1 PROCEEDINGS

2 (10:02 a.m.)

3 CHIEF JUSTICE REHNQUIST: We'll hear argument
4 first this morning in No. 91-1677, the Commissioner of 5 Internal Revenue v. Keystone Consolidated Industries.

6 Mr. Wright.

7 ORAL ARGUMENT OF CHRISTOPHER J. WRIGHT

8 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER

9 MR. WRIGHT: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
10 please the Court:

11 Under the funding rules established by ERISA, 12 Keystone Consolidated Industries owed $9.6 million to the 13 pension trust it sponsored in 1983. Keystone lost $21
14 million that year and decided not to pay the pension trust 15 in cash. Instead, it contributed five truck terminals to 16 fulfill its funding obligation to the pension trust. The 17 next year it contributed real estate to partly satisfy its 18 funding obligation to the plan.

19 Now, Keystone recognized that these transfers of 20 property were sales or exchanges for purposes of the 21 income tax laws, but Keystone maintains that they are not 22 sales or exchanges for purposes of 26 U.S.C.
23 4975(c)(1)(A). Subsection (c)(1)(A), the provision at 24 issue in this case, bars any direct or indirect sale or 25 exchange between an employer and the pension plan it

1 sponsors.

2 QUESTION: Mr. Wright, can I just get one
3 question out of the way early? Would the trustee of the 4 fund have been empowered to refuse to accept that kind of 5 payment and insisted on cash?

6 MR. WRIGHT: Yes, the trustee could have. First 7 --

8 QUESTION: So, this was acceptable to the trust 9 to accept the assets in this form.

10 MR. WRIGHT: In this case, the trustee, who is 11 also a director of Keystone Consolidated Industries, 12 accepted the property.

13 QUESTION: You mentioned the director. Is there 14 any claim that the -- I mean, does that make a difference 15 in the legal issue whether the director is one who might 16 not be totally independent or something like that?

17 MR. WRIGHT: No. There might also be a 18 fiduciary duty breach action in a case of this sort. In 19 fact, many such breaches were alleged and found by the 20 district court in some related litigation, but this issue 21 --

22 QUESTION: But do we -- for the purpose --

23 MR. WRIGHT: -- the issue before this Court, did 24 not focus on the --

25 QUESTION: For the purpose of the legal issue we

1 have, is it correct that we should assume, A, that the 2 trustee has -- is an independent person and, B, has the 3 authority to refuse to take anything except cash?

4 MR. WRIGHT: Yes. Yes, and it's probably the 5 case that the trustee probably should have refused to 6 accept this property.

7 QUESTION: That we shouldn't --

8 MR. WRIGHT: But they did not.

9 QUESTION: All right.

10 QUESTION: Mr. Wright, I take it there's no
11 question of the valuation of these properties.

12 MR. WRIGHT: No. We do not contend that the 13 property was overvalued here.

14 QUESTION: So that that possibility of abuse is 15 not in the case.

16 MR. WRIGHT: It's not in this particular case.
17 That's right.

18 QUESTION: I suppose you would prefer or 19 Congress would prefer, according to your theory, that the 20 properties be sold first and the proceeds contributed to 21 the --

22 MR. WRIGHT: Exactly, Your Honor, and --

23 QUESTION: Any why is that? To put the capital 24 gain, if there is such, on the taxpayer rather than on the 25 --

1 MR. WRIGHT: No, Your Honor. The capital gain
2 -- Keystone acknowledged that this is a sale or exchange 3 under the capital gain provision. We agree with that.
4 Under anyone's interpretation, the tax consequences of 5 this contribution to Keystone are the same here.

6 If I may return to your earlier point, however, 7 one of the key things I'd like to make clear here this 8 morning is that subsection (c)(1)(A) and the other 9 prohibited transaction rules are phrased categorically.
10 There is no question that even if a sale is for fair 11 market value and everyone agrees, the language of the 12 statute which prohibits any direct or indirect sale or 13 exchange between an employer and a pension plan prohibits 14 that transaction.

15 QUESTION: What I'm trying to get at is why 16 would the Congress so provide.

17 MR. WRIGHT: Oh. I think Congress made that 18 clear. It was replacing the arm's-length transaction 19 rule, which had prevailed prior to ERISA, with this 20 categorical rule because transactions of this sort are 21 inherently susceptible to abuse.

22 You have already suggested one of the ways that 23 abuse occurs and, in fact, did occur in the Wood case, the 24 Fourth Circuit case where the court reached the conclusion 25 that the Government agrees with. In that case, the 1 employer intentionally overvalued the property it 2 contributed to its plan.

3 QUESTION: While I have you interrupted, was 4 either this case or the Wood case in the tax court 5 reviewed by the full court?

6 MR. WRIGHT: No, no. No, Your Honor.

7 QUESTION: Mr. Wright, I take it that the IRS
8 manual until 1989 indicated that a transfer such as this 9 was allowable.

10 MR. WRIGHT: Not exactly, Your Honor. What the 11 IRS manual said was that -- and let me make clear that 12 this is, of course, an in-house manual intended for 13 auditors, and everyone agrees it has no legal binding 14 authority.

15 What the manual said was -- first, it had a 16 sentence that said that if the terms of a plan allow, a 17 pension plan may accept property. It then had an example.
18 It said, for instance, a profit sharing plan may accept 19 stock from the employer.

20 Now, those --

21 QUESTION: Did the terms of this plan allow the 22 transfer?

23 MR. WRIGHT: Not as far as I know, Your Honor.

24 And, in fact, another point that I want to make 25 clear today is that there is a big difference in the 1 pension area between defined benefit plans, the sort of 2 plans Keystone sponsored, and defined contribution plans 3 like profit sharing plans, the plan discussed in the 4 example in the manual.

5 QUESTION: Well, was there anything in this plan 6 that addressed the subject of the nature of the annual 7 contribution?

8 MR. WRIGHT: Not as far as I know, Your Honor.
9 We would take the position that if a defined benefit plan
10 allowed contributions of property to fulfill funding 11 obligations, that that provision of the plan would be 12 contrary to the terms of ERISA.

13 QUESTION: Well, the manual didn't really refer 14 to that distinction.

15 MR. WRIGHT: No. No, Your Honor, it did not, 16 but the example --

17 QUESTION: And so, if anyone -- if any taxpayer 18 were looking at the IRS' own manual, they would have 19 thought that if the pension accepted this property, it 20 would have been all right?

21 MR. WRIGHT: Well, Your Honor, I think that if 22 anyone went through the IRS manual, they should have been 23 alerted by the example which discussed a defined 24 contribution plan, and they should have -- it is our 25 position that contributions of property may well be

1 permissible to defined contribution plans. Those plans 2 differ from --

3 QUESTION: Why is that, Mr. Wright? Because 4 there's no sale or exchange?

5 MR. WRIGHT: Yes, Your Honor. A --

6 QUESTION: There is no sale or exchange because 7 there's no obligation to contribute.

8 MR. WRIGHT: Exactly.

9 QUESTION: Isn't there an obligation to 10 contribute some way or other than in the plan, i.e., the 11 trust instrument itself?

12 MR. WRIGHT: In a defined contribution plan?

13 QUESTION: Yes.

14 MR. WRIGHT: Frequently, no, Your Honor.

15 QUESTION: They're just making gratuitous gifts?

16 MR. WRIGHT: They are not gratuitous gifts
17 because they're deferred compensation to the employees, 18 but as far as the plan is concerned, they're gratuitous 19 gifts.

20 QUESTION: But they're deferred compensation
21 because they're obligated under some contract --

22 MR. WRIGHT: No, Your Honor. The way defined 23 contribution plans are frequently established is that the 24 employer basically sets up individual accounts for each 25 participant. Now, the plan may call for -- it may call

1 for no contributions at all. It may simply set up a 2 mechanism for distributing whatever contributions are 3 made. It may also call for a percentage of profits to be 4 contributed each year.

5 But these plans also almost always allow for 6 excess contributions if the employer wants to contribute 7 more than it has promised, if in fact it has promised 8 anything. Those sorts of contributions are not required 9 by any contract with the pension plan or any contract at 10 all. And so --

11 QUESTION: Is it characteristic in those cases 12 that there is no provision in the plan for crediting any 13 excess contributions to -- let's say, to a future year's 14 obligation, if there would be an obligation?

15 MR. WRIGHT: Your Honor, in a defined
16 contribution plan, there is no future year's contribution.
17 Section 412 of title 26, which sets out the minimum 18 funding rules, applies only to defined benefit plans, the 19 sorts of plans Keystone sponsored. It has no bearing on 20 individual account plans.

21 Let me add in this connection --

22 QUESTION: But the contract can provide, I mean, 23 whether the statute provides it or not. The contract can 24 provide for future year payments.

25 Let's assume one that says you shall make this

1 much of a contribution every year, and you may, in 2 addition, make whatever beyond that you wish. So, in year
3 one, the employer makes the minimum plus a lot. I think 4 the question asked is whether that excess can be credited 5 to the next year's. That would be entirely up to the 6 terms of the contract, wouldn't it?

7 MR. WRIGHT: That would be, Your Honor. Now, 8 I'm told that in many of these plans, what's -- if 9 something is mandated, what's mandated is a percentage of 10 profits each year. So, in that particular situation, 11 presumably you wouldn't be able to credit those for future 12 years.

13 But let me say in this connection that defined 14 contribution plans are not some tail wagging the dog here.
15 They actually outnumber defined benefit pension plans and 16 are a very important part of the pension scheme here.

17 QUESTION: Well, in --

18 QUESTION: Mr. Wright, (c)(1)(A) talks about 19 prohibited transactions, and there's a tax imposed on them 20 of 5 percent. Are there any other consequences of 21 prohibited transactions other than that they are taxed at 22 a rate of 5 percent?

23 MR. WRIGHT: Well, if Keystone -- there's an 24 additional tax if Keystone doesn't ultimately correct the 25 transaction. It's actually a 100 percent tax, but

1 Keystone can correct the transaction even after it loses 2 in this Court. So, in fact, it's very unlikely that the 3 100 percent tax will ever get levied.

4 There could be a fiduciary breach action, as I
5 think I've already indicated, against the fiduciary 6 alleging that it should not have accepted the property.

7 QUESTION: That would -- that could be based on 8 the fact that that was a prohibited transaction under the 9 Internal Revenue Code?

10 MR. WRIGHT: It certainly could, and even 11 independent of that, it could be based on the fact that 12 the fiduciary simply shouldn't have accepted this sort of 13 property.

14 In this particular case, the truck terminals
15 were quite illiquid, although the -- I think the reason 16 Keystone didn't sell them and contribute the proceeds, 17 which is what the Government thinks an employer should do, 18 is because it was trying to sell them. They were hard to 19 sell. In fact, the pension trust tried to sell them 20 immediately, but it took 3 and a half years for the plan 21 to sell one of the truck terminals.

22 And, of course, in addition, two of the truck
23 terminals were subject to exclusive listing agreements 24 calling for the payment of 5 percent sales commission to 25 brokers. Real property is not easy to sell.

1 And, Justice Blackmun, I was trying to get this 2 out as a second example of what Congress was clearly 3 concerned about in this area. Besides the more easy to 4 understand, straight abuse of overvaluing the property, 5 what Keystone, in effect, did here was find a buyer for 6 its truck terminals and transfer the transaction costs of 7 sale to the pension trust along with them.

8 QUESTION: May I ask? There are multiple 9 terminals here. I want to be sure I understand your 10 position. Supposing the funding obligation was $100,000
11 and they had five terminals, each worth $100,000 fair 12 market value, and they transferred all five of them.
13 Would the four that were not necessary to discharge the 14 obligation also be sales or exchanges within your --

15 MR. WRIGHT: Yes, and let me say that that's a 16 harder issue that's not presented in this case. But the 17 Fifth Circuit said in this case -- in the Fifth Circuit, 18 we concentrated on defined benefit plans, and we said,
19 look it, this is an easy case. The contribution here 20 fulfills a funding obligation. Under the black letter law 21 for 50 years in the tax area, it's a sale or exchange.
22 And the Fifth Circuit said, well, any contribution to a 23 defined benefit plan necessarily satisfies a funding 24 contribution, if not this year, next year. It totally 25 overlooked defined contribution plans.

1 Now, those excess contributions are admittedly a 2 more difficult case for us. They do, in fact, satisfy in 3 effect a future funding obligation. On the other hand, at 4 the moment the contribution is made, the plan does not 5 actually have a right to go in and sue for the truck 6 terminals.

7 Now, the Department of Labor -- under the 8 division of authority, it's the Department of Labor that 9 actually has the primary responsibility among the three 10 agencies that administer ERISA for construing this 11 provision. And it has issued -- in 1981, that is, 2 years
12 before the transactions at issue, it issued an opinion 13 letter in a case indistinguishable from this one in all 14 respects saying that the contribution of property to a 15 defined benefit plan to satisfy a funding obligation is a 16 prohibited sale or exchange.

17 In 1990, it issued an opinion letter discussing 18 a voluntary contribution to a defined contribution plan of 19 the sort I have talked, a contribution that fulfills no 20 current or future funding obligation.

21 QUESTION: How did it deal with section -- what 22 is it -- 4975(f)(3)?

23 MR. WRIGHT: It explained that the -- that 24 provision, which prohibits any contribution of mortgaged 25 property, serves the following role. In the situation at

1 issue in the 1990 transaction, the excess contribution to 2 a defined contribution plan, that contribution is not 3 prohibited by subsection (c)(1)(A), but subsection (f)(3) 4 serves the additional purpose of prohibiting transfers of 5 mortgaged property to any sort of pension plan under any 6 circumstances.

7 And that's why, contrary to what the Fifth
8 Circuit said, our interpretation of this provision does 9 not render (f)(3) or any other provision superfluous. It 10 prohibits contributions to mortgaged property -- of 11 mortgaged property under any circumstances. So, that's 12 the role it played.

13 QUESTION: Mr. Wright, do you take the position 14 that the DOL opinion letter is a formal interpretation of 15 section 4975?

16 MR. WRIGHT: Yes, Your Honor, it is.

17 And let me say that -- I meant to say in 18 response to your earlier question that as between the 19 formal published letter of the Department of Labor, which 20 is intended to inform people how the agency that 21 administers the prohibited transaction provision 22 interprets it -- these are now available on Lexus and 23 Westlaw, and they have long been published by a number of 24 private parties. And the IRS manual, an in-house manual 25 that is not intended to inform the public -- it is surely

1 the Department of Labor opinion letter that is controlling 2 and is what Keystone should --

3 QUESTION: And when did that opinion letter
4 issue again?

5 MR. WRIGHT: 1981, 2 years before the transfers
6 at issue here.

7 QUESTION: Mr. Wright --

8 QUESTION: In the case where an excess amount of 9 property is contributed, an amount of property over and 10 above the employer's obligation, does the employer have a 11 deduction for that additional amount?

12 MR. WRIGHT: Yes, Your Honor, and it has a 13 deduction because it's a transfer of property. Sometimes 14 employers argue that that is a gift, but usually, 15 certainly in the case of large employers like Keystone, 16 the IRS almost always maintains that, in fact, what 17 happens is it's a transfer of property between the 18 employer and the employees. Even if the pension plan has 19 absolutely no right to the money and no right to insist 20 upon it, it's nevertheless a form of deferred compensation 21 to the employees, and it is deductible.

22 QUESTION: One other question. In tax law
23 generally, quite apart from the pension benefit plan, if I
24 simply make a gift to someone -- I give a car to my son 25 -- that's not a sale or exchange, is it?

1 MR. WRIGHT: No, Your Honor.

2 QUESTION: Suppose there's a mortgage on the 3 property that he assumes. Is that then become a sale or 4 exchange?

5 MR. WRIGHT: No, Your Honor. In some certain 6 circumstances, there are tax consequences. In the unusual 7 case where the basis in the property is actually less than 8 the mortgage, then there is some gain to the transferor, 9 but in a normal case where the property is worth much more 10 than its mortgage and the basis is worth more than the 11 mortgage, that -- that's simply a gift.

12 The example we've used is that if a father gives 13 80,000 -- property worth $80,000 to a child, that's a 14 gift. If the parent gives a $100,000 property with a 15 $20,000 mortgage to a child, we think that it's the same.
16 The same result holds under the ordinary, everyday way of 17 looking at the transaction which, as recently as the 18 Solomon case, this Court said applies.

19 QUESTION: I take it that's a further argument
20 on your behalf of why (f)(3) is necessary in the statute?

21 MR. WRIGHT: Well, that's a further response to 22 Keystone's latest argument as to why (f)(3) is rendered 23 superfluous under our view of the statute, and once again, 24 it's not in our view -- any old contribution of mortgaged 25 property is not a prohibited sale or exchange, but it is

1 prohibited by subsection (f) (3).

2 Let me say that subsection (f) (3) performs a 3 rather modest role, I'll acknowledge, under our view of 4 the statute, but that's not surprising. Congress simply 5 wanted not to allow employers to use one particular trick 6 of mortgaging property to raise cash and then transferring 7 the property to the pension plan to have to pay it off.

8 Let me add that I'm more than willing to 9 acknowledge that there is a lot of overlap in ERISA.
10 After all, there are two prohibited transaction provision 11 added by ERISA, one in title 26 and one in title 29, both 12 of which prohibit any direct or indirect sale or exchange 13 between an employer and a pension plan.

14 There is also overlap between subsection
15 (c) (1) (A) and (f) (3). A contribution of mortgaged 16 property to fulfill a funding obligation would be 17 prohibited under either provision, but to say that there 18 is overlap is not to say that there's superfluity.

19 And let me say that the essence of Keystone's 20 argument, as I understand it, is that they first 21 acknowledge that sale or exchange has for 50 years been 22 construed very expansively, certainly to cover the 23 situation in this case. In fact, no court has ever held 24 that the transfer of property to satisfy an indebtedness 25 is not a sale or exchange.

1 Then they acknowledge that ERISA is drafted very 2 expansively, but --

3 QUESTION: Have you completed your explanation
4 to me why the portion of the -- say, an excess is involved 5 -- why that's a sale or exchange?

6 MR. WRIGHT: Oh, I'm sorry.

7 QUESTION: I'm not sure you really did complete 8 your answer.

9 MR. WRIGHT: We -- on reflection, the Department
10 of Labor had issued these two opinion letters, which set 11 out the easier cases. And then the hypothetical you've 12 suggested, which is a contribution of property to a 13 defined benefit plan in excess of what's owed in the 14 current year, the Fifth Circuit said, well, look it, that 15 really satisfies a funding obligation for the future, and 16 therefore, we can't -- this is a sale or exchange. The 17 plan is giving something up. It's giving something up in 18 the future. On reflection, the Department of Labor thinks 19 that the Fifth Circuit is probably right in that respect.

20 Let me add that Keystone at page 22 of its brief
21 says that the Fifth Circuit was wrong in that respect, 22 that such a transaction would not be a sale or exchange, 23 which totally undermines its argument that (f)(3) is 24 superfluous. Under that view, it's not superfluous even 25 ignoring defined contribution plans.

1 But I was trying to say that, as I understand
2 the essence of their argument --

3 QUESTION: No, but it's superfluous if you take 4 your view of the law.

5 MR. WRIGHT: Excuse me?

6 QUESTION: It's superfluous if you take your 7 view of the transaction it seems to me.

8 MR. WRIGHT: No, Your Honor. A contribution to 9 a defined contribution plan in excess of what's owed in 10 the current year is not necessarily a sale or exchange. A 11 contribution to a defined benefit plan probably always is, 12 although that's a -- that question isn't actually here 13 today.

14 QUESTION: Mr. Wright, what if it is not in 15 excess of what is owed, but is -- it's a contribution to a 16 defined contribution plan?

17 MR. WRIGHT: It's a sale or exchange. It's 18 prohibited by subsection (c)(1)(A).

19 QUESTION: What if the obligation is only an 20 obligation to the employee, not to the plan? Is that not 21 a defined contribution plan then?

22 MR. WRIGHT: I'm not aware of any --

23 QUESTION: The employer makes a deal with his 24 employees. I will -- you know, I will contribute a 25 certain percentage of profits every year to this plan. He

1 makes a deal with his employees.

2 MR. WRIGHT: It's not prohibited by (c) (1) (A) -

3 - QUESTION: It's not prohibited.

4 MR. WRIGHT: -- because (c) (1) (A), while drafted
5 very expansively, any direct or indirect sale or exchange 6 --

7 QUESTION: To -- but to the plan.

8 MR. WRIGHT: Right, exactly.

9 QUESTION: And this would be a sale or exchange 10 with the employees.

11 MR. WRIGHT: ERISA doesn't prohibit that.

12 QUESTION: Mr. Wright, in giving examples of 13 transfers that were -- would not be in satisfaction of an 14 existing obligation to the plan, I think all of your 15 examples are of transfers by the employer. Could there be 16 transfers by other disqualified persons?

17 MR. WRIGHT: Yes, absolutely. There are other 18 kinds of disqualified persons, fiduciaries, accountants
19 and lawyers who provide services to that plan. Now, 20 frankly, it is usually employers who contribute property 21 to pension plans, but these provisions also prohibit other 22 employers -- other parties from doing that.

23 (f) (3) actually has some role here. There has 24 been -- there could be abuse by fiduciaries, for instance, 25 doing the same trick, mortgaging property to raise cash

1 and giving it to a pension plan which is stuck with the 2 obligation of paying it off.

3 QUESTION: Or unions?

4 MR. WRIGHT: Excuse me?

5 QUESTION: Or unions?

6 MR. WRIGHT: Yes. Well, that's true too.

7 QUESTION: Let me make sure I understand one 8 thing. Assume a plan invests all its money in government 9 bonds, and the employer has an excess of government bonds 10 and rather than selling them, he wants to transfer those.
11 That would also be prohibited, too?

12 MR. WRIGHT: Yes, Your Honor. Let me say in 13 that respect that, unfortunately, as in many areas of 14 ERISA, there are, of course, exceptions. And, in fact, 15 subsection (d) sets out 15 exceptions to the prohibited
16 transaction rules. We think that's significant, first, 17 because if Congress wanted to allow what Keystone did, it 18 would have allowed an exception.

19 Now, in answer to your question, subsection 20 (d)(13) allows employers to contribute certain kinds of 21 property, certain kinds of stock and, in fact, even 22 certain kinds of real property in specified circumstances.
23 Your example may well fall into that situation, but let me
24 note in this respect that Keystone's situation does not 25 fall into exception (d)(13) where Congress did allow

1 contributions of property to --

2 QUESTION: Does (d) (13), which is not set out in 3 the brief, have -- apply to transfers of encumbered
4 property?

5 MR. WRIGHT: It doesn't speak of encumbered
6 property, Your Honor.

7 QUESTION: So, there is still a flat rule 8 against encumbered property.

9 MR. WRIGHT: Yes. Yes, Your Honor.

10 QUESTION: You're telling me more about this 11 than I want to know, Mr. Wright. You really are.

12 (Laughter.)

13 MR. WRIGHT: I'm afraid of that.

14 But let me make one last point. Keystone 15 acknowledges that sale or exchange has a very broad 16 meaning under the tax laws. It acknowledges that ERISA is 17 written expansively, but it says for those reasons, 18 subsection (c) (1) (A) should be construed narrowly to 19 minimize the overlap between (c) (1) (A) and (f) (3). Well, 20 in our view that's perverse to read (c) (1) (A) narrowly 21 because Congress drafted it broadly.

22 I'd like to reserve the remainder of my time, if 23 I could.

24 QUESTION: Mr. Wright, I don't want to spoil 25 your hopes in that respect, but --

1 (Laughter.)

2 QUESTION: You've just tantalized me with one
3 possibility here. Is it possible that the flat 4 prohibition on transfers of encumbered property could have 5 been put in there to trump one of the exceptions?

6 MR. WRIGHT: I hadn't thought it through that 7 far, Your Honor. I'm not sure whether the exceptions 8 could apply there.

9 Let me add also, to make it even more
10 complicated, that there's yet another -- there's a general 11 exemption provision in (c)(2). An employer like Keystone 12 suffering from financial problems can go to the Secretary 13 of Labor and say, "We're in hard shape. We want to 14 contribute property. It's not going to harm the plan for 15 the following reasons," and the Secretary of Labor can 16 authorize it. I believe the Secretary of Labor could 17 authorize a contribution of mortgaged property.

18 QUESTION: Even encumbered?

19 MR. WRIGHT: But, of course, again Keystone 20 bypassed the statute, and it's asking this Court to 21 authorize it and other employers to do so in the future.

22 Thank you.

23 QUESTION: Thank you, Mr. Wright.

24 Mr. Wexler, we'll hear from you.

25

1 ORAL ARGUMENT OF RAYMOND P. WEXLER

2 ON BEHALF OF THE RESPONDENT

3 MR. WEXLER: Mr. Chief Justice, may it please
4 the Court:

5 I hardly know where to begin. I think I'd like 6 to begin with where Mr. Wright began which has some 7 implication in answer to a question that there was an 8 allegation of a breach of fiduciary duty on the trustee's 9 behalf for having accepted this property. That's simply 10 untrue. The answer to the question is the trustee could 11 have and it was -- within his duty as a fiduciary could 12 have rejected this property if he thought it was an 13 inappropriate contribution.

14 Second, I'd like to respond to Mr. Wright's 15 comments to Justice O'Connor regarding the IRS manual and 16 his statements regarding the Department of Labor advisory 17 opinion. When ERISA was passed in 1974, there were three 18 agencies involved in the enforcement and regulation of 19 ERISA: the Department of Labor, the Internal Revenue
20 Service, and the PBGCA -- the PBGC. Sorry.

21 The -- originally the IRS was given regulatory 22 authority under 4975, the section at issue here. It was 23 also given regulatory authority under section 412, which 24 is the section that places the obligation on an employer 25 with respect to a defined benefit plan.

1 In 1978, pursuant to reorg plan 4, which is 2 cited in both briefs, the IRS and the Department of Labor
3 divided up responsibility for various portions of ERISA.
4 Under that division of authority, the Department of Labor 5 was given regulatory authority under 4975, certain 6 portions of it, including the two that are relevant here, 7 (c) (1) (A) and (f) (3). The IRS retained regulatory 8 authority under section 412, the obligation setting
9 section.

10 With that background in mind, let's talk about 11 what the three agencies have done.

12 The Department of Labor has never issued 13 regulations under 4975(c) (1) (A) or (f) (3) indicating that 14 noncash contributions to defined benefit plans were 15 intended to be a prohibited sale or exchange.

16 QUESTION: Did it issue an opinion letter? Do 17 you agree --

18 MR. WEXLER: Yes.

19 QUESTION: -- that an opinion letter issued 20 before this transaction took place?

21 MR. WEXLER: The sole position administratively 22 of the Department of Labor is the two private advisory 23 opinions, one issued in 1981, 3 years before, 24 approximately, these transactions occurred, one issued in 25 1990, 2 weeks after my client filed a motion for summary

1 judgment in the tax --

2 QUESTION: Well, do we owe deference to the DOL 3 opinion letter of 1981?

4 MR. WEXLER: I don't think so, Your Honor --

5 QUESTION: Why not?

6 MR. WEXLER: -- for two reasons. One, under the 7 Department's own procedures, private parties are not 8 entitled to rely upon opinions. Only the parties in the 9 opinion are entitled to rely on them. So, in a sense, 10 what the IRS is stating is that this taxpayer ought to be 11 bound by an advisory opinion, with respect to which, under 12 the Department's own rules, this taxpayer could not rely 13 upon.

14 Second, and perhaps more important, the 15 Department of Labor '81 advisory opinion contains within 16 it a false assumption, and that assumption is that code 17 section 412 imposes a cash obligation upon the taxpayer.
18 The way that advisory opinion analyzes the issue, it 19 states that the transfer of property to a plan that has a 20 legal right to receive cash is tantamount to a sale.

21 Whether or not there is a cash obligation is 22 answered by code section 412. That is the code section 23 that the IRS, not the Department of Labor, has regulatory 24 power over.

25 And that would lead you then to ask what is the 1 IRS' administrative position. Like the Department of 2 Labor, the IRS has issued no regulations whatsoever

3 indicating that a transfer of noncash property to a 4 defined benefit plan is a prohibited sale or exchange.

5 However, the IRS has not been silent. First, in 6 1978, a taxpayer in a private letter ruling asked the IRS 7 to rule on this issue. The IRS stated that it was an 8 issue that could not be reasonably resolved without the 9 issuance of regulations. What the IRS is really asking 10 this Court to do is to issue the regulations that they 11 have not --

12 QUESTION: Well, are you making an argument that 13 somehow the taxpayer here did not have fair notice of the 14 coverage of 4975?

15 MR. WEXLER: I would so argue, but I'm really 16 making an argument --

17 QUESTION: You have not made that argument 18 really.

19 MR. WEXLER: No. I'm really making an argument 20 that the Department of Labor 1981 advisory opinion is not 21 the type of administrative agency position that courts 22 tend to offer deference to. It seems to me that we have 23 an opinion that is wrong, that is a private opinion. We 24 have the IRS, through its manual, telling agents that the 25 rules are exactly the opposite, and we have the PBGC,

1 which really had no administrative position at all. They 2 have had nothing to say on this issue at all until they 3 filed the amicus brief in this Court.

4 The cases that the Government cites in its brief 5 that would indicate that courts ought to pay deference to 6 the administrative position of agencies all either involve 7 published regulations or published rulings, and in none of 8 those cases does it involve issues on which there are 9 differences of opinion between the various agencies 10 involved.

11 I would, however, to continue to respond to your 12 question, state that we have a disagreement with Mr.
13 Wright -- a terrible name for an opponent to have, Mr.
14 Wright --

15 (Laughter.)

16 MR. WEXLER: -- a disagreement with the 17 Government on whether or not the excise tax of 4975 is in 18 the nature of a penalty. And I think that this Court has 19 made it clear that the law is that people are not -- 20 people or corporations are not to be subjected to 21 penalties unless the plain words of the statute impose 22 those penalties. I think underlying those cases is the 23 notice issue that you indicate. We would submit that it 24 is crystal clear in our mind that 4975 does, indeed, 25 impose a penalty.

1 QUESTION: Is that something different than an 2 ordinary tax then?

3 MR. WEXLER: Yes. It is a 5 percent per year 4 penalty in addition to a 100 percent penalty if the 5 transaction is not corrected.

6 QUESTION: Well, the statute refers to it as a 7 tax. Why do you say it's a penalty rather than just a 8 tax?

9 MR. WEXLER: Because it -- because of the 10 magnitude and because of the purpose of the statute. The 11 purpose of the statute is to prohibit conduct by providing 12 pecuniary punishment, and a tax that has that purpose is 13 in the nature of a penalty, not in the nature of a tax.

14 In the Acker court -- case, which is the leading 15 case in this area --

16 QUESTION: The what case?

17 MR. WEXLER: The Acker, A-c-k-e-r. This Court 18 held -- the question was whether the additions to tax for 19 failure to file estimated tax returns, as well as for 20 failing to pay estimated taxes -- whether those taxes were 21 in the nature of a penalty. And what this Court held -- 22 and I would point out to the Court footnote 4 in the main 23 opinion and the single footnote in the dissenting opinion 24 -- concluded that those taxes were in the nature of a 25 prohibition for violation of a statutory order.

1 The same, exact thing is true of the 4975 tax.
2 That is a pecuniary punishment. In this case, the 3 assessed tax is $13 million.

4 QUESTION: Is that 100 percent?

5 MR. WEXLER: It is 5 percent for a number of 6 years, plus 100 percent.

7 QUESTION: Of course --

8 QUESTION: 5 percent for every year plus 100 9 percent over that.

10 MR. WEXLER: Correct. The maximum criminal 11 penalty provided in ERISA for knowing violation of ERISA 12 provisions is only $100,000, so that the tax which we are 13 describing as being in the nature of a penalty is more 14 than 100 times greater than the maximum criminal penalty 15 provided --

16 QUESTION: Is that because Keystone has never 17 agreed to correct the situation?

18 MR. WEXLER: Keystone has made an effort to 19 determine. The problem is that the issue of correction
20 also is an IRS issue, not a Department of Labor. The IRS 21 regulations are not written in contemplation that a 22 contribution of property would be a prohibited sale or 23 exchange. Therefore, they don't have any provisions that 24 would tell us how to correct. But I promise you, we did 25 try to find out what the IRS thought we ought to do in

1 order to correct, and we had no response.

2 QUESTION: Mr. Wexler, the consequence of the 3 argument you're now making, however, is not that the 4 section should be interpreted the way you want to 5 interpret it. We would interpret it, the way the 6 Government wants it, to make this a prohibited
7 transaction, but you just wouldn't have to pay the 5
8 percent penalty. Right?

9 MR. WEXLER: One could reasonably conclude --

10 QUESTION: It would be a prohibited transaction, 11 and you would have to undo it. I mean, that's no 12 justification for interpreting the statute the wrong way.

13 MR. WEXLER: No, no, no, but I think that if the 14 statute is penal in nature, then it is a statute that 15 ought not assess a tax unless it is fairly clear on the 16 face of the statute that the tax is owed.

17 QUESTION: So, the consequence is you don't owe 18 the tax, but in addition to that, should we make 19 nonprohibited what are prohibited transactions just 20 because they haven't been made prohibited clearly enough?

21 MR. WEXLER: Let me talk then about why we 22 believe that they are not prohibited transactions.
23 Justice Stevens asked a question which I believe Mr.
24 Wright has answered absolutely inconsistent with the 25 Government's position both in its brief here and in the

1 Fifth Circuit. The question asked was whether in a 2 defined benefit plan, if a year's minimum funding 3 requirement was $100,000 and the taxpayer contributed 4 property, five separate parcels that were each equal to 5 $100,000, which parts of those would be a prohibited sale 6 or exchange and which would not.

7 It is the Government's position that the first 8 piece, the first $100,000 worth would be a prohibited
9 transaction. However, it is the Government's position 10 that the other four pieces would not be prohibited
11 transactions. And even though for income tax purposes, 12 all five of those are treated as sales or exchanges for 13 income tax purposes and in each of the five cases, the 14 taxpayer would have to pay a capital gain on his income 15 tax return, just as -- the way Keystone did.

16 The problem with the -- the reason the 17 Government reaches this position is exactly because of the 18 existence of (f)(3). (f)(3) states that a transfer of 19 property subject to a mortgage will be treated -- shall be 20 treated I believe the words are -- as a sale or exchange.
21 The necessary implication on the face of the statute is 22 that if it is not, it is not intended to be a sale or 23 exchange. Thus, the Government is looking for some 24 meaning for (f)(3) that is consistent with a transfer of 25 noncash property being a prohibited sale or exchange when

1 it is an exchange for a minimum funding.

2 And the distinction that you have drawn is 3 exactly where they draw the line. What says the 4 Government is that the first piece is an exchange for a 5 cash obligation, the minimum standard requirement for that 6 year. Therefore, that's a sale or exchange. However, the 7 other four pieces are not for that year's cash obligation.
8 Therefore, those are not prohibited sales or exchanges 9 under (c) (1) (A), and that is the slice that (f) (3) was 10 intended to pick up.

11 We would submit two answers to this. One, hard 12 to believe that this is what Congress had in mind without 13 a single word in the legislative history speaking of this 14 differentiation about the two types of contribution under 15 code section 412. Moreover, we would suggest that code 16 section 412 does not impose a cash obligation on the 17 taxpayer. What the words of 412 state specifically is 18 that the employer must satisfy a minimum funding standard, 19 and that is specifically defined by 412(a) with the 20 following language: a plan -- and I will quote -- shall 21 have satisfied the minimum funding standard for such year
22 for a plan year if at the end of such plan year the plan 23 does not have an accumulated funding deficiency. Then in 24 412(b) the code states how you determine whether there is 25 an accumulated funding deficiency.

1 One of the things that happens in making this 2 determination is there are credits provided to and charges 3 against the plan's assets. One of the credits is for the 4 amount contributed by the employer. What the IRS alleges 5 -- and I would point out to page 5 in their brief -- is 6 that the allowance -- or the statement in 412(b) that 7 provides a credit for the amount -- and the IRS puts the 8 words amount in quotes -- of contribution by the employer, 9 that is the item that provides the monetary obligation or 10 the dollar obligation. That is the beginning point of 11 their substantive argument.

12 What the IRS fails to point out and totally 13 ignores are the two words immediately following the word 14 amount, which they put in quote, and those amounts -- 15 those words are the amounts considered contributed. We 16 would submit that the IRS is absolutely incorrect. The 17 two words I have just added, which are in the code, make 18 it clear that Congress must have thought that something 19 other than cash was going to be contributed in discharge 20 of the minimum funding standard, otherwise the words 21 amount considered contributed would have no meaning.

22 QUESTION: This is in section 412 you're 23 speaking?

24 MR. WEXLER: (b).

25 QUESTION: 412 --

1 MR. WEXLER: (b) (3) I believe.

2 QUESTION: Well, now the Government's petition
3 sets out section 412(a). I don't see it sets out section 4 412 --

5 MR. WEXLER: 412(a) -- it doesn't. 412(a) --

6 QUESTION: Where is 412(b) set out in your 7 brief?

8 MR. WEXLER: It is not set out in our brief. It 9 is discussed in the Government's reply brief that was 10 filed in response to our argument that there was no cash 11 obligation. They then quote in their reply brief at page 12 5 portions of (b) (3).

13 QUESTION: If you're going to rely on some 14 section of the statute, you ought to set it out.

15 MR. WEXLER: My colleague advises me on pages 7 16 and 8 of our main brief.

17 QUESTION: 7 and 8.

18 QUESTION: Of your main brief?

19 MR. WEXLER: Yes, our only brief.

20 The point being is that if 412 -- if I can try 21 to respond to Justice Kennedy's -- or Justice Stevens'
22 question a little more. A defined benefit plan requires 23 an employer to fund benefits over the life of the employee 24 such that when the employee retires, there is sufficient 25 assets in the plan in order to pay retirement benefits.

1 The IRS' argument that attempts to distinguish 2 between what they call voluntary contributions, which are 3 the four additional pieces of your five $100,000 pieces
4 and the initial $100,000, draws an economic distinction
5 that doesn't make any sense, and the reason is both 6 contributions are in discharge of the employer's 7 obligation: one, the minimum obligation for the year; the 8 other, the overall obligation, which is the employer's 9 full obligation to fund the plan. The question -- the 10 difference is one of timing, not of economic substance.

11 The reason the IRS is forced to draw this 12 distinction, which, as I pointed out, is not mentioned at 13 all in the legislative history, is because of the 14 existence of (f)(3). They need to find some contribution 15 that is a prohibited sale or exchange under (c)(1)(A), but 16 does not render (f)(3) totally meaningless.

17 QUESTION: But they don't need that for that 18 purpose. They have defined contribution plans instead of 19 defined benefit plans.

20 MR. WEXLER: Except for the fact that --

21 QUESTION: Why doesn't that suffice?

22 MR. WEXLER: -- there was no indication --
23 there's not a single word -- and I mean a single word -- 24 in the legislative history that indicated that (c)(1)(A) 25 was intended to apply different rules to defined benefit

1 as opposed to defined --

2 QUESTION: That doesn't carry a lot of weight 3 with me, but it does eliminate your argument that they -- 4 I agree that there's some difficulty in figuring out what 5 happens to the four extra parts. But however that 6 argument comes out, even if you disagree entirely with the 7 Government on that and say that all five parts are 8 considered sales and exchanges, there's still an 9 explanation for (f)(3).

10 MR. WEXLER: But it is a strained explanation.
11 Plus, it is inconsistent with the intellectual 12 underpinning of their initial argument. The way they get 13 any of these transactions to be prohibited sales or 14 exchange is by application of income tax cases. And it is 15 true that in income tax cases, these are treated as sales 16 or exchanges.

17 The problem is if Congress had in mind income
18 tax consequences in (c)(1)(A), the very same income tax 19 cases that hold that mandatory contributions are sales or 20 exchange also hold that voluntary contributions to a 21 defined benefit plan are sales or exchange and also hold 22 that contributions --

23 QUESTION: Sales or exchanges to whom? I mean, 24 the point -- they're not claiming that they're not sales
25 and exchanges. They're just claiming that they are not

1 sales and exchanges to the plan, which is the only
2 prohibited sale or exchange.

3 MR. WEXLER: In order to reach that argument, 4 they have concluded that there is an underpinning in the 5 income tax sales or exchange cases that looks at to whom 6 the sale or exchange is between. It seems to us there are 7 two real problems with that.

8 Problem one is none of those cases talk at all 9 about who the sale or exchange is between. What those 10 cases do is they conclude that the transferor has 11 recognized the benefit of economic gain and, therefore, 12 should pay an income tax.

13 QUESTION: Of course, the tax cases don't --

14 MR. WEXLER: Moreover --

15 QUESTION: -- go into to whom it is because it's 16 irrelevant for taxation, but you have to make the decision 17 for purposes of ERISA.

18 MR. WEXLER: However, if a mortgage -- if a 19 property is transferred to a pension plan subject to a 20 mortgage, it is crystal clear who that sale or exchange is 21 between. That sale or exchange is between the party who 22 is being relieved of the liability, by analogy the 23 employer in our case, and the party assuming the 24 liability, namely the plan. Therefore, if that were the 25 concept that Congress had in mind, (f)(3) has defined the

1 single transaction that is clearly between the plan and 2 the employer, not between the employer and the employees.

3 QUESTION: I don't agree with what you just said 4 if the mortgage is in a lesser amount than the equity in 5 the property. I just don't agree with it.

6 MR. WEXLER: The -- when a mortgage is assumed,
7 the party assuming it pays the liability. So, in a sense 8 it is no different than if a liability, absent property, 9 were transferred to a plan.

10 Or to put it another way, whether or not a sale 11 or exchange, when mortgaged property is transferred to a 12 plan, is between the plan and the employer or the employer 13 and the employee, it would seem to us to indicate the 14 clearest example where you have a transaction that 4975 is 15 trying to operate on, the reason being that 4975, by and 16 large, is talking about transactions from which assets 17 that are in a trust are extracted from that trust. It's 18 not a funding section.

19 The reason that they have made the mortgaged 20 property into a sale or exchange is because that is a 21 transaction that can occur in a funding context, but which 22 results in the extraction of assets from the plan.

23 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Wexler, you don't say that 24 the only kind of sale or exchange, as described in 25 4975(c)(1)(A), is one that meets the definition in (f)(3),

1 do you?

2 MR. WEXLER: No. What our position is is that 3 the income tax cases that hold that transfers to defined 4 benefit, to defined contribution, voluntary, mandatory, 5 that contributions of that nature of property to a plan 6 are sales or exchanges, was affirmatively not intended to 7 be included in (c)(1).

8 QUESTION: So, our -- we simply have to figure 9 out or courts have to figure out what the term sale or 10 exchange in 4975(c)(1)(A) means.

11 MR. WEXLER: Exactly. That's exactly, precisely 12 the issue.

13 QUESTION: I suppose there wouldn't be any 14 question about whether or not you could satisfy any 15 funding obligation by furnishing of goods or services.

16 MR. WEXLER: Correct, because that is prohibited
17 under a different section.

18 QUESTION: Yes, but that's just because you 19 really know what furnishing of goods or services is.

20 MR. WEXLER: Correct.

21 QUESTION: And the same with leasing --

22 MR. WEXLER: Correct.

23 QUESTION: -- under (1)(A).

24 MR. WEXLER: Right. The same with -- I mean, 25 I'll give you an -- the same with the prohibition under

1 (a) (2) (B), the very next subsection. The very next 2 subsection in 4975(c) is called (a) (1) (B) instead of (c), 3 and what that provides is a prohibition against the 4 lending of money back and forth between a plan and an 5 employer.

6 What the legislative history of that section 7 stated was that one of its purposes was to disallow an 8 employer from funding his obligations with a promissory 9 note, the reason being a promissory note would then create 10 the prohibited lending.

11 We would submit that that sentence is also, just 12 like (f) (3), irreconcilable with the theory that Congress
13 intended in (c) (1) (A) to include to prohibit noncash 14 contributions, the reason being a promissory note is 15 clearly a noncash contribution.

16 QUESTION: So, under (1) (A), leasing would be 17 prohibited, but transferring fee title would not be.

18 MR. WEXLER: Correct, or transferring mortgaged
19 property would not be permitted.

20 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Wexler, what if the 21 employer just outright sold to the plan a piece of 22 property?

23 MR. WEXLER: That would be prohibited.

24 QUESTION: And yet, it would be prohibited
25 because it's a sale or exchange?

1 MR. WEXLER: For consideration I would assume.
2 That's why I started out talking about 412.

3 QUESTION: And yet, you continue to take the 4 position that a transfer to meet a funding obligation --

5 MR. WEXLER: Is not intended to be.

6 QUESTION: -- is not.

7 MR. WEXLER: And the reason is is that 412 does 8 not impose a cash obligation. I would suggest that if 412
9 had a rule that said that all contributions to a defined 10 benefit plan must be made in real estate, we would not be 11 here because we would have a clear allowance of what we 12 want.

13 I would also state that if 412 had a rule that 14 said all contributions must be made in cash, we would not 15 be here either, and the reason is we wouldn't have a case 16 because in discharge for cash, it's clearly a sale.

17 The problem is 412 is intended to provide 18 flexibility on funding to plan employers.

19 Mr. Wright indicated that there are, by and 20 large, way more defined contribution plans than defined 21 benefit plans. I would suggest that the congressional 22 policy is to favor defined benefit plans, the reason being 23 they are the only kind of plans that -- where the 24 investment risk of the assets rests with the employer, not 25 the employee. As pointed out in Professor Zelinsky's

1 article, which we cite in our brief, one could argue that, 2 as a matter of policy, Congress would not be interested in 3 passing anything that would restrict funding of defined 4 benefit plans because it would tend to discourage those 5 plans when policy is exactly the opposite.

6 QUESTION: Could I -- why didn't the company
7 just sell their terminals and contribute the cash?

8 MR. WEXLER: I can't answer that question, but I
9 would suggest that transferring the terminals to the plan 10 is more like not selling them than it is like selling it.
11 Once they were transferred, it was up to the fiduciary to 12 determine whether it was a good investment or a bad 13 investment, a short-term investment or a long-term 14 investment. The real estate that was contributed in the 15 second year was sold at a gain by the trustee within the 16 year it was contributed. The truck terminals were held.

17 It would seem to us that in order for this Court 18 to reverse the decisions entered in this matter by the tax 19 court and the Fifth Circuit, this Court will have to find 20 as a matter of law in the Government's favor on three 21 conceptual issues.

22 First, this Government -- this Court would have 23 to find that 412, we think, imposes a cash obligation.

24 Second, this Court would have to find that when 25 Congress passed (c) (1) (A), they intended to implant income

1 tax consequences with respect to certain contributions, 2 but specifically intended to ignore income tax 3 consequences with respect to other transactions. The 4 reason is that we think if you don't do that, you have 5 read (f) (3) out of the law.

6 And item three, this Court would have to 7 conclude, as a matter of law, that section 4975 does not 8 impose a tax that is in the nature of penalty. It is --

9 QUESTION: Why?

10 MR. WEXLER: Because if it is in the nature of 11 the penalty, this Court's precedents would indicate it has 12 to be narrowly construed. We would suggest that that's a 13 standard --

14 QUESTION: Yes, but what if we think the -- what 15 if we think (c) (1) is clear?

16 MR. WEXLER: You would have to come to that 17 conclusion. I would agree with you actually. You could 18 come to that conclusion, which I think is a wrong
19 conclusion because I think the words of the statute don't 20 say that. But if you came to that conclusion, you could 21 then defer and not deal with the penalty issue.

22 It is, nevertheless, our position that it would 23 be incorrect, as a matter of law, for this Court to find 24 in favor of the IRS on any of these three issues, much 25 less all three.

1 We would submit that if the Department of Labor 2 and the Internal Revenue Service have come to the 3 conclusion that, as a matter of policy, noncash
4 contributions should not be made to defined benefit plans 5 or that some should and some should not, we would suggest 6 that that is an issue that ought to be addressed to 7 Congress, not to this Court.

8 Thank you.

9 QUESTION: Thank you, Mr. Wexler.

10 Mr. Wright, you have 4 minutes remaining.

11 REBUTTAL ARGUMENT OF CHRISTOPHER J. WRIGHT

12 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER

13 MR. WRIGHT: Mr. Wexler acknowledged that sale
14 or exchange has for 50 years been construed by the courts 15 to include a transfer of property to satisfy an 16 indebtedness. In subsection (c)(1)(A), Congress didn't 17 merely prohibit sales or exchanges. It prohibited any 18 direct or indirect sale or exchanges. Whatever hard cases 19 there are in the future, a transfer of property in 20 fulfillment of a funding obligation is certainly a form of 21 direct or indirect sale or exchange.

22 QUESTION: Can I just be sure of one thing in my 23 mind? Is it your position that a transfer of property, 24 real property, to a defined contribution plan is also a 25 sale or exchange?

1 MR. WRIGHT: If it fulfills a current -- if it
2 fulfills a funding obligation to the defined contribution 3 plan, it is.

4 QUESTION: Then why isn't (c)(3), or whatever 5 the number is, superfluous?

6 MR. WRIGHT: It is not superfluous because there 7 are contributions made to defined contribution plans that 8 do not fulfill any current or future funding obligation.

9 QUESTION: -- say, Mr. Wright, the language,
10 sale or exchange or leasing, the words leasing coming 11 after sale or exchange, does seem to me to indicate that 12 they're talking about a person-to-person transaction, not 13 just the regular contribution that the employer makes.

14 MR. WRIGHT: Well, those are certainly also 15 prohibited, but sale or exchange is a phrase that's used 16 throughout title 26. It has a well-settled meaning. It 17 had a well-settled meaning in 1974. We think that 18 Congress relied on that meaning when it used that 19 language.

20 QUESTION: It seems to me strange to use that 21 highly technical meaning which would cover any 22 contribution to the plan which elsewhere is referred to as 23 contributions in the statute.

24 MR. WRIGHT: Well, Your Honor, sale or exchange 25 has a settled meaning, and I'm not sure it's fair to

1 characterize it as technical. As Professor Bittker
2 explains in his treatise, transferring property to satisfy 3 a debt is just the same as selling the property and 4 saying, oh, by the way, instead of giving me cash, please 5 credit my accumulated funding account, which admittedly 6 doesn't say it has to be satisfied in cash. But I wonder 7 what would have happened if Keystone had tried to give 8 this property to one of its other creditors that it owed 9 obligations to.

10 QUESTION: Mr. Wright, what's your response to 11 the argument that 412(b)(3) does say that the funding 12 standard shall be credited with the sum of the amount 13 considered contributed?

14 MR. WRIGHT: Employers make large payments to 15 pension plans, not all of which actually go into the plans 16 to pay pension accounts. They also agree to pay certain 17 administrative money. So, when an employer makes a 18 payment to a pension plan, all the money doesn't 19 necessarily go into the plan. Some of it goes elsewhere.

20 And let me also say with respect to 412 --

21 QUESTION: Well, but I mean, it seems to me that 22 that's a simple bookkeeping entry.

23 MR. WRIGHT: Well, and --

24 QUESTION: The amount contributed -- it's either 25 contributed or it isn't.

1 MR. WRIGHT: The amount considered contributed 2 to the plan. Well, you know, the other thing about 3 section 412 is that we're faulted, on the one hand, that 4 there are so many prohibitions on this kind of 5 transaction, that there's a danger of superfluosness. On 6 the other hand, the fact that in certain other provisions 7 of the in tax -- income tax code, it doesn't make clear 8 that these transactions are prohibited. Well, that's 9 found to be significant too. We think two prohibited 10 transaction provisions saying that any direct or indirect 11 sale or exchange is prohibited is arguably more than 12 enough. It's certainly enough.

13 CHIEF JUSTICE REHNQUIST: Thank you, Mr. Wright.
14 The case is submitted.

15 (Whereupon, at 11:00 a.m., the case in the 16 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
