumstance. Under your hypothetical, however, that

1 circumstance has abated and everybody agrees to that.

2 I think frankly I found no such cases in the 3 reported cases. I suspect that's in part because damages 4 actions such as those may very often shake out in 5 qualified immunity grounds. Given the rarity of the case, 6 I think all that would be needed is a rule, and I would 7 err on the side of administrability and say that the 8 cleanest line here -- and again Congress required that 9 some line be drawn -- the cleanest line here would be to 10 say that complaints that at the time of trial seek to have 11 tried an issue that there's an ongoing or at least 12 recurrent circumstance, would qualify under conditions of 13 confinement.

14 QUESTION: Gee, but if clean lines is the 15 criterion, I think -- I think you lose, because that's the 16 main argument that the other side has going for it -- that 17 it's a lot of trouble to draw any of these lines between 18 ongoing and non-ongoing and so forth.

19 MR. CERF: I don't --

20 QUESTION: You can say that any complaint about 21 how you're treating -- treated in prison relates to a 22 condition of your confinement. That's a nice clean line.

23 MR. CERF: It may be a clean line, Justice
24 Scalia. I don't think it's the line that Congress drew.
25 And indeed I think that goes to the -- to the very nub of

1 the case here. Congress simply didn't write a statute 2 that said, all prisoner litigation may be referred to 3 magistrates.

4 QUESTION: Well, but, Mr. Cerf, in the case of 5 Preiser v. Rodriguez, this Court talked about the term
6 "conditions of confinement" and gave some examples there
7 that looked very much like this kind of case, and said
8 that was a matter of a condition of confinement. And I 9 suppose that Congress had in mind trying to alleviate the 10 administrative -- or the burdens on the lower courts of 11 handling prisoner petitions and letting as many of them go 12 to a magistrate as possible. And it would appear that 13 under Preiser we could give a broader interpretation of 14 the term "conditions of confinement."

15 MR. CERF: Let me try to address both of those 16 points, Justice O'Connor. As to Preiser, there's 17 certainly no evidence in the legislative history that 18 Congress was even aware of the Preiser case, much less 19 that it patterned the statute after it. Much less, as I
20 recall in the case, what was at issue there was whether a 21 prisoner who was challenging the deprivation of good time
22 credits could escape the exhaustion requirements of habeas 23 by filing the suit under 1983. And Congress -- and the 24 Court held that to the extent the challenge was to the 25 fact or duration of confinement, exhaustion was required.

1 To the extent it went to conditions of confinement, habeas
2 -- one could bring the claim under 1983.

3 But because the case so clearly fell in the 4 first category, the court had no occasion to actually 5 define what it meant by conditions of confinement. And 6 indeed if the Court goes back and reviews the cases cited
7 as examples in the Preiser decision of so-called 8 conditions case, I think it will find that all of them, at 9 least arguably, fall within the definition that we propose 10 here. In one sense or another, they concerned an ongoing 11 circumstance or practice.

12 The most difficult case for us is the Hainey
13 case. I will concede that, but I think at least arguably 14 falls in our -- in our category.

15 QUESTION: Suppose the prisoner alleges that if 16 the officials will not -- are not enjoined, it is likely 17 the conduct will be repeated. Does that turn it into a 18 conditions of confinement case?

19 MR. CERF: I think it does, Justice Kennedy. In 20 -- in that case, as in any --

21 QUESTION: But don't you almost always have to 22 allege that if you're going to ask for an injunction?

23 MR. CERF: Well, that's correct, and I think 24 that, again, the issue is not what is alleged in the 25 complaint, because the decision is not made at that point.

1 But after the completion of pretrial proceedings that 2 clarified and refined the issue that must actually be 3 tried and the issue is actually set out, then, if at that 4 point, the plaintiff has set out the essential predicates 5 of injunctive relief, and as he suggests they are, that 6 there is an ongoing circumstance or a reasonable 7 likelihood they will recur, I believe that then in fact is 8 a challenge to conditions of confinement.

9 QUESTION: I suppose this is a -- quite a 10 routine and frequent allegation in order to support the 11 claim for injunctive relief, is it not?

12 MR. CERF: It is a routine allegation. There
13 are many, many cases. Whitley v. Albers is the classic 14 paradigmatic example where only damages was sought. And 15 again, that would not qualify as a conditions case under 16 --

17 QUESTION: And I -- and I assume you have to 18 make some such allegation if you're going to ask for 19 injunctive relief.

20 MR. CERF: You would need to indeed. These are 21 often pro se complaints, and I think that some benefit of 22 the doubt may be given to the claimant in many of these 23 cases, but again an injunction was -- an injunction was 24 asked for here. And I don't think that that is 25 controlling as to whether or not it's a conditions case,

1 because at the time that this case went to trial as a
2 result of the various pretrial proceedings, which again
3 are conducted by the magistrate, it was absolutely clear 4 that there was no injunctive claim left in the case.
5 Indeed, the assistant attorney general had argued 6 unequivocally on pretrial motions that, quote, "It does 7 not appear how any injunctive relief would be appropriate 8 to this case." There have been an effort to admit the 9 various prison regulations. The petitioner had made that 10 effort on the eve of trial, and the magistrate had kept 11 them out on the view that this case was about a single 12 incident back in 1983.

13 So, again, just to make sure our position is 14 clear on this, Justice Kennedy, it's not the allegations 15 in the complaint that are controlling. It is what is the 16 issue that must actually be tried.

17 By the way, that is a judgment that would need 18 to be made in any event. In any case on the eve of trial 19 there must be some kind of pretrial decision as to what 20 issues must actually be tried.

21 QUESTION: Well, isn't there one further wrinkle
22 to it, and that is as long as the damage action was kept 23 alive, there could never be a reference in what I would 24 imagine was the run-of-the-mill case in which there's a 25 request for damages as well as an injunction. There could

1 never be a reference except at the potential cost of two 2 trials.

3 MR. CERF: Well --

4 QUESTION: So as a practical matter, it seems to 5 me what you're saying is except in the unusual case in 6 which there is not request for damages based on the past 7 incidents of the practice in question, there never can be 8 a reference.

9 MR. CERF: I -- that -- that's not our position,
10 Justice Souter.

11 QUESTION: But why doesn't it follow from your 12 position? Because it seems to me the only way out of it
13 would be for the court to say, well, we'll take a chance 14 that when the injunctive proceedings are over they'll drop 15 the damage claim. And if the -- if the court doesn't want 16 to take that chance, then the court is going to face two 17 trials or the potentiality of two trials in every 18 instance.

19 MR. CERF: I think that would not be the 20 consequence, and if I -- if I might try to explain that.
21 Because of background Seventh Amendment concerns, we do
22 think that the prisoner petitions clause is a rough proxy
23 for cases that seek and are appropriate for injunctive 24 relief.

25 At the same time, it is not a perfect fit. For

1 reasons discussed previously, if someone includes an 2 injunctive claim in what is otherwise -- what ought 3 properly to be a damages suit -- we think the appropriate 4 path is to have the injunctive claim dismissed prior to 5 trial and to treat it as a specific episodes case.

6 And conversely, to get to your example, if 7 somebody brings a case that is a classic conditions suit
8 or is a conditions suit under our definition and includes 9 an associated damages claim, I do think that nonetheless 10 qualifies as a prisoner petition challenging conditions of 11 confinement within the meaning of the act. I don't think, 12 however, that any imperfections in the fit undermine the 13 basic point.

14 And that basic point is it is simply implausible
15 to believe that Congress would have even authorized the 16 referral of an entire class of cases for -- to which the 17 right so clearly attaches without making -- making some 18 provision for the magistrate to actually conduct a jury 19 trial.

20 QUESTION: Excuse me, I -- it doesn't seem to me 21 you've answered Justice Souter's concern. It isn't the 22 fit he's concerned about. It's the fact that even when 23 the defendant -- when the plaintiff is willing to waive 24 the jury trial, no good comes of this provision whatever 25 so long as there's a claim for damages. Because you must

1 try that claim for damages before a judge. So what's the 2 good of trying -- being able to try the injunction portion 3 before a magistrate?

4 MR. CERF: Well, the good of it --

5 QUESTION: So, in every case where there -- 6 where there's a damage claim, you may as well not have the 7 provision.

8 MR. CERF: I -- again, I -- let me be clear. If 9 there is a damages claim and no jury trial right, and the 10 damages claim is attached to or associated with a 11 conditions claim, we think the magistrate can hear the 12 case. That was the point I was trying to make a moment 13 ago.

14 QUESTION: Oh, well, why is that?

15 MR. CERF: I think that in a sense you have a 16 result that's driven by the statutory language. You have 17 a statute that says conditions of confinement, and if you 18 have a case challenging what everybody would agree to be 19 conditions of confinement -- for example, petitioners
20 generally are not being given enough food and a subclass 21 of the class action alleges that as a result of the 22 inadequate caloric intake they are -- have suffered some 23 damages for which they want compensation -- I think that 24 the language drives that result. And I think that would 25 qualify as a prisoner petitions case.

1           Again, if there is a time of jury trial demand, 2   then either severance would be the -- mandated by the 3   Constitution or the whole case would be tried -- tried by 4   the judge. But that's the imperfection of the fit I was 5   trying to address before. I --

6           QUESTION: I didn't understand that to be your 7   position. Is that the position you took in your brief? I
8   --

9           MR. CERF: That's the position we took in our 10   reply brief, Justice Scalia.

11           I do want to make one point in response to an 12   argument raised by respondents. They suggest that rather 13   cataclysmic results will -- will flow from the issue 14   before the Court today. And I want to suggest to the 15   Court that in my estimation that is not -- not right. All 16   cases of any stripes -- specific episode cases or 17   conditions cases -- may still be referred to the 18   magistrates, and the vast majority of such cases shake out 19   before trial.

20           Indeed, in 1990, about 4 percent of cases
21   actually needed to be tried. Of those, many of course may 22   be tried pursuant to the consent of the parties. Still 23   others will satisfy our definition. And still others must 24   be tried by the district court in any event to the extent
25   there is a timely jury trial demand. As a -- as a

1 practical matter, the number of cases actually affected by 2 the decision today is relatively small.

3 But in any event, I just don't think it's 4 correct to suggest that any interpretation that results in 5 more cases being referred to Federal magistrates is 6 necessarily in accordance with Congress' broad objectives.
7 In expanding the power of Federal magistrates over the 8 years, Congress has been quite aware of the constitutional 9 concerns associated with such delegations and has been 10 appropriately cautious. In our estimation, our view 11 better accommodates both that historic caution and 12 Congress' general objective of expanding the power of 13 magistrates in some, but by not means all, classes of 14 cases.

15 In the end, this is a relatively straightforward 16 statutory case. We think that the plain language at the 17 very least tips in our favor, and accordingly it is 18 respondents' burden and not --

19 QUESTION: Mr. Cerf, can I -- can I ask you a 20 couple more questions about your line?

21 MR. CERF: Sure.

22 QUESTION: I know this was raised in Justice
23 Scalia's question so -- the specific cases referred to in 24 Preiser, do you say each of them, except arguably Haines, 25 was a case that would meet the conditions of confinement

1 definition: the deprivation of legal materials for the 2 particular petition, the inability to -- with the one
3 religious objection in the other case?

4 MR. CERF: Yes, I do. And I -- let me try to 5 recall what those cases were. But the Cooper v. Pate 6 case, for example, was a claim that a petitioner had been 7 deprived of the Koran, and as I read the decisions in the 8 lower courts, the claim was he was still being deprived of 9 it, and therefore, there was sort of an ongoing claim for 10 which an injunction seems to be quite an appropriate 11 remedy.

12 As I recall the --

13 QUESTION: And your line is that if he'd 14 complained of having been deprived of it 6 months ago, but 15 then he eventually got it, it would not longer be a 16 conditions of confinement claim?

17 MR. CERF: That is my claim, unless, of course 18 -- and this is a judgment that would need to be made in 19 any case -- unless of course he had satisfied the City of 20 Los Angeles v. Lyons test of indicating some real and 21 immediate threat that he would --

22 QUESTION: Yes.

23 MR. CERF: -- again be exposed to that 24 unconstitutional conduct.

25 QUESTION: And conversely, in the case before

1 us, if the prison had a rule that said when prisoners
2 refuse to cell, it's appropriate to use tear gas to get 3 them out of their cells. Which is it then?

4 MR. CERF: If there's a rule that's saying when 5 a prisoner refuses to leave the cell, then it's 6 appropriate? Again, a judgment would need to be made in 7 that case as to whether there was some reasonable 8 likelihood that that regulation would be applied to the 9 person who -- who was bringing the case.

10 And I -- I do want to suggest --

11 QUESTION: Well, it had been applied, as it has 12 here. I mean -- see the thing that's different about this 13 case is there's no such rule. But would it be a different 14 case if there were a rule and it had been applied in this 15 case?

16 MR. CERF: It probably would in this sense, 17 Justice Stevens. I think the City of Los Angeles test is 18 going to be applied more generously in the prison context.
19 When you're talking about the citizens in a city at large, 20 it's somewhat difficult to actually demonstrate to the 21 satisfaction of a court a real likelihood that one will 22 again be exposed to even an ongoing regulation, policy, or 23 practice.

24 If you have a regulation in a prison context, 25 one can think of extreme examples. But in the typical

1 case, a prisoner, not being able to leave of course, has 2 some relatively high likelihood he or she will be exposed 3 to that regulation and application.

4 QUESTION: Well, isn't -- isn't the -- isn't the 5 prisoner the master of his own complaint? Even if there 6 is a regulation, suppose he doesn't challenge it? He 7 doesn't care about the regulation. He just cares about 8 what he's been subjected to. Are you saying that even if 9 he doesn't ask for elimination of the regulation, even if 10 he -- all he asks for is money -- is money damages for the 11 past violation, it would still be a condition --

12 MR. CERF: No.

13 QUESTION: -- of confinement case by virtue of 14 the mere existence of the regulation?

15 MR. CERF: Not at all. No.

16 QUESTION: Okay.

17 MR. CERF: What I am suggesting is one needs to 18 take in -- take into account what is being challenged 19 and the nature of the relief and the nature of the claim.
20 All of those are --

21 QUESTION: So it's up to him. He can make it a 22 condition of confinement case by objecting to the 23 regulation, or if he doesn't want to object to the 24 regulation -- just wants to object to the application of 25 the regulation to him, it becomes not a condition of 1 confinement case.

2 MR. CERF: Well, to a degree that true of any 3 litigant I would think, Justice Scalia. One can -- in the 4 City of Los Angeles, that happened not to be a class
5 action. I believe that damages, at least as the case came 6 to the court, were not at issue. One structures one's 7 complaint to get the relief that one wants. But I don't 8 think that that is --

9 QUESTION: Well, but Mr. -- let me go a step
10 further. Supposing the complaint is I had inadequate 11 dental care. I had a tooth ache on Friday and I couldn't 12 get a dentist. And that's the sole charge, a single 13 incident. And the defense is we have a regulation that 14 the dentist is available on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday 15 only -- something like -- so the real issue turns into the 16 regulation. Is that the conditions of confinement or 17 isolated incident?

18 MR. CERF: I suspect that would be -- if I
19 understand the hypothetical -- that would be a conditions 20 case. I mean, I think the judgment there would be is 21 there a reasonable likelihood that that practice is going 22 to be applied to this prisoner. And I would think it 23 almost inescapable that it would be.

24 QUESTION: But he doesn't really care about he 25 rule. All he cares about his own toothache.

1 MR. CERF: Well, if he's -- if he's -- let me be 2 absolutely clear. If he's only seeking damage --

3 QUESTION: Yes.

4 MR. CERF: -- he said for 4 days I had -- I had 5 a toothache and I suffered terrible pain and I want
6 compensation for that, and that's all he asking for, no, I
7 don't think that is a conditions case.

8 QUESTION: Even though the defense is the reason
9 he didn't get it is because we have this standard 10 regulation that this is the way we treat all prisoners.
11 They don't get the dentist except on certain days.

12 MR. CERF: That's -- that's correct, Justice 13 Stevens. That's the line that I would --

14 QUESTION: Your rule then is simply a rule of 15 pleading. If he -- if he is foolish enough to mention the 16 regulation, we've got a conditions case. If he is laconic 17 enough just to mention what happened to him on Friday, we 18 don't. I mean, it's just a matter of pleading.

19 MR. CERF: Well, I don't suggest that it's only 20 a matter of pleading, Justice Souter. I must however take 21 the position that pleading is relevant to the analysis, as 22 it is in the case of any litigant.

23 QUESTION: But if that's what --

24 QUESTION: It might turn in to be a conditions
25 case in any event, because if the prison lost in Justice

1 Stevens' hypothetical, I'm sure it would be collateral
2 estoppel. And so it becomes a conditions case anyway.

3 MR. CERF: It may become that. I think that the 4 key point in time here is at the time that the decision 5 must be made, that is, when the case is about to go to 6 trial. At that point, the magistrate has a clear sense of 7 what the issues are to be tried. Now, if at that point he 8 understands the defense is being raised and the complaint
9 -- what's left of the complaint after pretrial motions 10 practice if in fact the challenge is to an ongoing or 11 recurrent circumstances, then I think that is a challenge 12 to conditions of confinement.

13 If I might, Mr. Chief Justice, may I reserve the 14 balance of my time?

15 QUESTION: Yes, you may, Mr. Cerf.

16 General Blumenthal, we'll hear now from you.

17 ORAL ARGUMENT OF RICHARD BLUMENTHAL

18 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENTS

19 MR. BLUMENTHAL: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
20 please the Court:

21 The most reasonable, logical, and workable
22 interpretation of this statute is the one that was adopted
23 by the Second Circuit which would include all grievances 24 occurring during prison confinement. It is supported by 25 the statutory text and legislative history. It doesn't

1     undercut the Seventh Amendment. It offers full protection
2     to any prisoner's Seventh Amendment right. And it
3     fulfills most importantly what was Congress' purpose in 4     the 1976 amendments, which was to broaden the authority of 5     the magistrates and ease of the burden of the Federal 6     district court workload and, equally importantly, broaden 7     the discretion of Federal judges to refer matters to 8     magistrates.

9             QUESTION: You say the Seventh Amendment right
10     would be protected I suppose just by the prisoner 11     demanding a jury trial in a damages case?

12            MR. BLUMENTHAL: Like -- like every litigant --

13            QUESTION: Is that right?

14            MR. BLUMENTHAL: That is correct, Justice White.
15     Like every litigant, a prisoner has the burden of 16     demanding a jury trial within the limitations of rule 38.

17            QUESTION: And so there would be no reference?

18            MR. BLUMENTHAL: If there were a jury trial
19     demand, timely made, there would be no reference.

20            QUESTION: And to that extent the language of 21     the act would just be beside the point.

22            MR. BLUMENTHAL: It would not be beside the 23     point, with all due respect, Justice White. It would 24     enable a reference in the absence of a jury demand --

25            QUESTION: Well, in those -- in the damages case

1 where there's a demand for jury trial, the aim of Congress
2 just wouldn't be effective then?

3 MR. BLUMENTHAL: Well, I think we have to assume 4 that Congress knew that -- and the cases are pretty clear
5 on this -- that pursuant to (b)(1)(B), there cannot be a 6 reference for a jury trial by the magistrate. And we 7 don't differ at all with the petitioner on that point.
8 But we also I think have to assume that Congress had in 9 mind not the difference between a jury trial case and a 10 nonjury trial case, but the dichotomy that, as was 11 referred to earlier, exists under Preiser v. Rodriguez.
12 In Preiser the Court decided -- this Court decided that 13 there was a clear dichotomy between habeas cases on the 14 one hand where there was a challenge to the fact or 15 duration of confinement and those cases, on the other 16 hand, where there was a challenge to conditions of 17 confinement. And the Court did cite, not only Haines v.
18 Kerner, which was a case involving solitary confinement
19 and a claim for damages arising out of solitary
20 confinement, but also the Wilberly case, which was a 21 challenge to prison clothing.

22 So the Court clearly had in mind that broad 23 distinction and so did Congress, because that was the kind
24 of distinction that would serve its aim of broadening 25 discretion, broadening the discretion of Congress to -- of 1 the court to refer to magistrates.

2 And I think we need to be very clear about what 3 is involved in this particular case. To refer to this 4 case a single episode case involving damages only is 5 simply wrong. Throughout this case, indeed in the joint 6 appendix incorporating the magistrate's findings at 7 paragraph 56 and 57, there is a clear finding by the 8 magistrate as to the existence of directives, pursuant to 9 which and consistent with, which action here was taken
10 against the petitioner. And it was one of the conditions 11 of confinement, as the Second Circuit concluded, that the 12 petitioner would be subject to --

13 QUESTION: But I guess the other side would say, 14 General, that this plaintiff didn't care about those 15 conditions. All he cared about was the single incident.
16 Whether the case involves the conditions depends upon what 17 the plaintiff is seeking relief from. If he's seeking 18 relief -- monetary relief for a past event -- it doesn't 19 involve conditions. It's a rational line I suppose.

20 MR. BLUMENTHAL: The petitioner in this case 21 very much cared about the prison directives. Indeed, he 22 directly challenged them in every complaint -- his initial 23 complaint, his amended complaint, his second amended 24 complaint. As Exhibits 2 and 3 before the magistrate, he 25 offered the written directives which he sought against the

1 opposition of the State of Connecticut through an FOIA
2 request. So he was very intensely interested in the 3 conditions of confinement as embodied in those 4 regulations, Justice Scalia.

5 And that is very much a matter of the record
6 before this Court. Underlying the Second Circuit's 7 opinion is the Preiser dichotomy, and we have to assume 8 also underlying the distinction that Congress drew in the 9 structure of this statute is that same dichotomy. Because 10 Congress, when it wanted to limit the authority of 11 magistrates who refer certain kinds of issues or matters, 12 clearly did so. It did so in (b)(1)(A).

13 QUESTION: General Blumenthal, if -- taking the 14 Preiser dichotomy for a moment -- if a plaintiff has a 15 habeas claim, wanting to shorten his time in jail -- get 16 out of jail, that is referable to a magistrate by a 17 separate provision of the act?

18 MR. BLUMENTHAL: It is referable under that 19 provision of the act that is provided for in (b)(1)(B).
20 But it is referred to separately in the act, and clearly 21 embodied in the structure in the act is that dichotomy
22 which Congress saw this Court making.

23 QUESTION: So under -- under your interpretation
24 both sides of the Preiser against Rodriguez types of 25 complaints are referable to magistrates, albeit by two

1 different provisions?

2 MR. BLUMENTHAL: Yes, that's correct, Mr. Chief 3 Justice. And Congress did place limits in (b)(1)(A) on 4 the kinds of matters that could be referred. It also,
5 when it wanted to refer to a pattern or practice, did so
6 for example in 42 U.S. Code 1997. It referred to a 7 pattern or practice. In the Rico statute, it referred to 8 a pattern of racketeering activity. When conditions or a 9 pattern of action were what Congress sought to deal with, 10 it did so very explicitly.

11 And there is nothing in this statute -- nothing 12 at all -- nothing in the plain language of this statute or 13 in the legislative history that mentions single episode or 14 continuing, pervasive, ongoing conditions or that sets up 15 that kind of dichotomy.

16 QUESTION: But on the other hand, is there
17 anything in the legislative history that mentions Preiser?

18 MR. BLUMENTHAL: There is nothing, Justice
19 Stevens, that --

20 QUESTION: Really the legislative history is 21 kind of a draw I guess, isn't it?

22 MR. BLUMENTHAL: Well, in all honesty, the 23 legislative history is pretty much silent on this --

24 QUESTION: Yes.

25 MR. BLUMENTHAL: -- subject. And what we have

1 to do -- what -- with all due respect -- what the Court
2 must do in this instance is look to what the purpose of 3 Congress was so clearly, which was to give -- to give 4 courts maximum discretion in referring matters to 5 magistrates.

6 QUESTION: Maximum but really not unlimited
7 either. There are limits on it.

8 Let me ask you this about the jury trial. I 9 don't understand your opponent to be arguing that there is 10 a violation of the constitutional right. What he's saying 11 is it's somewhat anomalous to say that in order to avoid a 12 reference to a magistrate that the prisoner must make a 13 jury trial. So that unlike a lot -- if the reference is 14 impermissible without consent, he could normally get the 15 trial before the judge.

16 But he doesn't have that -- there are three 17 alternatives, the magistrate, the judge, or the jury. He 18 can avoid the magistrate by insisting on the jury, but 19 there's no way in which he can be sure that he can avoid a 20 magistrate without making that demand.

21 MR. BLUMENTHAL: And that clearly --

22 QUESTION: Which is kind of anomalous.

23 MR. BLUMENTHAL: Well, I don't know that I would 24 agree that it's anomalous, because I think that it was the 25 intent of Congress that there be certain nonconsensual

1 references.

2 QUESTION: Right.

3 MR. BLUMENTHAL: And that where there is no
4 objection -- no timely demand for a jury, it's perfectly
5 proper under (b)(1)(B) for there to be a reference to a 6 magistrate by the district judge. The statute doesn't 7 draw a distinction, doesn't constrain discretion as to 8 those cases that, on the one hand, all of which have to be 9 referred to one place or the other. It doesn't say all 10 single episode cases have to be -- have go to the district
11 judge. It doesn't say that all damage claims have to go 12 to a district judge.

13 The Congress really was relying on the sound 14 discretion of the courts to protect those rights, and it 15 didn't distinguish either between important cases or 16 unimportant cases, between big cases and small cases.
17 That distinction would have been equally blurred and 18 difficult to apply.

19 In protecting those Seventh Amendment rights,
20 the petitioner and any other litigant would have the clear
21 right to demand a jury and thereby avoid reference to a 22 magistrate. But that would be for the purpose of 23 conducting a jury trial, not to give the petitioner or 24 anyone else the ability to choose between the -- between 25 one judicial officer or another, and thereby in effect not

1     only frame his complaint but make the decision for the 2     courts as to which of those judicial officers would be 3     chosen.

4             This is a case I think that illustrates very 5     dramatically the difficulty of drawing this distinction
6     between a single episode on one hand and a continuing 7     condition on the other, a claim for damages which was 8     involved, and a claim for injunctive relief. But it also 9     illustrates well the fact that there is a process 10    difficulty with drawing that distinction, which is that 11    anywhere along the line, sui sponte at the court of 12    appeals level, as happened in Clark v. Poulton, this 13    distinction could be raised.

14            And it would be according to this Court's 15    rulings, and according to the -- most of the courts below, 16    it would be jurisdictional. And as a consequence, if it 17    were successfully raised by whatever party or by the court
18    itself, the case would have to go back if there were a 19    conclusion that the distinction was erroneously drawn.
20    And it would begin all over again.

21            What would happen in this case is that 8 days'
22    worth of hearing before the magistrate, 14 pages of docket 23    entries, a massive case even though it seems like a single 24    incidence case, a simple case involving damages. Not so 25    at all. This case consumed a great of time on the part of

1 the magistrate, on the part of the district court. And 2 there are reasons of it relating to simply the 3 excruciating administrative difficulty that would arise 4 from adopting the distinction that is advanced here by the 5 petitioner.

6 I think it's also illuminating to note how this 7 case really came here and how the conflict in the circuits
8 arose. The story of the conflict begins with Judge
9 Swygert's concurring opinion in Hill v. Jenkins. Hill v.
10 Jenkins didn't even turn on this issue. It involved a 11 case in which a magistrate had failed to make any kind of 12 findings or recommendations. There was no de novo review.
13 Error was found for that reason.

14 Justice Swygert, in a concurring opinion, 15 beginning with the word "presumably" and then saying what 16 he thought this distinction was between single episode in 17 continuing conditions cases, in the next four or five 18 lines advanced the distinction without any citation either 19 to other cases or legislative history, concluded that any 20 other interpretation would be, to quote his concurring 21 opinion, strained.

22 The distinction then acquired a kind of life of 23 its own.

24 QUESTION: In what year was that do you
25 remember, Mr. -- General Blumenthal? Roughly how long

1      ago?

2                   QUESTION: 1979.

3                   QUESTION: '79.

4                   MR. BLUMENTHAL: 1979 in Seventh Circuit. Yes,
5      Mr. Chief Justice.

6                   The distinction then acquired, as I mentioned 7      earlier, a life of its own. It was cited sometimes in 8      decisions that really didn't involve the issue at all on 9      both sides. At this point, the Ninth, Tenth, and Fourth 10     Circuits have adopted it, the Fourth Circuit being 11     somewhat ambiguous because it hasn't -- it started to 12     adopt this distinction in a footnote in a case that Wimmer
13     -- Wimmer case that didn't really involve the issue.

14                  On the other hand, the Eighth and Sixth 15     Circuits, along with the Second Circuit, have gone the 16     other way. The only reasoned analysis of this distinction 17     and of the merits on either side are contained in the 18     Clark v. Poulton opinion for the majority, in which there 19     is a very strong dissent and in which there is now being 20     considered a petition for rehearing with a suggestion en 21     banc. And of course, the opinion of Judge Neumann for the 22     Second Circuit below.

23                  We contend that our distinction, which is drawn 24     clearly, naturally, logically -- the distinction adopted 25     by the Second Circuit is one that serves the best -- the

1 true goals of Congress in this statute. A goal that has 2 been endorsed and articulated by this Court in United 3 States v. Raddatz, which involved the question of whether 4 a motion for suppression hearing could be referred to a 5 magistrate.

6 The Court concluded that it could, that there
7 did not have to be a new hearing before the district 8 judge, and that is was the district judge who should have 9 discretion under the statute, because that fit the 10 structure of the statute, the purpose of Congress to 11 broaden the authority of magistrates, to ease the workload
12 of the district judges, consistent with Seventh Amendment
13 rights, because the prisoners could continue to demand a 14 jury trial and do often. But that discretion on the part 15 of the district judge would exist whenever and wherever 16 there were no timely jury demand.

17 I would just conclude by citing for this Court
18 also the dissent that is contained in the Clark v. Poulton
19 case when Judge Anderson, which I think strikingly 20 illustrates the incongruity or anomaly -- to use two words 21 that have been used today -- of the petitioner's approach.
22 A single beating case would have to go to a district
23 judge, but a case alleging daily beating of prisoners
24 would go inexorably to a magistrate.

25 That cannot be in the interest of anyone, not

1 the judiciary, not the public, not even perhaps of 2 prisoners, because let's remember that cases would have to 3 be referred if they involved a single episode claim for 4 damages, under petitioner's theory, even where the 5 prisoner himself or herself might want to be heard by the 6 magistrate at the prison.

7 It's very unlikely that the district judges
8 would go out to the prison, but there would be great 9 advantages, and were in this case, to having cases of this 10 type heard at the prison where evidence would be 11 accessible, documents would be there, and the difficulties 12 of going to court and having that same accessibility would 13 be avoided.

14 QUESTION: General Blumenthal --

15 QUESTION: I don't it has anything to do with 16 this case, but the average prisoner would rather get out 17 of prison than to have the case tried there.

18 MR. BLUMENTHAL: And indeed, Justice Marshall, 19 the interestingly -- the (inaudible) initially offered by 20 the petitioner here was $100,000 in damages, injunctive
21 relief against the directives, and get me out of prison.

22 QUESTION: Judge Hastings used to refer to that 23 as the holiday in court -- rightful holiday in court.

24 (Laughter.)

25 QUESTION: General, what you -- you know what

1 you say about the practicalities may be true. Congress
2 surely could have picked better language to do what you -
3 - what you say it's done. I mean the phrase "petitions 4 challenging conditions of employment," one doesn't refer 5 to -- you know if there's an automobile accident and 6 somebody sues for damages, you don't say that -- that I am 7 challenging the other person's driving of a car.

8 A petition challenging something really does 9 call to mind a request for declaratory or injunctive 10 relief. When you're suing for money, I don't know that 11 you say you're challenging something. Very strange 12 terminology for what you have in mind here.

13 MR. BLUMENTHAL: Well, the Second Circuit
14 concluded, and of course we agree, that what Congress had 15 in mind was the language of Preiser even though Preiser is 16 not cited in the legislative history, and perhaps it had 17 not yet become a term of art. But conditions of 18 confinement, in the context of prison life, in the context 19 of being confined, very arguably extends to anything that 20 happens while that person is subject to the guard and care 21 of the confining official.

22 QUESTION: I understand. I'm not focusing on 23 conditions of confinement now. I'm focusing on the words 24 "petitions challenging." And it seems to me that that 25 does have a connotation of asking you to stop, asking for

1 an injunction or -- or a declaratory rather than asking
2 for damages for something that's already happened. Can 3 you think of any other context in which you'd refer to a
4 damage action as an action in which somebody challenged
5 something. I mean --

6 MR. BLUMENTHAL: We -- we --

7 QUESTION: -- you know, if you socked me in the 8 nose, I don't bring a suit challenging your punching me in 9 the nose. That would be a very strange way to put it.

10 MR. BLUMENTHAL: We have cited in our brief the 11 definition contained in the dictionary, the -- some 12 historical references and uses of the term "petition" to 13 describe actions that may not involve equitable relief.
14 But it would have been highly unlikely that Congress would 15 have meant to circumscribe and cut out an entire class of 16 action.

17 And indeed, petitioner concedes that the fit is 18 not perfect without very clearly indicating its intent to 19 do so. And the concessions that petitioner makes in 20 footnotes 3 and footnote 9 very considerably eviscerate 21 whatever argument could have been made on the basis of the 22 distinction between equitable relief on the one hand and 23 damages relief on the other hand.

24 The petitioner concedes in those footnotes that 25 ancillary claims for damages, as he refers to them, can be

1 referred to the magistrate when they involve injunctive 2 relief. And what is ancillary in one jurist's view from 3 what it is in another jurist's view. And in footnote 9 4 mentions the instance of a single petitioner who was 5 deprived -- allegedly deprived of constitutionally 6 satisfactory meals as opposed to pervasive conditions.
7 That distinction again seems to be breaking down.

8 So we would contend that as opposed to the -- 9 the distinction offered by petitioner which is novel, 10 imported, and really unworkable, that adopted by the 11 Second Circuit is a natural, logical, reasonable one, 12 consistent with the purpose of this statute and with the 13 Seventh Amendment and other statutory provisions.

14 If there are no further questions, Mr. Chief 15 Justice, that concludes my argument.

16 QUESTION: Thank you, General Blumenthal.

17 Mr. Cerf, do you have rebuttal? You have 3 18 minutes remaining.

19 MR. CERF: Mr. Chief Justice, we have no
20 rebuttal. Thank you very kindly.

21 CHIEF JUSTICE REHNQUIST: Very well. The case
22 is submitted.

23 (Whereupon, at 10:49 a.m., the case in the 24 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
